THE TASK THEY FACE

2 PROBLEMS: PRICES AND FOREIGN AID

Two troublesome, major problems confront the GOP-controlled Congress that goes back into session this week—at the beginning of a political campaign year to which the Henry Wallace candidacy will add considerable spice.

Top domestic problem is inflation, which has been making the average wage earner (left) dig deeper and deeper into his pockets for money badly shrunken in value.

No. 1 foreign issue is the need for a rehabilitation program that will enable war-torn nations to become self supporting and no longer dependent upon relief shipments from the United States (such as wheat shown at right, being examined by Italian family).

Pres. Truman stated bluntly that "anti-inflation" powers granted him by Congress before Christmas adjournment simply won't do the job. GOP claimed Truman now has the weapons with which to fight high prices, that he will be to blame if cost of living continues to rise.

While argument raged, wholesale food prices reached an all-time high.

New Loyalty Review Board Rules Fail To Allow Accused To Face Accuser

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous, crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury."—Fifth Amendment, U. S. Constitution.

". . . the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him . . ."—Sixth Amendment U. S. Constitution.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch last week declared: "It is, of couse, an 'infamous crime' to be disloyal to one's country. Yet, according to the rules announced by the Government's Loyalty Review Board, it will be possible, in effect, for a citizen to be convicted of disloyalty by an administrative tribunal, without a grand jury indictment or trial by his peers and without being confronted by his accusers."

From a perusal of the new rules issued by the board, it would appear that the Post-Dispatch's analysis is correct.

The FBI is the key to the situation, according to Board Chairman Seth Richardson. The FBI's findings after investigation of the off-duty activities of government workers are to be turned over to the agency involved. In appeals, the findings will reach the review board, but will not be revealed in full to the employe accused of disloyalty. Richardson also revealed that the FBI must keep secret the names of its informers and no cross-examination of informer will be allowed.

"For the ancient Anglo-Saxon right of the accused to confront his accuser,, this procedure would substitute the word of stool pigeons, political procurers, curriers of political favor and malicious gossips.

"For the protection of a court trial, it would substitute the fiat of bureaucratic tribunal.

"For the guarantee of the Bill of Rights, it would substitute the danger of a Gestapo."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch editorial.

Richardson revealed that the FBI is already giving its agents special training for their sleuthing job. He told reporters the board would be inclined to take the word of an anonymous FBI man over that of the accused on a single matter of fact. But, he admitted that his 22-man board "is on very thin ice" when it considers evidence.

Grounds for loyalty dismissal are about the same as those which have been utilized for years (treason, espionage, sabotage, and others). But, there is a new element. That is membership in organizations described by Atty. Gen. Tom C. Clark as "totalitarian, Fascist, Communist or subversive." Clark has listed about 100 organizations he thinks fills his description.

However, Richardson last week indicated to a Washington reporter that mere membership in such organizations is not necessarily final proof, since a person might have joined an organization through mistake, through misunderstanding as to its aims, through the example of a husband or wife, etc.

"The board justifies its stand on the ground that the Government has as much right as a private employer 'to discharge for reasons which seem sufficient,' and without hearing. This is a false premise. In the first place, it denies the whole fact and purpose of the civil service law. It also overlooks the public stewardship and responsibility of Government service . . ."—Post-Dispatch editorial.

Meantime, Bert Andrews, New York Herald Tribune writer, followed up his now-famous "scoop" on the State Dept. firings. Andrews compared the new procedures with those used originally in the State Dept. cases.

He noted that the department did not at any time tell the 10 accused of the nature of the charges against them; did not allow counsel or witnesses present at sessions it held with the 10 (it wouldn't have made any difference, anyway, Andrews noted, since they wouldn't have known what the charges were); it did not allow the accused an interview with Secy. George C. Marshall, etc.

"The existence of machinery to spread the smear of 'disloyal' on U. S. citizens without jury trial and without confrontation with the accuser is intolerable."—Post-Dispatch editorial.

Last week, Sen. Joseph H. Ball (R., Minn.) disclosed that four employes—he did not identify them—had been fired by Congressional committees after investigation of "reports that they were Communist travelers." One of those dismissed was let out after Ball had objected to his presence on a Senate subcommittee staff. Ball did not state what type of investigation was made; whether the new board procedure was followed; whether the four were given hearings.

"I am certain that there should be no room in our Government for those who are disloyal to it, or those who would overthrow or subvert it. It does seem to me, however, that in order to achieve the second purposes of the preamble—to protect employes against unfounded charges of disloyalty—that there should be the requirement that disloyalty should be clearly defined, and that the process be accorded those Americans who are accused of being disloyal."—CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in letter to Pres. Truman concerning the loyalty executive order.

"We are shocked that the Loyalty Review Board has fallen victim to hysteria by electing to provide sugar-coating for the unpalatable measures of a police state."—Protest of CIO Public Workers' Pres. Abram Flaxer against new procedure.

"An attempt to fight Communism by employing methods we profess to abhor most in the Communistic system."—Federal Communications Commissioner Clifford Durr, in protest against new procedure.

U. S. Circuit Court Accuses State of South Carolina

South Carolina last week was accused of using the power of the state to violate the Federal Constitution.

In a stinging opinion, Judge John J. Parker, of the U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, upheld a federal District Court ruling which barred South Carolina election officials from denying qualified Negro voters a voice in primaries.

Parker said the Supreme Court in 1944 had ruled that the right to vote in a primary election held under state law could not be denied on grounds of race or color.

Parker's opinion came out of the contention of George Elmore, Richmond County, S. C., Negro, that he and other Negroes had been denied a vote in a Democratic primary Aug. 13, 1946.

Truman Calls GOP Bill

'PITIFULLY INADEQUATE' IN FIGHT ON H-C-L

CONGRESS this week comes back to Washington—one eye cocked on the '48 elections, one ear still red from Pres. Truman's remarks about the headline-hunting "anti-inflation" bill which the GOP majority steered through the special session.

It was virtually a carbon copy that the President signed—in fact as well as in theory.

The President criticized it severely as failing to meet the needs of the high-price situation—but like a World Series pitcher rubbing a rabbit's paw, he said it couldn't do much harm and by some miracle might do a little good.

Almost appropriately, the original copy of the bill, which bore the signatures of leaders of both Senate and House, got lost—as papers in Washington are frequently apt to do. The White House looked embarrassed, said they just couldn't find the bill, and rushed another copy to Sen. Vandenberg, president of the Senate, and Speaker of the House Joe Martin for signatures. Then Pres. Truman wrote his own name at the bottom of the legislation.

He used some strong words to criticize the measure.

It is "pitifully inadequate as a weapon against the high cost of living," he said. It "will not reduce the high cost of living and it will not keep prices from going even higher." And he reminded Congress that while it passed a meaningless bill, the price index had risen like water in a stopped-up sink.

"DURING the six weeks since I addressed the Congress . . . prices have continued to rise," Pres. Truman said.

"When I spoke to Congress a pound of butter in Washington, D. C., cost 88 cents. Last week here in Washington, butter reached a new high price of $1.05.

"In the last six weeks, men's street shoes in Pittsburgh have gone up from an average of $8.72 a pair to $9.38.

"In this same period, the price of hogs in Chicago has risen from $24.75 a hundred pounds to $26.40. A few days ago in Omaha the price of steers reached a new all-time high of $40 a hundred pounds.

"Since Nov. 17 the price of gasoline has risen in Los Angeles from 21.5c a gallon to 23.3c.

"Inflation and the high cost of living confront the American people—with a grave danger. Unchecked inflation can bring on a serious depression that can cause untold hardship.

"The legislative and executive branches of the government must work together if this grave peril is to be conquered.

"The American people look to the Congress to pass legislation adequate to perform this all-important task. I trust that when the Congress returns it will promptly enact an effective, workable program."

Election problems are already concerning the Congress. One of the first news items came from Rep. Hartley (R., N. J.), who co-authored the Taft-Hartley bill with the help of several big business groups.

Hartley, who said in 1946 that he wasn't ever going to run for re-election, issued a "maybe" statement. Perhaps, he indicated, he'll give the residents of his northern New Jersey district a chance to vote for him—or send him back to the farm.

Unionists Help Save Eyesight Of Girl

An operation to save the eyesight of the 12-year-old daughter of a union member was made possible by the response of fellow unionists to an appeal made by Local 65, Wholesale & Warehouse Workers, New York.

The union reports that two eye operations on Anna Rosa Ramos, daughter of Carmen and Louis Ramos, were successful and that she was able to spend Christmas at home with her family.

Anna lost the sight of her left eye in an accident five years ago. When her condition got worse, threatening her with total blindness, her father brought her from Puerto Rico for treatment.

Unable to pay for private medical attention and denied public aid because of the short time the child had been in the U. S., the father turned to his union for help.

Operation Dixie:

18-MONTH DRIVE DOUBLES CIO ROLLS IN SOUTH

MEMBERSHIP in the CIO in the South has virtually doubled in the 18 months since the CIO Organizing Committee launched its Southern Drive, Van A. Bittner, national director of the committee, revealed in his "state of the union" message last week.

Bargaining rights for CIO-affiliated unions have been won in 604 Southern plants, mills and factories as the result of committee activities. The unions have been established through NLRB elections, elections conducted by local persons or organizations, by card check (both NLRB and private parties) and in some instances by voluntary recognition on the part of management.

The membership gained through new locals and the expansion of already existing locals adds more than 400,000 new names to the rolls of CIO, bringing the Southern membership to more than 800,000, Bittner said.

While there was a noticeable slump immediately following enactment of the Taft-Hartley law last August, the tempo of organization has shown a decided upswing during the last three months of the year.

More than 50% of the plants won for the union since August have been without resort to the NLRB, Bittner pointed out. Consent elections, or a check of union membership cards against the plant payroll, have been worked out between management and the union in order to avoid the red-tape and delay attached to the NLRB by reason of passage of the Taft-Hartley measure.

BITTNER expressed "complete satisfaction" at the progress made in the drive. "Plans for 1948 include concentrated drives in several of the larger industries in the South," he said, "I predict that the new year will show even greater gains than those made during the last 18 months."

Meanwhile, CIO drive last week scored five more victories in Arkansas, North Carolina and Tennessee.

The vote was 100% for the union at the Public Utilities Co. in Crossett, Ark., where the employes selected the CIO International Woodworkers as their bargaining agent.

Workers at the A. B. Houtz Lumber Co. in Elizabeth City. N. C., voted for the Woodworkers. So did those at Major & Loomis Lumber Co., Hertford, N. C., where the score was 134 to 50. In Fayetteville, N. C., the workers also voted for the Woodworkers. The CIO United Chemical Workers won out in a decertification election petitioned for by the management at the J. R. Watkins Co. in Memphis, Tenn.

BUSINESS IS DREAMING OF A GOLDEN '48

U. S. News Visions Another '47--But Even More So

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

IN 1948, we'll have a Presidential election . . . .
The Dodgers will attempt to repeat for the National League Pennant and then win the World Series . . . .

Palestine will become a free nation . . . .

A number of aviators will set new speed records . . .

The New Look will be a year old . . . .

There'll be a lot of talk about New York's Blizzard of 1947 and a lot less talk about the Blizzard of '88.

And—it's shaping up as the Dream Year for Business.

Here's what U. S. News—a spokesman for industry—predicts:

"Boom is to carry business activity to a new peak in 1948.

"Wages will rise. Income will rise. Spending will increase. Prices and living costs are to reach a still higher level.

"Test will come around mid-year, when crop outlook is known.

"Weak spots may develop in the trend of inventory buying, in exports, in business investment and in money and credits policy."

U. S. News estimates that profits will be slightly lower in 1948, but the "rate would top all profit records before 1947."

In summation, U. S. News says: "In general, 1948 promises to be a banner year for production and business volume. Activity during the first half promises to assure a high annual average even if a declining trend sets in later."

HOW do all these predictions compare with the boom inflationary years of 1947?

Here's how:

- In 1947, according to the Commerce Dept., Americans earned 11% more than in 1946. But—and it's a big but—Americans in 1947 spent more because of high prices.
- In 1947, personal incomes were about $197,000,000,000. But—with the consumer index above the inflation year of 1920 and away above 1946, shoppers paid out 14% more of their incomes than they did in 1947.
- In 1947, personal savings were $11,000,000,000. But—they were $15,000,000,000 in 1946. In 1947, personal savings were 6% of "disposable income." But—in 1946 they were 9%.
- Commerce showed that the wholesale price level at the end of 1947 was more than double the 1929 average, 25% above 1946 and only slightly below the 1920 peak.
- Industrial wholesale prices were up 25% over 1946; non-food farm products 20%; food products 30%.
- In 1947, according to U. S. News, the value of the dollar—that bill with George Washington's face on it—had shrunken from a buying power of 100c in 1939 to 60c. (The dollar was worth 95c in 1941; 85c in '42; 81c in '44; 77c in '45; 71c in '46 and 60c in 1947. U. S. News says: "A 75-c dollar is about the best to be expected in the years ahead.")
- In November, 1947, last estimated month, the average production worker was making $51.02 a week, highest gross average pay in history. But—and this is about the biggst "but"—reducing those $51.02 to 1939 values (after subtracting social security and taxes), Mr. Average Worker has a purchasing power of less than $30.
- 1947 was also the year in which a Cleveland daily newspaper quoted a housewife, bedeviled by inability to keep up her family food budget, bitterly cried: "If this is prosperity, give us a depression."
- 1947 was the year in which the Republican-controlled Congress refused to pass the anti-inflation curbs proposed by Pres. Truman and backed in general by the CIO and most of labor—and instead passed the Republican "cure."
- 1947 was the year in which Ewan Clague, chief of the Bur. of Labor Statistics, said that real wages—earnings measured in terms of what they can buy—went up only 1% during the first 11 months. But—they were 4.7% below the level of June, 1946 (last month of OPA).
- In other words, don't breathe a sigh of relief at the end of 1947—for 1948 looks to be even worse.

WHAT are the definite straws in the wind?

Two seemingly conflicting straws blew around last week.

THE FIRST STRAW: The Interstate Commerce Commission granted the railroads another 10% interim hike in freight rates, the second 10% interim increase within three months. (The two 10 percenters make a total of 21%, rather than 20%, since the second is taken on the previous rate, increased by 10%.)

The interim increases are to stand until June, 1948, or until ICC makes a final decision on how much the rate should be increased permanently.

Two Best Bets: The final increase will be higher than 21%; the shippers, never a one to let anything interfere with profits, will pass the increased freight rates right on to you and me.

THE SECOND STRAW: General Electric announced price reductions of 3 to 10% in 40% of its products—such as refrigerators, stoves, radios and television sets.

Pres. C. E. (GE) Wilson—not to be confused with Pres. C. E. (GM) Wilson—said the move was made to fight inflation.

Far be it from us to question G. E.'s motives—But. The "but" this time required a little history-checking, which was provided by Bruce Waybur, researcher in the CIO Electrical Workers' Washington office.

Before this 5% decrease, this was the price and wage Picture at GE:

Consumer Paid	G E Received	Worker Paid
Refrigerator
1941 $155	$110	$19
1941 $226	$161	$31
Washing Machine
1941 $78.50	$56	$8.50
1947 $128.50	$92	$13.75

(All figures are approximate).

Now, as to industrial equipment, some or all of which is in the list of price-reduced articles.

- Generating and transmitting equipment has risen 30% since before OPA (no rise at all during OPA).
- Integral horsepower motors rose 17% during OPA, 15% since, for a total of 35%.
- Fractional horsepower motors: up 27% during OPA; up 20 since, total, 52.
- Incandescent lighting fixtures: up 18 during OPA; 14 since, total 35.
- In fact, all industrial equipment in the electrical industry has risen 47% since before OPA.

There's another straw in the wind. It's definite. This is it:

- Dun & Bradstreet's wholesale food price index for the week ended Dec. 30 went—where but up?—to a new old-time high of $7.24.

The previous record high, set Dec. 2, 1947, was 71c lower.

In case you forget, the all-time low in the Dun & Bradstreet's index was almost 15 years ago—Jan. 31, 1933. Then, the index was $1.49. In the interim, food prices have risen more than 485%.

Murray on New Year:

'Inflation Most Pressing Problem'

HERE is CIO Pres. Philip Murray's New Year statement:

The United States and its people during 1948 must make decisions which will greatly affect the future welfare of the entire world.

We must make a genuine effort to rehabilitate the war-torn nations abroad so they can become self-supporting and this we must do without meddling in the internal affairs of the countries to which we give aid.

We must do everything we can to protect our own economy—an economy badly strained by the forces of inflation and burdened by our own needs and the needs of those overseas who face hunger and privation.

In our efforts to further the cause of democracy throughout the world we should attempt to make our own democratic form of government function more efficiently than it has ever functioned in the past.

Inflation is the most pressing problem confronting the United States. It is sapping the purchasing power of our people and leading us toward the brink of a depression. It is a problem we must tackle—realistically and wholeheartedly—before many more weeks have passed.

Our success in dealing with domestic economic problems will greatly determine the world-wide role we can play.

The Congress of Industrial Organizations during the coming year will do everything it can to put into operation the legislative and economic machinery needed to speed our own country and other nations along the road to lasting peace and prosperity.

THAT 'DISAPPEARING' BILL

Big mystery last week at the White House was: What happened to the original copy of the GOP-sponsored "anti-inflation" bill?

It seemed to disappear into thin air after being placed on the desk of a presidential aide. Pres. Truman signed a duplicate copy on the theory that it was better than nothing—but only slightly better.

An even bigger mystery, however, was: How is the Administration going to clamp down on inflation with a measure containing only a few teeth—and weak ones at that,

Some observers (including the editors of the CIO News) detected political skullduggery of a type designed to influence people against Truman and win friends for the Republicans.

The GOPers have started a publicity chant which goes as follows:

"We gave the President sufficient power to control inflation. If inflation isn't controlled it will be Truman's fault—not ours."

It will be a neat trick if they get by with it. The public, of course, will pay the bill. ★ ★ ★

Congress Faces Big Problems

Congress goes back into session this week, facing virtually the same problems that confronted it when it began its deliberations a year ago—and the passage of time hasn't made them any simpler.

No. 1 domestic issue is whether the lawmakers will give the President a real club with which to battle inflation or insist on his using the "feather duster" they fashioned for him before going home for Christmas.

High on the agenda is a long-range foreign recovery and rehabilitation program. The fight probably will be over how much to spend and how to administer the set-up.

Action also is needed on housing and rent control, health legislation, extension of social security, anti-poll tax and anti-discrimination measures and other "social" legislation.

We suggest again—as we've often done before—that the folks back home let their congressmen and senators know how they feel about these things.

The hearing of our lawmakers improves considerably during election year. ★ ★ ★

Provide Enough To Do The Job

Some of the arguments against a long-range European aid program remind us of the fellow who was building a house but ran out of materials and money before he put the roof on.

It started raining—and you know what happened then!

Or, if you want a different illustration——

An engineer built a dam halfway across a river, and then the flood came.

We'd be wasting money if we half-rehabilitated the war-torn nations and then decided we'd gone far enough. ★ ★ ★

They Must Like The Union Shop

It wasn't startling news, but we believe it worth mentioning—just to satisfy the curiosity of those who wondered about unionists' reaction to the union shop.

NLRB reports it conducted 112 "union shop authorization polls" during November. Ninety per cent of those casting valid ballots voted in favor of the union shop. That's a nice margin of safety ★ ★ ★

Average Guy Doesn't Want Moon With Fence Around It

By ALLAN L. SWIM

LIFE would be fairly simple if we didn't pack our heads with so much ideological "nonsense."

Take our present domestic situation as a classic example. We've got serious inflation problems and the know-how for solving them—but we've got ideological differences, too.

Now, an ideological difference is something with which to cope, especially in an election year.

So we spend a lot of time scheming and coping—not with our basic problems but with opposing ideologies.

THE realistic guy who has his nose against the economic grindstone and would like to take it off sees the situation about as follows:

Prices began increasing after OPA was killed and have been at it ever since. And there's nothing to indicate they've reached their peak.

This means the average person is having trouble making ends meet. The average corporation, on the other hand, has been sopping up the financial gravy at an unprecedented rate.

So, says the realistic guy, workers have got to have more money so they can live decently and the government has got to clamp on price controls to hold the cost of living in line.

IT sounds simple, doesn't it? But right here is where ideology enters the picture and makes the job a tough one.

This country was built up under a system of free enterprise which, though often abused, produced a lot of good things for a lot of people.

The ideology on which the system was founded calls for a minimum of governmental interference and control. Only in extreme emergencies—such as war—has the public submitted to "iron hand" regulation of ordinary economic pursuits.

So the present opposition to price control stems from ideology as well as from a desire by certain groups to gouge the consumers.

THE realistic guy says you can't feed your children on ideological opinions—and he's right. It takes dough—and plenty of it at today's prices.

Sometimes the realist is more ideological than the ideologist. That's because he looks into the future, sees something that scares the dickens out of him and decides it's time to shift gears.

He'd gladly trade a hunk of free enterprise temporarily for a bit of control if by doing so he could prevent a depression in which the whole American system might go out the window for keeps.

THE average guy doesn't want the moon with a fence around it. He wants a comfortable living for himself and his family, reasonable security, a lot of freedom and enough spare change left over after each payday to finance a bit of fun.

Sure, we have those who crave riches and great power, but they're the exceptions to the rule. And we have those who think the world owes them a living.

The extremists, unfortunately, come nearer achieving their goals than do the average persons who seek the ordinary things.

THIS isn't just an ideological discussion of ideologies. It's an attempt to show that something more than money is involved in the fight over inflation curbs.

You probably can't divide the opponents into two distinct groups, but if you could you'd find—

Those who believe we should let the old "law" of supply and demand determine our economic future.

And those who believe government should step into the picture when circumstances permit that "law" to threaten our economic system.

The CIO is in the latter group because it believes a crash is inevitable unless we put real curbs on inflationary forces.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP BY YOMEN

"And we hereby resolve that in 1949 we'll do more for labor than we did in 1947."

'What I See For 1948'

The following article, by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, appeared in the January issue of Coronet Magazine. It was part of a symposium, "What I See for 1948."

Others participating included Warren R. Austin, U. S. Representative to the UN; Chester Bowles, ex-OPA head; Rt. Rev. Msgr. E. J. Flanagan, founder of Boys' Town; Harold E. Stassen, ex-governor of Minnesota; Sumner Welles, ex-Undersecretary of State; Dr. Thomas Parran, U. S. Surgeon General; Robert R. Young, chairman of board, Chesapeake & Ohio R. R.; David E. Lilienthal, chairman, U. S. Atomic Energy Commission; William B. Benton, former ex-Assistant Secretary of State; J. Edgar Hoover, FBI head, and Drew Pearson, columnist.

By PHILIP MURRAY

My fervent hope is that, in 1948, our labor unions will be accepted as being as much a part of the American way of life as movies and hot dogs.

From Coronet

Organized labor naturally hopes to get rid of the Taft-Hartley Act and the antiunion measures passed by various state legislatures. But even more, we would like to see a change in the thinking which prompted our legislators to pass such laws. Abuses, real or imaginary, in management-labor relations cannot be cured by laws which cripple free collective bargaining.

IN 1948, I also hope that we do not repeat the tragic mistakes of the '20s and '30s. Already there are ominous signs that the same greedy men who prematurely killed price control are leading us down the familiar boom-or-bust path. Let us hope that in the coming year Congress writes laws that will benefit 140,000,000 Americans, thus creating higher standards of living for the many, not high profits for the few.

Organized labor's millions of men and women have many other simple hopes for 1948. They would like to see needless occupational accidents reduced. They look forward to better homes, improved health and education, and a reasonable guarantee against poverty in old age.

AND they are hopeful that in 1948 men will not be fired, demoted, beaten or jailed on unconstitutional charges (as they have been in previous years) because they are union members or organizers.

Above all, let us pray that these advances can be made without costly economic strife. For I would like to be able to say at the end of 1948 that we in the U. S. had so conducted our affairs that the world's troubled millions could look to no other country but ours for guidance.

Spelling Bee

From "Capital Comment," issued by the Democratic Natl. Committee:

"Paul Porter, last head of the OPA, told a New England audience that he couldn't really express his feelings about the cause of present high prices without using a 'four-letter word.'

"He said he would spell the word for his listeners, who began to look a little nervous.

"The word, Porter continued, 'is T-A-F-T.'"

They Bowed Their Heads In Prayer

IT WAS ONE of those things which sometimes happen when a man decides to say what he's got on his mind.

Some of those who heard it said the minister "stole the show," but that the newspaper men covering the event ignored what he said.

They said, too, that the minister's words weren't exactly in keeping with what the industrialists and politicians considered the spirit of the occasion.

IT WAS an auspicious occasion— a "big" dedication—so a group of dignitaries was on hand.

Rev. Warren Candler Budd, pastor of Hapeville Methodist Church, waited until those present bowed their heads, then he began his invocation:

"O, God, Thou art Thyself of the great Creator. the Master Workman. Thou hast revealed Thyself to us in Jesus the carpenter whose roughened hands bear eternal testimony to the dignity of toil.

"WE SENSE Thy presence in the upward surge of the masses, who with the awakened self-respect of Children of God, have through the centuries cast off the shackles of slavery and serfdom, and stand now gazing toward the dawn of a greater freedom.

"We praise Thee for those brave spirits who have led the way; who have dared to risk even their children's bread in organized endeavor to improve the lot of all; who for their unselfish devotion have been condemned as outcasts of society; endured prison; sacrificed their lives as martyrs to the cause.

"HELP Thou the labor movement of our day to be worthy of its heritage. Unite in high purpose the workers in the factory and the farm. Preserve them from the temptation to selfish complacency. Guard their leaders from the lust for personal power. Guide them in the service of the common good.

"Help the workers of all lands to stand shoulder to shoulder for justice and peace among the nations. Save them from the sin of selfish nationalism. Give them a wider vision of world government with justice and liberty for all.

"GRANT to labor the wisdom to seek a world of peace and plenty by means of organization and the ballot, keeping their movement free from hate and violence, building into the cooperative commonwealth those spiritual values which alone can make it endure.

"Bring at last all workers by hand or brain into worldwide brotherhood; into closer friendship with Thee, O God, the Father of all of us. Amen."

HENRY and Benson Ford and most of the "big brass" of the Ford Motor Co. were on hand when Rev. Budd spoke.

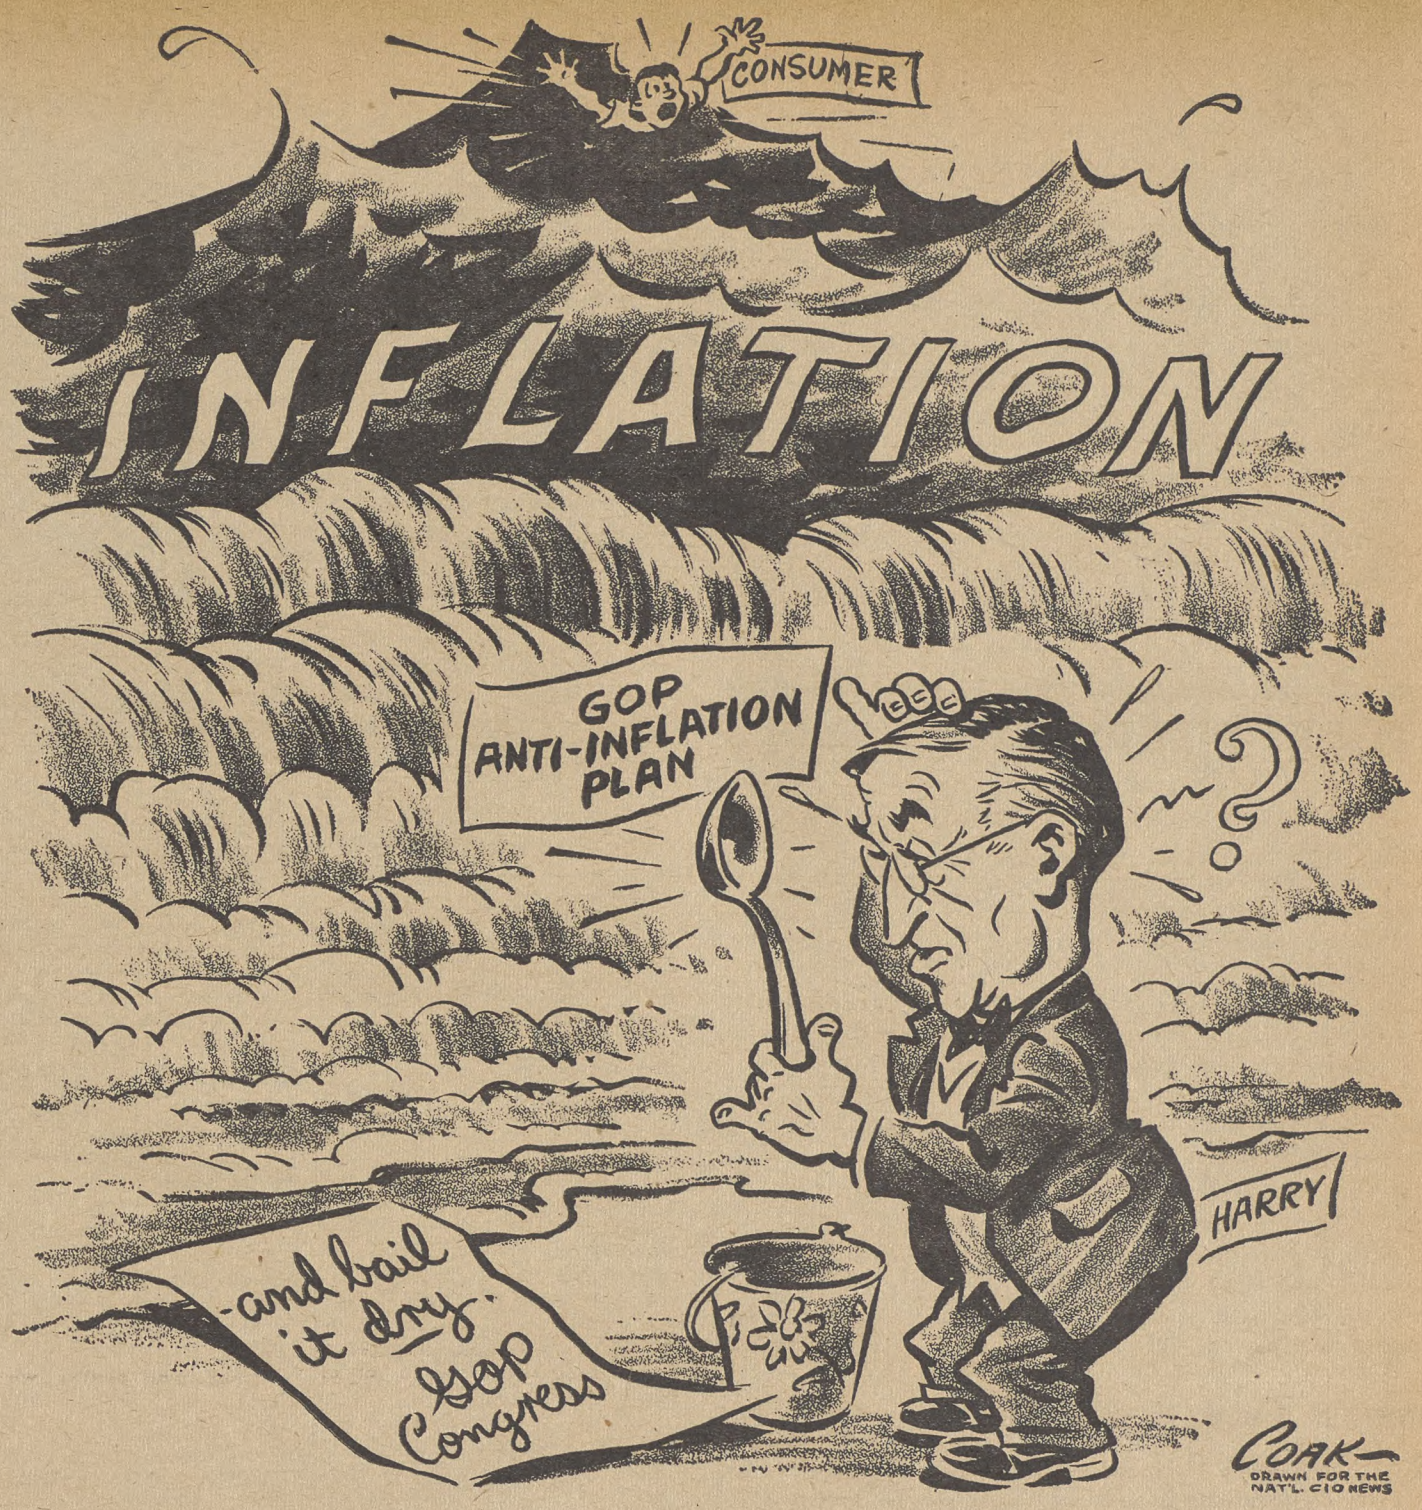
So were Gov. Thompson and Ex-Gov. Arnall of Georgia, Mayor Hartsfield of Atlanta and top-flight business leaders of the Atlanta area.

The expressions on the faces of some of the group showed clearly that they were startled by the minister's forthright invocation—by his pro-labor sentiments.

THE invocation was a forerunner to speechmaking which paid tribute to the great industrial empire of the Fords.

And it was an occasion for celebration —an occasion marking the establishment of a new enterprise that will help the South balance its agriculture with industry.

When it was over the newsmen returned to their typewriters and wrote not about the minister but about the Dec. 10 dedication of the huge new Ford plant at Hapeville, Ga., a suburb of Atlanta.



The Cure That Kills — A Fable For New Year

By FRANK DONNER, of CIO Legal Staff

LIKE a lot of people, Joe Worker had his troubles. Every time he turned around the cost of living went up a few notches. The grocery bill was getting higher and higher each week. It was harder and harder to keep the kids in shoes and to meet the medical bills. But his employer—Mr. Boss—could think up a thousand ways of getting around the contract: he violated the Wagner Act; he instituted speed-ups; he discriminated against union leaders; he increased the work load.

But things could have been worse. Joe had his union to protect his working conditions and to fight for decent living standards for himself and the other workers in the plant. Then, one day a lot of professors and doctors in Washington, like Professor Taft and Doctor Ball and Doctor Hartley, made an announcement. They said to Joe Worker, "You're a pretty sick man. Your rights are run down. You're losing your liberty. You need an operation to improve your freedom. We know just the thing to cure you and make you a new man."

"What are you talking about?" Joe said. "I may have a hard time of it, but as long as I can have a strong union then I'll be strong.

"If you experts want to give somebody medicine why not try it out on Mr. Boss? Why don't you try an operation on him so that he behaves himself and stops fighting the union. That would be the best possible cure you fellows could think up both for me and for the whole country."

BY this time the experts were putting on their white coats and rubber gloves. They strapped Joe onto a table and wheeled him into the operating room.

"When we get through with you," they promised, "you'll be grateful to us. This operation will free you from tyranny and give you new rights.

"We'll give you something better than just the right to resist wage cuts and speed-ups and raids on your working and living standards. When we're finished with our operation you'll be able to fight the union. You'll have the liberty to leave your union and to bargain with the boss on your own."

Joe sputtered, "If you do that I'll be helpless. I don't need your kind of operation. If you want to operate, why don't you operate on Mr. Boss? Cut out some of his brass so he'll respect the union and deal with it."

But the experts weren't interested in Joe's ideas about what was good for him. They knew what was good for him.

So the experts got out their sharpest knives and operating tools and began their operation on Joe. Whenever the experts weren't sure what part to cut out of Joe and what part to leave in, Mr. Boss—who was in the background directing the operation—told them what to do. The surgeons performing the operation tried their best to follow the advice and the directions of Mr. Boss. When Mr. Boss got through supervising the operation, there wasn't a single trade union right Joe Worker enjoyed which wasn't removed or mutilated in some way.

AS the surgeons were finishing their operation one of them had an idea.

"While we have this fellow under ether why not take away his political rights too? He'll never notice the difference."

And so as a last gesture the doctors cut a new incision and cut away the patient's political rights.

When Joe woke up and finally went back to work he felt terrible.

"This operation hasn't cured me," Joe protested, "it's almost killed me! You tried to make me weaker and Mr. Boss stronger."

THE good doctors who tried to mess Joe up ignored these protests or evaded them. In fact, they scolded Joe for complaining. One of them solemnly lectured him, "You can't expect a complete cure; you'll feel better later on."

Another one said, "The reason why you're feeling so badly is that we didn't do a complete job. In a few months we're going to try to operate on you again."

But neither Joe, nor any of his friends who knows the score, was fooled by all of this double talk.

ON this page, there is a state-by-state analysis of registration information.

In addition, there is some general information needed for registration.

Exercise of suffrage is not automatic. Basic requirements in all states are U. S. citizenship and residence of varying lengths. Most liberal on the latter requirements are several Middle Western states. Longest residence requirement is for some Southern states.

The voting age is 21, except Georgia, which during the war reduced the age to 18 "because any one old enough to die for his or her country is old enough to vote."

Seven states require pay-

Win Union Shops Under T-h Act

Congressmen who hoped to prove that union members are the innocent dupes of leaders who "impose" union shop conditions on them have another hope coming, according to CIO Textile Workers Pres. Emil Rieve.

Although the union has already proved its point by showing that 90% of the textile workers in bargaining units which have voted on the issue want the union shop, TWUA is planning to pile up even more convincing evidence.

The union, Rieve said, is going to poll all its members on the issue to "give the lie to the reactionaries in and out of Congress who claimed that workers were in the past forced by union leaders to accept closed-shop and union shop contracts."

(The Taft-Hartley Act outlaws the closed shop, but permits a union shop on condition that a majority of the employes in the bargaining unit vote in favor of it. In collective bargaining elections the law requires only a majority of those voting.)

TWUA will have completed union shop elections in all its woolen and worsted mills by Feb. 1. Petitions for elections in most of its cotton and rayon mills are being prepared now. The union shop will remain in effect in most of these mills until next August, but elections are required by law for their continuance after that time.

The Natl. Labor Relations Board recently announced that the union shop has won 100% of the 112 elections held since passage of the T-H Act. Ninety percent of the ballots cast favored the provision.

"It should be clear," Rieve remarked, "that the workers themselves desire this sort of union security. I am confident that future tests will produce the same results."

Taft Will Fight MWD Health Bill

A battle of health bills is apt to develop soon after the 80th Congress meets in Washington.

Sen. Taft said he would press for quick passage of his own bill (S. 545), which has been described as a charity measure of limited usefulness. CIO and other labor groups have long supported the Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill, which would set up a government medical insurance program along the lines of social security.

Sen. Murray (D., Mont.), longtime liberal and supporter of the program to give the country a real health insurance plan, said he and other sponsors of the bill would make "every effort" to bring the health plan bill up for speedy consideration.

But Taft, speaking for the majority party, said "it's all right with me if the Democrats want to make an issue of it." He charged "regimentation" and "compulsion" against the Democratic bill, which provides for free choice of doctors, hospital insurance and payment of routine medical bills through the insurance fund.

NLRB Trying to 'Carve up' CIO?

THE Taft-Hartley infiltrated Natl. Labor Relations Board has given another indication that it is about to—in the words of CIO Counsel Lee Pressman—"attempt to carve up the CIO."

By a unanimous vote, NLRB has decided to reverse itself and order elections on a craft basis in two plants where CIO unions have held contracts for five years.

The craft union which applied for the elections is the AFL Pattern Makers' League. The two CIO unions are the Steelworkers, at the Harnischfeger Corp., Milwaukee, and the Electrical Workers at Westinghouse, Cleveland.

In another NLRB case, the AFL Typographical Union, on strike against Chicago and other newspapers for protection of its traditional closed shop, has demanded that the NLRB name individual publishers who charge the ITU with committing unfair labor practices.

MEANWHILE, support rallied to the CIO Electrical Workers in their campaign against Remington Rand.

In Buffalo, a mass labor rally, attended by an overflow crowd, heard representatives of the CIO denounce Rand's attempt to break UE, which has had bargaining rights for several years at Rand plants.

UE Pres. Albert Fitzgerald (he's also a CIO vice president) told the gathering that the claim of "misquotation" by NLRB Counsel Robert N. Denham proves that he "prematurely exposed the real type of legislation that has been passed—and industry is not ready at this time to have it exposed." (Denham, in commenting on an NLRB ruling which said that Rand could not secure an NLRB election since UE had not signed non-Communist affidavits, was quoted by the Associated Press as saying that Rand would "proceed at its own peril" if it attempted to bargain with UE. Denham later said he was misquoted, that he meant the "peril" remark to apply only to union security provisions.)

Pressman told the meeting that "the T-H Law must be fought at the polls and in every shop in the country."

Other speakers included Steelworkers' Organizer Matthew Arnold and City Councilman Peter J. Rybka, AFL business agent. Messages of support were received from CIO Regional Director Hugh Thompson, and others. Unions attending included Amalgamated Clothing; Rubber; Mine, Mill; Public; Office and Professional; Gas, Coke and Chemical.

U. S. Unions Aid World Peace

THE trip of the Friendship Train through France shows that American unions which contributed to the train aided in easing international tension, according to Drew Pearson, sponsor of the project.

In a recent column from France, Pearson wrote:

The station at Valence, just two weeks before our arrival, had been the scene of a bitter railroad strike. Four men had been killed. Bullet holes still marked the walls. The strike, Communist-inspired, was partly against receiving American aid under the Marshall Plan. But on the walls alongside the bullet marks, when the Friendship Train arrived, was a huge banner reading: "Welcome et merci!"

Incidentally, one thing which has made a great impression in France is the fact that many American railroad workers contributed their salaries for one day to help haul the Friendship Train across the U. S. A. The fact that the CIO Steelworkers in Pittsburgh gave a carload of milk and the steelworkers and coal miners in Windber, Pa., gave a car has greatly impressed the left-wing French labor leaders. To some extent, it has taken the wind out of their argument that it's only capitalists who want to help the French and for purely imperialistic reasons.

UE Aids UN Meeting

A New Year message from Trygve Lie, United Nations secretary general, was presented to Americans over the weekly program of the CIO Electrical Workers, Mutual Network.

Lie appeared as a guest of Arthur Gaeth, radio reporter, who handles the UE's program each Wednesday night at 7:30, Eastern Standard Time. A veteran radio man who covered European news events for 10 years, Gaeth has broadcast for UE since October.

European Children Need More Aid

Starvation and disease continued to stalk millions of children in Europe. The race to save these youngsters from tuberculosis, stunted growth, rickets and other evils threatening, is going at a snail's pace.

So far, aid is reaching not more than one-tenth of those who need it, according to Donald A. Sabin, who has just returned from setting up programs in France, Italy, Greece, Poland and Czechoslovakia under the United Nation's Intl. Children's Emergency Fund.

He said that the total amount now in the fund, about $39 million, would reach only 3,500,000 children for six months with a supplemental feeding program of some 300 calories for each child.

In some areas, Sabin said, only children who were sick as well as needy, such as those in tuberculosis hospitals, could receive the supplemental food, chiefly dried milk from the U. S., under the limited resources of the fund.

'NO'

WHEN CIO Warehousemen at 26 dried fruit plants in San Jose, Calif., sang "No, No, A Thousand Times No" recently, they weren't playing coy; they meant business.

They proved it by casting 1287 "no" ballots in an NLRB election requested by AFL Teamsters to dislodge the CIO union which has held a contract for the past seven years. The Teamsters polled 343 votes.

The ILWU charged the Board ordered the election without requiring the challenging union to present evidence of substantial membership, as required by law. Because the CIO union is one of those refusing to sign the non-communist affidavits, it was denied a place on the ballot. Employes were given a choice between the Teamsters and "no."

Hailing the victory as a reaffirmation of faith in the ILWU, Intl. Rep. Ralph Dawson said, "Even though the Board cancelled our certification" the CIO contract, which runs until April 15, 1948, still stands, as does the hiring hall—and the union.

New Dealer Loses Post

ANOTHER leading New Dealer, brought into government work by Pres. Roosevelt, was ushered out of his job last week.

Pres. Truman announced he would not reappoint James Landis, one-time dean of Harvard Law School, to head the influential Civil Aeronautics Board. The CAB has jurisdiction over air line routes, rates and safety problems.

Landis was appointed about 18 months ago to fill the unexpired term of a former CAB chairman who resigned to enter private law practice. In recent weeks, Washington reporters have charged that some big airlines had set aside sizeable amounts of money for lobbying against Landis' reappointment.

CIO Pres. Murray, in a letter to Pres. Truman, hailed Landis as "an outstanding type of government administrator" and noted that he possesses both ability "and a broad consciousness of the people's needs."

David Behnke, president of the AFL air pilots union, said Landis should be reappointed because of his interest in safety problems. Behnke charged that airline firms have sought to "get" Landis because his safety rulings have cost them some money and because he has failed to swallow corporation arguments on a number of issues.

Landis filled a number of government posts during the Roosevelt era. He was a member of the Federal Trade Commission, was chairman of the Securities and Exchanges Commission, director of the Office of Civil Defense.

Jersey CIO Calls Special Meeting

A special one-day constitutional convention of the New Jersey State CIO Council will be held Feb. 29, in Newark, it was disclosed today.

Purposes of the convention, according to Pres. Carl Holderman and Secy.-Treas. Peter J. Flynn, will be to "adopt a financial program that will meet the needs of the State Council" in view of the withholding of per capita payments by some unions and to "act upon the 1948 political action program of the State Council."

Fewer Homes Cost More In 1947

AMERICANS paid 55% more money for new housing in 1947 than the previous year—but got only 13% more housing units, the U.S. Department of Commerce reported last week.

In addition, the Department discounted the widely-reported figures of national real estate organizations by announcing that the number of new dwelling units begun in 1947 was around 860,000. The realtors estimated over a million new units.

Although the number of houses begun surpassed last year's new construction, it fell far below the 937,000-unit record of 1925. In that year $4,592,000,000 was spent on new houses. In 1947 the cost was $4,939,000,000—just one more piece of evidence that inflation is upon us.

For the New Year the Department predicted even higher construction costs, probably totaling $15,200,000,000, or 18% above 1947.

Another year-end statement on construction came last week from Administrator J. W. Follin of the Federal Works Agency, who pointed out that the $12.7 billion volume spent on both public and private construction scales down to about $6.5 billion in terms of 1939 prices—"about the same physical volume as in 1940 and appreciably less than in the late 1920s."

Early last month Rep. Ralph Gamble (R., N. Y.) told members of his Joint Congressional Committee on Housing that housing construction would have to be increased by at least 50% "for a minimum of four or five years . . . if adequate shelter at lower than prewar costs to tenant as well as to owner is to be achieved."

Gamble has announced that he will hold hearings on housing in Washington Jan. 12.

NMU Demands Aid For Greek Sailors

CIO's Maritime Union has protested the arrest and threatened deportation of scores of Greek seamen charged by the U. S. Immigration Service with over-staying 29-day permits to be in this country.

NMU asked immediate release of the men and a lengthening of the period in which foreign seamen can stay ashore. It pointed out that shipping is slow, with jobs more scarce than at any time in the recent past.

Deportation "would mean sending them to their death in view of the fascist character of the present Greek regime," NMU pointed out.

Cafeteria Raises

Some 325 cashiers and checkers employed in the major New York City cafeterias last week won renewal of their CIO Office & Professional Workers contract and a $5 weekly wage boost.

Minimum salaries are boosted to $43 a week, the union said. Also provided: six holidays, one to three weeks vacation, free insurance and hospitalization, and an anti-discrimination clause.

Ask Holy Land Unity

A CALL to Arab workers in Palestine to cooperate with Jewish labor in lifting the living standards of both groups was issued recently by Histadrut—the General Federation of Jewish Labor in Palestine.

In its first major policy statement since the UN voted partition of the Holy Land, the Histadrut Executive Committee declared:

"We, the Jewish workers of Palestine, solemnly declare that we will not rest until we shall have convinced the Arab worker that the Jewish state stands for national and religious, social and cultural freedom and equality, and that in it all the inhabitants will be assured of work, of bread, and of education for their children."

The call urged Arab workers not to heed incitement by those "who have misled and exploited you for so many years." It asked Arab workers to "avoid bloodshed and violence" and to "work together with us for the unity of Arab and Jewish workers, for a life of true peace and happiness."

Arabs Benefit

Histadrut, which has some 180,000 Jewish members in Palestine, noted that thousands of Arab workers in the Palestine Labor League have enjoyed many of the wage and social security benefits won by the Jewish group.

The statement appealed for cooperation to help "build a life of happiness and peace within the framework of our independent states . . . We must make organized labor the basis of the economic life of the country.

"To every worker—Jew and Arab alike—we must assure: a just distribution of work, a fair wage scale, complete freedom of trade union organization, and social security."

The Histadrut meeting was marked by joy over the UN decision and anxiety about possible future violence throughout Palestine. M. Nemirovsky, general secretary of the federation, expressed Jewish labor's "deep gratitude" to its friends in other countries, and in particular to CIO and AFL.

Both American labor groups have voiced support at frequent intervals in the past for the cause of the Palestinian workers.

Histadrut has undertaken a wide variety of activities in recent years. It participates in the "Hamalhim" iron works, one of Palestine's largest industries, which was recently reorganized as an owner-worker cooperative.

It has also organized a housing company — Shikun, Ltd. — which has just completed the first 104 dwellings in a new workers' housing project in Jerusalem. The first home units were ear-marked for new immigrants, while an additional 50 homes soon to be finished will be set aside for ex-servicemen.

Vet Statistics

Almost 3.2 million veterans of World War I were employed in the Nation's manufacturing industries in June 1947, a gain of about 40,000 over the end of the first quarter, according to estimates made available by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Aid Strikers At Christmas

Kansas CIO Council collected 116 baskets (above) from local unions to distribute to members of Local 383, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, who had been on strike at the Dickey Clay plant, Pittsburg, Kans., for more than four months. Since this picture was taken the dispute was settled, the union winning 10c to 26c hourly raises, a checkoff and improved vacation provisions. (Right), Local 4057, CIO Steelworkers, staged a Christmas party for the children of their members on strike two months at Consolidated Vultee, Nashville, Tenn. Louis F. Krainock, Nashville area director of the CIO Organizing Committee, acted as Santa Claus.

BOOK REVIEW

Reveal High Social Cost Of Restrictive Covenants

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WHAT the housing shortage and the increase in racial restrictive agreements it has brought about mean to the Negro people is told in a new book, "People vs. Property," by Herman H. Long and Dr. Charles S. Johnson.

The authors of this first comprehensive approach to the problem of racially restrictive covenants in housing are associate director and director of the Race Relations Dept., American Missionary Association, Fisk University.

The American Missionary Association was formed in 1846 for the expressed purpose of removing the "sins of caste" from American life. Its latest work, "People Vs. Property," is an important and notable effort in that direction.

Concerned particularly with the inequalities in housing opportunity due to practices of racial discrimination and segregation, it calls urgent attention to the violations of democratic rights.

The book discusses the social cost of segregation, presents an extensive study of 600 restrictive covenants in Chicago and St. Louis, examines the racial discrimination of so-called Neighborhood Improvement Associations and real estate organizations, and describes racial tensions and violence produced by such practices.

Unions with active programs aimed to fight race prejudice in all its forms will find this a valuable book.

People Vs. Property, by Herman H. Long and Charles S. Johnson, Fisk University Press, Nashville, Tenn. Price, paper cover, $1; cloth, $1.50.

Heads Detroit Co-op

Frank Vievelt, vice-president, CIO Auto Workers Ford Local 400, has been named organizing director of Motor City Consumers Cooperative, a Detroit community-wide organization comprising 23 major labor, church, veteran and other civic groups. He will work closely with Al Rightley, UAW-CIO Co-op director.

Warns Of Blacklist Of Calif. Labor

Every active trade unionist in California could conceivably be blacklisted under a recent proposal made to employers that all job applicants be required to sign "loyalty" affidavits, charges the Labor Herald, official organ of the California CIO Council.

The proposal was advanced by Almon Roth, president of the San Francisco Employers' Council, at the annual meeting of the California State Chamber of Commerce recently in Los Angeles.

Urging employers to "screen out all Communists and disloyal persons at the time of hiring," Roth proposed that employers require all applicants for jobs to sign an affidavit attesting that they would not "express sympathy or give support to any such organization."

Guild Wins Renewal

The Bay City (Mich.) Newspaper Guild at the Bay City Times last week cancelled plans for a strike vote as it won renewal of its contract, a 12% increase and a modified union shop. Reporter and display salesmen minima were boosted to $70 a week—a $10 increase—and all other minima went up 12%.

Labor's World

COAL OUTPUT, one of the keys to European recovery, is moving upward in Great Britain's socialized mining industry.

British miners hauled out a record-challenging 4,400,600 tons in the week ended Dec. 20—an increase of nearly 50,000 tons over the previous week and the biggest output since early in 1938.

As a result, the public-owned mines seem likely to reach the 200-million-ton goal set for the industry in 1947. The production may come as a disappointment to British Tories, who howled when the Labor government took over the creaking industry and increased its productive efficiency.

Conservatives had predicted that the mines wouldn't produce as well under worker-controlled ownership as they had under private interests.

IN POLAND, another of Europe's major fuel-producing centers, coal miners are the "elite" of the country, according to an Allied Labor News report.

A dispatch from Katowice, in the heart of the Polish coal region, said that miners are in the top categories for wages, social services, housing priorities and food.

Government projects are replacing some dilapidated mine towns with groups of new, modern homes for the miners. Child labor in the mines—a commonplace custom in pre-war Poland—has been outlawed.

The 350,000-member Miners Union — headed by Josef Szczesniak—has developed many new gains for the mine workers, the ALN report says. Miners now get a minimum paid vacation of two weeks, running up to one month after 10 years.

The union also runs 82 vacation spots where members pay only one-third of the cost.

AUSTRALIAN workers squawked loud and fast when the General Motors-operated Holden auto works sought to give foremen the right to search kit-bags brought to the plant by employes.

A mass meeting at the Sydney plant followed firing of one worker who refused to allow such a search by the foreman. Mass meeting decided that searches would be permitted only if a policeman with a search warrant was on hand.

COLOMBIAN Federation of Labor wants the Latin-American country's industry to be operated by local owners. A meeting called by the Federation to discuss terribly high cost of living put the blame on foreign-owned corporations, which withdraw huge profits from Colombia but pay native workers a wage which can't cover even primitive living costs.

BRITAIN'S labor movement is at all-time peak size. Members of 753 unions throughout the country have a membership of close to 8,750,000. At the end of World War I, Britain's union population was about 8,350,000.

Close to six million of the unionists are members of 17 big unions. About 460 unions have less than a thousand members apiece.

NORWEGIAN workers now get three weeks' vacation with pay—as a legal right. Law passed in the Norwegian Parliament provides the vacations must be taken between May 16 and Sept. 30.

Seek Equal Pacts At Firestone

SEVEN Firestone local unions throughout the United States will see "equal and uniform" contract provisions as a result of the meeting of the Firestone Section of the International Policy Committee of the CIO Rubber Workers in Akron, O., last week.

Union Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said the action was taken "because the company has a uniform labor policy covering all its plants and a uniform price for its products, regardless of where they are produced. It is only fair that the workers in all plants receive the benefits of uniform contract provisions," covering hours, wages and conditions of employment.

Such a policy, said the union president, will help the workers, the company and the communities where the plants are located.

"We know for a fact, as a result of our experiences in this kind of labor relations with the three major competitors of Firestone, that uniformity treatment of employes develops more friendly and responsible relationships between labor and management, with consequent benefits to each community involved," he said.

Gets New Jersey Council Post

Appointment of Stephen J. Moran of Newark, to succeed Alexander Barkan as executive secretary and director of political action of the New Jersey State CIO Council was announced last week by Council Pres. Carl Holderman.

Moran, chairman of the State CIO's Political Action Committee since December 1946, will continue to hold that post temporarily, as well as his new one. Barkan has resigned, effective Jan. 5, 1948, to become national director of political action and legislation for the CIO Textile workers.

Moran joined the Worthington Pump & Machinery Corp. in 1940, and in July 1943, was elected vice president of the Steelworkers local 1833 at the plant. He became president of the local that September and has been re-elected every year since then. He is now a member of Governor Driscoll's labor-management committee and the advisory committee of the Newark Central Planning Board.

Ariz. Strike Aids 5000 Other Workers

SOME 2000 striking lettuce shed workers in Phoenix, Ariz., now entering their sixth week on the picket line, last week were responsible for easing the way for about 5000 lettuce workers in four other areas.

Lettuce, melon and carrot producers in the Salinas-Watsonville-Hollister, Imperial Valley and San Joaquin Valley areas of California and Yuma, Arizona, made three major concessions to CIO Food and Tobacco Workers' negotiators. The concessions came after a warning that the Phoenix situation would spread to them unless a substantial wage offer and a suggested retroactive date were forthcoming.

FTA Strike In Arizona: Although Gov. Sidney Osborn has used the National Guard against them, members of the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers continue striking against lettuce growers in Phoenix, Ariz., who refuse to bargain collectively. AFL, CIO and rail unions have joined in protesting the use of force against pickets. Armed deputies have replaced the guardsmen.

As the union committee prepared to walk out of the negotiations which began last October, the employers agreed not to hold the union liable for alleged Taft-Hartley violations, to consider a "realistic" wage figure, and to set Dec. 1 as the retroactive date for the wage agreement. Union spokesmen said they expected the non-struck employers to offer a 10% increase when negotiations resume Jan. 9.

The Phoenix strikers, meanwhile, were holding out against the employers' determination to retain after the strike the 300 strikebreakers now attempting to keep up production. A 10% wage hike, amounting to from 9.7 to 17½ cents an hour, has already been agreed on. The union's original demand was 17½ cents an hour.

Following Arizona Gov. Sidney Osborn's withdrawal of the National Guard from the strike scene Dec. 15, deputy sheriffs are patrolling the area. The union reported that 12 strikers had been arrested, held for a short time and then released since the walkout began Nov. 20. The National Guard was recalled after a wave of protests swamped the Governor. Official explanation for the withdrawal, however, was lack of funds.

The local's strike relief bill, involving soup kitchens, payment of strikers' rent, Christmas gifts for strikers' children, and other necessities, was estimated to be $3,500 a week. AFL, Railroad Brotherhoods and CIO unions have contributed funds to the strikers, the union stated.

3000 On Strike Against Cables

Some 3000 CIO Communications workers at four overseas cable companies struck last week as last-minute negotiations continuing four hours beyond the strike deadline failed to achieve an agreement.

Affected by the walkout are Mackay, Commercial and All-America Cables, Intl. Telephone & Telegraph affiliates, and the Western Union Cable division. The companies are estimated to handle about two-thirds of the commercial communications between the U. S. and the rest of the world.

At issue in the dispute are the union's demands for a 30% wage increase, a guarantee of pensions, and a reduction of the wage scale from 10 to 4 years. The strike had already been delayed 24 hours by the union in order to eliminate confusion about the expiration hour of the contract and to remove any ground for contract violation charges.

NMU Date Is Set

The constitutionality of Taft-Hartley provisions requiring non-communist affidavits and filing of financial statements will receive its first court test Feb. 2 in the Circuit Court of Appeals in Washington, D. C.

Involved in the case is a CIO Maritime Union request for an injunction affecting two elections in the Great Lakes region in which the union was not placed on the ballot because of failure to sign the non-communist affidavits.

Just As CIO Predicted:

MORE WAGE TAX PLANS PROPOSED IN OHIO

THE CIO has proved a true prophet in Ohio.

When the Columbus City Council considered—and then adopted—an "income and payroll" tax (fancy name for wage tax), the State CIO predicted other Ohio cities would attempt to follow suit. And that cities in other states would face like levies.

Last week, Dayton, Springfield and Cleveland—all in Ohio—took first steps toward the wage tax.

Dayton's councilmen actually indorsed the payroll levy as the only solution of its economic ills.

Columbus' tax was due to go into effect Jan. 1, but CIO and other labor groups are seeking a recall referendum. Toledo, which was the first city to impose such a revenue-maker, is in for legal hurdles. The State Auditor has announced he will bring suit early this year to attack the constitutionality of the Toledo plan.

RESIDENTS of other cities in other states are about to feel the impact of new taxes.

In Denver, a 1% city sales tax has been added to the Colorado State 2% sales tax.

In Philadelphia, where workers have for years paid a wage tax (first it was 1½%, now 1%), two new city taxes came in with the city's annual New Year's Mummers' parade; they were (1) a mercantile tax—1 mill per dollar on retail sales and one-half mill on wholesale sales (these are bound to be pushed onto the consumer) and (2) a 4-mill personal property tax on principal of mortgages, stocks, bonds and money of interest.

Quoth Business Week: "Other city dwellers across the nation are wondering how long it will be until they are paying similar taxes." (That makes Business Week a prophet, too.)

Wins Fight For Citizenship

Judge R. E. Thomason in U. S. District Court at El Paso, Tex., last week ignored objections of the U. S. Justice Dept. and granted citizenship to Humberto Silex, a former director of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

The decision climaxed a two-year fight during which the Justice Dept. first tried to deport Silex to Nicaragua and then opposed his naturalization on the grounds of "immoral" character. Silex is a native of Nicaragua.

ACW Plans Factories In Italy

A half a million dollars contributed by members of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers will be used to establish cooperative clothing factories in Italy under a plan approved by the ACW general executive board.

The union announced that Vice-Pres. August Bellanca will sail for Italy Jan. 24 on the Queen Elizabeth to complete arrangements for the project, which he initiated during previous trips to Italy. Bellanca is a member of the CIO's Italian-American Trade Union Committee.

The first clothing factory will be set up in Massacarrara, Italy, where an idle plant was found available. Some 400 Italian clothing workers will be employed at the factory which will be set up with the technical help of the CIO Clothing Workers.

The Italian Confederation of Labor will operate the plant on a cooperative basis, obtaining cloth from the Italian government at a lower cost than it could be purchased with American dollars. The clothes will be sold to the workers at cost.

Plans are also under way to start other clothing shops in other Italian towns, where other CIO unions, including the Intl. Fur & Leather Workers and the Shoe Workers, are planning projects to aid in the economic reconstruction of Italy.

George Baldanzi, executive vice-president of the Textile Workers Union, is scheduled to sail Jan. 17 for Italy to confer on plans to aid Italian workers, as a representative of the CIO's Italian-American Trade Union Committee.

Flay Conduct Of Magistrate

The CIO Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians, Local 231 of the Office & Professional Workers last week called on civic and other groups in New York City to protest the behavior of Magistrate David J. McKean to Mayor O'Dwyer and Chief Magistrate Bromberger.

Magistrate McKean last week found Jacob J. Sternbach, president of the Ebasco Chapter of the FAECT, now on strike against Ebasco Services, Inc., guilty of disorderly conduct in an affair precipitated when a non-striker called Sternbach "Jew-bastard", the union stated. The non-striker, Tarus Hreczuch, charged with disorderly conduct and arrested on Sternbach's complaint at the scene of the incident, was found not guilty by Magistrate McKean.

Seek Traction Rise

CIO Transport Workers have forwarded demands for a 30-cent hourly increase to the New York City Omnibus Corp. Other demands include a 10-cent hourly night differential, a pension plan, company contributions to a welfare fund, 11 paid holidays, three week paid vacations and a cost-of-living wage reopening after six months.

The union is also seeking a 25-cent boost from the 5th Ave. Coach Corp.

WALLACE 3rd PARTY MAPS '48 RACE

THE third-party candidacy of Henry Agard Wallace last week caused a new alignment of old-time political bedfellows and caused a flurry of conjecture in many circles.

Vocal reaction to Wallace's announcement ranged from high praise by the sponsoring Progressive Citizens of America (PCA), through cheers from a number of Republican leaders to cautious "wait and sees" from Democratic officials.

Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee (PAC) announced:

"It has been the policy of PAC not to support a third party in 1948.

"The CIO-PAC Executive Board will meet in Washington late in January to discuss more fully the entire political scene and outline plans for the 1948 campaign. Undoubtedly, the third party question will be one of the items on the agenda."

WALLACE'S bolt from the Democrats was the second political bolt in his history. In 1932, he bolted the Republicans to support Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Wallace, son of Henry C. Wallace, who was Secretary of Agriculture under Pres. Harding, was named to the same post by F. D. R.

In 1940, the younger Wallace was nominated as F. D. R.'s running mate in the third-term race. In 1941 the convention chose Harry S. Truman over Wallace. After the election, during which Wallace campaigned for the Roosevelt-Truman ticket, F. D. R. named him Secretary of Commerce. Wallace retained that post until he broke with Truman over foreign policy in 1946.

Wallace then became editor of the New Republic, retaining that post until he resigned upon throwing his hat into the political race.

His family for years had published Wallace's Farmer, a weekly agricultural magazine. Wallace has been a leader in farm experimentation, particularly on hybrid corn.

HIS third party announcement, made after PCA had asked him to run, came over the Mutual Network from Chicago. His platform was summed up as:

"Peace and abundance for all."

He denounced the Republican and Democratic parties as "war parties." "We have assembled a Gideon's army—small in number, powerful in conviction, ready in action. We have said with Gideon 'let those who are fearful and trembling depart.'

"For every fearful one who leaves there will be a thousand to take his place. A just cause is worth a hundred armies. We face the future unfettered by any principle but the general welfare. We owe no allegiance to any group which does not serve that welfare. By God's grace, the people's peace will usher in the century of the common man."

Wallace, in a speech at Milwaukee, outlined a seven-point "Wallace Plan":

A proposal from the U. S. to UN for establishment of a UN reconstruction fund; administration of fund by new UN agency; fund "made up of contributions appropriated by Congress and other nations"; priority in allocation of funds to nations suffering most severely from Axis aggression without regard to political structure of nations; allocation to be made with scrupulous respect for sovereignty; entire fund for peaceful purposes and none of it for armaments; the Ruhr to be placed under international administration.

On domestic issues, Wallace told his radio audience: "We are fighting for freedom of speech and freedom of assembly. We are fighting to end racial discrimination. We are fighting for free labor unions, or jobs, and for homes in which we can decently live."

A FEW hours before his radio talk, Wallace had conferred with delegations from 18 states backing his candidacy. Robert W. Kenny, former Democratic attorney general of California, presided at the meeting. Among those present were Hugh Bryson, president of the CIO Marine Cooks, Stewards, and Elmer A. Benson, former U. S. Senator and governor of Minnesota.

Groups represented included the Independent Progressive Party of California, the Independent Voters of the AFL, the Michigan Farmers' Union, Michigan Slav Conference, the Wallace Club of Cleveland and leaders of the CIO Mine, Mill Union.

National officers of two CIO unions, Longshoremen & Warehousemen and Farm Equipment, have indorsed the Wallace third party. Individuals in other unions, including some Auto Workers and Maritime Union officers, have also indorsed it.

Other typical reaction to Wallace:

Republican

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.): "very happy."

Rep. Clarence Brown (R., O.), chairman, executive committee, Natl. Republican Committee: "... assures that which has been apparent to most of us—that Truman will be defeated."

Carroll Reece, Natl. chairman: "The Moscow Wing of the Democratic Party has now parted company with the Pendergast wing."

Democratic

Sen. John Sparkman (D., Ala.), "Taft and Wallace are bedfellows."

J. Howard McGrath, Democratic Natl. Chairman: "will clear the atmosphere in the coming campaign."

President Truman: no comment.

There was also no immediate answer to a proposal by Wallace that Sen. Glen Taylor (D., Ida.) be his running mate. Taylor said he would decide later.

There were also reports in New York newspapers that the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers would withdraw from the New York American Labor Party, which is expected to indorse Wallace. Jacob Potofsky, president of ACW, has come out in opposition to a third party. The New York papers say the ACW represents a total of 300,000 ALP votes. In 1944, ALP, backing F. D. R., polled 499,575 votes.

HIGHEST vote in American history for a so-called third party was that cast for the Progressive candidate, the elder Robert M. LaFollette, in 1924, when he polled 4,822,856 votes to 15,725,016 for the GOP winner, Calvin Coolidge, and 8,385,586 for Democrat James W. Davis. LaFollette won the electoral votes of one state—his own Wisconsin.

In 1912, the Progressive (Bull Moose) Party ran Theodore Roosevelt in a Republican split. His "third party" became the second party, polling 4,216,020 to 6,286,241 for Woodrow Wilson and 3,483,922 for William H. Taft.

In 1892, the Populist Party, running James B. Weaver for President, polled 1,027,329 votes, capturing the electoral vote of Kansas, Colorado, Idaho and Nevada and single electoral votes in Oregon and North Dakota. The Populists, mostly a farm group, elected 10 Congressmen and three Senators. In 1896, the Populists supported William Jennings Bryan and soon disappeared from the political picture.

In 1920, Socialist Eugene Debs, running while still in Federal penitentiary on political charges, polled 919,799 votes.

In 1932, Socialist Norman Thomas polled 884,771 votes.

High Communist vote was that for William Z. Foster in 1932—103,891.

In 1936, the Union Party, sponsored by Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, ran Rep. William Lemke for President. He polled 882,479 votes to 27,464,673 for F. D. R. and 16,679,583 for Alf M. Landon.

ASK GENERAL AMESTY: These 14 men in prison garb picketed the White House on Christmas Day urging President Truman to grant a general pardon for violators of the Selective Service Act. A few days before the demonstration the President pardoned 1,523 Selective Service violators, roughly a tenth of those convicted.

No Losers In CIO Quiz Program

"IT'S in the Family!"—CIO's new radio show—and it's in the CIO family—makes its debut on the ABC network Tuesday night, January 6, at 10:45 P.M. eastern time. It will be broadcast every Tuesday at the same time through the end of June.

Weeks of preparation have gone into this bright new production.

For the first time, CIO is going to use the popular quiz show techniques to get its message to the public—and at the same time to entertain the listening audience.

"It's In The Family" is a show truly in the CIO family. On the program will be CIO members, their wives and kids. There'll be two union families competing each week. They'll come from all types of CIO unions.

And the family that comes up with the best answers will sock away a $100 war bond as a prize. The losing family won't really lose—they'll get a $25 bond as consolation prize.

The show will originate each Tuesday in the ABC studios at Radio City, New York. Joe O'Brien, one of the best question and answer men in the game, will ask the questions and help provide the fun.

The show is being produced by Bill Todman and Marc Goodson, who have developed numerous quiz programs in recent years. Peter Lyon, who has written and produced dramatic skits for CIO during the past three or four years, will continue as a radio consultant to the CIO Publicity Department.

Lots of people have asked the CIO Publicity Dept., which has been working on plans for the show during the past couple of months: "Why a quiz show?"

There are lots of reasons. A principal reason is that it gives CIO union members and their families a chance to get before a network microphone.

CIO wanted every member to share in its radio show. The quiz program fits right into that idea.

Union members who want to try out for a spot on "It's In The Family" are urged to do so—if they live in or near New York City, or plan to be in New York any Tuesday between now and the end of June.

Final decision as to who goes on the show rests with the firm of Todman & Goodson. Union members desiring to appear should call William Todman at his New York office, WI. 2-2000, Extension 426. Todman's office will arrange for an interview to test you out for the quiz show appearance, and to book you on the program.

On the show, Quizmaster Joe O'Brien will have a batch of questions to ask—questions about unions, questions about CIO policy, questions about life in these United States.

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Regional Director A. J. Federoff, Pittsburgh, Pa., reports the settlement of a strike of the bartenders of the Fraternal Order of Eagles Aerie 536, St. Marys, Pa., providing for an increase of $50 per month for the bartenders and $60 per month for the head steward. Also the settlement of a strike at Fraser Cleaners, Versailles, Pa.

Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, received a fine New Year's gift by way of a vote among some 8500 telephone workers of the UBTW in northern California and Nevada. There were several organizations on the ballot and the CIO won out with a majority of 3 to 1 over all other organizatins combined. The Independent Communication Workers of America ran a poor third. The workers will now be given the opportunity to vote TWOC-CIO—yes or no. Brother Frank Murphy and his associates are to be congratulated on this splendid and important decision.

Another victory in telephone is reported among operators of the Blue Mountain Telephone & Telegraph Co., Bangor, Pa. These workers were forced on strike and won union recognition and a written guarantee of a retroactive increase of 10 cents an hour, temporary grievance procedure established, and negotiations for a contract to continue. Regional Director Craig, Philadelphia, Pa., and TWOC-CIO Representative Ben Stahl assisted the local representatives in this effort. We extend to all of them a warm welcome to TWOC-CIO.

George Brown, Director of Organization, IWA-CIO, Portland, Ore., advises: "East Lynne Lumber Co., Sweet Home, Ore.—IWA 17, No. Union 12."

This is the first column for 1948. It is our desire that all of you make this a bigger column by getting more election victories and make 1948 a banner year in the field of organizing. We pledge to you that we will do our part to the fullest extent and we feel confident we can count upon all of you to join in this great effort.

Call From CIO

RIGHTS CONVENTION IS SCHEDULED

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Secy-Treas. James B. Carey, who is also chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, have issued a call for a CIO National Conference on Civil Rights, to be held in Cleveland, Feb. 19 and 20.

The call to the conference comments on the report—"To Secure These Rights"—of Pres. Truman's Committee on Civil Rights. "This report," the call states, "has been widely acclaimed as a document comparable with to the Declaration of Independence and the Emancipation Proclamation.

"The recommendations contained in the report are a reaffirmation of the ideals which are inalienable and indisputable American ideals. They represent a new charter of human freedom and a clear guide for action." Carey was a member of Truman's committee.

THE call noted that the Truman Committee studied these "four basic and essential rights" to determine whether or not they are secure:

"The right to safety and security of the person; the right to citizenship and its privileges; the right to freedom of conscience and expression; the right to equality of opportunity."

The call says "There is much in our record (as Americans) to be proud of—much to be ashamed of—nothing to be complacent about.

"We seek today to implement this great heritage. The time to close many of the gaps between our moral creed and everyday practice is now."

THE CIO, the call declares, "has grown strong because the service of it has given to American workers has made ours a better America. We are the sons and daughters of ancestors who came to America to escape absolutism in government, bigotry in religion and economic exploitation. We are dedicated to the responsibility for furthering economic opportunity, religious freedom and political participation for all American citizens."

Local Boosts Pay 850% in 10 Years

Steel Labor, official organ of the CIO Steelworkers, takes its hat off and bows to Local 2129, J. Chien Co., Harrison, N. J.

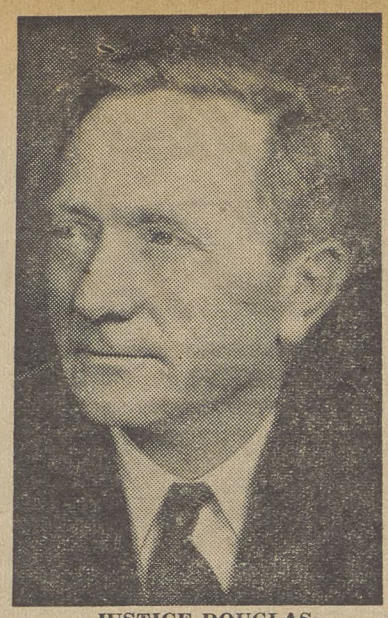
Local 2129's accomplishments: increasing the minimum rate from 10c an hour in 1937, when the local was formed, to 95c now—an 850% increase (some workers make as high as $2.50 an hour); vacations, paid holidays, hospitalization, insurance, retirement benefits, etc.

And—every member of the local (all hourly-rated workers in the plant) has contributed his or her $1 to PAC, and every worker has aided the Community Chest.

Officers are: Pres., Charles Biondo; Vice-Pres., Leonard Webb; Recording Secy., Arthur Brown; Financial Secy., Miss Frederico Johnson; Treas., Joseph Buntempo, and Grievance Committeeman, James Littriello. USA Staff Rep. Thomas Daly services the local.

Gets UAW Post

Irving J. Levy of Washington, former head of the U. S. Dept. of Labor's Legal Division, has been retained to reorganize the CIO Auto Workers' Legal Division and serve as the union's general counsel during the reorganization period.



JUSTICE DOUGLAS
Speaks For Altgeld

CIO Plugging For New FEPC

CIO officers in Indiana, Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, Rhode Island, Nebraska and Iowa are busy carrying out the duties given them by the Natl. Council for a Permanent FEPC.

The national committee has received a report from its action committee, giving detailed steps for 1948. The CIO is represented on this committee by George L.-P. Weaver, Philip Weightman, Paul Sifton, Richard Carter and William Oliver.

In addition to assigning the eight states to the CIO, the committee also assigned Carter to Maryland. The National CIO and the Packinghouse Workers will coordinate work in Iowa and Nebraska.

The committee's program includes a detailed analysis of aims and duties for the next 90 days, which are considered to be the most important in a legislative sense.

In addition to the CIO assignments, these others were made:

Justice Douglas:

'PROTECT EFFORTS TO LIVE IN DIGNITY'

SUPREME Court Justice Douglas, delivering an address in eulogy of John Peter Altgeld, last week declared "the powers of government should be directed to protect the people in their struggle to survive and in their efforts to live in dignity."

Douglas was the main speaker at a memorial commemorating the 10th anniversary of the birth of Altgeld, pro-labor government of Illinois, at the end of the 19th century.

Altged is the governor who pardoned "framed" labor leaders, refused to call in federal troops in Eugene Debs' strike against the Pullman Company, sponsored an anti-child labor law and an eight-hour day for women, put through a law which forbade the discharge of a worker for union membership. His most famous pardon was that of the three anarchists — Neebe, Schwab and Fielden—in which he declared they had not been guilty of the notorious Haymarket bombing.

ALTGELD'S letter of protest to Pres. Cleveland, who had ordered federal troops in Chicago at the request of General Managers' Association, is still quoted as a masterpiece: "The Federal Government has been applied to by men who had political and selfish motives for wanting to ignore the state government . . . you have been imposed upon."

Others speaking at the memorial for the man poet Vachel Lindsay called the "Eagle Forgotten," were Samuel Cardinal Stritch, Catholic Archbishop of Chicago; Gov. Dwight Green, and Poets Carl Sandburg and Edgar Lee Masters.

One of the high moments of the memorial was the reading of a message from CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who said:

"The problems with which Altgeld struggled — monopoly practices, entrenched greed and the protection of the rights of workers—are still facing the nation. His record of fearlessness and intelligence still shines as a beacon to guide us in meeting our problems in the ways of militant democracy."

DOUGLAS devoted the major portion of his speech to the need to defend civil liberties today as vigorously as Altgeld did. After telling how the former Illinois governor had pardoned Neebe, Schwab and Fielden, the Justice said:

"The reaction was violent, as Altgeld knew it would be. He at once experienced what many both before and after him experienced —that he who calls for the application of the Bill of Rights to unpopular minorities, as well as to other groups in the community, often becomes himself suspect . . .

"Those who are devoted to the democratic ideal expressed in our Bill of Rights will take the direct and daring course. Once they are sure of their facts and they know they are doing right they will, like Altgeld, espouse the cause of the victims of ignorance, prejudice, or passion.

"They, too, may be pilloried or cursed. But institutions become great by the greatness of the men who champion them, by the greatness of the advocacy that defends them."

DOUGLAS summed up Altgeld's philosophy in these words:

"Altgeld placed human beings higher than the dollar in the national scale of values. A nation's industrial plant represents not only the daring of capital and the imagination of executives, but the blood and sweat of men."

Walter White re Freedom Train:

Contrasts: Birmingham Bars Exhibit; Nashville Invites Memphis To See It

The following are excerpts from a New York Herald Tribune article by Walter White, executive secretary, Natl. Association for the Advancement of the Colored People.

"The pother over segregaton of Negroes and whites wishing to see the Freedom Train which led to cancellation of the showing in Birmingham, Ala., brings to mind a statement made by Rebecca West some years ago in a lecture in New York.

"'There are two ways of being superior,' Miss West declared. 'One by being superior, the other by keeping another inferior to one's self.'

"The amount of time, thought, telephone and telegraph tolls and newsprint used by two of the three city commissioners in Birmingham, Ala.—to say nothing of the cost to the American Heritage Foundation and the cause of human decency—expended in childish insistence that Negroes and whites be segregated in two separate lines to merge a hundred yards or so from the train itself is another appalling example of how certain white Americans consume efforts which might better be applied toward building a sounder democracy.

"At one stage of the negotiations a proposal was made by certain Birmingham officials to admit Negroes and whites to the train in separate groups of 25.

This plan was unequivocally turned down by the American Heritage Foundation as being inconsistent with the resolution passed unanimously by its board of directors July 9 that there must be no segregation at any time aboard the train.

"But despite the blunt and unequivocal repudiation of the plan, some Birmingham officials deliberately lied after the visit of the train had been canceled, alleging that the Foundation had agreed to this proposal.

"So blinded by sectionalism and prejudice were two of the three Birmingham city commissioners that they not only believed that a local segregation ordinance should take precedence over the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights, but were willing to distort the truth deliberately to escape local and national criticism.

"Boss Crump's Memphis and Birmingham arrogantly insisted on telling the Foundation and the rest of the nation that their narrow concept must take precedence over any other concept of democracy. The courage of the Foundation in sticking to its principles and refusing to be cajoled or blackjacked has done more to make sharp and clear the issue of bigotry versus democracy than any other episode of recent years. If the Freedom Train had accomplished nothing more than that, it would have been worth all the time and money put into its creation.

"But even more important is the reaction of other Southern cities and towns. Jasper, Ala., birthplace of the Bankheads, reacted magnificently to the Birmingham cancellation. J. T. Jackson, president of the Jasper Board of City Commissioners, immediately wired an invitation to show the Freedom Train there, adding that Jasper 'will comply with all non-segregation rules.'

"Three other Southern cities which had been toying with plans for racial segregation aboard the train promptly notified the Foundation that there would be no segregation in those towns. The Mayor of Atlanta announced publicly that he would be proud to stand alongside any American of any race, creed or color to view the great documents aboard the train.

"The Tupelo (Miss.) Journal caustically criticized the insistence of Memphis on segregation in an editorial captioned 'Say Memphis and Hold Your Nose.' The Journal will now have to write a new editorial suggesting that both nostrils be held when one says Memphis and Birmingham.

"Nashville, Tenn., asked that the Freedom Train be permitted to stay in that city an extra day to permit citizens of Memphis to visit it there.

"Mayor John L. Goodwyn, of Montgomery, Ala., pointed out that members of the two races stand in one line to 'pay taxes, buy groceries and make bank deposits,' and thus that there was no good reason for segregation on the Freedom Train. As a result, white and Negro citizens mingled freely together as did 8,000 in Mobile, Ala., where Mayor Charles Baumhauer declared, 'We never had a minute's trouble.'

"The Freedom Train has made decent Southerners aware of how ridiculous the South is being made to appear."

Yes Sir, That's My Baby!

And Those Beautiful Tots, Arriving By Millions, Cause Major Problem

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THIS writer has a nephew two and one-half years of age.

Johnny Riordan is quite a boy, chum. Why, the other day, he. . . .

★ ★ ★

But, wait a minute, that's not what I started out to write. This is what I want to say:

Johnny was born in 1945, along with 2,734,999 other American babies—a rate of 19.6 babies per thousand population.

The next year, the birth rate for the U. S. had increased to 3,260,000 babies—a rate of 23.3 per thousand. Last year, it was 3,730,000, a rate of 26.2 per thousand.

HE'S CUTE

And, indications are that the rate will continue to be far above the rate for 1941, last prewar year. In that year, the rate was 18.9 per thousand.

And, every baby was the most beautiful baby ever born!

The vast majority of these babies are welcomed with joy by their fathers and mothers—and uncles and aunts, too. But, many parents are in serious realization that they must start now to plan for the babies' effect on the economy of this nation.

What will be the impact of today's shortages—housing, educational facilities, automobiles, steel, etc.—on these citizens of tomorrow? How about high prices? Will they continue to mount and mount? How about Taft-Hartley and other anti-labor laws? Will they affect Johnny Riordan and others when they attain their majority about 20 years from now?

The population of America today is 145,000,000, more or less. In 1968, when these babies born in 1947 will be 21 and eligible to vote, the population should be up to 160,000,000.

Assuming that most of the 3,730,000 babies of 1947 are still alive in 1968 and assuming that we are still at peace, it is more apparent why 1968's problem is 1948's, too.

In 1968, most of the "Class of 1947" will be either working or about to finish college or craft school (of course, a fair amount of the girls will have become housewives).

Unless Congress acts to solve this problem, unless State legislatures do their share and unless industry "reforms" this is what the coming-of-agers will have to expect:

Housing: Many were born to parents who, unable to get houses or apartments of their own, were living with the babies' grandparents or other relatives, or doubling up with other young couples. If nothing has been done about housing, that will mean that the 1947ers who marry in 1968 will be faced with the prospect of moving in with their parents and grandparents. And, when children are born to the 1947ers, that will mean in many cases that four generations will be living in a house built to house one generation.

Educational facilities: Will the Johnny Riordans of 1945 and the baby crop of 1947 have received as much education as they or their parents desire? Will school space be inadequate for the numbers who must attend (remember that even those who can afford private schools are faced with a similar crowding problem)? What of those who want to attend college or a technical school? Will there be room for them? Will Congress have done anything about the recommendations of Pres. Truman's Committee of Educators?

Labor: The membership of the CIO is now more than 6,000,000 and growing. It is logical that a broader base of workers will have them organized by then, but taking a conservative estimate, the mere growth of the population should increase the CIO's membership for another million.

However—Will there be enough jobs? Will industry, now so loath to expand, have seen the light? Just now, there are nearly 60,000,000 persons gainfully employed in this country. Increase the population by 10% and that means that as high as 6,000,000 more jobs will be needed.

Purchasing power: What will be the worth of the dollar? Will it continue to be reduced in value? (It has steadily declined from $1 value in 1939 to 60 cents in 1947.)

Commodities: Will there be enough autos (maybe it'll be planes) to go around?

All of this I've projected into 1968. But, the effect of those 1942-1947 Bundles of Happiness on the economy of America is already upon us to a great degree. For instance, the upward trend began in 1942 and continued to soar (except for a slight dip in 1945).

That rise in babies—and anybody who's against babies is a stinker—has had a tremendous effect already on housing, food and clothing prices, to mention just three items. Next fall, the first real effect will come into the nation's already crowded and ill-housed schools. Try to imagine what is needed in the line of new home and school construction.

And, every school term after next fall the impact grows and grows and grows. More beautiful babies are born—the most beautiful babies you ever saw—and when they reach approximately 6 years of age the school period begins.

We cite the example of the 1948 situation, but our Johnny Riordan and your kid (let's not get into an argument over which is handsomer or cleverer) face serious problems in the intervening years, unless remedies are found—and fast.

Take Johnny in 1968. He's 23, probably will have gone to college like his dad. (We hope he doesn't have to work his way through, too.) Maybe he'll be a newspaperman like his father (and a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, too.)

It looks as if there are two possible futures for Johnny Riordan and the other kids.

The first is the way of the Tafts and Hartleys and the NAM:

His dollar would be worth about 40 cents. If he is married or hopes to be soon, his only hope for housing would be to move in with either his or his wife's family. He couldn't afford an auto—in fact, he couldn't even get one if he had the money. His union would be so hamstrung that it would be ineffective to secure him his rights.

Or, if he entered the professions, he would have to adhere to the policies of the Bar Association or the American Medical Association. His civil rights would be few. His movies would be censored politically and perhaps the Thomas-Rankin Committee would by that time have taken over the newspaper industry, too. The less said about the possibilities abroad the better. His would be a dull life.

This second way would be that of the CIO, PAC and other liberal groups:

Strict price and rationing controls would have made the dollar a dollar again; jobs would be plentiful, production would keep apace; Europe would be back on its feet. Johnny would have a full life.

That's why parents these days, happy over birth of their 3,730,000 children last year, are beginning to plan that their children won't have to live and work under 1947-48 conditions. That's why they are paying more attention to which candidate runs for which office; that's why they join PAC and contribute to it; that's why they want Congress to act now. They want 1968—and a lot of the years before that— to be a realization of the American dream.

★ ★ ★

Oh, by the way, did I ever show you a picture of my nephew, Johnny?

THIS IS JOHNNY

Lopsided!

Workers in seven New England dying plants recently cast ballots in "union shop" elections.

CIO Federation of Dyers & Finishers reported the vote in favor of the union shop was "very heavy."

In fact, the Federation reported, majorities ranged from 20-to-1 to 263-to-1.

CIO MEETINGS

Three top groups of CIO and CIO-PAC officials will meet in Washington during the third week in January.

The meetings: Jan. 21—CIO president, secretary-treasurer and vice presidents. Jan. 22—CIO executive board. Jan. 23—PAC executive board.

Truman's Plan To Shift Taxes From Needy To Greedy

IF you had taken seriously the Republican attacks on Pres. Truman's "State of the Union" message you would indeed have been convinced that all you had heard and read about a split between Henry Wallace and Harry Truman had been a dream.

Then, your bewilderment would have been made greater when you read that Henry, too, was vehement in his opposition to Truman's objectives.

What got the Republican sorest was not Truman's sharp criticism of the Taft-Hartley law; not his support for broad range social objectives nor his urging of a minimum wage of 75 cents an hour.

What caused the loudest howls was the President's request for a $40 tax cut for every individual taxpayer and dependent, with the resultant $3,200,000,000 drop in revenue to be made up by imposing higher corporate profit taxes. That was the last straw for the Republican leadership.

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) did the inevitable, went on the air the following night and screamed "no!" as many times as he could scream it in 30 minutes.

Truman broke his legislative progra minto five key goals:

1. "To secure fully the essential human rights of our citizens": This will be reacted by following the recommendations of his Civil Rights Commission—he will offer a separate message to Congres on this subject.

2. "To protect and develop our human resources": To be gained by increasing Social Security, widening its coverage; a national system of medical care insurance; federal aid to education; department of health, education and security; long-range housing; extended, stronger rent control.

3. "To conserve and use our natural resources so that they can contribute most effectively to the welfare of our people": To be attained by expanded reelamation; more TVA's.

4. "To lift the standard of living for all our people by strengthening our economic system and sharing more broadly among our people the goods we produce": To be sought by increasing annual output by one-third; continued price supports for farms; more crop insurance; higher minimum wages (from 40c to 75c); encouragement to farm co-ops; school lunch programs; higher incomes for lower-incomes group.

5. "To achieve world peace based on principles of freedom and justice and equality of all nations": To be furthered by strengthening of UN; reviving world trade; maintaining strong armed force; admitting D.P.'s; establishing Universal Military Training; extending reciprocal agreeemnts; approving Marshall Plan; special aid to China.

BATTLE IS ON AGAIN

We report—without undue cynicism—that this is the year during which the men on Capitol Hill will keep one eye on the public welfare and the other on the ballot box.

We're not particularly worried about that because we believe the eyes of the smart ones will focus in the same direction. That, of course, is just another way of saying we think those who look out for the public will have the best chance of being re-elected.

The others ought to retire to private life, anyway.

President Truman started the 1948 Democratic ball rolling when he spoke to Congress upon its reconvening. The Republicans, commenting on the Truman proposals, started getting in their licks.

In other words, the battle is on again—and we won't know the winner until the November elections. We'll wager, however, that those who deliver the most goods—not those who make the fanciest speeches will come out on top.

Truman got a man-sized load off his chest when he delivered his State of the Union address to Congress Jan. 8. We disagree with some of the specific proposals he made but, in general, we go along with those who say he did a good job of pointing up our major problems and their possible solution.

Frankly, though, we're more interested in that little business known as "delivering the goods" than in speechmaking. Talk is about the only cheap commodity left in the nation today.

No, we're not taking an around-about dig at the President. We're simply saying that talk alone is not enough—that we crave action and plenty of it. We want to see him and his party make a real fight for such things as a higher minimum wage, extension of Social Security, improvement of educational facilities and real curbs on inflation.

It's good, however, for talk to precede action. We hope CIO members and the public generally will engage in a lot of it between now and November. We hope Senators and Congressmen get tired ears from listening to the folks back home.

Action from the public should come at the ballot box. It should take the form of votes for those who delivered the right kind of goods and against those who gave only lip service.

Operation Dixie 'Double' Victory

Without a lot of hoopla and fanfare, Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee announced the other day that CIO membership in the South had doubled during the past 18 months.

Bittner and his organizing staff didn't take time out to celebrate this "double" victory because they knew their job in Dixie was far from complete.

"Operation Dixie," as the newspapers call the drive, hasn't resembled a Sunday School picnic. The going has been tough.

More than 20 organizers have been physically assaulted. Opposition from industrialists, particularly the textile manufacturers, has been bitter.

Enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act made it necessary for the Organizing Committee to revamp its operating procedure.

Bittner and his staff deserve a sound pat on the back for the work they have already done—and they deserve full support from all CIO unions in the work yet to be done before the Southern drive is completed.

Corpses and Mangled Bodies High Price of Carelessness

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE man screamed as his hand was caught between the fast-moving belt and the big wheel—and it was the last sound he ever made.

His body was jerked into the air, whirled in a semi-circle and thrown with great force against machinery standing nearby.

The man's arm was nearly torn from his shoulder. His skull was crashed and his back was broken.

He was dead when a fellow worker leaned down over him a few seconds later to see if he could detect a sign of life inside the mangled body.

ACCIDENTS like the one described here show that the American industrial machine can become a ruthless giant that maims and kills without warning.

The killing and maiming is a major—not minor—problem.

Each day an average of about 44 persons are killed and 5480 are injured in occupational accidents.

This builds up to a startling yearly total—about 16,000 deaths and about 2,000,000 injuries.

And about 90,000 of those injured suffer some permanent disability.

THERE'S an economic side to the problem, too, and here the figures grow larger and larger.

The National Safety Council estimates that occupational accidents cost the nation more than $2 billion annually.

Of this amount a little less than half "represents the immediate visible costs to both workers and industry—including wage loss, expense of medical care and cost of compensation insurance," the Council says.

The remainder "represents the estimated money value of damaged equipment and materials, production slow-downs and time lost by other workers not involved in accidents."

THERE is no way to place a value on the suffering endured by the families of those killed and injured.

The same is true of the crippling injuries that retire men and women to lives of non-productivity long before their time.

It's not hard, however, to find examples of what happens to families which lose their breadwinners. Mothers who should remain at home are forced to go to work. Children take jobs when they should be in school.

Many families are completely broken up each year as a result of the lack of accident prevention.

SOME trade unions have done remarkable jobs in the industrial safety field, cutting the death and injury rate sharply.

Others—too many others—have regarded accident prevention as something you read about but do not practice.

Those in the latter group can render a real service to their members if they will do everything they can to institute safety programs in the plants in which their members work.

And they'll find few management groups which will refuse to cooperate once the importance of accident prevention is fully explained to them.

UNIONISTS seeking to sell the safety idea to their fellow workers and to management can start off with some cold statistics that make sense.

Working time lost during 1946, for instance, as a result of disabling injuries totaled about 280,000,000 man-days.

That's equivalent to the working time of approximately a million men for a full year.

If CIO members are average persons working under average conditions nearly 2000 of them will be killed in occupational accidents during 1949.

And about 240,000 of them will suffer disabling injuries.

It's a high price to pay for carelessness.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP — By Yomen

"And let's pass a wage—cut law that's not voluntary"

'With A Vengeance'

TO SEN. WAYNE MORSE (R., Ore.) the Taft-Hartley law is "class legislation with a vengeance."

And, he feels, the law's "unjust provisions are cleverly devised from a legalistic standpoint that no relief will be provided labor from court tests of the law."

So, writes Morse in the current issue of "Everybody's Digest," the law must be repealed in its entirety.

"It is common knowledge," says Morse, "that the bill was designed to weaken labor's position at the bargaining table. It weights the economic scales against those millions of Americans who depend on wages and salaries for their livelihood."

ACCORDING to the Oregonian, another dubious T-H provision discriminates against both labor and those employers who are located in certain states which maintain good labor standards. "The only jurisdiction that Congress has over labor relations," he declares, "grows out of its constitutional authority to regulate interstate commerce. It is obvious that any Federal rule regulating labor should apply equally throughout the United States. But under T-H, if one state passes a more stringent labor control, that measure in effect supersedes the Federal law in that state.

"This is bound to produce conflicting and often contradictory labor policies among the different states. And that lack of uniformity will breed strikes and industrial unrest. It will also cause unfair competition from states which enact laws to beat down labor and encourage sweat shops."

Morse cites the sections on jurisdictional disputes as the best illustration of "the vindictive and mistaken philosophy" behind the act. "Instead of providing machinery for settling these family quarrels, the Act declares them to be illegal. It would be just as sensible to pass a law making it illegal for two property owners to quarrel over their boundary line.

"There is plenty of mischief, too, in the remedy for contract violations—hauling the union into court. As everyone familiar with labor relations knows, many union agreements are loosely drawn and the terms may be subject to different interpretations."

MORSE declared: "Our courts are not well equipped to decide these issues. The vast majority of such cases should go before an administrative agency like the National Labor Relations Board.

"This works against the best interests of employers and employees. And certainly it takes us in the direction of more and more government interference with the economic life of our citizens. Once a government starts to exercise the power to direct the relations which shall exist between supposedly free workers and free employers, it is not many steps away from a regimented economy."

Aid Italian Strikers

A contribution of $250 for the bank employes of Italy on strike for higher pay and improved conditions has been voted by the CIO Office, Professional Workers, reports the union's secretary-treasurer, John J. Stanley.

Gunfire---Then The Troops Were Called

MEN died that day under a hail of gunfire because they believed in the trade union movement . . . and because they hated strikebreakers.

And that day marked the beginning of the end of the political career of a man who died of a broken heart.

Trade unionists in Central Illinois still pay tribute each October 12 to those who were slain.

And some of the "old timers" tell the story to illustrate that the unexpected does happen.

MINERS at Virden, Illinois, went out on strike April 1, 1898, and settled down for a bitter battle with the mine owners.

The owners set out to break the strike and smash the union—and they acted in the name of patriotism.

Their representatives went to Alabama and began recruiting Negro workmen to serve as strikebreakers.

FINALLY a trainload of "mine recruits" headed toward Illinois—and at East St. Louis a strikebreaking "detective" agency placed armed guards aboard, allowing no escape.

This was the first indication the Alabamans received that they weren't on their way to take over ordinary jobs.

They didn't learn the real truth however, until the train pulled into Virden and the shooting started.

NINE men died that day (October 12, 1898) as the miners sought to protect their union and their homes.

Armed guards began firing from the train at pickets in an open field—and bullets whizzed from the stockade that had been thrown up around the mine.

The pickets armed themselves, retaliated in kind and a fierce battle ensued.

Finally, those in charge of the train decided to take it on to Springfield and unload the potential strikebreakers there.

WORD of the Virden battle reached Governor John R. Tanner, who was elected on the Republican ticket in 1896 winning over the immortal John P. Altgeld. Tanner was generally regarded as the "darling" of the mine owners and other business interests.

Tanner called out the troops and then stepped right into the center of the controversy.

When the train arrived at Springfield he told the strikebreaking agency it could not unload its human cargo. The troopers were there to enforce his edict.

So back to Alabama went workmen who had been duped into making the trip to Illinois.

THE STRIKE at Virden was not broken, but the political career of Gov. Tanner was.

Those who had heaped high praise on him during the 1896 campaign, two years before the Virden incident occurred, soon launched a vicious campaign of vilification against him. This blasted his chances of going higher in politics—perhaps to the U. S. Senate.

The Illinois Legislature passed the Tanner Act, curbing the importation of strikebreakers, but the governor's political sun had set.

After his death, friends said he succumbed to a broken heart.

THE "professional" historians may never write of the Virden incident as it is related here. This version is given by a National CIO representative who had close friends in the picket line while the shooting was going on.

The CIO man says he doesn't know exactly why Tanner did the unexpected—why he decided to smash the strikebreaking attempt. But, he adds:

"Maybe it was because Tanner worked in the mines when he was a boy!"

THE MUSIC GOES 'ROUND 'AN ROUND'

'Carey Did More To Promote ERP Than A Week OF Marshall Talks'

By REV. GEORGE G. HIGGINS

Assistant Director, Social Action Department, Natl. Catholic Welfare Conference.

Attention is called to Dr. Friederich Baerwald's very moderate and level-headed discussion of the World Federation of Trade Unions, a subject which, in the hands of certain other commentaters, sometimes lends itself too easily to prejudice and uncritical emotion. Mind you, Dr. Baerwald, author of "Fundamentals of Labor Economics," is anything but a babe in the political woods.

He knows a Communist when he sees one; and when he sees one, he knows that he is looking at a person who, in addition to subscribing to a dangerously false philosophy, can't be trusted to operate within international organizations according to accepted principles of democratic procedure.

But Baerwald is also a realist. He knows that you can't get rid of Communism merely by talking about it or by flexing your military muscles in front of Mr. Molotoff.

Turning to the controversial question of the participation of American unions with Russian labor organizations within the framework of the WFTU, he reminds us that "several aspects have to be considered. The WFTU," he continues, "is an international organization; it is not comparable to Communist-sponsored Socialist Unity parties. A participation in such an organization does not of itself imply the surrender of democratic principles or procedures."

Baerwald's tentative defense of American participation in the WFTU takes on special timeliness in view of the recent victory of James Carey of the CIO in using the WFTU, legitimately, as a medium for selling the merits of the Marshall Plan to the workers of Europe and of Asia.

Well, let's look at the record. Mr. Carey raised the issue of the Marshall Plan and defended it brilliantly, demonstrating conclusively in his initial address that the workers of the U. S. are in favor of the plan and that the plan is in harmony with the declared purposes of the WFTU itself. Naturally, the Russians were unhappy about Mr. Carey's performance, as witness the fact that Carey has since become in the jaundiced eyes of The Daily Worker the number one "fascist" of the American labor movement.

Actually, of course, Mr. Carey did not succeed in persuading the WFTU to come out officially, as an organization, in favor of the Marshall Plan. But he did keep it on the agenda for further discussion next February; and, what is more important, he used the WFTU—again with perfect propriety—as an important international sounding board for the progressive, democratic thinking of the CIO and of parallel workers' organizations in other countries where freedom still prevails.

In short, it is probably fair to say that he did more in a single speech to take the curse off the Marshall Plan than Secretary Marshall himself could have accomplished by a week of speeches. For it is well to remember that the Department of State, in spite of its best efforts and its best intentions, isn't qualified in the sense that the CIO is qualified to convince the working class of Europe (the very group that needs to be convinced) that the Marshall Plan isn't a Wall St. plot to control the future of Europe's economy.

Whether or not Mr. Carey's temporary victory warrants the continuance of American participation in the WFTU is of course a debatable question. Personally, I think that it does. If it doesn't then logically the U. S. ought to withdraw from UN and from the Council of Foreign Ministers; for, according to the newspapers, Mr. Austin at Lake Success and Mr. Marshall at London have had much less success with the Russians than Mr. Carey had in Paris.

From Unusual Quarter

It seems that all's not well with small business under the crippling red tape of the Taft-Hartley Act.

At any rate Business Action, Publication of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, warns that "each time the Federal Government steps into a local labor-management difficulty the local businessman is made more subservient to Washington bureaucracy."

What is sorely needed in the management-labor field, says Business Action, "is the assumption of more responsibility by local leaders of both groups, by local and state lawmakers and by local and state law enforcement officials."

PICKETING GHQ: Against the elegant background of their employers' headquarters, cafeteria workers picket Government Services, Inc., which refuses to bargain with their union, CIO Public Workers. On strike since Jan. 5, the employes are seeking a $6 weekly raise to supplement their average weekly "take" of $21.91. CIO Pres. Philip Murray calls it a "disgraceful situation."

MURRAY ASKS TRUMAN TO ACT IN CAFE STRIKE

CIO President Philip Murray has requested Pres. Truman to help end a strike of 1500 CIO Public Workers at 42 Government Service, Inc., cafeterias in Washington, D. C., by "convening a collective bargaining conference at the earliest possible moment."

"I urge, Mr. President," Murray's letter read, "that you take at once the steps necessary to insure that the government cease its partisan intervention into the situation; that the government proceed at once to demonstrate its impartiality by convening a collective bargaining conference at the earliest possible moment; that the government officials who are members of GSI's board of trustees be made acquainted with their responsibilities as government officials and further to refrain from union-busting activities and that they be required to meet with the representatives of this union.

"I am certain that such steps will lead in a very short time to a complete solution of the problem."

IN detailing events which led to the "deplorable situation" Murray explained that Government Services, Inc., private operators of the cafeterias, had forced the strike upon its employes by refusing to meet with them.

"The ostensible reason given is that the officers of the union have not filed the affidavits and financial statements of the Taft-Hartley Act. As of course you know," he continued, "the filing of such information is mandatory only if the union elects to utilize the services of the Natl. Labor Relations Board. Since this is not the case in the present instance, there is no moral or legal compulsion for the union to file for such utilization."

The letter pointed out that since all GSI trustees are government officials, and since the government receives 50% of the net gains "the belligerent and unfair actions of the Corporation reflect unfavorably upon the government of the U. S. itself."

Murray also struck at the Federal Works Agency, which has refused to close down the cafeterias, and at the Corporation's distribution of a letter to its employes which, he described as "of a union-breaking character virtually unequalled in my long experience."

THE letter to which he referred was distributed with the final pay envelopes before the strike which began January 5. It was headed: "There is no union, and there will be no legal strike. The Corporation is raising your wages."

The letter then informed employes that

- The NLRB had told it the union is no longer "qualified to speak for you," because of its non-compliance;
- Striking employes "will simply be quitting" their jobs and the Corporation "would naturally hire someone to replace" them;
- The Corporation "intends to take care of you in the best possible manner" even though union officials have "failed you";
- All wages are raised 6½c an hour effective Jan. 1;
- Workers will now have an additional $1.50 per month to "take home and spend yourself," since there would be no further deduction of dues; and
- "Your employer wishes you a most happy New Year."

AVERAGE weekly wage of GSI employes is $21.91, cited by union spokesmen as the manner in which GSI "takes care" of its employes. The union is asking a 15c hourly increase.

The union has held a contract with the company for 10 years. It recently obtained peaceful settlements with several other private corporations operating cafeterias in government buildings, which was cited by Murray in his letter as proof that compliance with the T-H law was unnecessary for peaceful collective bargaining.

Spurn 8c Offer In Oil Strike

A PAN-American Oil Co. offer of a temporary 8c hourly increases was rejected by some 1400 striking CIO Oil Workers at Texas City, Texas, whose New Year's Day walkout halted the company's Texas City refinery and pipeline operations.

Rejection of the company's "final offer" stemmed from the fact that the projected increase would apply only until March 1, when wage negotiations would be resumed. "It would mean the same old battle over again," a union spokesman said.

By mutual agreement, the company is making no attempt to operate and the union is maintaining no picket line at the struck plant.

A full-page ad placed in several daily newspapers including the New York Herald Tribune by the American Oil Co. (Amoco), which is dependent on Pan American for much of its eastern supply, protested the strikers' refusal to accept the company's "short term" offer, which it described as higher than the settlement made by the union with other refineries. The union, however, pointed out that its recent agreements covering Shell, Standard Oil and Tidewater refineries in California provided increases totaling 10c an hour effective Jan. 15, plus inclusion of a 9.8c cost-of-living bonus in the basic wage rate.

Intl. Oil Workers Pres. O. A. Knight said the strikers' wage demands of 28c an hour are "legitimate demands of a local group seeking to meet the needs of their families caused by the rapid increase in prices."

Newspaper statements that a strike settlement must await the Feb. 9 meeting of the union's national wage policy committee were termed "wholly erroneous" the dispute is "purely a local situation and is not tied in any way with the union's national wage program."

"The Pan American strike can be settled in the next few days by agreement between management and the union," he continued. "The union stands ready and willing to continue negotiations at any time."

Higher Pay Groups Fight Tax Harder

"Actually, most of the pressure for tax reduction is coming from the more well-to-do families. The pressure increases steadily as one goes up the income scale."

The Gallup Poll has discovered that in answer to a question: "Do you consider the amount of income tax which you have to pay too high, or about right?"

Of those making under $50 a week (the average industrial worker makes about $50 a week) 48% think the tax is too high; 42% think it just right; 10% have no opinion. The percentage against mounts so that of those making $500 and more a week 71% are against present tax rates.

DOG TIRED: Virginia Peacock, striking cables employe, takes time off from her picketing to rest her feet. Shown in front of the cables office in Washington, D. C., the picketline has been part of the scenery since New Year's Day, when CIO Communications employes of four cable companies walked out all over the nation in a dispute over union demands for 30c hourly wage increases.

TRAFFIC 'INVISIBLE' IN CABLE STRIKE

THE two-weeks old CIO Communications Assocation strike against four cables companies has been "amazingly effective," according to a union spokesman, who claimed that the companies' radio and cables traffic has been cut down to almost "invisible" proportions.

Affected by the walkout are 3000 employes at the Mackay Radio Telegraph Co., The Commercial Cable Co., All-American Cables—all subsidiaries of the Intl. Telephone & Telegraph Co.—and the cables division of Western Union.

So effective has been the shutdown, explained Charles L. Silberman, ACA publicity director, that the three IT&T subsidiaries last week appealed to the Natl. Labor Relations Board. They sought an injunction against the union's non-striking local in the domestic division of Western Union. The companies claimed that the local's threat not to handle "hot copy" constituted a secondary boycott. Such preventive action against a "threat" was termed an "unprecedented refinement" by Charles T. Douds, regional NLRB director.

Actually, said Silberman, the non-striking employes had been refusing "hot copy" since the strike began, but he explained that the companies had referred in their appeal only to a "threat" in order not to indicate to the public that their cables would be delayed.

He denied that the refusal to handle the copy constituted a Taft-Hartley violation. "Even under the most outlandish interpretation of the infamous Taft-Hartley Law their actions cannot be considered a secondary boycott," he said. "Their refusal to handle such copy was to influence the struck companies to bargain in good faith with the striking unions. Activity in pursuance of such an aim is not barred under any act of Congress."

ACA members at non-struck RCA Communications, Press Wireless, Globe Radio, Tropical Radio and French Cables are transmitting cable messages.

Union members are refusing to handle any traffic destined to or originating in the struck concerns, however. Western Union employes in the Philippines, Honolulu and Mexico have taken similar action.

Hartley Is Willin' To Run For V. P.

You can't scare Rep. Fred Hartley (R., N. J.); he's sticking to The Taft!

Hartley, junior—but not silent—member of the Wrecking Firm of Taft (Sen. Robert A.) and Hartley, says he is "willing to consider" running for vice president—on the GOP ticket, that is—"if it were offered me."

And, it didn't necessarily have to be Taft either, any Republican would satisfy Fred.

PAC AND STEELWORKERS:

Fight Prices With Ballots, Bargaining

CIO-PAC and the CIO Steelworkers last week declared that the war against high prices can be conducted in two ways at the bargaining table and the ballot box.

PAC did it in a well-documented, illustrated pamphlet, entitled: "$Prices, $Prices, $Prices, $Prices, $Prices, $Prices, $Prices, $Prices, $Prices, $Prices, $Prices, $Prices."

THE APPETITE FOR PROFITS

(The CIO-PAC "Prices" pamphlet can be obtained from the CIO Political Action Committee, 728 17th st., N.W., Washington, 6, D.C.—1000 copies, $26.00; 500 copies, $14.00; 100 copies, $3.00.)

Steel Labor, official organ of the USA, poses two questions: "Do Steelworkers Need a Wage Increase?" and "Can the Industry Afford a Wage Increase?" The highlight of the presentation is not so much the reply of "yes" to both questions, but how that "yes" was arrived at logically.

The PAC pamphlet rivets attention on the 1948 political campaign asserting, "In 1948 it's up to us to win the battle at the ballot box so that we can win the war at the ice box.

"In 1946, we saw how 200 men in Congress kicked off the lid on prices of food and clothing for each one of the 6,000,000 CIO members.

"In 1946, we saw how 200 men in Congress spelled out a program of boom and bust for the 6,000,000 CIO members.

"In 1948, it s our turn.

"In 1948, it's up to the 6,000,000 CIO members to fight against congressmen who fought against us . . . It's up to the 6,000,000 CIO members to elect candidates who will fight for us."

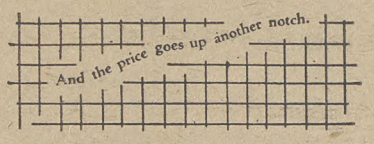
LISTING the 1935-39 price of food per year for the average person as $118, the PAC pamphlet says that the same food cost $200 in 1946 and in the "second three months of 1947 it cost $240.

"In May, 1947, the average family paid $1.56 for things which cost it $1.00 in 1940."

The four main reasons for the inflation crisis, says PAC, are the appetite for profits, big business' fear of the future, scarcity, and monopoly. "Appetite for profits, means in a brief and ugly word, greed. American corporations in the past three years have been greedy beyond belief," PAC says. For the years 1945, 1946 and 1947 profits after taxes will total 38 billions, the PAC pamphlet points out. "It's more than the cost of feeding the entire United States for a year—at 1947 prices."

In answering its first question, Steel Labor said:

"In spite of the wage increases of 1946 and 1947 the living standards of Steelworkers have shown a steady deterioration.



"Why?

"They are caught in the grip of a deepening inflationary crisis that is tearing down wage standards and real income.

"The high cost of living is taking money right out of their pockets. In other words, today's soaring prices mean a wage cut for Steelworkers.

"Wages have been chasing prices since the end of most price controls in June, 1946, without catching up. There has been a net loss in 'real' earnings since the war peak largely because of a reduction in the work-week.

"There has been only a slight gain in 'real' spendable earnings since 1939 which disappears in large part, however, when adjustments for changes in the length of the work-week are made.

"Yes! Steelworkers do need a wage increase!"

In answer to the second question, Steel Labor says:

"The 1947 profits for 24 steel companies, which represent over 90% of the ingot-making capacity of the industry, show these fantastic results:

"Steel profits have risen 204% over 1939!

"They have increased 119% over the average for war years!

"And profits have climbed 59% over 1946!

"Productivity per worker has climbed 32.7% over 1939. Wage costs per ton of finished steel have gone up only about half as much as the increase in hourly earnings in 1947 because of increased labor efficiency. Productivity per worker is still increasing.

"Industry's revenue has been upped by between $16 and $17 a ton since January, 1946, and these are minimum figures. They do not include a great number of extras' added to the price of steel.

SCARCITY

"The industry is earning about 11% on its net worth. This is almost double what the industry normally expects to earn.

"Yes! The steel industry can afford a wage increase!"

UAW, UE To Seek Substantial Increases

TWO of CIO's largest international unions have announced plans to seek "substantial wage increases" to offset high living costs.

Following a meeting of his union's wage policy committee last week, CIO Auto Workers' Pres. Walter Reuther summed up the CIO wage position by saying: "We in the UAW-CIO would have preferred a roll-back in prices to a wage increase because a roll-back of prices would mean greater benefits to the community as a whole. Only two groups in America have the power and the authority to effect a roll-back in prices. They are industry and Congress."

The Republicans and Democrats both came in for a sharp denunciation as Reuther charged them with playing fast and loose with the welfare of the American people in a political chess game whose object is to see which party can win more votes on the inflation issue without doing anything about it.

"The failure of both government and industry to stop inflation leaves labor no choice but to demand and win further wage increases. . . ."

The figure to be sought by UAW will be determined at an executive board meeting in Detroit, Jan. 15. Several auto locals recommended a 25c hourly increase.

CIO Electrical Workers will lead off their 1948 wage drive with demands at General Electric, Westinghouse Electric and the electrical division of General Motors. Some 300 delegates from these locals, meeting in New York last week, emphasized their preference for substantial cost-of-living cuts to new wage boosts.

EXTENT of the UE demands will be largely determined by price indices in the next 90 days, UE Organizational Director Matles said. "If a substantial cut in living costs occurs during the next 90 days, our wage demands will be affected correspondingly," he stated.

Unimpressed by General Electric's 3-to-10% price cuts on some items, Matles said that "people don't eat television receivers. They don't wear automatic dishwashers and most of them are more worried about the rising prices of fuel than they are about keeping warm with luxury-price electric blankets."

Whatever effect the GE price reductions might have had, he said, was more than offset by its announcement three weeks ago that it would reserve the right to increase prices on generators, turbines and other heavy equipment by as much as 20%. These increases will be reflected in higher costs for consumer goods, he claimed.

In support of its contention that the companies can well afford price cuts, the union pointed out that GE profits after taxes jumped from a prewar high of $56,541,000 in 1939 to $75,280,000 in 1947. Similarly, Westinghouse profits grew from $13,854,000 in 1939 to $61,524,000 in 1947. Other corporations have made exceedingly large profits, the union pointed out.

Other proposals to be submitted by UE to the corporations include: a plan for pensions; a health and welfare plan; severance pay for discharged workers; improved vacations and additional paid holidays.

New Yorker Charges Rand Provocation

New York State Sen. Kenneth Sherbell (ALP) has accused the giant Remington Rand Co. of attempting to provoke a strike through illegally refusing to live up to a contract with the CIO Electrical Workers.

The company used the Taft-Hartley law as an excuse to break off its relations with the UE. The senator asked Gov. Thomas E. Dewey (R.) to call on James Rand, jr., head of Remington Rand, "to cease, in the public interest, from evading his legal obligations, to honor his written commitments and sit down and negotiate" with the CIO union.

N.Y. CIO Asks Repeal Of Ban On Strikes

Repeal of the Condon-Wadlin act, which outlaws strikes by public employes, and establishment of a state university have been proposed in a legislative program adopted by New York State CIO executive board.

OATH OF OFFICE: Del Garst, CIO regional director for St. Louis, swears in ward captains for the Greater St. Louis PAC. The revised PAC setup will include township captains as the key to the PAC situation in Pres. Truman's home state, which will be one of 1948's battlegrounds.

D.C. Group For Rights Report

THE President's Civil Rights Committee report received the indorsement of a Washington citizens' group last week when the Connecticut Ave. Citizens Association voted 48 to 44 to support the document.

Speaking in favor of the report, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, a member of the Civil Rights Committee, told the group that "America cannot assert its voice throughout the world for democracy until it can answer for many breaches committed within its frontiers."

The report, which vigorously scores racial discrimination in the District of Columbia, was denounced by Mrs. Horace Phelps of the District Federation of Women's Clubs, who charged that it would "incite biased groups found in all races."

Clifford Newell, former president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, joined with Mrs. Phelps in opposing the discrimination charges Newell denied claims of local discrimination with the argument that the Board of Education has allotted more than 47% of its building funds to Negroes in the last six years and that 99 additional Negro teachers—and no new white teachers—will be hired this year.

Newell's stand was challenged by Mrs. C. Leslie Glenn, member of the board of the Council of Church Women, who noted that no Negro senior high school has a regulation-size basketball court, and that Negro doctors cannot practice at Gallinger Hospital. Admitting that she belonged to a younger generation, she asserted that she possibly had developed "a different point of view."

Eby Defines Church's Part

Kermit Eby, CIO-district director of Research and Education, speaking before the Methodist Federation for Social Justice conference, declared "basic to all offerings the Church has to make to labor is the offering that grows out of its custodianship of the profound social and ethical teachings that spring from the Testament."

Eby declared the church must help its leaders and its members see organized labor in a wide, all-embracing framework. This means going beyond conceding labor's right to bargain collectively.

During a free-for-all discussion, in which several delegates criticized what they considered a pro-Russian speech by John Davis, formerly of the Yale faculty, Eby remarked: "Let's quit looking under the bed for Communists. The challenge to us is to be more progressive than the Communists for better reasons."

Someone asked: "What do you think of Walter Reuther?"

Eby replied: "Reuther was able to triumph, partly because of the present tide against Communism, but more significantly because he understood the best way to defeat Communists is to offer a better program in consistency with American traditions."

FIGURES SHOW

TEACHERS WORSE OFF THAN IN '39

By GLORIA CAPLAN

DESPITE substantial salary increases granted by every state in the union last year, teachers in 1948 will continue to be financially worse off than they were in 1939.

Last year's average salary increase of about $400 looks good on paper, teachers say, but in terms of what it'll buy, it's chicken feed.

In 1939-40 teachers, superintendents and principals averaged $1441 annually. At that time they, as state employes, were exempt from federal income taxes. Nor had the cost of living yet begun its eight-year binge.

This year public school teachers will average an annual $2424. But after deducting the $223 a teacher with one dependent will pay in income tax, then substracting an additional 40%, the amount by which his dollar has decreased, the average salary in terms of 1939 dollars remains a scrawny $1320—$121 less than he made before the war.

The disastrous result has been a steady migration of the more capable teachers from the profession and a decrease in the number of students training for the profession.

TEACHER discontent arises not only from their reduction in purchasing power, but also from the failure of their earnings to even approach all other professional groups. In 1939 teachers made one-fourth as much as lawyers, one-half as much as veterinarians.

The industrial worker too, as a result of widespread unionization, is better off than the teacher. Whereas educators before the war averaged $4 a week more than industrial workers, as of last September the situation was reversed, the teachers coming out on the short end with $5 a week less than manufacturing employes.

Add to the wage factor the burdensome teaching loads resulting from overcrowded classrooms—and you have the causes of this year's estimated teacher shortage of over 110,000. Here also lies the basis for a New York Times estimate that some 3 million children will receive a second-rate education this year. These 110,000 positions will be filled by sub-standard teachers who have been granted emergency certificates.

While fewer students enter the teaching profession—only 50,000 are being graduated each year to fill a 90,000 replacement need—the public school population skyrockets. Next September the first wave of babies, born in 1942, will hit the grammar schools. Each year since 1941 the birthrate has risen so that by last year it reached over 3½ million compared with a pre-war normal of about 2 million. The school systems, therefore, must anticipate a constantly-swelling population for the next 24 years at least. This necessitates more school buildings, more teachers, more playgrounds.

SINCE schools are not built overnight, nor teachers produced in a day, school authorities are faced with the necessity of planning now. Low income states will find it impossible to finance a program to raise education standards to the national level, much less provide substantial expansion of facilities.

Only federal assistance can provide the solution, teachers' organizations and labor unions insist. Accordingly, they are united behind a federal aid to education bill sponsored by Senators Thomas, Taft and Hill, which would grant each state at least $5 per school-age child plus additional amounts totalling as much as $25 for poorer states.

At a national conference in New York City last month the Teachers Division of the CIO Public Workers stated: "The need for federal aid for the schools is hardly debatable any longer. The extremely unequal distribution of the taxable resources of the country and the consequent inequalities in education facilities are a disgrace to this rich nation that boasts of its enlightenment."

But with publication last week of the Republican Party's list of issues to be given priority on the floors of Congress this year, chances for the bill's passage dimmed. Although it was favorably reported last year by the Senate Labor & Public Welfare Committee, it was left off the Republicans' "must" list.

CHALLENGE TO AMERICA

Rehabilitation Plan Offered In Ohio

"He was a complete cripple. He had lost one leg in a terrible factory accident. His right arm was completely gone, almost to the shoulder, and all the fingers of his left hand were missing. Add to that two broken spinal discs and this unfortunate fellow was hardly more than an animated corpse."

How this terribly crippled victim of the machine was made practically into a new man at a Canadian rehabilitation center is one of the stories told in a pamphlet just published by the Ohio CIO Council, 218 East State St., Columbus 15, Ohio.

Entitled "The Ontario Story—A Plan for Ohio," the pamphlet describes the Rehabilitation Center near Toronto which has won world renown for its human reclamation work, with the hope that it will inspire efforts to obtain similar centers in the U. S.

"In Ohio," states the pamphlet, "nowhere is there an intelligent and guiding hand which assists the worker in obtaining the best medical attention available for his problem.

BLS Sees No Hope For Price Decline

The Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Government's main agency for compiling price information, sees no hope presently for an end to the steady rise in living costs.

It expressed that glum opinion last week as it made what has come to be its expected announcement — that average wholesale prices had again risen to a new postwar peak—ninth consecutive high. The impact on retail prices is expected to be quick and hard.

126,400 Disabled While Working

Injuries on the job disabled or killed 126,400 manufacturing workers during the third quarter of 1947, an increase of 3,400 above the second quarter, according to the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

Some 500 of these injuries resulted in death and about 5,300 others resulted in permanent physical impariments.

Working time lost by the injured workers during the third quarter is estimated as about 2,528,000 man-days,

NLRB Bans Election

The NLRB, upholding previous decisions, has refused to order a collective bargaining election at the strike-bound Cory Corp plant in Chicago on the ground that the CIO Electrical Workers failed to comply with the Taft-Hartley law.

Business Warned To Cut Prices

NOW that Congress has betrayed its unwillingness to impose strong controls to curb inflation, the job of reducing prices is squarely back in the lap of business, Economist Robert R. Nathan told an importers' meeting in New York City.

The former War Production Board official wrote the CIO's 1946 wage-profit-price study.

Inflation has endangered the structure of our economy, Nathan said, and failure of the government to impose over-all controls will surely result in a slump unless businessmen throughout the country are willing to make those price cuts which their rate of profit permits.

The Marshall Plan will keep up the level of exports, Nathan thinks, but it will not substantially increase the role of foreign trade in maintaining our economy. Recession in 1947 was prevented by the "second round" wage increases which pumped additional purchasing power into the economy during the first half of the year, even though new price increases have since more than overtaken the wage boost, he asserted.

Nathan concluded that accumulated inventories can only be disposed of by price adjustments. If hoarding continues there will be a slump which will mean not only millions of unemployed here, but a decline of American world prestige. Businessmen must learn to content themselves with a consistent, moderate, level of profit over the years, and to dispense with the high profits spurts that always lead to depressions.

Bright Prospects For Vets Seen

Prospects of Congressional action to increase subsistence allowances for student-vets early this session appear bright, Chat Paterson, national chairman of the American Veterans Committee (AVC), said.

Paterson said that he had been told by House Speaker Martin (R. Mass.) that House action on the Senate approved bill increasing allowances $10 for single veterans and $15 for married veterans could be expected near the beginning of the present session.

The AVC chairman said that his organization would press for amendment of the legislation on the floor to provide for increases of $35 for both single and married veterans.

"AVC's college chapters conducted a special "see your Congressman" drive during the Christmas recess and reports received so far indicate almost complete support of the increases," Paterson asserted.

Paterson also predicted that the House would act affirmatively on veterans' bills boosting upward ceilings on combined wages and allowances of ex-GI on-the-job trainees and extending $1600 free car allowances to include arm amputees and blind vets.

ANGRY VETERAN: When Jack Widick appeared at Detroit rent decontrol hearings and demanded to know how he could pay a rent boost when he barely got by on his present rent, cops started to hustle him out of the hall. Then he became so aroused at the conduct of the hearings that he hurled his GI discharge button at the committee chairman.

IN ST. LOUIS AND DANVILLE, VA.

U.S. Rejects Rent Boost Proposals For Two Cities

ST. LOUIS, Mo., and Danville, Va., tenants escaped a general rent boost when Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods rejected rent rise proposals by the two area rent advisory boards.

A 15% increase was requested by the St. Louis board, and the Danville proposal was for a 10% boost.

In denying the requests last week, Woods said he had no evidence that landlords in these areas were in a worse position than previously. In many instances, a spokesman at the expediter's office explained, increased operating costs and taxes in 1947 have been more than offset by higher incomes due to fewer vacancies than in previous years.

Both local boards were attacked by CIO spokesmen as being unrepresentative of the community. Protesting the composition of the Danville body to Woods last November, John Edelman, CIO Textile Workers legislative representative, said it was composed of the head of the largest real estate firm in town, the vice president of a bank with extensive real estate holdings, a property-owning merchant, a prosperous farmer who owns two farms and a variety of non-farming interests, and a representative of the Farm Bureau Mutual Insurance Co.

Largest single group in the city are the 9000 CIO Textile Workers, Edelman said, who were not represented on the board.

Edelman described most of the housing for Danville wage earners as "substandard." At least one house in five has no sewage connection and only an outside toilet, he said, and at least 25% are without running water.

Similarly sordid was the picture of St. Louis housing as drawn editorially Jan. 7 by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. "New York," the editorial said, "has slum sections, but St. Louis is a slum city."

Noting that only five American cities — Birmingham and Montgomery in Alabama; Memphis and Chattanooga in Tennessee; and Shreveport in Louisiana—among 108 have more bathroom-less housing units than St. Louis, the newspaper said: "The ugly fact is that one out of every three St. Louis dwelling units has no bath or toilet. That is the price of allowing the grasping real estate owners and operators to run this side of the city's life as suits their own pocketbooks."

Dyers Get Raises

The CIO Federation of Dyers in eight Rhode Island and Connecticut finishing plants have won a 10½c hourly increase plus a sixth paid holiday and improvements in health insurance programs.

The increase raises hourly minimum rates to $1.13½c.

New Logging Rules

Youngsters of 16 will now have to wait until they are 18 before being permitted to work at "particularly hazardous" occupations in the logging of pulpwood.

A revised order issued last week by Secy. of Labor Schwellenbach, effective Feb. 2, adds most pulpwood logging jobs to those in the saw-timber logging and sawmilling work previously requiring an 18-year minimum for employment under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Mr. Boss Dreams Up An Injunction

By FRANK DONNER Of The CIO Legal Staff

"Contending that the mere threat of refusing to handle 'hot copy' constituted a secondary boycott, three of the four international communications companies struck by the American Communications Association took the unprecedented step of asking the National Labor Relations Board to seek a court injunction against refusal of copy by a non-striking ACA local... "Charles T. Douds, regional director of the NLRB, said he would give the case 'top priority' and order an examiner to start an investigation today. He terms the cable companies' move an 'unprecedented refinement' and said normal procedure would have been to wait until the threat was carried out before seeking injunctive relief." New York Times, January 6, 1948.

WHEN the collective bargaining contract was about to expire, Mr. Boss got very troubled.

"I am sure they are going to ask for a wage increase," he muttered to himself. "If only they would violate the Taft-Hartley law so that I could get an injunction to break their strike and to intimidate and demoralize them.

"It would not even have to be an actual violation of the Taft-Hartley law. I can always claim it is a violation and get the Labor Board to get an injunction. By the time the issue is settled in court I will have plenty of opportunity to break the union and kick out the militant leaders."

AS THE END of the contract term drew closer and closer Mr. Boss got more and more nervous. Finally, he could stand it no more. He picked up the phone and called the regional office of the Labor Board.

"I want to speak to the Regional Director," he said.

"Who is this, a union representative? The Regional Director is in conference and cannot be disturbed."

"No, this is not a union representative. This is Mr. Boss of the Colossal Manufacturing Company."

"Oh, I'm sorry, sir, I'll connect you."

"Hello, Regional Director. This is Mr. Boss. Look, I would like you to get an injunction or issue a complaint right away against the union in my plant."

"Why," asked the Regional Director, "have they violated the law?"

"Not yet," said Mr. Boss impatiently, "but I am sure they will any day now."

"Well, sir, can't you be a little more specific? What section of the law are they planning to violate?"

"You are asking me what section of the law they are planning to violate. It is your business to figure out what section of the law they are going to violate. All I know is that they may strike for a wage increase and it is perfectly simple for a Labor Board Regional Director to figure out a violation of the Taft-Hartley Act when a union goes on strike, isn't it?"

"O.K.," said the Regional Director, "I will send over an investigator right away."

THE investigator promptly appeared at the plant the next day and asked the workers a lot of questions like this:

"Has there been any strike talk in the plant?"

"Has there been any discussion in the washrooms about going on strike?"

"Have you ever predicted to your wife or your friends that there may be a strike in the plant or that you may violate the Taft-Hartley Law?"

"Has anybody threatened to violate the Taft-Hartley law?"

The investigator made voluminous notes in a little black book and went back to the regional office.

There were only three days left before the expiration of the contract and Mr. Boss was getting frantic. The night after the Labor Board investigator left he had a horrible dream. The dream was all about a strike by the union. Some of the dream didn't make sense to him but when he woke up he remembered the part about the strike very well. The first thing he did was to call the regional office of the board again and speak to the Regional Director. "I have further evidence that the union is violating the law," he said, "and I want you to get an injunction right away."

"What additional evidence do you have?"

"Well," Mr. Boss said, "I had a very bad dream last night. In the dream the union went out on strike and violated the Taft-Hartley law."

"WHAT sections of the Taft-Hartley Act did they violate?" the Regional Director asked.

"That's just the point," Mr. Boss answered. "There is a part of the dream that isn't clear to me and I can't interpret but I did dream that the union went on strike and I am sure that the rest of the dream will establish that they struck in violation of the Taft-Hartley law."

"If that's the case," said the Regional Director, "I will send over the investigator again. But to make sure that we prove our case against the union and get an injunction without any difficulty I'll also send over a psychiatrist to interpret your dreams. Of course, this is an unprecedented refinement, you understand."

Next day, the Labor Board got a sweeping injunction against any "possible future or threatened" violations of the Taft-Hartley law —and Mr. Boss had no more worries during the day or bad dreams during the night.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood,

CIO Vice-President and Director Of Organization

CIO Organizing Committee Director Van A. Bittner announces:

North Carolina Director William Smith reports three victories for the CIO Woodworkers. The vote was 134 to 50 at Major & Loomis Lumber Co. in Hertford, N. C.; 24 to 4 at A. B. Houtz Lumber Co. in Elizabeth City, N. C., and 43 to 9 at Rankin Lumber Co. in Fayetteville, N. C.

Tennessee Director Paul Christopher reports a victory for the United Chemical Workers at the J. R. Watkins Co. in Memphis where the workers voted 49 to 33 in a decertification election. The company had filed the petition with the NLRB claiming the union did not represent a majority of the employes.

Arkansas Director Lee F. Tucker reports a 100% victory for the Woodworkers in Crossett, Ark., where the employes of the Public Utilities Co. voted 11 to 0 for the union.

Regional Director George Craig, Philadelphia, Pa., advises that the CIO gained recognition in the Rudd-Melikian (Phila.) Plant without NLRB elections. George Kane for UAW and Ben Stahl for CIO handled the situation. The plant represents about 40 employes. Negotiations for a contract will commence immediately.

UAW VICTORY IN OHIO

Paul E. Miley, Director of Region 2A, announces the UAW-CIO won an NLRB election in the Manufacturers and Fabricators plant in Elyria, Ohio. Of the 34 who voted, all voted for UAW-CIO, Local 996. This local has just returned from a three-month strike.

The union was able to win many concessions, including a 15c per hour increase, and overtime concessions.

International Representative C. W. Boldt, formerly of the Competitive Shop Department, was in charge of this drive. Negotiations will begin immediately on a contract covering these members.

As reported in last week's column, the UBTW of Northern California and Nevada voted overwhelmingly in favor of CIO. They will now have another vote with just CIO and no union on the ballot. The overwhelming vote was as follows: TWOC-CIO 1867, IBEW-AFL 296, CWA 284. The officers of this union are very confident that they will have an overwhelming vote in the next ballot, which demonstrates conclusively that the cry of CWA's representatives will not change this fact.

We do not propose to dignify these untruths, as we have confidence in the ultimate outcome, and it is high time for the representatives of the CWA to recognize the inevitable and carry out the suggestions made to them by many of their members to seek amalgamation and affiliation with the CIO.

Marshall—Vote Full Aid Or Nothing

HIGHLIGHTS of State Secy. Marshall's testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee:

"An inadequate program would involve a wastage of our resources with ineffective result. Either undertake to meet the requirements of the problem or don't undertake it at all.

"So long as hunger, poverty, desperation and resulting chaos threaten the great concentrations of people in western Europe—some 270 millions—there will steadily develop social unease and political confusion on every side.

"This unprecedented endeavor of the new world to help the old is neither sure nor easy. It is a calculated risk.

TVA-More Power, Less To Pay

THE Tennessee Valley Authority, often called the keystone of the New Deal, is a going concern, serving the people even better than it did when the Supreme Court upheld the TVA about 10 years ago.

Despite attacks by Sen. McKellar (D., Tenn.) and others against TVA, Congress was told last week that it has surpassed all expectations.

America's one great attempt to harness the giant power of a river for the benefit of the people living in its watershed made further progress in 1947.

In the 14th annual report on the TVA, the three TVA directors told Congress that more consumers were served, with more electricity, at a price substantially lower than the national average.

In addition, TVA reservoir systems reduced what would have been the sixth largest flood in 100 years at Chattanooga substantially lower than the national average.

CONGRESSIONAL moves that would force TVA to pay off the federal investment more rapidly than originally planned—thus preventing TVA from expanding its facilities—were countered in the report. Private power interests would like to limit TVA's expansion thru an amendment requiring larger cash payments into the Treasury each year.

Instead, the report advocates that the government, as the owner of TVA, will be in a better position if earnings remain in the business to "provide for expanded facilities and increase earnings and . . . in time a growth in value far beyond the cash originally provided from the Treasury."

Residential use of electricity in the area covered by the 139 municipal and cooperative systems serving 743,000 consumers rose nearly 10% in the year. The average rate was 1.66c per kilowatt hour, and the average annual bill was $36.51. This compares with the average national bill of $43.49.

The average domestic consumer in the TVA region used 60% more electricity and paid 16% less for it than the average such consumer in the nation.

Canadian Labor Sees Own T-H

CANADIAN labor legislation and prices will be major topics on Ottawa's Parliament Hill in the next few months. Parliament resumes January 26 and the government's emergency powers automatically expire March 31.

Canadian Congress of Labor unions have interviewed Parliament members in their localities. It was expected that this, coupled with the recent lobby by the C. C. L., would cause particularly the Liberals to take a more determined stand in the party caucus.

A recent Gallop poll showing that 76% of the Canadian people favor a return to price control was considered politically significant in Ottawa. A previous poll showed a majority of Canadians are convinced exorbitant profits, rather than wage increases, are responsible for high prices.

So far, the government has not disclosed when it proposes introducing the new labor bill. The legislation brought down at the last session died because there was insufficient time to deal with it. This year the bill will follow the same general pattern as the defunct Bill 338.

EXPECTATIONS are that a strong effort will be made by employer groups to have the new legislation follow the pattern set in the U. S. by the Taft-Hartley Bill. The Windsor Chamber of Commerce has advocated proposals which would go far toward reducing the collective bargaining rights of workers. The Windsor Chamber would outlaw closed shops, make other union security provisions subject to negotiation and so presumably subject to refusal by the employers, and provide a lengthy and involved process as a prerequisite to any strike action.

The proposals, promptly attacked in Windsor by the CIO United Automobile Workers, have already attracted considerable attention across the country. CIO unions in Canada are affiliated with the CCL.

Oklahoma! Powers-that-be Accuse Negro Girl Of Unwillingness to Accept Segregation Laws

TWO years ago Ada Lois Sipuel, a Negro girl, applied for admission to the University of Oklahoma law school.

She was graduated from the State College for Negroes.

She had all her credits, she passed all other tests, but she was turned down. The regents said that the state law made it a crime for Negroes to go to white schools.

Miss Sipuel is still waiting to enter the law school.

That's why the case was argued before the Supreme Court last week.

CHIEF JUSTICE VINSON, Justices Reed, Black, Jackson and Douglas were critical of Oklahoma representatives who appeared to defend their state's actions. Asst. Atty. Gen. Fred Hansen and Maurice H. Merrill, acting dean of the law school, represented the state.

Pertinent comments:

Hansen: "Miss Sipuel had not been admitted because she had failed to apply to the state regents, rather than the university regents."

Rutledge: "Where do students of other races apply?"

Hansen: "They apply to the university regents. That would not result in discriminatory treatment, since it would force the regents to set up a Negro law school. Or, maybe they'd let her go to a white school."

Vinson: "How could that be, under the regents' interpretation of the state law?"

Hansen: "I guess they could change it."

Jackson: "A law school for just one student wouldn't be equal; it wouldn't be much of a law school, would it?"

Black: "She applied two years ago, what has been done to set up a school for her?"

Hansen: "It'll take some time, but they'd have to set it up."

Black: "She might be an old lady by that time."

Merrill: "Miss Sipuel is not willing to abide by our segregation laws."

Jackson: "Why should she abide by it any more than a white person? Why should she waive her constitutional rights?"

The American Civil Liberties Union is aiding in Miss Sipuel's case, which is handled by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Thurgood Marshall is the NCAAP attorney; Arthur Garfield Hays, Walter Gellhorn and Oswald K. Fraenkel act for ACLU.

Farm-Labor Parley Set in Vermont

The high cost of living will be the topic of discussion at the annual Labor and Farm Conference to be held at Goddard College, Plainfield, Vt., Jan. 16-17. Colston E. Warne, Professor of Economics, Amherst College, and President of Consumers Union, will give the principal address.

A feature of the two-day conference will be the organization of groups to study and report on such problems as rationing, taxation, cooperatives, and price control.

Conference sessions are open to any person interested in the problems of workers and farmers. Room and meals may be obtained at the college.

T-H Not Responsible For Lag In Strikes

Wages were the chief cause of strikes in 1947, but controversies over the application of the Taft-Hartley law may loom more important as a strike cause in 1948, the Bureau of Labor Statistics said in a review of the industrial dispute record for the past year.

Many union contracts were signed in the first half of 1947 and issues which might arise over the law would not normally appear until these agreements expire in 1948 or, in some cases, even later.

During 1947, the BLS record showed, about 2.2 million workers were involved in stoppages, losing an estimated 35 million man days from the job, or four-tenths of 1% of the estimated working time.

This record was far more peaceful than in 1946, year of the big postwar stoppages, when nearly twice as many workers went out, losing more than three times as much working time.

Murray Wires:

AWAIT PAC ACTION ON 1948 VOTING

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week sent the following telegram to the heads of all CIO international unions and industrial union councils and to regional CIO directors throughout the country:

"To avert misunderstanding I am now calling attention to the resolution adopted by the recent Boston CIO Convention governing the subject of political action. The resolution states that 'we pledge full and unstinted support of the CIO-PAC and to the carrying out of its program.'

"This is to advise you that the PAC Executive Committee will meet in the City of Washington Jan. 23, at which time consideration will be given to the course of action to be pursued by the PAC on matters affecting programs and Party support.

"Under these circumstances it will be inadvisable and of course contrary to the action taken by the Boston Convention for any of the subsidiary affiliates of the CIO to make any pledges or commitments which promise support to any Party or any candidate in advance of this extremely important meeting of the PAC.

"Our organization has by Convention action decided to follow this course of action. There is a sense of obligation on the part of our several organizations and the National CIO to meticulously respect the Boston Convention resolution dealing with political matters and I am therefore urgently requesting our various affiliates to maintain their promises and keep their pledges."

Before Murray sent his wire, the third party candidacy of Henry A. Wallace developed actions in several areas, including New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania and Kentucky.

New York State CIO: A legislative meeting of the State council, called before Wallace announced his candidacy, placed the Wallace situation on its agenda since another meeting was not scheduled for some time and since the State CIO was affiliated with the American Labor Party, many of whose officers had announced they would seek ALP indorsement of Wallace.

The legislative meeting, which also took action on state unemployment compensation and labor laws, discussed a policy statement by Louis Hollander, president, and Harold Garno, secretary-treasuer.

The statements criticized Wallace on two grounds: (a) that his candidacy would split the Democratic Party, and (b) his announced opposition to the Marshall Plan.

The legislative delegates then approved the statement and a supporting resolution by similar votes of 277,769 to 192,601 (based on per capita membership.

Amalgamated Clothing Workers: The executive board of Amalgamated met just before a meeting of the State Board of the ALP and denounced the Wallace candidacy It voted to withdraw from ALP if that party backed Wallace.

Amalgamated announced that John Abt, its special counsel, had been grented a leave of absence been granted a leave of absence "in order to be free actively to participate in the campaign of Wallace. At the same time, Mr. Abt resigned his position as counsel for the CIO Political Action Committee."

American Labor Party: Hyman Blumberg, executive vice-chairman of the ACW, resigned as State chairman of ALP, along with a number of other ACW members holding ALP posts. Included were Mrs. Bessie Hillman, widow of Sidney Hillman, former national director of CIO-PAC, and Jacob S. Potofsky, Hillman's successor as head of ACW.

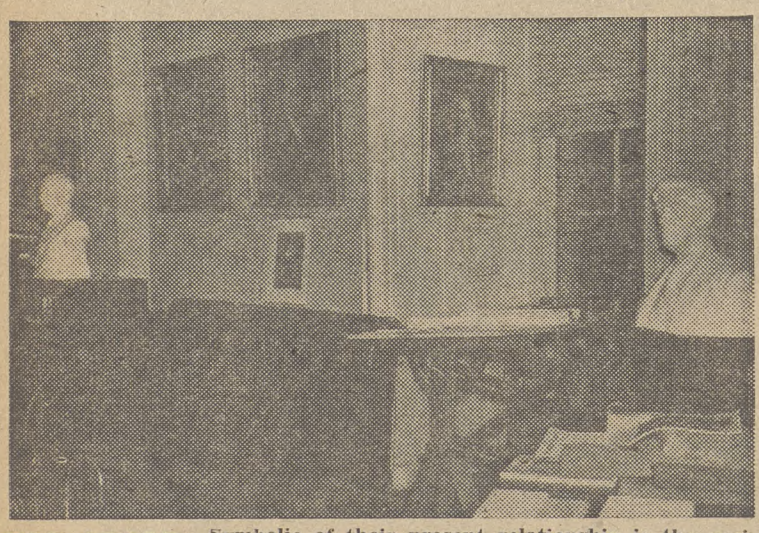
After the resignations, the remaining members of the State ALP executive committee unanimously adopted a resolution indorsing Wallace.

The ALP then elected Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.) as chairman.

Illinois: The State CIO board regular meeting said it would neither "promote nor indorse" a third party move.

Kentucky: The Louisville Industrial Union Council regular meeting voted opposition to a third party.

Food & Tobacco Workers: The executive committee, meeting in Philadelphia, indorsed the Wallace candidacy.



FAR APART: Symbolic of their present relationship is the position of these marble busts of Pres. Truman and Henry A. Wallace, reposing temporarily in the office of the capitol architect. Awaiting assignment to a niche in the Senate building, they were purchased under a law requiring a bust to be made of each U. S. vice president.

It's 2 to 1 For CIO In Dixie

DESPITE extravagant AFL claims of increased membership in the South, almost twice as many southern workers voted for the CIO as for the AFL from March, 1946, to August 22, 1947, a survey of NLRB elections shows.

The CIO received 123,552 votes, the AFL 67,661; 80,427 votes went to "no" union and independent unions were favored by 25,916 workers.

These gains for organized labor were made in the face of restrictive state labor laws.

Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO Organizing Committee, recently said that 400,000 Southerners joined the CIO in the past 18 months, bringing the total membership in the South to 800,000.

He pointed out that more than half of the plants won by the CIO since last August, when T-H went into effect, have been without resort to the NLRB. The CIO has gained recognition through consent elections or check of membership cards, agreed to by management and the CIO.

THE NLRB survey shows that the AFL won a total of 738 elections and the CIO 692, although the two were not directly pitted against each other in most of them.

Where the CIO was on the ballot, the AFL was usually the loser. In 238 elections where the CIO, AFL and "no" union were on the ballots, the score was CIO 128, AFL 65 and "no" union 45. Of the valid votes cast in these elections the AFL got 18,557 the CIO 28,499, while 6,803 chose to stay out of any union.

In 14 contests where the AFL, CIO, an independent union and "no-union" ran a four-cornered race, the CIO took five, the independent won eight and "no-union" one. The AFL failed to score.

In the group where the choice was the AFL or "no-union," the AFL won 675 out of 1,023, piling up 45,630 votes out of 93,250 valid ballots.

Similarly when the choice was the CIO or "no-union," the CIO won 538 out of 756 elections with a total CIO vote of 47,553 out of 83,446 valid ballots.

These gains were made despite the fact that the majority of states have anti-union laws.

Only three southern states have laws recognizing the right of workers to organize and bargain collectively. They are Alabama, Kentucky and Florida, but the Alabama law gives employers the equal right to refrain from bargaining or recognizing the right.

Louisiana alone of all the southern states outlaws "yellow dog" contracts and only seven of the states prohibit the use of the industrial blacklist against workers. These seven are Alabama, Arkansas, North Carolina, Florida, Oklahoma, Texas and Virginia.

The closed shop is forbidden alone with other "union security" agreements by six states: Arkansas, Georgia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia, while eight states have strict regulation of unions during strikes, picketing and organizing drives. These are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia.

Comely Essay Prize Winner

Miss Ruth Oreck, member of Local 1-S, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes, New York City, won first prize in the essay contest conducted by the Committee for the Extension of Labor Education.

Her essay and others submitted in the contest on "Why I Am Asking Members of Congress to Vote for the Labor Extension Bill, S. 1390," will be included in the testimony when Congressional hearings on the bill are held next month. Her essay follows:

"This American worker wants a Labor Extension Service! Why? I work in a retail establishment; I belong to a trade union; I vote in my precinct. In order to do all these things intelligently I must have knowledge. I must understand the techniques and problems of my industry to advance myself in my job.

"I must understand labor economics to participate fully in my union. And I must understand current events and problems in my community to vote wisely. Both in my union and my community activities, I determine how I shall live, where my next meal is coming from, whether my children will grow up adequately clothed, housed and fed.

"I am not just one individual. The workers in the United States are the majority of the people of this country. The tradition of the American laboring man is a tradition of dignity. It is the 200-year-long assertion of his right to determine his own working conditions and to direct his own government. It is striving for more knowledge about the world in which he lives, how it operates and how he can run it for his betterment.

"We want to know—what is the role of our union in national life; how should we manage our union; what should we do with it? We want the facts—about wages and profits; about productivity and standards of living; about slums and malnutrition; about political machines and 'good government'; about agriculture and business monopoly; about 'boom and bust.'

"The Labor Extension Service can help us find out these facts and help us figure out what we are doing and what we ought to do.

"American farmers have an Agricultural Extension Service. American workers want their own Labor Extension Service."

The Committee for the Extension of Labor Education is located at 2117 Pennsylvania Ave., N.W., Washington, D. C.

Thanks From Histadrut

At its 24th annual conference in Los Angeles recently the Palestine Histadrut (Federation of Labor) Campaign lauded the CIO and CIO Pres. Philip Murray for their "great assistance" in promoting a Jewish state in Palestine.

The resolution, a copy of which was forwarded to Murray, stated: "The Jewish people will always remember the loyal support of the CIO in achieving the just and humanitarian demand of a Jewish State in Palestine."

THANKFUL: Both the little French girl clutching her present of new shoes, and three-year old Victoria Scott, leaving a CIO Auto Workers holiday party in Michigan, can thank organized labor. They're both enjoying the fruits of U. S. unions' belief that labor must do its part at home and in the world community to insure a better life for all children.

VOL. 11 WASHINGTON, D. C., JANUARY 19, 1948 82 NO. 3

FOR PUBLIC SAFETY! M. C. Weston, CIO official (in light gray hat), unarmed, is backed up against the gates of the struck Nashville Corp. plant prior to being arrested by Tennessee State police, carrying sub-machine guns. Weston, helping in the CIO Steelworkers' strike against Nashville, was arrested on charges of "vagrancy" though he had $150 in his pockets. Looking on is State Public Safety Commissioner Lynn Bomar (facing camera, striped sleeves). Weston was acquitted, but there were a number of denials of the strikers' civil rights, directed by Bomar. Beatings, arrests, mass contempt citations are included. The strike grew out of the employer's insistence that the union had violated the Taft-Hartley law, but the NLRB has refused to rule that the Steelworkers are guilty of unfair labor practices. However, that hasn't deterred Nashville and Bomar, who was involved in Columbia, Tenn., anti-Negro riots. See Page 3.

As Twig Is Bent:

Yes Sir, Some of Our Very Best Friends Are Young (And Younger) Republicans

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

NOW is the time, kiddies, to come to the aid of the party—the Grand Old Party!

Last week, hot off the press—well, reasonably hot—came the first issue—Vol. I, No. 1—of "The Young Republican News, a National Voice of the Republican Party."

The new paper outlines what a good Young Republican is expected to do in 1948 and what his kids are expected to do, too.

Most of the Young Republicans must have been busy pursuing other youthful activities the day the Y.R. News came out, for the pictures in the paper, with two or three exceptions, were hardly what even a politician would call Young.

THE Young Republican National Federation has an age limit of 40 (whether or not you then become an Old Republican is not made clear) as opposed to the Young Democrats' 35. But, in the Y. R. News, Vol. I, No. 1, there appeared these pictured characters:

Sen. Arthur Capper (R., Kas.), 82, who's been in the U. S. Senate since 1919; Perry Howard, 70, Negro GOP national committeeman from Mississippi, where Republican votes are as rare as rye whisky in Kentucky; Speaker Joseph Martin (R., Mass.), 63 and bright-eyed over the possibilities he may be a dark-horse candidate for President: Rep. Karl Stefan (R., Neb.), 63;

SENATOR CAPPER (R., Kansas)

Sen. Alexander Wiley (R., Wis.), 63; Gov. Earl Warren (R., Calif.), a Presidential hopeful; Brazilla Carroll Reece, foot-in-mouth GOP national chairman, 58; George Sokolsky, columnist-mouthpiece for Big Business, 54; Rep. Katharine St. George (R., N. Y.), elected to Congress to Ham Fish's old seat, and with his support, 52.

There was also Mrs. Martha Taft, wife of Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), whose age is not listed in Who's Who, but he's 57 and they were married in 1914. (Incidentally, Mrs. Taft is quoted as quipping in a speech before the Columbia League of Republican Women: "The torch of liberty is like a husband or a furnace; if you don't do something about it, it will go out.")

Also pictured are four persons still in their 40s, but not eligible for membership in the Young Republicans. They are: Clare Boothe Luce, 44; Presidential Hopeful (the GOP, says Y. R. News, "has a wealth of top aspirants") Thomas E. Dewey, '45; Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge (R., Mass.), 45, and Talmadge Wilcher, a local GOP candidate in Virginia, 46.

Oh, yes, there is a letter of laudation for youth, particularly Republican Youth, from ex-Sen. James E. Watson (R., Ind.), now 84.

Only eligible Young Reps pictured in the paper are their president, Ralph Becker, and the editor-in-chief, Lee L. Garling.

REAL gem of the first issue is an article, "Raise Janie and Junior to be Good GOP'ers." The article starts:

"As the wife of a young Republican, have you sometimes felt just a little 'left (or better still, right) out of things' because hubby has the stimulating task of taking uninitiated precinct workers by the hand and teaching them the political ropes? . . .

"As a matter of fact, you need not feel 'out of the running' or 'useless.' You can make a real contribution to the Young Republicans even while remaining at home. You can, with a little planning and thought, increase and enrich the fold of the Republican flock by teaching your children to be good Republicans."

What we would like to ask, if we may, is this: Does this mean the Reps aren't going to allow women to be precinct workers anymore?

"Here's your basic blueprint in 'Ten Easy Lessons':

"RELIABILITY—1. Once Junior has proven he can be depended upon to play in the backyard and not to go out onto the street, he might be allowed to play out-of-doors. Then, he can be relied upon, as an adult, to serve the people's cause in true Republican fashion."

In true Republican fashion—Does that mean in the fashion of Taft, Hartley, Wherry, etc? We don't suppose it could be the way of that maverick, Wayne Morse?

"EARNESTNESS. 2. The little folks should be encouraged to accept their small tasks of putting away their own toys or filling the puppy's water dish, etc., in a serious and sincere manner. Then, they are not likely to mature into double-dealing and double-talking Democrats, who promise one thing and do another."

We can imagine Harry Truman, some 20 years ago, shouting at Mary Margaret: "Now daughter, don't put away your toys and don't fill Feller's water dish in a serious and sincere manner, for you might grow up and become a Republican."

"PIETY—3. Junior can be trained in the habit of saying nightly prayers, attending Sunday School, and living a good Christian life. Those who are faithful to God are likewise faithful to God's children, and want them to enjoy true liberty and freedom."

That's good advice for anybody.

"UPRIGHTNESS—4. Have you ever considered the possibility of encouraging justness in Johnny by allowing him to name the form of discipline for his own misdeeds? A just child will grow up into a just man who serves the people equally, and not according to the color of their skin or their religion."

Maybe the Young Republicans weren't tipped off, but the legislation for a permanent F. E. P. C. had bi-partisan sponsorship: Democratic Sens. Chavez, Murray and Myers and Republican Sens. Ives, Smith and Morse.

"BALANCE—5. The proverb, 'All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy,' might be used to teach your tots that excesses of any kind are best avoided. Once they learn that Americanism, they are not likely to lean hard either to the right or left of reaction or radicalism which have been found equally undesirable as followed by the Democrats, but to follow the well-charted middle road of Republicanism."

Excesses like the conclusion drawn from this epigram No. 5? People who drive in the middle of the road are apt to get sides-wiped.

"LOYALTY—6. Do you encourage Janie's devotion and faithfulness to a once-beautiful and beloved doll even after it has been replaced by newer, shinier toys? Such a habit is in contrast with the Democratic practice of bolting the party every time they take a fancy to a different doctrine, or for personal publicity and glorification."

Speak for yourself, John (or Joan). How about Teddy Roosevelt, did he bolt or didn't he bolt?

"INITIATIVE—7. Perhaps Junior would enjoy the challenge of thinking up original ways in which he could spend his weekly allowance. This is the antithesis of the habit which the Democratic party is seeking to encourage in America—the habit of leaning and depending on so-called master-minds to think of everything."

Master minds like the Great Engineer who was in the White House when the Market crashed in '29?

"CANDOR—8. Let Sonny know that his unkindness to Sister is not quite so great an offense if he admits it openly and truthfully. Sonny won't then fall into the left-winger's habit of deception and double-talk with others."

"My dear, don't tell anybody, but she's got dish water hands—and votes Democratic."

"ASPIRATION—9. A simple game such as building blocks into ever-bigger and ever-prettier castles can teach Sonny the value of ambition—of being discontent with doing things half-heartedly in a mediocre manner when they could be done enthusiastically. A youngster will soon be impervious to the professional left-wing pessimists who are constantly moaning: "Things can't be done. We can't have prosperity. We can't have peace."

Building "ever-bigger and ever-prettier" castles might lead a kid into wanting to be a king, too.

"NATIONALISM—10. Do your youngsters love their star-spangled Uncle Sam and the American flag and the Pledge of Allegiance above all else, even while having a wholesome respect for their British, French and Chinese cousins? Then, when they are grown, they are not likely to follow the Democratic practice of indiscriminately praising every foreign action, at the expense and belittlement of their own grand land of America."

Attention, Mr. Molotov: you'd better stop attacking Secy. Marshall. The Young Republicans think Marshall's criticism of Russian policy, which criticism you have denouncing lately, is actually praise!

* * *

You will note that the first letters of those "Ten Easy Lessons" spell R-E-P-U-B-L-I-C-A-N.

Aside from the questionable taste of No. 3, "Piety," they also prove that vaudeville is not dead, not by a long shot.

CIO Declares Conscription Will Not Prevent War

CIO HAS called upon national and local affiliates to renew their fight against proposals for peacetime universal military training.

The letter—signed by Legislative Director Nathan Cowan and Councils Director John Brophy—called on "all CIO leaders and members to write or wire their Congressmen . . . that we want to help feed and rebuild Europe but we do not want peacetime military conscription."

The letter assailed the Towe Bill (HR 4278), which it said has been reported out by the House Armed Services Committee and awaits further committee action. Among the reasons given for CIO opposition to peacetime conscription is the argument that peacetime conscription "never has proven to be either a preventive of war nor a defense against a well-prepared opponent. In view of the development of atomic energy, some of the best military strategists in this country feel that large conscript armies would be of little or no military value if another war should occur."

Labor Board Gets Boost In Funds

Now that Natl. Labor Relations Board is working to help employers under the Taft-Hartley Act, it seems ready to get the money needs.

Pres. Truman's budget calls for a $9,400,000 appropriation for the Board—and if the money runs out by April, they could come back for more. For the present year, the NLRB's funds are just under $6,000,000. (The funds were voted before the T-H Bill was passed.)

If Congress ok's the bigger appropriation, NLRB will be able to increase its field staff from present total of about 475 people to more than 900.

Congress Priority Advocated For Civil Rights Legislation

HIGH priority for civil rights legislation has been asked of the Senate Republican leadership by Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director.

Referring to bills to make lynching a federal crime, to outlaw the poll tax in federal elections and to outlaw discrimination in industry, Cowan wired to Sen. R. A. Taft (R., O.):

"The CIO urges you and your committee (the GOP Senate Steering Committee) to insist that all three comprise the minimum action in the civil rights field and that the Congress act on all three at this session.

"The anti-lynch bill is most important to the millions who live under the lynching terror.

"FEPC is most important to millions in an immediate dollars and cents way, to the amount of millions of dollars in wages and added purchasing power for goods.

"Poll tax is most important in extending first class citizenship, the right to vote, to millions now denied it."

TENN. POLICE HEAD LEADS DRIVE ON STEEL STRIKERS

By RAY WARWICK

A BLUSTERING, bald-headed former All-America football star is directing a campaign of coercion and intimidation at Nashville, Tenn.

He is State Commissioner of Public Safety Lynn Bomar—who was involved in the notorious riots against Negroes at Columbia, Tenn. In Nashville, he has armed his state policemen with tommy-guns, pistols and tear gas and placed them on strikebreaking duty at the Nashville Corporation plant.

Victims of the campaign are striking members of CIO Steelworkers Local 4057 and union representatives who are helping direct the walkout.

Three men connected with the strike have been beaten brutally. Scores have been arrested. Mass contempt of court citations have been issued.

THE STRIKE began Nov. 10, when Nashville Corp. (formerly Consolidated-Vultee) refused to honor a 2-to-1 vote for USA.

Despite the fact the NLRB election was held August 20, 1947, the day before the affidavit provisions of the Taft-Hartley act became law, the company contended that USA is "not certified," since its officers have refused to sign T-H affidavits.

Next development came when NLRB General Counsel Robert M. Denham dismissed the company's charge of unfair labor charges against the USA—based on the strike—saying that USA's election victory "cannot be ignored." The company, however, still refused to honor the NLRB result. So did the handful of Intl. Association of Machinists members, who continued to cross the picket line.

Next, the IAM petitioned NLRB for a new election, ignoring the fact the vast majority of the employes are on strike.

STRIKERS retaliated by filing several hundred individual unfair labor practice charges against the company, a procedure allowed under T-H.

Also the USA has had Bomar haled into federal court on charges of violating the strikers' civil rights.

Steelworkers' Associate Counsel Frank Donner has asked the U. S. Dept. of Justice to investigate violations of the strikers' civil rights. An FBI agent has been assigned to the case.

But Bomar, aided and abetted by a State court injunction issued the day after the strike began, has continued this campaign against the strikers:

- He has limited pickets to 12 for the entire, huge plant.
- He requires other strikers and sympathizers to stay 100 yards from the plant.
- State police brutally beat up Charles Barranco, Jr., CIO staff representative, after he was arrested on a flimsy charge of violating the state auto registration law. Barranco's injuries included two broken ribs, and severe bruises. His clothes were in tatters and he had to spend several days in a hospital. He reported that 10 highway patrolmen had taken turns working on him behind locked doors in the county jail.
- Two strikers, L. A. Davenport and James Temple, were trailed by patrolmen in their auto, halted on a lonely road, beaten with blackjacks and charged with "reckless driving." Temple, who had testified against Bomar in a Federal Court a few days before, was told the beating was to teach him to "keep his mouth shut."
- M. S. Weston, USA staff representative, was arrested, charged with "vagrancy"—though he had $150 in his pocket. He was seized at the plant gate by patrolmen carrying tommy-guns after he had told the strikers their PAC dollars would "take care" of such problems as actions of Bomar's police. Bomar was personally in on the arrest. (Weston was acquitted in court.)
- Louis F. Krainock, Nashville area director for the CIO Organizing Committee—who was in charge of strike headquarters—was arrested and held in jail with two strikers for several hours before he was told what the charges were—"lewdness, breach of peace and inciting to riot. He asked on what grounds and was told that the playing of the record, "Talking Union," on the sound system outside the plant constituted all those charges. ("Talking Union" has some harsh words and about strikebreaking police and about the boss.)

AID—FOR SCABS: —Tennessee State and county police, whose pay comes from taxes paid by ALL citizens, stand guard at the gates of the struck Nashville Corp. plant, guns ready for action, as they herd back striking CIO steelworkers and usher strike breakers into the plant. This is a daily occurrence in the strike, which began in November.

CHICAGO STYLE: Three plainclothesmen of the Chicago police labor detail ganged up on a lone woman picket at the Chicago Expansion Bolt Co., where members of Local 4897, CIO Steelworkers, were on strike. An alleged disturbance was the reason given for the police intervention. Several persons were hospitalized, and others arrested.

Milwaukee Council Buys Camp Site

Two hundred acres of wooded land, on which there is a 40-acre lake, have been purchased by the Milwaukee County CIO Council for a educational and recreational camp, according to Council Sec. Treas. Glenn M. Clarke.

The camp which is about 180 miles from Milwaukee, will be used for a leadership training program for CIO members in Wisconsin. Part of this program will include a summer school running for several months where specialized training for union leadership will be given.

Bias Free Bowling Tourney Scheduled

An International Bowling Tournament open to contestants of all races will be held by the United Automobile Workers April 3 to May 2 in Detroit.

In contrast to the un-American events of the American Bowling Congress which bars all but Caucasians from entering, the only qualification required by the UAW tournament to compete for a national or international championship is an established bowling average, says Olga M. Madar, UAW recreation director.

"We have appealed to the American Bowling Congress in the past to eliminate the discriminatory clause in its constitution which limits participation in bowling championships to Caucasians," declared Miss Madar.

"The ABC has consistently refused."

UAW Wants 25c Raise, Other Gains

THE CIO Auto Workers, which has often set the national pattern for wage increases, will demand 25c hourly boosts plus 5c an hour for a health insurance fund this year.

Two other CIO internationals—the Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers and the Woodworkers—also launched their wage drives last week with announcement that they would seek substantial gains.

The UAW demands affecting 800,000 members will include, in addition to the wage increases, a guaranteed weekly wage and three weeks vacation for workers with five years seniority. The total is the equivalent of about 30c an hour.

Details of the demands were mapped at a UAW policy meeting in Detroit last week. The officials left the question of pension plans up to the locals.

The UAW wage drive will probably lead off with General Motors, since this contract can be terminated in April if notice is given in February. The Ford contract can be reopened in July and Chrysler wage talks can begin at any designated time.

RAISES of 32½c an hour plus 7½c for a health and welfare program will be sought by the CIO Woodworkers for some 40,000 of its members in five states.

Present contracts with the lumber, logger and mill operators expire April 1. Last April the Woodworkers won increases of 7½c an hour.

In announcing terms of the forthcoming demands, union officials pointed out that lumber prices have increased 60% since last June, when OPA was abolished. Wages in the industry, on the other hand, have increased only 16%, they said.

The officials asserted the lumber industry can afford the proposed pay increases and "still reduce the price of lumber to help the housing situation."

The proposed health and welfare program would provide prepaid medical hospital and surgical service, sick leave and death benefits.

LOCALS of the Food and Tobacco Workers have been urged by their International Executive Board to seek "substantial wage increases" to recoup the loss of purchasing power caused by rises in living costs.

The union also will seek a seasonal guaranteed wage for workers in seasonal industries and a guaranteed annual wage for year-round employes.

Locals were urged to extend "the FTA drive for overtime pay at time-and-a-half" without seasonal exemptions, to push for an increase in the legal minimum wage to 75c an hour and for coverage of agricultural workers and others now exempted from the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Average real earnings of food processing workers—after taxes—are now $29.70 a week in terms of 1939 dollars, the Board said. "These workers have taken a wage-cut since June, 1946."

Profits in the industry, the Board continued, were at the rate of 21% on invested capital in 1947—one-third higher than average profits in all manufacturing.

TENNESSEE 'JUSTICE'

The tommy-gun and the blackjack appear to have become standard "labor relations" equipment down at Nashville, Tenn., where a group of CIO Steelworkers went on strike last Nov. 10.

A CIO staff representative was brutally beaten by 10 highway patrolmen. Two of his ribs were broken. He was badly bruised and his clothing was torn to shreds.

Two strikers were halted by state police on a lonely road and "worked over" with blackjacks.

A Steelworkers representative was arrested on a charge of "vagrancy" and the area director of the CIO Organizing Committee was tossed into jail on a trumped-up count of "lewdness, breach of peace and inciting to riot."

State police, armed with pistols and tommy-guns, have threatened and intimidated strikers when they appeared near the strike-bound Nashville Corporation (formerly Consolidated Vultee).

The strike started after the company refused to recognize the Steelworkers as collective bargaining agent for its employes, despite a 2-to-1 election victory for the USA shortly before the Taft-Hartley Act was passed.

The disgraceful behavior of the state police at Nashville is reminiscent of what occurred in the late '30s over in the home bailiwick of Boss Ed Crump—where a brutal beating was standard treatment for CIO organizers who set up shop in Memphis.

The Crump machine boys haven't changed their tactics much. They've just changed their base of operations. ★ ★ ★

Weighty Problem For Senator Taft

A Washington woman had a problem, so she called the office of Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.) and said to one of the Senator's assistants:

"Mr. Assistant, choice meat is being sold right here in the District of Columbia to meat hoarders at $2.50 a pound for deep freeze storage. Don't you and Mr. Taft (the Senator was not in) think that is—shall we say—a little teeny bit too much?"

The Assistant pondered and—s' help us—this is what he came back with:

"The Senator feels that there are so many imponderables tied up with that question that it will have to be studied and weighed before he or his party come to a decision."

According to Funk & Wagnalls' Dictionary, "imponderable" means "without weight." Now Sen. Taft is going to "weigh" that which is "without weight." Maybe he can use the Republican "anti-inflation bill" for a balance on the scale. Surely, that is "without weight." ★ ★ ★

Since the Grand Old Party—GOP—is wooing the votes of youth, why don't the Republicans change their name to Grand Young Party—GYP?

After All, We've Got Something To Yap About

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE man banged his fist on the table and declared, "You guys are always yapping about the 'fat' profits of big business and about the 'lousy' deal you got from Congress. What I'd like to know is how you get that way."

He was talking about those of us who put out union newspapers—and he was more intent on yapping about the labor press than in finding out how we "get that way."

He, however, raised an interesting point—one well worth discussing.

So here goes, and pardon us if we yap a bit as we expound.

WE'RE a bit like the lady who was simply c-r-a-z-y about hats. She spent much of hubby's dough on creations to adorn her head.

She had a hat for nearly every occasion. Trouble was that she couldn't go in for a lot of variety because of the shape of her face.

Chances are 10 to one that nobody would have paid undue attention to her had she taken the money she spent on hats and distributed it among other items of her wardrobe.

It was natural for folks to remark, "She must be an odd person; she spends a fortune on hats and hardly ever buys a new coat."

MOST daily and weekly newspapers go in for as much yapping as we do. The difference is that they yap all over the place.

One day they condemn one particular brand of sin and on the next day they let fly editorially at the lack of some particular virture.

It usually doesn't get too monotonous because of the wide variety of subjects mentioned.

On dull days the average editorial writer can discuss such awesome subjects as the effects of the "new look" on the morals of humanity or the relationship of nuclear fission to the future of humanity.

The boys of the labor press, however, would be considered "asylum bait" if they strayed too far from the field of management-labor relations and politics.

PART of our job, we believe, is to tell the "other side" of the story—the side the average person doesn't get if he reads the average newspaper.

There are exceptions, of course, but most newspapers generally refrain from protracted yapping about those who supply the bulk of their advertising revenue.

It's quite true that a number of them offer critical advice to the "big boys" when they get too far out of line, but they ordinarily don't yap at them with both barrels like they do when they turn their editorial guns on the labor unions.

We of the labor press try to make up for this deficiency.

IT is not true that labor papers operate on the theory that a man is a dirty so-and-so merely because he's an employer or a representative of management.

We merely work on the premise that we have a right to call a man a lousy this-and-that if he behaves like one. If he happens to be an employer or lawmaker, so what?

Then—unlike most dailies and weeklies—we make no pretense of being unbiased. We're as prejudiced as we can be!

TO be more specific, here's our reply to the fist-banger who said he didn't like our brand of yapping:

We've been writing so much lately about the 'fat' profits of big business because they've been so infernally fat—because in too many instances they've been extortionate, not legitimate.

We have been yapping so much about the "lousy deal" labor got from Congress because labor got such a lousy deal from Congress.

It seemed the natural thing to do.

CONGRESSMAN DRIP By Yomen

"Suppose, on election day, the people remember what we're saying now."

Unity On Vital Matters

The speech of Sen. Hatch (D., N. M.) calling for steps to end politics in inflation and Marshall plan legislation drew a favorable editorial from the Washington Post. The editorial said in part:

Senator Carl A. Hatch has added an impressive and constructive supplement to Secretary Marshall's plea for prompt enactment of the European Recovery Program. "If we procrastinate, if we delay, if we quibble, and if we divide," he told the Senate yesterday, "historians of the future may write that such discord, disunity, indecision and inaction by us marked the beginning of the downfall of the Republic."

That is strong language from a restrained and thoughtful legislator. But he used it deliberately; for, in spite of his faith and confidence in the American system of government, he is deeply concerned over strong admixture of partisanship with statesmanship in the recent discussion of this issue.

WE can detect no partisanship in the Senator's attitude. His report from the people with whom he communicated during the recess of Congress is to the effect that they believe both the Democrats and Republicans, both Congress and the President, are playing politics with the inflation issues that are so closely allied to European relief.

With him, we believe that the people have little interest in "who killed Cock Robin?"—meaning the OPA. Their interest is not so much to fix the blame for past mistakes as to secure effective action in meeting existing problems. The very idea of a Republican or a Democratic recovery program or organization for Europe is absurd, and the same may be said of anti-inflation measures at home. In both cases the nature of the problem calls for national policies that will command the respect and cooperation of the great majority of the people.

Senator Hatch's concrete proposal is that the Republican and Democratic Policy Committees of the Senate sit with the Committee on Foreign Relations throughout its hearings and discussion of the Marshall Plan.

IN other words, let the leaders of the Senate, representing both parties, give shape to this momentous policy with the aid and guidance of Secretary Marshall and the President. The same procedure could be followed in the House. Or, preferably, Senate and House leaders of both parties could meet to discuss the matter in the spirit of statesmanship that has actuated Senator Hatch's remarks.

The same technique, Mr. Hatch thinks, could profitably be applied in working out an anti-inflation policy. In that case the policy committees would sit with the Committee on Banking and Currency. Every move toward this end should work to the advantage of legislators representing both parties. For, as Senator Hatch says, the public is "sick and tired of politics taking precedence over the country's welfare." In our opinion, the people are so aroused about inflation and the situation in Europe that Congress cannot fail to deal with them constructively without undercutting its own prestige and thereby weakening the cause of democracy.

You Can Ask Chet About It; He Knows

CHET'S a "changed" man these days. You can't tell it by looking at him, but—deep down inside—there's a difference.

That's because he's been "arbitrated." He got the entire works—a trial 'n everything.

Chet won out in the end. It cost the union a hundred bucks and members said it was worth every penny of it.

But the going was tough for a while and Chet was pretty disgusted. Then a decision was reached.

And today Chet knows a lot more than he used to about both unions and bosses.

CHET's about 38. He's been a crack salesman in a Toledo, Ohio, clothing store for 10 years.

He became a union steward at the store less than a year ago. His friends considered him a "right guy" with a nice personality and a keen sense of humor.

He took his union job seriously—wouldn't let the boss push any of the boys around.

Maybe that had nothing to do with it, but the boss decided suddenly to fire Chet.

Reasons? The boss had lots of them.

THE BOSS listed the reasons in his own handwriting and made quite a case against Chet. He wrote:

"He failed to take care of allotted stock. He failed to carry through instructions from department heads. He failed to work stock when requested. He failed to wait on customers in the proper manner. He returned from lunch 15 minutes late.

The charges shocked Chet. Everything had been OK for nearly 10 years—then bingo!

Chet's union told the boss, in effect, "These are serious charges and if they're true we'll help you get rid of Chet. Let's sit down and talk it over. Let's see your proof."

THE BOSS seemed determined to get rid of Chet. He was pretty stubborn about it.

He refused to discuss the matter with the union. He decided to follow, to the letter, the contract grievance provision which says, "An impartial arbitrator will be selected if the company and union fail to reach a satisfactory adjustment."

A "trial" was conducted by an impartial former municipal judge and a city councilman. Chet told a simple straightforward story.

The employer "shot the works." He pulled out the stops and let Chet have it.

THE BOSS went back two or three years to dig up "grievances." He told of occurrences which had no connection with the case.

Chet sat there and listened, with a blank expression on his face. He looked like a fighter who is beginning to topple after being hit below the belt.

One hour passed. Then another. Chet sat in the smoke-filled room and fought for his job.

Chet asked himself, "Is it worth it?"

He looked at the boss and thought, "You know what you can do with the job—and the store, too!"

THERE were two days of anxious waiting—then the decision was rendered. The former judge ruled that "no grounds for discharge exist."

With a little honest effort, he said, the grievance could have been settled at the lowest level.

Chet's back at work now and you can't tell by watching him that he's a "changed" man.

But he's got a new slant on things—a new slant on bosses and unions. A.L.S.

Union Shop Votes:

'Make Charges Of Labor Coercion Of U. S. Workers Look Ridiculous'

TELLING attacks on the Taft-Hartley law came from two religious sources last week.

Rev. Charles C. Webber, former national executive and field secretary for the Methodist Federation for Social Service, and former chaplain to organized labor, demanded repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law. Speaking before the Frankford Society of Friends Forum in Philadelphia, Rev. Mr. Webber declared the law is "disruptive of peaceful relations and a breedor of ill-will, animosity and hatred."

Rev. Mr. Webber is president of the Virginia State CIO.

America, Catholic review of the week, had this to say of union elections under T-H:

"In persuading the 80th Congress to erect various obstacles to the union shop, including approval by a majority of the employes involved, the anti-labor propagandists appear to have sold some ill-informed lawmakers a bill of goods.

"According to a report of the National Labor Relations Board, 112 elections on the union-shop issue were conducted during November and in every single case, with the majorities generally exceeding ninety per cent, the workers voted for a union shop. In the biggest union-shop election held so far, 18,219 employes of the American Woolen Company went to the polls in December and 17,130 favored the union shop.

"These results make charges of union coercion of free-born American workers look ridiculous. A somewhat less amusing aspect of this provision of the Taft-Hartley Act, at least to taxpayers, is the cost involved to the Government. It has been conservatively estimated, on the basis of the average cost per ballot of NLRB elections in recent years, that the Board must spend about forty-five cents for each ballot cast in a union-shop election.

"Since in the course of 1948 about nine million workers will be asked in 50,000 elections whether they want a union shop, the cost to the taxpayers will be in excess of $4 million. The bill will really be higher than this, since the Board's present facilities are inadequate for the task and many new employes will have to be hired.

"If future union-shop elections follow the November pattern, the Republican-domnated 80th Congress will have to answer some embarrassing questions. To tax-conscious voters, spending $4 million to prove the obvious looks like boondoggling of the worst kind."

Mississippi
Poor, Rich State

Mississippi is one of the rich states of our country, yet the people of Mississippi are poor!

That doesn't seem to make sense, does it? But it is a fact. Mississippi is rich in forests, oil, and leads the nation in the production of cotton.

Yet in the average income of its people Mississippi stands 48th! It is 48th in the amount of money it spends on the education of its children.

Mississippi a rich state! Its people the poorest! That is something to think about, isn't it? That is something for everybody interested in the welfare of the state—workers, farmers, merchants, businessmen, lawyers, doctors, housewives, every citizen—to think about.

Great, wealthy Mississippi, 48th in average income of its people! Why?

The answer is: Low wages, low farm income . . .

In some industries in Mississippi wages are as high as elsewhere in the country. The woodworking industry is a good example. The workers in this industry decided to do something about low wages . . . They organized!

They did it by organizing themselves into unions under the CIO.

(From leaflet of CIO Organizing Committee, Jackson, Miss.)

COME AND GET IT: A group of strikers from the CIO Cafeteria Workers, representing employes in 42 government eating places, are being served a meal prepared in the kitchen of the Shiloh Baptist Church in Washington. Their union is asking Government Services, Inc., to negotiate a contract increasing pay 15c an hour.

Government Cafeteria Workers

They Turned Toward White House As They Prayed For Justice

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE congregation poured by the hundreds through the big doors of the Shiloh Baptist Church in Washington, D. C., and gathered on the sidewalk outside, waiting.

Some stood in a group at the left of the entrance. Others turned right and pressed against the iron railing around the church grounds, or overflowed into the street, keeping close to the sidewalk to avoid blocking traffic.

The last ones out stood in the doorway arches, but wherever they stood, all turned to face in the same direction. The night air was chilly and the men turned up their collars and pushed their hands into their pockets. The women huddled deeper into their coats.

When the traffic light on the corner turned red, people in cars waiting for the green signal stared curiously at the big crowd of Negroes standing quietly in front of the church, all facing northwest.

In a few minutes, the Rev. Earl L. Harrison, the white minister of this Negro church, appeared in the doorway, and the low murmur of talk began to die out.

"All face toward the White House," cried a voice in the crowd. A few still standing in the entrance hall moved closer to the door and turned their faces toward the northwest, where several miles away the President lives in the White House.

THE men removed their hats, all heads bowed, and the minister began his prayer. He prayed to the Lord "to touch the heart of President Truman," and "to give him the courage, integrity and fortitude" to listen to the pleas of the CIO Cafeteria Workers employed in 42 government cafeterias who were on strike for decent wages.

"Trouble his sleep," prayed the minister, "as the sleep of Nebuchadnezzar was troubled in Bible times, when the three Hebrews were in the fiery furnace and Daniel was in the lion's den."

For five minutes, Mr. Harrison prayed eloquently, telling of the needs and grievances of the striking Negro workers, and of the indifference of government officials, who were turning deaf ears to the strikers' plea for fair negotiations to settle the strike.

The prayer was the conclusion of the strike meeting held inside the church for several hours late that Sunday afternoon. To many persons it would seem a strange and startling kind of a strike meeting, for it followed the pattern of a usual church service.

AND to the average churchgoer it would have seemed a most unusual religious service, for through it all was woven the theme of strong support for the strike.

When Mr. Harrison came forward to deliver his talk, he prefaced his sermon by remarking that he could not understand how any government worker could walk through the picketline and so injure the just fight of his fellow workers, or how anybody could patronize a cafeteria on strike, when he or she could easily bring a lunch and shun these eating places.

The CIO, like the AFL and the Shiloh Baptist Church, had made mistakes, he said. They were all human. But the CIO had done more than any other group to break down segregation and to give Negroes justice, and should be given wholehearted support.

His sermon was on the text, "Break not through the hedge or a serpent will bite you." Mr. Harrison interpreted this in a number of ways, as meaning that breaking a law—moral or legal—brought a penalty. Applying it to the strike, he cried, "Thou shalt not walk through the picketlines!"

AT THE close of the sermon, Oliver Palmer, an official of the CIO Cafeteria Workers, Local 471 of the United Public Workers, read out from the pulpit the names of some church members who had gone back to work, but later had repented and now pledged to support the strike.

After the Sunday service, a meeting of union shop stewards was held in the church.

All during the week, too, union meetings of all kinds are held at the church, and meals prepared in the church kitchen are served every day to several hundred striking cafeteria workers. For the Shiloh Baptist Church, like other new churches in Washington, has taken the CIO union and its strike to its heart.

GSI Strike Facts

Picketing: One day last week, the CIO strikers had the longest line ever seen in Washington, about 1000 persons around the Federal Works Agency.

Reason for strike: GSI refused to negotiate new contract, claiming union's refusal to sign Taft-Hartley affidavits as reason; workers want 15% hourly raise and guaranteed work week. Present average wage: $21.91.

Legal action: Three government workers sought an injunction against GSI, claiming it had not fulfilled its contract obligations to the government.

Oil Strike Won

A 12c hourly wage increase ended a strike by 1400 Pan American oil refinery and pipeline employes which began New Year's Day. The CIO Oil Workers had previously rejected a company offer of 8c an hour effective until March.

CIO WINS ANTI-BIAS FIGHT IN OHIO

THE NEIL HOUSE incident, which attracted nationwide attention, has resulted in a CIO victory.

The Ohio State CIO has withdrawn suits against the Neil House, a Hilton chain hotel in Columbus, because "the purposes for which the suits were instituted has already been accomplished."

The suits grew out of the national CIO Educational Conference, held at the Neil House in April, 1947. Included among the delegates were a number of Negroes.

The hotel had raised no qualifications in accepting reservations, but when the conference opened, the Negroes found that though they had been assigned rooms and were permitted to eat in the dining room and drink in the bar, they were refused service in the cheaper coffee shop.

The conference sent a delegation to the manager, who said there was no order against serving Negroes in the coffee shop, but that the help there had declined to do so. Asked why, if that were true, the hotel did not discipline its employes, the manager shrugged his shoulders.

The conference met and discussed several possible steps, including the picketing of the hotel for a specified period of time. The majority favored a new technique, which was adopted the following morning.

AT 7 A. M. all the delegates—both White and Negro—went into the coffee shop, pretty much filling it. Again, the Negroes were refused service. The delegates stayed at the tables, taking turns going out of the hotel for sandwiches, which were brought back and eaten at the tables. The hotel called in police, who refused to make any arrests. The delegates sat until 4:30 P. M.

The next day, with the conference ended, the State CIO took over the sit-down technique, enlisting the aid of ministerial and other groups. The pastor of the mayor's church was named chairman of the committee in charge.

Court suits, charging violations of civil liberties, were filed by Boyd L. Wilson, of the CIO Steelworkers' staff; Philip Weightman, vice president, CIO Packinghouse Workers; Dolly Lowther, educational director of the Laundry Workers' Division of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and Mary E. Davis, Wilson's secretary.

Three days later, the mayor called in the committee, including the CIO. He said that two conventions scheduled for the hotel had been cancelled as a result of the nationwide publicity and offered to see what could be done. He conferred with Hilton officials. The manager of the Neil House was transferred and a new one sent in.

The new manager called together the hotel staff, declaring that in the future there would be no discrimination in service and that anyone who disagreed with the order should resign immediately.

After observing the new system for several months, the State CIO recently decided a victory had been won, so the case was withdrawn. Jacob Clayman was counsel for the State CIO.

Supreme Court Orders Oklahoma To Give Negro Girl Legal Classes

The Supreme Court last week, in a decision that startled veteran court reporters because of its speed, ordered the State of Oklahoma to provide virtually immediate legal education for a Negro woman, Ada Lois Sipuel.

ADA LOIS SIPUEL

The decision came only four days after the justices had heard lawyers for the 28-year-old woman demand that she be admitted to the University of Oklahoma Law School, only state institution of its kind.

The decision, a unanimous, one-page, unsigned mimeographed order, directed that Oklahoma must afford her the legal training "and provide it as soon as it does for applicants of any other group."

The tribunal did not specify how Oklahoma must meet the requirement, but it rested its command on its eight-year-old decision that Missouri must either admit a Negro to the State University Law School or establish a state institution for Negroes.

The order took no action on a request to declare unconstitutional segregation of white and Negro students. Miss Sipuel had asked admission to the University Law School two years ago, was refused, appealed to two state courts, then, after losing there, to the Supreme Court.

Rubber Workers Broadcast In Ohio

A weekly radio program dramatizing current issues and featuring on-the-spot interviews with shop workers is being sponsored by the CIO United Rubber Workers over Station WACD in Akron. The program started Jan. 8 and will be broadcast every Thursday at 6:30 p. m. until July 1.

"We want to make this program really the voice of the rubber workers," said URW Public Relations Director Robert L. Cruden. He said the program is experimenting with low-cost production methods because the high cost of producing radio shows has been a big obstacle to their more extensive use by labor groups.

Prices Surely ARE Worth Paper They're Printed On

LAST WEEK, everybody was talking about prices, a lot of people were advancing ways of combatting them but almost nobody had achieved results.

The husband of the First Lady again offered Congress his economic cure—and bluntly warned that hostile body it had better act fast or it will be too late.

The authoritative Dun & Bradstreet index of wholesale food prices was up to an all-time high of $7.28, compared to $6.23 the week before. (In answer to several queries: D & B's index is obtained by taking the sum total of the price per pound, wholesale, of 31 foods in general use.)

D & B showed that prices had risen in flour, wheat, corn, rye (the grain, not necessarily the booze), oats, barley, beef, hams, bellies, lards, cheese, sugar, cottonseed oil, cocoa, steers and hogs. Prices receded for only four items: eggs, potatoes, lambs and butter (but butter was still away up there). Eleven other items were unchanged.

CONSUMERS' PRICES

The upward trend in retail prices continues, with food prices in the lead and rents beginning to increase.

AVC For Controls

In testimony before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, Joseph Clorety, national secretary, American Veterans Committee, urged immediate reinstatement of price, rationing and allocation controls over essential materials, but opposed wage controls.

Clorety said AVC's executive committee had approved the following inflation program:

Reinstatement of price, rationing and allocation controls over essential materials; imposition of an excess profits tax; reenactment of controls over consumer credit; extension of export controls; extension of rent controls; retention of present tax rates until inflationary forces have subsided and then giving relief primarily to those in the lower income levels; curbing speculation on commodity exchanges; reinstatement of controls to prevent inflationary hoarding; and provision for subsidies for rolling back prices of essential foods.

Sen. Harry Cain (R., Washington), commented that the AVC resolution did not mention wage controls. Clorety replied: "To your implied question, Senator, the answer is that AVC does not believe that wage controls are necessary and is opposed to wage controls."

THE House of Representatives was in a bitter fight over the age-old issue of federal taxes on oleomargarine, the spread which, in many places, costs about half as much as butter. Rep. Ellsworth Buck (R., N.Y.) called attention, during the House debate, to an editorial in the Milwaukee Journal, which he said "advocated" oleo.

Since Milwaukee is the largest city in the dairy—and pro-butter—state of Wisconsin, Rep. Reid F. Murray (R., Wis.) entered the fray with the cry: "I ask the gentleman to find any editorial from a Republican paper in the State of Wisconsin—yes, one—that gives any credit to this product, this concoction known as oleo."

(The Milwaukee Journal is listed as "independent" in the Ayer Newspaper Guide.

(The editorial referred to by Buck asked the question: "Why is it impossible to buy oleo in many Milwaukee stores?" and gave this answer:

("The reason many Wisconsin stores do not sell oleo is that, to do so, they must have both a state and a federal license. The state license costs $25; the federal $6 . . .

("The reason the price is higher here than in Illinois is that Wisconsin has a tax of 15 cents a pound on all oleo sold. Furthermore, a wholesaler, in addition to paying the federal license fee of $200, must pay a Wisconsin fee of $500." The editorial also pointed out special taxes and fees on colored oleo.

(Rep. Reid Murray was, for three years, agriculture agent for the 1st Natl. Bank of Oshkosh, Wis.)

GENERAL ELECTRIC, which two weeks ago announced price reductions in a number of items (after having raised those items by high percentages over several years) was embarrassed last week. That was because a federal grand jury in Los Angeles had indicted GE, Westinghouse and eight smaller electrical manufacturing companies for alleged price-fixing conspiracy. Involved were sales of equipment to municipal and privately owned utilities. Millions of dollars were involved.

Sears, Roebuck issued its spring and summer catalog—which has many uses, of course—revealing that it had increased its prices an average of 2.8% over last year. (Interesting new items: a 20-volume American People's encyclopedia; a sound-powered phone communication system for farm, home or business.) Montgomery, Ward also issued a new catalog but didn't mention the status of prices.

R. M. Evans, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, told the District of Columbia League of Women Voters that 'reimposition of consumer credit, price control, rationing and allocation of special products are the only sure means of controlling inflation."

THE New York Times financial pages listed "record 1947s" for:

All manufacturers.
Crude oil industry.
Textiles and apparels.
Lumber mills.
Shirts and pajamas.
Home furnishings.
Etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc.

The Times also saw signs there'd be a lot more such "records" in 1947.

Dr. Malcolm P. McNair, professor of marketing at Harvard, must have shocked a lot of businessmen when he advised the convention of the Natl. Retail Dry Goods Association: "Buck price advances at every cost!"

(U.S. News noted that "output of goods is about 75% above pre-war rate and rising.")

Nathan Robertson, writing in the revived Progressive, reminded readers that business is making "70% more today than ever before until 1946, after payment of all taxes . . . the 1946 profit figure, which was almost 25% higher than the previous record has been and is being dwarfed by 1947 profits. Profits for 1946 added up to $12,539,000,000, after taxes, as compared with $8,420,000,000 in the lush year of 1929 which started off the great depression—but even that total looks small beside what has rolled in during 1947—profits will reach the unheard of total of $17,000,000,000 after taxes, or more than twice what they were in the fabulous year of 1929!"

The newsprint on which the CIO News is printed has risen 13% since March, 1947.

Memo to PAC: Better keep that date in '48.

Boss Is On The March

Alvin E. Dodd, president, the American Management Association, has listed these items, which he terms gains for U. S. management in 1947:

"(1) Increasing tendency of management to examine its own practices to discover opportunities for improvement; (2) a trend to act upon the findings of qualified scientific specialists and observers when recommendations for progress are made; (3) improvement of industrial relations as a result of the Taft-Hartley Act, aided by efforts of individual managements to improve employe relations; (4) programs for raising the status of foremen and improvement of the foreman's position in management; (5) progress in making individual employes feel that they have a stake in the enterprise; (6) improvement of internal public relations methods; (7) action to avert foreign tendencies toward state control of management functions from embracing industries of this country, and (8) undertaking a 'selling job' to employes to improve their acceptance of management methods and practices."

Economic Report In Nut Shell

HERE is a synopsis of Pres. Truman's economic report to Congress:

Outlook: Strong "inflationary trend" under way. Depression threatens unless Government checks it. "Advancing prices" may "undermine national prosperity."

Prosperity: Unemployment at "practical minimum" in 1947, with 58,000,000 at work. Consumer inccme all-time high of $1264 per capita, after taxes, in last three months. Business and investment income above any previous year.

Prices: Wholesale prices still upwards. Although prices levelled off in the first half of 1947, they began upward climb last June.

Wages: In general matched climb of living cost in 1947, but "did not gain the ground lost" in 1946.

BASIC GOALS FOR 1948

Inflation: Stand-by power to control wages and prices, reimpose rationing, strengthen rent controls to do so.

Maximum Production and Employment: Adjust wages and prices so inflationary spiral will fall back to sound levels.

LONG RANGE OBJECTIVES

Production: Increase annual national production by 35% in 10 years.

Jobs: Employment for 64,000,000 people by 1958 as "maximum."

Resources: "One-half of nation's crop and pasture land needs to be put under improved soil management." Increased capacity in steel, etc.

OTHER OBJECTIVES

Education: Expanded federal aid for elementary and secondary schools.

Health: "Comprehensive national health program."

Social Security: Increase of unemployment and old-age insurance.

Taxes: Primarily needed is "level of revenue above expenditures in all except depression years which will permit systematic reduction of the public debt; and second, tax structure which will promote stabilized prosperity.

Agriculture: An increase of 10% in production during 10 years.

International Aid: Help the restoration of Europe through the Marshall Plan.

Give Details In U. S. Aid Program

THE STATE DEPT. last week was dividing the 16 Marshall Plan countries into four categories, based on ability to pay, for any further aid from the U. S.

The categories will be used by Congressional committees in their hearings on the Marshall Plan.

The listings ranged from outright grants for Greece and Austria to loans for some purposes and grants for others for Britain, Italy, France and several other countries.

Simultaneously with the State Dept. action, CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey sent a letter to presidents of all CIO affliates, informing them that "the CIO is playing an important role in the campaign to rehabilitate war-devastated nations so they can become self-suporting."

Carey reported that the Committee for the Marshall Plan "has asked the CIO's cooperation in a campaign to obtain a million signatures on petitions to Congress, asking our lawmakers to provide the legislation necessary for a sound European recovery program. I suggest that you and your union join in this drive and that you send petitions to your local unions for the signatures of their members."

HE NOTED that petitions can be obtained by writing to John H. Ferguson, executive director, Committee for the Marshall Plan, Empire State Building, 350 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Carey and CIO Pres. Philip Murray are members of the Committee for the Marshall Plan. Murray has stated his Marshall Plan objectives in a letter to Pres. Truman:

"In order to undertake a foreign aid program, we must determine in the first instance our objectives.

"It seems clear that there are three principal objectives; the first being to take care of the needs of the destitute people; the second to help them to raise their standards of living and to have the maximum of trade with the U. S.; and the third is to permit all nations to solve their problems in a democratic fashion, free from the coercion of poverty and destitution, and thereby to preserve peace in a free world.

"The alternative to such a program is clearly a world of hungry, desperate men, social chaos, dictatorship, with all the threats they bring to our hard-won victory."

IN PHILADELPHIA, the executive board of the CIO Food, Tobacco Workers in a resolution attacking the Marshall Plan said backers of the plan in Congress and the Truman Administration "represent the same employers who forced through the Taft-Hartley Act, that destroyed price control and are now plotting to destroy the Wage-Hour Act."

The resolution declared that "the Marshall Plan, after more than six months, is not even yet on paper," and urged a seven point program of foreign aid to be administered by the U. N. with the participation of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

"Not one pound of food has been sent to the victims of Fascism under its (Marshall) provisions," the resolution said. "In fact, the feeding of the victims of World War II is not the purpose of the plan or its backers."

Lithographers Elect Officers

JOHN BLACKBURN is the new president of the CIO Amalgamated Lithographers of America. He heads the slate of international officers chosen by a referendum vote which closed Jan. 9.

Blackburn succeeds William J. Riehl, who is retiring at 71, after many years' service to the Amalgamated.

Martin Grayson was elected secretary-treasurer, an office recreated after several years during which the jobs of first vice-president and secretary-treasurer were combined.

Donald W. Stone, editor of the Lithographers' Journal since 1946, was re-elected to the job for another term.

Blackburn, who is married and has a five-year-old son, joined the ALA in 1927. In 1937 he was elected secretary of the New York Local, and in 1942 became its president. He was born in Lyndhurst, N. J.

GRAYSON, who joined the union in 1936, has taken a leading part in activities of the New York local. He was formerly a pressman. Stone came to New York from Wisconsin, where he had served as secretary of the Milwaukee local.

The three officers who will take over the union's international office at 450 Seventh Ave., New York City, on Feb. 1, are comparatively young men. Blackburn is 40, Grayson, 33, and Stone, 38.

The union's four vice-presidents, all re-elected, are Oliver Mertz, Cleveland; Fred W. Rose, St. Louis; Arthur W. Brown, Toronto, Canada; and Francis P. Slater, San Francisco.

Blackburn's first job as president will be to call together the International Council (enlarged by the election from 11 to 17 members) Feb. 2 in New York.

The union reports that since 1940 its membership has doubled, and now has more than 23,000 lithographers enrolled. In the past two years it has secured contracts which gave 90% of its members a work-week shorter than 40 hours.

The ALA withdrew from the AFL in October, 1945, and in May, 1946, joined the CIO.

Plan Vital CIO Meetings

A BATCH of important CIO meetings are scheduled for the near future.

Pres. Murray and Sec.-Treas. Carey get together with CIO's nine vice-presidents on Wednesday, Jan. 21, at Washington headquarters.

Next day the CIO Executive Board holds its first meeting since the Boston convention last October. Slated for probable discussion is the CIO's legislative program for 1948.

On Jan. 23, the PAC Executive Board holds its meeting—the first since Henry Wallace announced his third-party candidacy for president. PAC may issue an important policy statement on the '48 campaign.

On Jan. 24, Sec.-Treas. Carey and Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross leave for Paris to attend another meeting of the executive bureau of the World Federation of Trade Unions. The meeting, scheduled for Feb. 1, will renew talks over CIO's request that WFTU indorse American foreign aid as in line with basic policy of the world labor group.

Last of the series of confabs will be the National Civil Rights Conference, at the Hollenden Hotel in Cleveland on Feb. 19-20. The conference will bring together several hundred union spokesmen to plan ways of backing up the President's Civil Rights report and of strengthening anti-bias activities in various CIO unions.

Open Negro Enlistments

The Army has invited qualified Negroes to enlist in the ground forces, including airborne outfits and some technical services. Qualifications include prior military service, high school education, decoration for valor, Bronze Star Medal or Army Commendation Ribbon.

ROLLIN H. EVERETT

Who has been elected president pro-tem of the Cincinnati City Council. Everett, editor of the CIO Sun and a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, was elected to the council along with a Charter coalition which included Charles P. Taft, liberal brother of Robert A. Taft.

27 Mills To Vote On Union Shop

Voting will soon be a "regular pastime" in New Hampshire mills, comments Textile Labor, official paper of the CIO Textile Workers union. To comply with the Taft-Hartley Act and a state law requiring elections for a union shop, some 10,000 TWU members in 27 mills have to go through two separate but identical elections, in some cases but a few days apart.

"How silly can they get?" asks Textile Labor.

The paper reports that 94% of the workers voted for a TWU union shop in 48 elections already held under the Taft-Hartley law. In 20 elections held last month only 207 out of 4,702 votes cast were against the union shop.

Political Action Group in N. C.

NORTH CAROLINA Labor has organized a United Labor Political Committee for participation in this year's elections.

C. A. Fink, Salisbury, N. C., president of the State Federation of Labor, AFL, has been elected chairman of the committee. C. A. Lee, Raleigh, of the Southern Federation of Telephone Workers, is vice chairman, and E. I. Sandefur, Winston-Salem, a CIO official, is secretary-treasurer.

At a meeting attended by representatives of all unions in the state, the following were the main participants:

CIO: William Smith, state CIO director; Margaret (Pat) White, Textile, and Sandefur, field representative.

AFL: E. G. Powell, R. A. West, Fink, M. F. Ramsey.

Rail Brotherhoods: J. E. Baumberger, H. E. Withers, J. R. Satterfield.

CIO Attacks Wage - Hour Weakening

THREE CIO representatives last week vigorously protested employer attempts to reduce the number of workers subject to protection under the Wage-Hour Law and urged that a salary of $500 a month be used as the criterion for determining "executive, administrative and professional" employes.

Under present regulations workers earning $30 weekly who have some "supervisory" duties are termed "executives" and those earning $200 a month are "administrative" or "professional." All three categories are exempt from overtime and minimum hours provisions of the Wage-Hour Act unless a union contract sets higher standards.

Testifying before hearings called by Wage-Hour Administrator William R. McComb were Sam Eubanks, executive vice president, Newspaper Guild; William Glazier, legislative representative, Longshoremen & Warehousemen; and Joseph Califf, Food & Tobacco Workers education & research director. All three warned that the present "cutoff" wage was denying many non-supervisory workers protection of the law. They urged that a $500 a month salary be the sole determining factor in order to simplify administration of the law and avoid abuses.

Other CIO spokesman who previously appeared are: R. W. Long, Telephone Workers Organizing Committee; Joseph Dermody, Electrical Workers, and Martin Cooper, Office & Professional Workers.

Michigan CIO Offers Scholarship Test

A contest for free scholarships to the fifth annual CIO Leadership Training Institute at the FDR-CIO Labor Center at Port Huron Camp next summer has been announced by the Michigan CIO Council, 803 Hofmann Bldg., Detroit 1.

The Council will award one-week scholarships to the 10 CIO members who make the greatest contribution toward building a local union or council education program.

A one-week and two week-end scholarships will be awarded to CIO members who submit (1) the three best cartoons on political action; (2) the three best photographs on educational activities, and (3) the three best songs written for the FDR-CIO Labor Center.

Kroll To Broadcast On CBS Jan. 24

Jack Kroll, director of CIO Political Action Committee, takes a look at the '48 election over the CBS network on Saturday afternoon, Jan. 24.

The show is broadcast at 3:30 p. m., EST. It's heard at 2:30 p. m. in the Central Time belt and 1:30 in the Rocky Mountain Area. CBS rebroadcasts the show at 3:00 p. m. on the Pacific Coast.

The discussion will be particularly timely since it follows by one day the policy meeting of the PAC executive board in Washington.

Kroll will be interviewed by a CBS news analyst on the network's weekly "Cross-Section USA" program.

CIO Seamen Help Save Crew

INJURED IN FIRE: Boleslaw Gorski, of Philadelphia, Pa., injured in the fire that sank the Joseph V. Connolly, is carried ashore in a litter after his rescue by the U. S. Army transport crew members of the S.S. Union Victory, who belong to the CIO Maritime Union. Gorski and 45 other survivors tossed about in three lifeboats for nine hours before help arrived.

FIRE was ravaging the U.S. "funeral ship" Joseph V. Connolly as her radio operator signalled frantically for help. The vessel was on its way to Europe with a cargo of 6445 empty steel coffins which would be used to carry back American war dead.

It was a cold and windy 4 a. m., the seas were tossing in a 40-mile gale.

Four hours later the S. O. S. was picked up by the SS Union Victory, heading for Holland. Manned by a CIO Maritime Union crew, she quickly changed course and set out for the burning vessel 900 miles east of New York. Meanwhile, another ship, the Army transport General R. E. Callan, was heading for the same destination.

The stricken vessel's crew of 45 and one passenger, crowded into three lifeboats, pitched about in the rough waters for nine hours before the rescue ships arrived.

Over in Brooklyn a wife and daughter spent an anxious day awaiting news of the ship. Master of the Connolly, Bostelman, would come through all right, said Mrs. Mollie Bostelman; he had been in trouble at sea before. At 5:15 p. m. she knew she was right. The New York Port of Embarkation called. "All aboard are safe," she was reassured. "Do not worry, and your husband will see you soon."

The rescue operation by the NMU seamen took two hours. There was an anxious moment when one of the survivors fell from the ladder and was injured as he boarded the Union Victory. There was another when the forward line which kept the second lifeboat-load alongside the Union Victory, parted and the boat began to drift away. But another line was thrown and the operation continued. One man had suffered burns on the Connolly.

Laden with 27 survivors, the Union Victory moved away from the disaster scene as the General Callan, carrying 19 survivors, stood by to watch the burning wreckage. Both proceeded for Halifax, Nova Scotia.

RESCUED SURVIVOR: Leon Sutphin, of Bradley Beach, N. J., a steward aboard the U. S. Army transport Joseph V. Connolly, is cared for by CIO Maritime Union crewmen of the S. S. Union Victory. He was taken aboard from one of the lifeboats after the Connolly caught fire.

Arrest 9 Union Aides In Cable Walkout

The arrest of nine union officials and suspension by Western Union of 35 domestic employes in New York City were leading developments last week in the 19-day strike of 3000 CIO Communications Workers against four cable companies.

The arrests were made, union sources charged, without provocation. Although some 200 persons were on the picket line when policemen first closed in and took four officials into custody, there was no interference with movement in and out of the building, the spokesman said. Informed of the arrest of the four, five union officials, including ACA Int'l. Pres. Joseph P. Selly, rushed to the scene to investigate the trouble. As soon as they reached the picket line, they said, they were arrested.

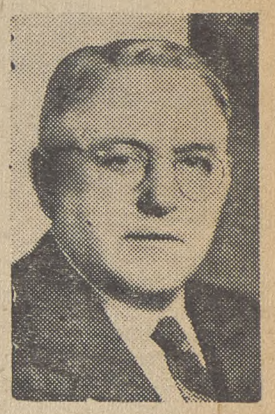
Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood,

CIO Vice-President and Director Of Organization

The CIO Office and Professional Workers report the following collective bargaining victories during the past month:

In Fort Wayne, Ind., 170 office and technical workers at Wayne Pump Co. won a six-week strike. Their contract provides for an average of $10.19 raises weekly. Major factor in the strike victory was the help of production workers, members of UE Local 903, who respected picket lines throughout the strike.



In Chicago, 350 workers at four agencies of the Jewish Charities, and professionals at United Charities, members of UOPWA Local 39, won contracts and raises from $6.90 to $13.85 a week. In the course of the campaign for higher salaries, Local 39 organized a new agency of 100 workers.

In Emeryville and Martinez, California, chemists, engineers and technicians at Shell Development and Shell Oil won $17 a month raises two minutes before their strike deadline.

In Jersey City, 230 tellers and Clerks at the Trust Co. of New Jersey renewed their contract with raises ranging up to $16 a week.

Sub-Regional Director John J. Maurillo, Syracuse, N. Y., advises that on January 8, 1948, the CIO Paperworkers were victorious in an NLRB election held at the Mengel Paper Co., Inc., Fulton, N. Y. The vote was UPA 41, AFL Pulp, Sulphite and Paperworkers 10, and no union 5. This plant was organized through the Syracuse CIO office and assisted by Harry Buckeye, Field Representative, UPA.

UNANIMOUS VICTORY

CIO Regional Director and National Rep. Robert J. Davidson, Cincinnati, Ohio, advises that an NLRB election was won at the Max Wocher & Sons Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, plant. The vote was CIO 54, no union 0. This plant was organized by the Cincinnati CIO office and turned over to the Playthings, Jewelry and Novelty Workers. Reps. Howard Forkner, Donald McPeek and Tom Evans assisted in this campaign.

Both the CIO and the International Association of Machinists were conducting a campaign at this plant at the same time. The IAM had intervened in the election but withdrew because of insufficient equity.

The UPA won a union shop election conducted by the NLRB at the Logan-Long Co., Franklin, Ohio.. The vote was 115 yes, 7 no.

Regional Director James J. Leary, Kansas City, Mo., advises: Of the 148 workers eligible to vote at the Hinde-Dauch Paper Co. 143 voted for Union Security.

At the Downey Box Co. 62 of 74 eligible workers voted for the union shop. Both elections were conducted by the NLRB.

A great deal of the credit should go to the officials and members of the CIO Paperworkers—Local 179 at the Hinde-Dauch plant and Local 178 at the Downey plant. The locals were assisted by Donald Thomas and Henry Schwarzott, international and field representative respectively of the UPA.

This action is the answer to those congressmen and senators in this area who tried to point out that the labor unions did not have the support of the working people of this country.

This action, along with our Political Action campaign will be our answer to those congressmen and senators who are attacking labor but who have done nothing to secure adequate housing for the veterans and other workers, or to control prices and inflation.

Urge Loyalty Board To Protect Rights

A plea to the Federal Employes' Loyalty Review Board to protect the rights of federal workers in the present check-up on their loyalty, has been made in a letter released through the American Civil Liberties Union and signed by 35 educators, writers, editors, religious leaders and other public figures.

Citing the lack of adequate safeguards provided in the President's order initiating the loyalty check, and the exemption of Army, Navy, State Department and Atomic Energy Commission employes from the procedure applied to other departments, the signers urge the Review Board to use its influence "in establishing fair standards and practices throughout the entire federal service, and in correcting what we believe are the defects of the order under which you operate."

Don't forget to give to March of Dimes

Vets Plan Fight On Labor's Foes

The Nat'l Conference of Labor Legionnaires has invited CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhood committees to assist its executive board in planning the defeat of Senators and Representatives who voted for T-H.

The meeting will be in Chicago Jan. 31—Feb. 1. The conference, which consists of more than 100 Legion labor posts, plans to organize veteran committees throughout the country to assist organized labor in campaigns against anti-labor congressmen.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week wrote the conference that he has asked Meyer Bernstein, representative of the CIO Veterans Committee, to attend the meeting. In addition to Bernstein, other members of the CIO Committee are:

Richard Reisinger, Auto Workers regional director, chairman; Secy-Treas. Paul Schnur of the San Francisco CIO Council, Fred C. Piper, Louisiana CIO Director, and Tom Neill of the CIO Electrical Workers.

"Oh, very well, Henshaw, I'll raise your salary! Now let me in and drive me back to the city."

Ole Miss. Going CIO

Mississippi, which trails the nation in per capita income and education expenditures isn't trailing in union organization, thank you, suh.

Take the following examples of the progress of the drive which opened in June, 1946:

Laurel: CIO membership has grown from 0 to 5,000. One out of 10 residents is a CIO member.

Natchez: There was one CIO local in the city when the drive began. Today there are over 2,000 members.

Jackson: CIO membership in the state capital grew from 0 to over 1,000.

Collective bargaining elections are scheduled in a number of plants within the next few months.

NLRB

General Counsel Appeals Trial Examiner's Ruling

ROBERT M. DENHAM, general counsel of the Nat'l Labor Relations Board, filed an exception to the findings of an NLRB trial examiner who had recommended dismissal of Denham's charges of unfair labor practices in a case involving the CIO Shoe Workers.

Other T-H developments last week included:

(A.) Gerhard P. Van Arkel, Denham's predecessor as general counsel of NLRB (he quit in protest over T-H) issued a detailed analysis of the T-H act in which he ridiculed the thesis that the law has emancipated the workingman "from domination by unions and union bosses." It is curious, he stated, "how much that 'domination' is resented by corporation lawyers and other paid spokesmen for big business, and how little by the workingmen who are supposedly so oppressed."

(B.) Though the huge Chicago AFL Intl. Typographical Union strike continued and the NLRB made itself more ridiculous every day by accusing that old and respected union of sinister plots, the ITU announced it had achieved remarkable progress around the country in applying its "no contract" policy—without signing T-H open shop pacts. The ITU has had closed shop contracts for scores of years, was always cited, in pre-T-H days, as the model closed shop union.

(C.) Counsel for the CIO Steelworkers were joined by lawyers for two large steel companies in a plea to the NLRB that carving craft jurisdictions into large industrial union setups in the steel industry would play havoc with labor-management relations in that key industry. Affected were 90 bricklayers of the 11,000 workers now covered by USA at the National Tube Co's Lorain, O., plant and 23 of 3000 at the American Rolling Co., Middletown, O., plant.

IN THE Shoe Workers' case, Denham was taking exception to the findings of Trial Examiner Horace A. Ruckel in the strike against the Perry Norvell Co., Huntington, W. Va. Denham claims the walkout, which he said was "wildcat," was in violation of T-H.

Ruckel, in overruling the original Denham position in the case, had pointed out that Denham had inexplicably based his ruling partly on a provision, debated in Congress, but not included in T-H as finally passed.

The typos said that so far, 240 locals have won substantial wage increases—ranging from $7 to $15 a week—without signing a Taft-Hartley type of "open shop" contract, which some publishers are demanding.

A majority of those plants are operating under "conditions of employment" posted by the union; in others, the raises were put into effect without any attached conditions, other than "gentlemen's understandings."

Five other locals negotiated the ITU's alternative program—that is, contracts which can be cancelled on 60 days notice. This type of contract leaves the union free to strike on 60 days notice if an employer seeks to undermine the "union shop" in any manner.

On top of that, 39 more locals negotiated raises in cases where their existing closed shop contracts have not yet expired.

Thus, all told, the ITU has won out with its program in a total of over 279 cities.

UP TO now, the NLRB charges against ITU have been drafted in general terms, but the union's counsel, Van Arkel, insisted that the publishers and their counsel spell out the dates and places of violations and the names of any publishers who allegedly were discriminated against. Van Arkel's request was granted.

However, over objections of the union, trial examiner Arthur Leff admitted documents and journals dealing with the union's strategy in fighting T-H. This material had previously been subpoenaed by Denham, but ITU Pres. Woodruff Randolph refused a test of the subpoena in the courts.

Denham then resorted to a new tactic—he subpoenaed Randolph's most vociferous opponent, Sec.-Treas. Reese J. Highfield of the Akron ITU local, who brought the documents with him. Highfield came and went with a police escort.

INDIANAPOLIS AND NEW YORK CIO FIGHT PROPOSED RENT RISE

CIO members in Indianapolis and New York City are girding for a fight against realtors' proposals for a general rent increase.

The New York rent advisory board began hearings last week on the rent situation. The landlords, through the Metropolitan Fair Rent Committee and real estate boards, push for a 15% rent boost. They are bitterly opposed by the CIO and tenants' organizations.

Recommendations of local rent advisory boards are subject to the approval of U. S. Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods.

The Indianapolis CIO is faced with the same situation—only more so. There, the rent board, after refusing to hold a public hearing, recommended a 25% rent hike—the amount sought by real estate spokesmen. Only one dissenting vote was cast—CIO Steelworkers Reg. Dir. James Robb, labor member of the board. The landlords, he said, had "failed to show one income tax return to prove a decrease in income . . . To now increase general rent levels by 25% would be gratifying to those (landlords) who have already received increases . . . which, he said, is about 35 to 50% over the freeze date rentals."

Outside the board, another protesting voice rose—that of new Democratic Mayor A. Feeney. He described the proposed boost as a "hard blow" to tenants and "demoralizing to the community."

THE score in the rent battle in Washington last week was 14-1 for the tenants as Woods turned down 14 recommendations for increases and granted the decontrol of Sarasota, Fla. This brought to 20 the number of areas—all rural—to be decontrolled since the Federal Rent Control Act of 1947 went into effect last July. Two areas—Klamath Falls, Ore., and Louisville, Ky.—have received general rent increases since then.

Alongside the rent struggle raged the housing conflict all last week. In St. Louis, which had just escaped a rent hike, the "battle of the outhouses" filled the editorial columns of the Post-Dispatch. The city "boasts" of a higher percentage of outhouse-equipped homes than almost any city in the country. Embarrassingly enough the newspaper revealed that the city's Health Commissioner was proud owner of property where eight families rely on a single outhouse, although city ordinances require flush-type toilet facilities in sewered areas of the city.

OUT IN THE COLD: It was cold in Chicago and a deep blanket of snow covered the ground, but that didn't stop the landlord from evicting Mr. and Mrs. Raschke and their four children. With their belongings in the background, the family huddles around a fire to keep warm.

VYING for top spot in the outhouse competition was Philadelphia, whose Redevelopment Authority reported on Jan. 4 that in one area of the city 22% of the residents have outside toilets, while 62% have no hot water.

The Redevelopment Authority's report was cited by Pennsylvania CIO Pres. Harry Boyer when he appeared before a Joint Congressional Committee on Housing, which held hearings in the city.

Two recommendations were made by Boyer: 1) That the rent control bill, scheduled to expire Feb. 29, be continued, as proposed in the Myers Bill, S. 1741; and 2) that housing construction be aided by federal funds, as proposed by the Wagner-Ellender-Taft Bill.

FURTHER impetus to Boyer's latter suggestion was later given by N. Y. Sen. Robert A. Wagner, who recently mailed out 500 questionnaires to governors, mayors and leading citizens to learn their problems and recommendations.

"Nine out of ten of those replying," Wagner reported to Rep. Ralph A. Gamble (R., N.Y.), chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Housing, could not now or in the foreseeable future provide decent housing, new or old, for the low income families occupying those slums. An equally high percentage favored the provision of publicly-assisted low rent housing for families who cannot afford decent private housing.

"Almost without exception, those favoring such a program recommended continuation of Federal assistance along the lines of the United States Housing Act of 1937; a number of modifications were proposed, most of which are along the lines of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill."

Wagner's conclusion: "I am most impressed by the extent to which the very great majority of those carrying important official and civic responsibilities in our states and cities look to the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill as the best means of attacking the nation's critical housing and slum problems."

Ask Teacher Raise

The Delegate Assembly of the CIO Teachers' Union in New York City has called on Gov. Thomas E. Dewey and the N. Y. Board of Education to grant $900 salary increases to all school personnel in the city. Representing nearly every school in the city, the teachers charged that fewer teachers are entering the profession as a result of the Feinberg Law, which they claimed reduced starting salaries by as much as $548 annually.

Murray to Speak On NBC Jan. 30

CIO Pres. Philip Murray will make a nation-wide broadcast on the NBC chain on Friday, January 30, beginning at 10:45 p. m., EST.

His subject will deal with CIO's political action plans for 1948. Watch your local radio programs for this important speech. Remember, January 30—birthday of the late Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Re-form CIO Group In St. Joseph (Mo.)

The St. Joseph (Mo.) CIO Council has been reorganized with a view to intensified political activity in the area.

In announcing re-establishment of the council, first formed in 1944, CIO Regional Director James J. Leary said each affiliated local union is stepping up its PAC voluntary dollar contribution campaign and "will do everything to elect progressive people to Congress and to the State Legislature."

Heading the council is James Walsh, CIO Cereal Workers. Other officers are: Robert Armstrong, Packinghouse Workers, vice president; F. R. Smith, Brewery Workers, recording secretary; Orville James, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, secretary-treasurer; Mary E. Ellis, Cereal Workers; Melvin Holmes, Brewery Workers, and Victor Gibson, Clothing Workers, trustees.

GOP AND TRUMAN FIGHT FOR GLORY

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE election-year offensive to win the battle of public opinion was mounted in Washington last week by Democrats and Republicans.

First round clearly went to President Truman, who won headlines through his three messages to Congress—on the State of the Union, on the federal budget, on the country's economic health.

Republican leaders, however, are jockeying for position in the political warfare that will last until election day, November 4.

The GOP strategy committee in the Senate met last week to determine what bills would be permitted to go through Congress.

Nevertheless, the word "inflation," used a dozen times in the President's economic report, presents the Republican leadership with its most embarrassing problem—particularly since in 1946 the GOP claimed all credit for the scuttling of price control.

The President's economic report—compiled with the help of the Council of Economic Advisers and other government agencies—underlined again and again that the country's prosperity rests on a sleezey foundation of inflation.

"THE first objective for 1948 must be to halt the inflationary trend," the Truman report declared.

Referring back to his 10-point anti-inflation program of last November—three mild sections of which were passed in a Republican bill at the special session—the President asserted that every section of his program is "essential."

The Presidential anti-inflation program, with its recommendations for power to control prices and wages, use rationing, allocate scarce materials and control speculation, is "needed badly and needed promptly," he told the Congress.

THE 136-page document was packed with charts and statistics to show the inroads of inflation on the American economic structure.

But there are many people, the President warned, who even in the middle of an inflationary spiral, "find it difficult to think that anything is wrong. There is a ready market, everyone is employed, wages are good, production is high, profits are good, and industrial capacity is being expanded."

Nevertheless, the President's report warned Congress, "what most fully justifies every effort to halt an inflation is the certainty that if it runs its course unimpeded, it will spread in its wake the disaster of falling markets, unemployment and business losses."

The statistics showed the course of inflation. Production in 1947 rose 7% over 1946. Average family incomes continued to rise. Average wages in manufacturing industry rose from $43.74 to $48.90 a week. Average hourly pay rates climbed from $1.08 to $1.21.

At the same time, the consumers price index soared from 139 to 158 to wipe out most of the gains of wage increases; and corporation profits after taxes went up a third, from $12.5 billion to $16.9 billion. The 1947 profit figure was more than four times higher than the 1939 level.

ASIDE from economic problems, a group of civil rights proposals and social welfare programs await action. Washington observers expect some of them to be passed—though not in the same shape that labor and other liberal groups have advocated.

A trio of civil rights proposals has been gathering dust in the 80th Congress since it convened a year ago. Some of these may soon be dusted off, altered to fit Republican needs, and rushed through to passage.

CIO has advocated that all three bills—concerning lynchings, the poll tax and job discrimination—be passed in substantial form. It is believed that the Republicans may favor a mild type of anti-lynching bill as bait for Negro voters, and that it may allow the anti-poll tax bill to come before the Senate in the hope that southern Democrats may filibuster the bill to death.

Unless public pressure grows quickly, it appears that the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill, to construct low-rent homes, will stay in the pigeon-hole. So, in all probability, will Sen. Murray's national health insurance bill—though a Taft watered-down substitute may get a GOP nod.

Rent controls, which expire in March, will probably be renewed until after elections. Since rent controls were weakened last year, the average cost of rent has been rising steadily—and tenants throughout the country have been squawking lustily.

Peacetime military conscription, favored by the President, the American Legion and a goodly number of Army and Navy brasshats, may be acted upon in the House, but final action in Congress seems unlikely this year. Labor, church and civic groups have opposed it lustily as both unnecessary and contrary to American traditions.

LABOR legislation will be on the docket quickly. A House Labor sub-committee headed by Rep. McConnell (R., Pa.) is about ready to offer "suggestions" on changing the Wage-Hour law. While labor groups have been clamoring for an increase from 40 to 75 cents in the minimum wage rate, industry spokesmen have constantly advocated a series of weakening amendments.

It will take a real campaign to keep such proposals from being voted into the law.

The foreign aid program will hold the Congressional spotlight in the first part of the session. Administration leaders are now testifying on the Truman-Marshall proposals, and hearings will be long extended.

CIO will vigorously call for an aid program without political strings, as the best way of building a prosperous, democratic Europe. The CIO program also calls for labor representation in the aid set-up.

CIO's views on every major type of legislation will be made public after the organization's executive board meets this week in Washington.

GOP To Ignore Truman's Advice On How To Spend Federal Funds

THE GOP Congress is giving Pres. Truman's $39.6 billion budget the warm sort of reception that a temperance group reserves for a liquor salesman.

Republican leaders took one look, drew in a deep breath, and came up shouting "economy." Democratic leaders in Washington, on the other hand, hailed the message as a carefully pruned estimate of government operating expenses for the 12 months starting next July 1.

Major lesson driven home by the Truman budget was the fact that wars are an expensive business, even for the richest nation on earth.

Four out of each five dollars in the $39.6 billion total relate to past wars, to care of veterans, or to defense preparations for the future.

For government action to help ordinary people live a better life, the budget allowed only 2,028 million for social welfare, health and security; a piddling 38 million for housing and community facilities; about 287 million for education—of which nearly two-thirds was set aside for legislation not yet enacted on the statute books.

THE budget for labor came to only 116 million dollars. Of that, about 79 million was for the "training and placement of workers," principally through the U. S. Employment Service; 23 million for the Mediation Service; and 8 million for labor information, statistics and general administration—a drop of three million from the current figure.

The budget, of course, was only 40% of the whopping $100 billion cost of government during the wartime year of 1944. Much of the drop in government expense was in the defense figure, which slumped from the 1944 peak of $84.5 billion to $11 billion for the coming year. But the military allotment for the new fiscal year is still about seven times higher than in the pre-war year of 1940.

Peacetime conscription, which the President and the military favor and which is opposed by labor, church and civic groups, would cost the taxpayers an annual 500 million dollars, the budget indicated.

PRES. TRUMAN estimated the government would run about a $4.8 billion dollar "profit" for the 1948-49 fiscal year, with the money going to retire a bit of the tremendous $300 billion national debt. The government will show a surplus of about $7.5 billion in the current year.

The President's massage is merely a guide for the Congress, and will probably be supported by the Democratic minority on Capitol Hill. But the GOP-dominated Congress will write its own appropriation bills to spend government money and its own tax bills to collect funds for Uncle Sam.

Whether these proposals will bear any resemblance to the President's suggestions remains to be seen; but if Sen. Taft and other GOP leaders have their way, the President's budget—a thick volume weighing several pounds—will be used principally as a door stop in Congressional offices.

CIO OPPOSES 3d PARTY, SETS LEGISLATIVE GOAL

A broad, year-round policy covering political action and legislation affecting both the home economy and European recovery under the Marshall Plan, was adopted last week by the CIO officers and Executive Board. The Board took these steps:

Third Party: "It is politically unwise to inject a third party into the political scene in 1948."

The statement recalled that the CIO convention of 1944, just after the Presidential election, decided that a "third party would only serve to split and divide the forces of progress at the very moment when unity is our greatest need."

The 1948 statement also declared "support of a third party would weaken the possibility of electing a progressive Congress . . . we of the CIO are determined to continue to work for international peace, for the adoption and implementation of the Marshall Plan, for a strengthened UN . . . price control and rationing, a substantially higher minimum hourly wage, broadened social security and health programs, adequate housing, progressive taxation, federal aid to education, protection and advancement of civil rights of all citizens . . . and, of course, repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act." See Page 3 for full details.

Legislative Program: "We must put first things first," declared a statement outlining a broad program which opposed "emasculation of a practical European Recovery (Marshall) Plan," declared war on inflation at home, demanded steps for peace and urged full realization of the civil rights goals visioned by the Founding Fathers.

Then, the program decided "we must oppose the vicious legislative practice of cutting appropriations to nullify federal laws beneficial to the people." See Pages 2, 6 and 7.

Wages: "The CIO proposes in the coming months to be actively fighting for substantial wage increases through collective bargaining and for passage of an effective anti-inflation program through the Congress." Story on Page 2.

Printers' Strike: "Publishers are in such desperate haste to crush the strike and to weaken the union that they cannot wait to prove their charges in the course of a normal administrative proceeding. They have apparently persuaded Denham to seek an injunction on the basis of unproved allegations."

The board denounced the publishers — "historic enemies of labor"—who have "allied themselves with Genl. Counsel Denham to use the T-H act in an effort to destroy the ITU and to strip it of gains achieved through 90 years of collective bargaining." See Page 3.

Cable Strike: Full support to the CIO Communication Workers was voted. See Page 2.

Committees: Standing committees to carry out the CIO's '48 objectives were set up. See Pages 6 and 7.

'Steel Capacity' Exposed by Union

Steelworkers challenge industry's claim of 3,000,000-ton increase; say not a single new blast furnace was built in 1947; recall firms' stand in fall that any rise would require two years of construction; decry statement as misleading public in time of need; daily newspapers' financial pages report trade is worried by Labor's insistence on need for pay rise. See Page 8.

Own Hospital Run By Duluth Unions

Crowded conditions in regular institutions leads labor to action; CIO, AFL and Brotherhoods join in project; Cooperative venture will be one of only two in Midwest; life family memberships set up for $100; care for as many as 75 days' services, free medical treatment included: workers will own and direct building, select its staff. See Page 10.

Murray Demands Better Wage Law

Warns all Senators and Representatives that 'any move toward nullifying or diluting essential sections of FLSA' would hamper rise in production; sees peril to ideals enunciated in Marshall plan; assails employer groups; reminds all that labor brought forth record goods during war under overtime protection; cites present profits; insists reforms are necessary. See Page 8.

MEETS POSTER BOY: CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey greets thre-year-old Terry Tullos, 1948 March of Dimes Poster Boy. A native of Laurel, Miss., Terry is almost completely recovered from an attack of polio which paralyzed him two years ago.

PAC Issues Leaflet On Doorbell Ringing

Asserting that the "victory army" of CIO political Action Committee block workers is going "to help elect a Congress in 1948 that will do something about high prices, housing and the Taft-Hartley Act," the latest PAC organization leaflet describes the basic techniques essential to political victory.

Titled "Ringing Doorbells," it is the second of a series published under the general heading, "How We Win in 1948."

Directing its message to the average PAC block worker, core of PAC's drive to build a permanent political organization, the leaflet urges the canvasser to be at ease, to win the confidence of the people he visits, and not to stay too long. "This remember, is your first visit. You're going to be coming back to visit this neighbor of yours. Right now your objectives are to win his confidence, to find out the way he looks at things, to try and help him meet his problems."

Asks Labor Dept. 'Home' For USES

A permanent home for the U. S. Employment Service in the Dept. of Labor was asked of Congress last week by Pres. Truman.

The Truman message to Capitol Hill recalled that USES has been an orphan during 15 years of governmental storm. Set up in the Labor Dept. in 1933, the government employment agency was later transferred to the Social Security Board, and during the war to the War Manpower Commission.

"The provision of a nationwide system of public employment offices, which assists workers to get jobs and employers to obtain labor, belongs under the leadership of the Secretary of Labor," the President said.

At the same time Truman asked that the Bureau of Employment Security also be turned over to the Labor Dept. The Bureau handles federal activities on national unemployment compensation systems, and is now under the Federal Security Agency.

Keep U. S. Flags on Merchant Ships—Ex-officer in Navy

CIO's fight to prevent 500 merchant ships — and thousands of jobs — from being transferred to foreign flags has won the support of at least one old naval hand.

He's Rep. Willis W. Bradley (R. Calif.), a regular Navy officer for 43 years, who warned that transfer of the ships "would deplete seriously our national defense reserve of merchant vessels."

Bradley advised his Congressional colleagues to give careful reading to CIO Pres. Murray's program for keeping a strong U. S. merchant marine—a program which he said "was completedly ignored" in Pres. Truman's message to Congress.

CIO maritime unions—particularly the National Maritime Union and the Shipbuilders—have vigorously campaigned against the transfer of ships to foreign nations. They have estimated that it will knock out several thousand American jobs, not only in the merchant marine and shipbuilding industries but in several others that "back up" those two.

Bradley said the opposition wasn't something cooked up by union leaders but was "dictated by the rank and file of labor—a policy expressed in resolutions from the crews of hundreds of American-flag vessels operating on the high seas of the world. It is a policy formulated by the leaders of labor in response to the demands of the common man."

ACA Wins Vote Of Radiomen

The CIO Airlines Communications Employees Association won bargaining rights for 550 flight and ground radio operators and teletype operators of Trans-World Airlines in an election at New York. The union belongs to the American Communications Association.

ACA Vice-Pres. Mil Senior said the CIO defeated two AFL and one independent union, receiving 203 of the 247 ballots cast. The union will ask for a contract providing a $150 monthly increase.

GOP—Take Heed—You May Be 'Red'

If you want to use the House Unamerican Committee's technique, you can prove that the Republican party is a Communist front.

That's the conclusion reached by Prof. Walter Gellhorn of Columbia Law School, in an article appearing in the Harvard Law Review. Gellhorn, studying the Un-American Committee's handling of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, said the much-criticized House group has used methods often criticized by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Though the high court has branded the idea of "guilt by association" as a "deeply un-American concept," Gellhorn wrote that the House Committee used that device in attacking the Southern Conference.

The Committee's report listed 62 "politically suspect" persons who had been connected with the Conference or addressed its meetings, but had failed to mention such figures as Chief Jutsice Vinson, Sen. Barkley, former Secretaries of State Byrnes and Stettinius and Sec. of Defense Forestal who had similar connections with the organization.

Gellhorn's conclusion: the un-American Committee is "either intolerably incompetent or designedly intent upon publicizing misinformation."

Another attack on the committee, headed by J. Parnell Thomas, came from a new Committee of One Thousand. Members of the committee included scientist Albert Einstein, Rabbi Stephen Wise, Mrs. Marshall Field, Helen Keller, Rex Tugwell and Norman Corwin.

Brewery Union Asks No Cuts in Jobs

CIO Brewery Workers will oppose any grain-saving plan which will cause wholesale unemployment in the brewing industry.

Following a meeting of brewing industry with Secy. of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson, Ed Hughlette, general recording secretary of the CIO Brewery Workers, said any plan to save grain would have to be carefully devised so as to prevent layoffs.

"Since the Brewery Workers have a large stake in whatever curbs are imposed, we reserve the right to resist any plan that would cause layoffs," he warned.

D. C. Church Group O.K.'s Rights Report

The Washington D. C. Federation of Churches has indorsed the report of Pres. Truman's Committee on Civil Rights.

The report contains a section on violations of civil rights in the Nation's Capital.

Executive Board Backs ACA Strike

The CIO Executive Board has voted support to the CIO Communication Workers' strike against four cable companies.

Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey was authorized to write a resolution.

'ACTIVE PAY FIGHT' PLEDGED BY BOARD

THE CIO Executive Board has indorsed an "active fight" for substantial wage increases through collective barganing and for passage of an effective anti-inflation program through Congress."

The wage policy statement was adopted by the board as prices zoomed to the highest levels in history.

The statement said, in part:

"Since the death of OPA retail prices have increased over 25% while food prices have gone up over 40%. The outlook in 1948 is for even further advances in prices.

"Workers' families have had to: first, spend their meager and hard earned savings, second, go further into debt, and third, reduce their purchases of some of the basic necessities of life.

"PRESENT earnings are considerably below what the U. S. Department of Labor computed to be the necessary minimum to maintain a family of four.

"A dangerous shift in the distribution of our national income is taking place. A greater share is going into the profits of business, both large and small, rents, dividends and interest, while a much smaller proportion is finding its way into wages and salaries.

"Higher and higher profits attained through all-time price peaks are creating three crucial and dangerous trends which, if not reversed, will result in an economic collapse from which this nation may not be able to extricate itself:

"(1) Living standards of the mass of American workers have been depressed, lowered and undermined.

"(2) A lesser and lesser share of income is available for expenditures on consumption items while more and more income is going into the savings and investment of relatively few individuals and corporations.

"(3) This concentration in income and wealth has resulted in large, dangerous concentration of power and influence.

"THESE trends can and must be reversed. Therefore, in order to insure that increased wages are not drained off through higher prices, as has been the vicious practice of most industries in the past, a coordinated and effective anti-inflation program through price, rationing, allocation, inventory, consumer and bank credit controls, an excess profits tax and elimination of margins on the grain exchanges to stop speculation must be enacted by Congress.

"It is the intent and purpose of the CIO to relieve the unbearable economic burden which inflation has placed upon the shoulders of the American people. Curbing the inflationary crisis as well as establishing long run economic balance and stability necessitates a frontal attack on both the anti-inflation front and the wage front."

Murray Indorses Brotherhood Week

"The CIO owes its existence to the everyday practice of human brotherhood," CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in indorsing Brotherhood Week which will be observed throughout the nation Feb. 22-29.

"Our organization was formed to promote understanding and good will among the diverse populations in our beloved country," Murray continued.

"For that reason we look upon American Brotherhood Week as an annual milestone each year. The week is for us a period of appraisal of the year that has gone before, and the rededication of brotherhood plans with which to engage ourselves in the following fifty-one weeks.

"We can meet vicious prejudices and criminal discriminatory practices only by promoting the principles of real brotherhood between and among all men, regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin."

Publishers, 2 Teachers Oppose Wage Law Exceptions

AT least one newspaper publisher and two journalism professors think newspaper employes deserve a break.

William Block, co-publisher of the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette and Toledo Bland, has disovened attempts by newspaper spokesmen to exclude editorial employes from protection of the wage-hour law.

In a recent telegram to Cranston Williams, general manager of the American Newspaper Association, Block said: "We wish to advise that you do not represent the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette or Toledo Blade in making your request to except a large number of editorial employes from the 40-hour work week rule. In our opinion, only top ranking, highly-paid writers and editors should be exempt."

Williams and other publishers in testimony before a wage-hour hearing defined newsmen as "professionals" and therefore exempt from the 40-hour work week rule.

Dr. Ralph L. Crossman, University of Colorado, and Dr. Norval Neil Luxon, president of the American Association of Schools and Departments of Journalism, also took exception to the recommendation.

Said Crossman: "Our first duty is to our graduates and not to the employers, and if these recommendations are adopted the result will be to penalize our graduates and to nullify substantial economic gains that have been made through the activities of the Newspaper Guild."

Extent of theese gains were demonstrated by CIO Newspaper Guild Exec. Vice President Sam Eubanks in a listing on Guild salary schedules filed with the Wage-Hour Administration.

Sample gains under Guild contracts:

	Reporters		Stenographers
	1941 Minimum	Current Minimum	1941 Minimum	Current Minimum
Boston Herald & Traveler	$55.00	$86.75	$28.00	$48.20
Cleveland Press	45.00	90.00	27.00	45.00
Los Angeles Herald & Express	55.00	91.00	27.00	52.00

Board's Statement

Following is the text of the political action statement adopted, 33-11, by the CIO executive board:

The CIO at its Seventh Convention at Chicago, in November, 1944, firmly stated its opposition to establishment of a third political party.

This convention adopted a resolution stating that the Presidential election of 1944 "has fully confirmed the correctness of our decision to abstain from and discourage any move in the direction of a third party. A third party would serve only to split and divide the forces of progress at the very moment when unity is our greatest need. The political activity of CIO must and will be conducted on an independent and non-partisan basis, giving support to the progressive forces in both major parties and basing its judgment of candidates solely on their records."

Like then, we believe now it is politically unwise to inject a third party into the political scene in 1948.

We do not agree with the argument that a third-party Presidential campaign would mean a larger vote and a greater possibility of electing progressive Senators and Congressmen. We believe that our support of a third party would weaken the possibility of electing a Progressive Congress.

WE OF the CIO are determined to continue to work for international peace, for the adoption and implementation of the Marshall Plan, for a strengthened United Nations. We believe that the time has come for the initiation of a world program of disarmament. We decry the increased influence of the military in domestic affairs and are opposed to universal military training.

Our domestic program continues its emphasis of price control and rationing, a substantially higher minimum hourly wage, broadened social security and health programs, adequate housing, progressive taxation, federal aid to education, protection and advancement of civil rights of all citizens, including minority groups, conservation of our human and natural resources, and, of course, repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Achievement of such a program depends on the election of a House and Senate willing to implement it.

SUCCESSFUL political action requires much more than the adoption of pious resolutions. It requires that we of CIO register and vote and give wholehearted support to our organization—the CIO Political Action Committee.

We intend to operate and support the progressive policies of CIO-PAC and, to a larger extent than ever before, participate in politics of a local level.

The CIO calls attention to the 32 gubernatorial elections, the 43 elections of state legislatures, and the several hundred county and municipal elections that will take place this year. All of these elections deserve and must receive serious attention.

IT IS sometimes argued that the best way to insure victory for the progressives in 1952 is to give the public a taste of real reaction between now and then. We cannot accept this statement as being true. Reaction, once entrenched, attempts to destroy its opposition. The CIO takes the position that:

1. At this time the CIO is in no way committed any presidential aspirant;

2. We should not support a third-party movement in 1948;

3. We should do everything possible to put our domestic and international programs into effect;

4. We should use our full strength, undivided, in an effort to elect a progressive Congress that will support our programs;

5. We should urge our members and their friends to greatly increase their political activities this year and lend support to the progressive policy of the CIO-PAC.

6. By a unified fight for a progressive program, and by the maximum registration and vote, the CIO believes that the greatest good can be achieved in 1948 for a world peace, security and progress of the people.

Council Lauds The CIO News

Some 100 Oklahoma CIO Council delegates, representing the largest membership in the council's history, last week urged the re-instatement of price control and a roll-back of prices.

Holding its sixth annual convention in Oklahoma City, the State CIO Council returned Albert W. Mitchell as president. John W. Buton and Arthur L. Cross were named vice-president and secretary-treasurer respectively.

First resolution adopted by the group praised the CIO News for keeping its readers "reliably informed of important developments" and urged delegates to work for increased circulation of the newspaper within the state.

In addition, the State CIO urged revision of the Fair Labor Standards Act to broaden the child-labor provision to cover all interstate commerce and industrial agriculture, to increase the minimum wage to 75c an hour and to extend wage-hour protection to all presently excluded groups. Another resolution urged full support of the PAC as a means of obtaining repeal of the Taft- Tartley Act.

Speakers included Fred H. Schmidt, Southwest regional director, American Veterans Committee; Ed Hughlett, General recording-secretary, CIO Brewery Workers; E. E. Phelps, CIO Oil Workers research director; James Dickerson, CIO Steelworkers district director; and Jim Hughes, Oklahoma Commissioner of Labor, Former Gov. Robert S. Kerr was an after-dinner speaker at the banquet.

CIO BOARD REJECTS 3d PARTY IN 1948

THE CIO Executive Board last week voted, 33-11, with two abstentions and six absentees, that "it was politically unwise to inject a third party into the political scene in 1948."

The policy statement was presented to the board by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who led the campaign for its adoption. Murray presented the statement after it had been adopted by a meeting the previous day of the CIO officers. All the officers voted for the resolution except Vice Pres. Albert Fitzgerald, Electrical. Vice Pres. O. A. Knight, Oil, was absent because of the illness of his wife.

The PAC Board, meeting after the CIO Board, declared in a statement: "We commend the CIO Executive Board on the position it has taken in opposition to a third party and approve its action."

The PAC board also pledged itself to an all-out political campaign utilizing to their full advantage its block workers, to insure a liberal victory in next November's election and to assure the repeal of legislation which has taken away the people's rights.

The CIO board's policy, adopted following debate that lasted nearly eight hours, came about a month after Henry A. Wallace announced his Presidential candidacy on a third-party ticket.

The statement, text of which is carried on this page, reviewed the CIO's position, taken at the 1944 convention. The 1944 resolution also barred third party support, stating, "The political activity of CIO must and will be conducted on an independent and non-partisan basis, giving support to the progressive forces in both major parties and basing its judgment of candidates solely on their records."

THE 1948 statement declared "we of CIO are determined to work for international peace, for the adoption and implementation of the Marshall Plan, for a strengthened U.N.

"Our domestic program continues its emphasis of price control and rationing, a substantially higher minimum hourly wage, broadened social security and health programs, adequate housing, progressive taxation, federal aid to education, protection and advancement of civil rights of all citizens, including minority groups, conservation of our human and natural resources, and, of course, repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act."

IT WAS announced after the meeting that these voted against the resolution:

Officers: Fitzgerald, Electrical Workers.

Board members: Julius Emspak, Electrical; Grant M. Oakes, Farm Equipment; Donald Henderson, Food, Tobacco; Ben Gold, Fur; Morris Pizer, Furniture; Harry Bridges, Longshoremen, Warehousemen; Hugh Bryson, Marine Cooks.

Ferdinand Smith, Maritime (Smith is secretary of the Maritime union; his stand split union's two representatives, since Pres. Joseph Curran, a CIO vice president, voted "aye"); James Durkin, Office Workers, Michael Quill, Transport.

Abraham Flaxer, Public Workers, and John Clark, Mine, Mill, announced that they had abstained from voting.

CIO BACKS PRINTERS IN FIGHT ON T-H

ROBERT M. DENHAM, general counsel for the Natl. Labor Relations Board, was dealt a sharp rebuke by the CIO Executive Board for his handling of the AFL Typographical Union strike.

The ITU, cited for years as perhaps the most responsible closed shop union, has been on strike for several weeks against all the Chicago daily newspapers.

The board statement said in part:

"The proceedings against ITU involve the unique spectacle of a collaboration between the most reactionary employers in American industry and Denham, for the purpose of smashing a strike and destroying an international union.

"The systematic persecution of this union by the publishers is no accident. This section of American industry has been in the forefront in fighting labor and in resisting federal labor laws on the claim that such laws interfere with the freedom of the press.

"Today, these historic enemies of labor have allied themselves with Denham to use the Taft-Hartley Act in an effort to destroy the ITU and to strip it of gains achieved through 90 years of collective bargaining.

"No less than 6 separate complaints have been issued against this union and its locals. The Labor Board has acted upon the charges of these employers with unprecedented speed. In significant contrast to the endless delays which were imposed under the Wagner Act upon labor organizations filing charges against employers—frequently as long as 6 months to a year—Denham has issued complaints against the ITU in record time.

"Five of the complaints against the union were issued in an average of 12 days after the charge was filed. The fact that many of these complaints charge violations of the T-H Act on a nation-wide scale and would normally require extensive investigation did not prevent Denham from proceeding with phenomenal speed when the publishers cracked the whip.

"The General Counsel's charges of refusal to bargain against the union can only be justified on the theory that a union must surrender its bargaining demands when they displease the employers.

"In justifying another theory in these complaints, a Board attorney has arrogantly asserted that a peaceful strike is a violation of the Taft-Hartley Act which the Labor Board may enjoin.

"A complete revelation of the venom with which Denham has proceeded against this union is revealed by his recent petition for an injunction against the ITU and its officers. When Denham and the publishers realized that they were unable to smash the union's strike, Denham petitioned a federal judge for an injunction under the discretionary powers granted him by T-H.

"Although an injunction of the type Denham has sought may not be obtained by the Labor Board until a complaint has been issued, even before the complaint issued Denham already announced that he was considering obtaining an injunction. When the complaint issued, Denham sought this injunction despite the fact that a Labor Board Trial Examiner, presiding over the hearing, ruled that many of the acts complained of by the publishers were not in violation of T-H.

"The fight of the ITU against T-H, the Board and its union-busting General Counsel, is the fight of the entire labor movement. We pledge the support of the CIO to the ITU.

Clergy, Labor Blast T-H

By CHARLES G. WEBBER

ALMOST 200 labor and religious leaders found themselves nearly 100% united at the 15th anniversary conference of the National Religion & Labor Foundation in opposition to the Taft-Hartley Law. The conference also opposed profiteering and price increases.

Representatives of the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish faiths attended the conference which was held in Pittsburgh, Pa. Dr. Willard Uphaus is executive secretary of the NRLF.

Among the delegates present from 19 states and Canada, were 46 men and women representing 15 national CIO unions. The CIO United Steelworkers with a total of 14 delegates, topped the list of labor groups, which also included AFL and independent unions.

CIO Research & Education Director Kermit Eby, one of the NRLF chairmen, and presiding officer of the conference, challenged both labor and religious leaders to develop a philosophy of life that placed human values above material and property values.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, told the conference that he got religion some years ago helping to organize the shirt workers in Pennsylvania who were then getting $3 a week.

Sec.-Treas. David J. MacDonald of the Steelworkers said that poverty and degradation which bring misery and sinfulness can be overcome through the joint action of labor and religious groups working together for the material well-being of all.

John G. Ramsay, CIO public relations representative, Atlanta, Ga., substituting for Van A. Bittner, director, Southern CIO Organizing Drive, said that the CIO's drive in the South was strengthening the weakest link in American economic life.

THE CIO AGAIN SAYS 'NO'

The CIO Executive Board last week went on record as being opposed to the establishment of a third political party in the United States in 1948.

There was nothing unexpected about this action. The Board was merely following a policy adopted by the 1944 CIO Convention at Chicago.

This Convention adopted a resolution stating that the CIO would discourage the creation of a third party.

The Board's action probably will be interpreted as "direct repudiation of Henry A. Wallace," "indirect indorsement of Harry Truman" and in a dozen other ways. We'll let the "interpreters" have their field day and confine ourselves to some facts.

Many persons thought that creation of the CIO Political Action Committee was the beginning of a third-party movement in the United States. The CIO, however, chose to use PAC as an instrument to encourage its members to take a more active part in the existing political parties.

To the "interpreters" PAC became generally known as an arm of the Democratic Party. This was because more Democrats than Republicans favored the programs which CIO advocated.

The present Congress has given organized labor a rough time. It passed the Taft-Hartley Law and thumbed its nose at many measures favored by the trade unions.

The CIO determined months ago that it would make an attempt to change the complexion of Congress by helping elect to office men who favor the social and economic programs of labor and are opposed to the T-H Law.

This was something it hoped to do in 1948—not in 1952 or 1956. It believed that a concerted campaign on the part of labor and other progressive elements would be required to bring this about.

A majority of the CIO Board members who met in Washington last week obviously felt that creation of a third party this year and division of progressive forces into separate camps would make the job tougher.

So the Board, by a vote of 33 to 11, turned thumbs down on supporting a third party movement in 1948.

OK, Then, So We Will Figure It NAM's Way

The NAM is now engaged in a propaganda campaign designed to convince the public that corporation profits are not fat but are merely "inflated."

Corporations last year earned about $17 billions, after payment of taxes, but, says NAM, each of those dollars was worth only about 60 cents in terms of 1939 purchasing power.

OK. So industry earned only 10,200,000,000 of the "1939 dollars" during 1947. That's a little more than double the $5 billions earned in 1939—and we'd say that that's doing pretty good.

Let's do the same thing with the wages of industrial workers. In 1939 they averaged $23.86 a week. In 1947 they averaged 29.34 "1939 dollars" a week.

That's an increase of about 23%—and we'd say that that's pretty bad.

Those corporate profits weren't delivered by the stork or manufactured out of thin air. They came out of the high prices consumers were forced to pay.

Marshall Plan Opposition Confusin' But Not Amusin'

By ALLAN L. SWIM

FOUR fellows on a radio forum the other day were going at it hammer and tong—debating the Marshall Plan for rehabilitating war-torn countries.

In the heat of argument one of them tossed out the Communists' pet phrase, charging that the Plan is "an imperialistic Wall St. plot."

His "colleague" immediately shot back, "It is NOT a Wall St. plot—and I ought to know what I'm talking about. I'm a broker and I'm opposed to the Marshall Plan."

It was amusing—and to the average listener it must have been at least slightly confusing.

IT'S amusing, too, to find a couple of bitter enemies like the Daily Worker and the Chicago Tribune thumping the drums for the same thing.

The Communist newspaper would dump the Marshall Plan into the Atlantic Ocean if it had its way.

Col. McCormick's Tribune would do exactly the same thing—and toss Secy. Marshall right in behind it!

Don't get the idea that the two papers are deliberately giving aid and comfort to each other. Far from it.

The Worker figures that the Marshall Plan might retard the spread of Communism among hungry Europeans.

The Tribune is merely following its old and well known policy of isolationism.

NOW let's consider the case of Republican Senator Joe Ball of Minnesota and Presidential Hopeful Henry Wallace.

Ball, who would out-T-H both Taft and Hartley if he had an opportunity, would like to whittle the Marshall Plan down into something so small and ineffective that its resemblance to the Plan would be purely coincidental.

Wallace would go him one better. He would whittle it into nothingness.

The motives of these two men, obviously, are quite different—but both are trying to discredit the Marshall Plan.

HENRY J. Taylor, General Motors commentator, went into near-hysterics one night recently when he "discovered" that quite a bit of money under the Marshall Plan would go to countries which, in Taylor's opinion, face no "Communist menace."

Taylor said the Marshall Plan had been presented to the American public as a means of halting the spread of Communism, but that—horror of horrors—some of the dough was intended for England and Holland.

He ignored the fact that the British and Dutch get just as hungry as other Europeans and that there's an important menace called starvation.

PERHAPS the newspapers and public speakers should be blamed for much of the confusion, because they indulged in such wide discussion of the Marshall Plan before there was any such thing.

The Harriman Committee, of which CIO Secy.-Treasurer James B. Carey is a member, drew a "blueprint" for the Marshall Plan.

Those who want to discuss the subject intelligently should read this report and not use the Daily Worker or the Chicago Tribune as their authority for what the Marshall Plan proposes.

We'd like to see the Plan judged on its merits—not on the amount of confusion its opponents can create.

Maybe that's a lot to expect during an election year, but there's always a chance that the importance of the Plan will outweigh the temptation to play power politics.

"Why doesn't Labor stop talking about inflation and let us worry about it."

'The World's Greatest'

The Chicago Tribune is being issued with scab type during a strike of the AFL Typographical Union.

The Chicago Tribune calls itself "The World's Greatest Newspaper." There is also a hamburger stand on Route 25, in New Jersey that advertises "The World's Greatest Hamburger."

Here is a sample of Chicago Tribune editorials (we had to trim it a bit for space, but all the "real dirt" is there; also we have retained the Trib's peculiar type of spelling):

"Mr Truman went to the capitol to deliver the masage on the state of the union. The union with which Mr. Truman is concerned, however, is not the American Republic, but the CIO. Mr. Truman made it abundantly clear that he favors everything that dominant radicals favor and opposes everything they oppose. He is their man.

"Obviously a deal has been made. The CIO and its political agencies had Mr. Truman where they wanted him. If they supported Mr. Wallace, Mr. Truman had no chance to carry New York and a few other critical states.

Truman saw this coming and prepared for it by yielding to the radicals. He is their man not because they have joined him but because he has surrendered to them all along the line.

"There was a noteworthy lack of applause as Mr. Truman proceeded. If he had been addressing a convention of the CIO or the PAC almost every paragraf would have evoked cheers. None came from the elected representatives of the people for the obvious reason that his program was devised to serve the whole people but to appease the bosses of a particular class.

"One of the few points on which Mr. Truman got anything resembling a hand was his pledge to enforce the Taft-Hartley law despite his disapproval of it. This showed that congress is in no mood to regret the enactment of the law; and it disclosed that Mr. Truman thought he was entitled to a merit badge for doing his sworn duty. Somebody ought to remind Mr. Truman that if he is dares to sabotage the law or any other statute. he does so at the peril of impeachment.

"Mr. Truman's tax program is, of course, pure CIO. He wants class legislation against the general welfare. That, of course, will send prices still higher. On the other hand, Mr. Truman will give no significant relief to those whose savings must be counted upon to provide the factories and machines which will produce an increased supply of goods.

"As if that were not damaging enough, he would increase the taxes on corporations, thereby discouraging them from maintaining the present level of production and preventing them from accumulating the capital with which to expand.

"Mr. Truman's tax program is a CIO demagogy. It will promote a further rise in prices and prevent the production of the goods that everybody needs.

"The Republican majority in congress can safely pay no attention to this or any of Mr. Truman's other recommendations. Let the majority go about its business and let Mr. Truman veto a Rebublican tax bill and other Republican legislation if he dares."

Negotiations Are Wonderful Things!

THOSE things burn you up when they happen—but it's a lot of fun to sit around a few years later and chuckle about them.

You usually start out by saying, "One of the darndest things that ever happened to me during negotiations was when . . ."

You tell your story, and everybody laughs—either politely or in genuine humor—and then some guy tops you with a yarn that's really out of this world.

That's the way it was the other day at CIO headquarters when some veteran negotiators got together. One of them started the ball rolling with this story:

NEGOTIATIONS had been going on for weeks, with the union listening to management say "No" in a hundred different ways.

The big issue, as it frequently is, was money. The union wanted more of it. The company not only didn't want to give what the union asked; it didn't want to give anything.

Those were the days before corporation profits started skyrocketing. The union negotiators were a bit new at the game, so they weren't sure they were on sound ground when they argued that the company could grant raises.

TEMPERS wore a bit thin as weeks went by without the union or management seeming to give or gain an inch.

Then, one afternoon, a company official made the blunt statement that "we can't afford to spend one extra dime. A raise is simply out of the question."

At this point there came a knock at the door of the company office in which negotiations were held. Outside were a group of workmen who had showed up to install a brand new electric clock on a wall just outside the office.

A union negotiator asked a workman what the clock cost. "Oh, about $2700, I guess," he replied.

That was the afternoon the company decided it could grant the union a raise.

A NEWSPAPER Guild unit had just been organized and the first negotiating session was getting under way.

The publisher thought the occasion called for a bit of speech-making.

He started off by saying he was deeply hurt by the knowledge that his employes thought it necessary to form a union.

He said he'd been good to the people who worked for him. He'd given them a vacation each year. And nobody's pay was cut during the first three days they were away from work because of illness.

THE little "sermon" continued, with the publisher laying it on thick. He was leading up to a climax. Finally he reached the right point.

"And the worst thing of all is that you came in here on Good Friday to start negotiations!" he declared.

There was silence in the room—then the old-time negotiator calmly asked a question:

"Would you explain to us, Mr. ——— why you're publishing on Good Friday if you regard it as such a sacred day?"

Negotiations then got under way.

THE attorney representing the owner of the firm was letting the union have it with both barrels. He explained in detail why the company couldn't grant the requested wage hike.

He said he had gone as far as he could.

"OK, then, if that's as far as you can go, suppose you call the boss in and let us talk to him."

The attorney shot back:

"That's impossible! He's down in Florida enjoying his vacation." A.L.S.

Writer Says CIO Is Helping Workers Make Over South's Company Towns

"UNION organization has brought to workers in the small Southern industrial towns not only better pay but a new sense of individual worth," writes A. G. Mezerik in the Jan. 10 issue of "The Nation."

"Almost all the mill towns are company towns, and the millowner used to be the source of all dispensation. This situation changed after the workers won a union contract. By winning it they grew in stature in their own eyes; their sense of their rights and responsibilities increased immensely.

"Partly to assert their newly won dignity, the workers now made an effort to do the things they were not permitted to do before—to vote and to participate in the life of the community. By concerted action with the merchants and other townspeople they are making over their communities."

All this was not according to the millowners plans, Mezerik says in his article "Dixie Inventory." Thinking that they had punctured the CIO's Southern Organizing Drive by granting wage increases before their employes learned that the CIO had initiated the campaign for the raise, the millowners complacently settled back to their original conviction that the South could never be organized.

But the strike called at the end of October to back up the demand for a wage increase shattered the millowners' smugness.

"Nothing happened as planned," says Mezerik. "The workers stuck with their union, and the owners of the organized mills decided to grant the union's demands without a strike test. Thus the limb was sawed off while the anti-union employer was well out on it.

"At present the textile workers in the unorganized mills are receiving belated wage increases, knowing very well that it was the action of the union which won them. Nothing could have made it clearer that 'Operation Dixie' is still very much alive.

"In fact, the organized Southern textile workers are today receiving a minimum wage of 87c an hour, which is more than their Northern fellow unionists earn. Eighteen months after it started, the CIO drive in the South has achieved more than even the most optimistic would have thought possible.

"For the first time the wage differential between the North and the South has, at least for the moment, been reversed."

The Voice

"Guess Who" is a radio quiz program, sponsored by a New York milk company on Station WOR.

In the program, contestants listen to phonograph records, and, after rather broad hints from Quizmaster Happy Felton, try to identify the orchestra, vocalist or speaker's voice.

Last week, Felton played a record in which a man's voice was heard talking about the Stabilization Bill. The contestant immediately said:

"That's a great American, Sen. Robert A. Taft."

The audience booed.

All Wet

The Republican "anti-inflation" bill reminded Rep. Arthur G. Klein (D., N. Y.) of this story during debate on the bill:

"A guest in a small hotel telephoned the desk for a glass of water. He asked the bellboy to bring him another glass of water at once, then another and another."

"Finally the bellboy said, 'Excuse me, mister, but you are just about the thirstiest man I ever saw. How can you drink so many glasses of water?'

"'Oh, I'm not drinking it,' the guest replied. 'The room is on fire and I'm trying to put the fire out.'

"Mr. Speaker, that is what the majority leadership is trying to do with this bill—put out a roaring fire with a few glasses of water."

Rep. John F. Kennedy, (D., Mass.) was equally to the point:

"I vote against this Republican bill because it sends a boy to do a man's job."

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FIGHTS CHAOS A

CIO Pledged To Do Its Share In ERP

This is the 1948 Legislative Program drawn up by the Legislative Committee of the CIO:

1. Implement the European Recovery Plan by:
   (a) 10-point proposal (CIO Pres. Philip Murray's Nov. 16, 1947, letter to President Truman), which is printed at the end of this program.
   (b) Defeating the Herter Bill.
   (c) Enacting the Stratton Bill to admit 40,000 displaced persons.

Prompt, specific assurance of adequate aid for genuine reconstruction, not just for hand-to-mouth relief, is the Number 1 issue before Congress and the American people. It is the one sure road to a peace of free men.

2. Get the Fever of Inflation Out of Our Economic System by:
   (a) Price control of food, clothing, housing and other such necessities with continued free collective bargaining on wages within the price ceilings; Rent Control; Priorities and Allocations; Tighten Credit Controls; Restore Excess Profits Tax; Increase Tax Exemptions to persons having less than $5,000 income; Make Joint returns mandatory in all States.

ECONOMIC stablization is necessary to get the sustained full production needed to make good on our heavy moral commitments under the European Recovery Plan. The CIO is prepared to contribute its share in an integrated plan that will really check inflation.

3. Expediting Housing by immediate enactment of Taft-Wagner-Ellender Bill with provision for priorities and mass fabrication of low-cost units;
4. Promote Peaceful Industrial Relations by:
   (a) Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law;
   (b) Increasing Minimum Wage and extend coverage; protect basic 40-hour work week;
   (c) Providing Equal Pay for Equal Work;
   (d) Passing the Labor Extension Service Bill.

EACH of the above measures is essential to efficient and decent working and living conditions and will promote full production.

5. Put into effect the recommendations in the President's Civil Right Committee Report, including:
   FEPC, Anti-lynching legislation; anti-poll-tax legislation.
   Abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee.

These steps are necessary to demonstrate that we are determined to strengthen at home the democracy we defend abroad.

6. Defeat bills for peacetime military training.

MODERN warfare makes peacetime conscription obsolete; the armed services quotas are being met by voluntary enlistments.

7. Establish the basis for a continuing full production, employment and consumption economy by enactment of the following:
   (a) Improvements and expansion of Social Security system;
   (b) National Health Program, on insurance principles;
   (c) Federal aid to education.

The CIO will continue its work for the comprehensive program necessary to maintain a full employment economy.

8. Stop using cuts in funds to repeal Federal laws.
9. Protect Civilian Control of Atomic Energy Development.

Five bills are aimed at transferring control of the development of atomic energy from civilian to military hands. Such bills must not pass.

Murray's Nov. 16 letter to Truman contains these 10 points:

1. "The aid should be provided to all nations who need it to enable them to actually become self-supporting, economically healthy, and able to participate in general European rehabilitation.

2. "The aid should be given without political or economic strings designed to restrict the social or economic or political forms which the European people should freely choose for themselves.

3. "The aid should be ample enough to do the job so that a healthy self-supporting Europe will be created at the end of the program.

4. "We must enable Europe to export goods, not only to the rest of the world, but also to us, and eventually we must be prepared to accept from Europe as much in goods as we ship to her.

5. "We should oppose any attempt to treat Europe like a bankrupt corporation on which a first mortgage, impossible of future liquidation, can be obtained at bargain prices. Repayment should not be the first consideration. We must stand firmly on our conviction that working people are the world's best investment, not to be measured in dollars and cents, but by the larger common denominator of world peace.

6. "We must recognize that an adequate program of aid will require that we give more attention to the economic dangers to America. Since some shortages of food, materials and equipment may result from a European program, there must be assurance that what is available to our own people is distributed equitably without regard to income, or whether a business is large or small. We must take steps neecssary in the way of controls to prevent speculation, further inflation or rising prices.

7. "As a condition to meeting our domestic and foreign responsibilities, and expanding American economy is required, with increases in our industrial capacity wherever they are necessary.

8. "The aid program should be administered by men who are representatives of the best aspirations of the American people and who can win the confidence of the people of Europe. Adequate participation in administration by labor will aid in avoiding the mistakes in reconstruction that followed World War I.

9. "Because Europe must be able to make advance plans over the next few years to become self-supporting, the agency we establish to administer the program should have power to give reasonable assurance to Europe. A policy of merely making yearly appropriations may defeat the goal of self-support.

10. "The form of organization to administer the program should be such as to provide the speediest and most effective aid, and to achieve the objectives indicated above."

SHARP CONTRAST: The picture above was taken before the Pittsburgh Housing Authority demolished the old buildings and replaced them with the modern units shown in the lower picture. The money for the demolition and the construction was lent the authority a number of years ago by the United States Housing Authority, now the Public Housing Authority. The Taft-Ellender Wagner bill would provide funds for public housing.

New Vote Reform?

This editorial is from Labor, Railroad Brotherhood paper:

"A great reform, started by progressive heroes of the past, has unfortunately been allowed to lapse, and now is waiting for a new fight by progressives of today.

"The purpose of the reform is to enable the American people, instead of a 'few men in smoke-filled rooms, to choose the candidates of the various parties for the Presidency

"This proposal becomes more important every day, as the President wields greater and greater power in this country and in the world

"About 40 years ago, began a movement for 'presidential primary elections,' in which the people of a state, in one way or another, could designate the man they wanted as their party's candidate.

"In some states, the voters could elect the 'delegates' pledged to cast their ballots for a particular candidate at the national conventions. In other states, voters expressed their 'preference' for candidates, to guide convention delegates.

"The 'initiative and referendum,' the 'recall' of public officials, and direct election of United States senators, were other parts of the plan to put more power in the people's hands

"The politicians of both parties opposed all these moves, and have constantly tried to undo them. They have succeeded in wiping out the presidential primary in many of the states where it once existed, and have nullified it in others.

"At the peak of the movement, in 1916, presidential primary laws had been passed in 24 states, half of the 48, and the idea seemed about to sweep the country. Instead, it has gone downhill. Political bosses again control the conventions which pick the candidates for President.

"Where is the new crop of progressives who will take up this fight?"

Unfair Practices Laid to GM by UAW

THE CIO Auto Workers has filed against General Motors a charge of unfair labor practices. UAW accuses the corporation of attempting to force upon its employes a group insurance plan and to avoid bargaining collectively with the union on such a plan.

The charges were filed in the Detroit Regional Office of the NLRB by A. L. Zwerdling, associate general counsel of the union. The charge included:

"GM has contracted with Metropolitan Life Insurance Company for group insurance to be made available to hourly rated employes of the corporation who are and have been at all times mentioned herein represented by UAW since November 21, 1947, and has engaged in a continuous course of coercion and intimidation of said employes to compel them to participate in the said group insurance plan by the execution of purportedly voluntary authorizations to the corporation to deduct varying sums from their respective wages as premiums for said insurance, notwithstanding that UAW has on repeated occasions made known to GM its desire to bargain collectively concerning group insurance covering hourly rated employes represented by UAW

"The union also has notified GM of its desire to bargain collectively for improvements in the existing life and disability insurance available to employes. The said corporation on April 24, agreed in writing that the union's demands and proposals in connection with insurance would continue as a subject for discussion and negotiation.

"The corporation's contract with the insurance company was consumated without notice to the union and without consultation and collective bargaining.

"The insurance program now being forced upon employes is patterned upon and is calculated and designed to convey to employes that it conforms to the proposals of the union in this regard and, to the extent that such insurance program affords any benefits to said employes, it is calculated and designed to deprive the union of the benefit of having its members know that said program was in anywise the result of the activities of the union on their behalf.

"Moreover, the insurance program offers in important respects, less benefit to the insured than the plans heretofore proposed by the union The publicity given the corporation's present proposals to employes has been devised by the corporation to discredit, and is designed to and has the effect of discrediting the union as representatives of the employes, and is designed to coerce and has the effect of coercing the said employes into abandonment of the union as such representative and particularly as the representatives for collective bargaining with respect to such insurance.

"Upon learning of the activities of GM in respect to its insurance program, the union immediately protested and requested that the corporation bargain collectively with it concerning the insurance program."

Labor Dispute Easy, Biz Paper Says

"Life grows more difficult every day, but it is still very easy to get into a labor dispute," says Modern Industry, slick paper business monthly

"The Taft-Hartley Act gives an employer new weapons to even up the contest with labor. But sometimes it may be better to keep those weapons in reserve, rather than use them. If a dispute can be settled satisfactorily at home, the time saved may be a benefit to both parties."

MI reports that "local agencies to promote labor peace are on the increase as Washington tosses responsibility back to the grass roots."

Ask NY Legislators To Oppose Dewey

All members of the State Legislature were urged to "reassert their independence" from Governor Dewey's dictation and to reject his threat to slash state contributions for New York City public assistance, in a letter from Saul Mills, secretary of the Greater New York CIO Council.

The CIO condemned the Governor for basing his arguments on sensational newspaper headlines, and urged the legislators to support increased state contributions for public assistance to compensate for rising living costs. A number of CIO union members work in New York state public assistance offices.

Murray Wants

Improved Wage And Hour Bill

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has warned all Senators and Representatives that "any move toward nullifying or diluting essential sections of the Fair Labor Standards (Wage-Hour) Act" would hamper efforts to increase production.

Murray, in a letter to members of both Houses, said that such a move also would serve "to discredit our altruistic professions in respect to legislation implementing the Marshall Plan."

Murray charged that "testimony offered by employer groups make it very evident that an effort is being made to eliminate the overtime provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act."

Recalling that "American Labor performed miracles of production during the war, while the overtime and other provisions of this Act were in effect," the CIO President predicted that labor-management cooperation would permit the United States to "produce abundantly to meet home needs and to aid other less fortunate nations.

"The law is sufficiently flexible to meet any contingency. Current record-breaking profits provide ample margin for the wage provisions," he wrote.

"The basic shortages to be overcome in carrying through a foreign aid program are in such products as steel, food, fertilizer, freight cars and power. None of the current production difficulties or under-utilization of facilities has anything to do with the necessity for paying time-and-a-half rates after 40 hours.

"Basically, these bottlenecks are due to the failure of industry to foresee needs and to expand to meet them. In December 1947, there were 1,643,000 unemployed in this country and a manpower reserve of at least four million."

MURRAY, warning of possible foreign reverberations, said that "people abroad would interpret attacks on the Wage Hour Law as proof that our government was more responsible to pressure for increased profits than to the pleas for human needs."

The CIO position on the subject, Murray declared, is as follows:

"1. The minimum wage should be raised to at least 75 cents an hour.

"2. There should be no weakening of present provisions for the payment of overtime after 40 hours a week at the rate of one and a half times the regular rate of pay.

"3. Present child labor provisions should be improved.

"4. Coverage should be extended to certain additional groups."

Accompanying Murray's letter was a memorandum stressing: (1) "the basic 40-hour week can give the United Steelworkers of America full production;" and (2) "CIO's views on the hours provisions of the Act."

The memorandum asserted that "a sunny fair day is the best time to repair the roof—a period of high employment and high wages is the best time to strengthen our protection against long hours, low wages and unemployment.

Steel Union Challenges Industry's 'Capacity Rise'

BIG STEEL and its newspaper mouthpieces last week thought they had gone and done it—showed labor up.

Big steel annonuced that its steel capacity for 1948 will eclipse the wartime record.

But, the union which produces that steel took sharp issue with the capacity statement, which was made by Walter Tower, president of the American Iron and Steel Institute. Otis Brubaker, research director of the CIO Steelworkers, declared:

"The statement of Tower, reporting a 3,000,000 ton increase in basic steel ingot capacity during 1947 is misleading and inconsistent with the position taken by the steel company earlier in 1947.

"No details have been made available by the Institute regarding this alleged 1947 capacity increase. Without such information, any thorough and careful analysis is not possible.

"But several things are certain:

"Not one new blast furnace was built during 1947. If capacity has been increased, it seems strange that it could be done with the same number of blast furnaces. Could it be possible that this was done by so-called 'stand-by' furnaces or by purchase of government built facilities? If so, announcement was never made of such a move.

"THE INDUSTRY'S annuoncement of increased capacity does not square with its position in September and October, 1947, when it insisted that basic capacity expansion of any size would require at least a couple of years in its construction. It boasted then that slightly more than 2,521,300 tons of ingot capacity expansion was planned or under construction.

"Much of this was not scheduled for completion until 1948 and 1949. Now the industry pretends not only that an amount of capacity equal to this 2,500,000 tons was built in 1947 but also, that an additional 500,000 tons was planned and completed in the last three months of 1947. This is impossible if any credence is placed in the Institute's earlier reports on amounts of expansion and time for completion.

"It would not be possible for capacity expansion of that magnitude to occur in 1947 and pass unnoticed, yet industry and business sources have mentioned during 1947 amounts of capacity expansion scheduled for completion during 1947 of only a few hundred thousand tons—not 3 million tons.

IT IS POSSIBLE that the industry's own rating of its own capacity may have increased by 3 million tons during 1947. Most of this apparent increase, however, results, not from construction of new facilities, but from one of four other factors.

"1. Simple re-rating of capacity of particular facilities in the light of operating experience which demonstrates that they were originally underrated.

"2. Re-listing as active capacity of facilities which were slated for discard in 1945 or 1946 and removed from capacity figures but which have been operating for the last two years because of the extreme steel shortage.

"3. Minor repairs or rebuilding or changes in production methods which increase output and so require an upward revision in capacity figures.

"4. Increased use of oxygen in blast furnaces and open hearths which cuts down the time of each heat and therefore permits greater possible total output.

"It is clear, therefore, that the industry association is misleading the American people when it attempts to claim that the industry has expanded its capacity by three million tons in 1947. The industry has not met the challenge of needed capacity expansion by the construction of new facilities in 1947, instead it has in the main, merely substituted a slightly more honest reporting of its existing capacity and has then claimed credit for increasing its facilities.

"There is still a desperate need for expansion in the neighborhood of 19,000,000 million tons of ingot capactiy in excess of 1947 levels. This can be met, in the main, only by building new facilities, not by creating new statistics."

Union's Objectives Pain Steel Firms

The steel industry, like the rest of American industry, is enjoying bonanza profits—up 204% over 1939; up 119% over the average for war years, up 59% over 1946.

But, according to the New York Times, the industry is mighty worried over increased costs of basic materials.

Then, the Times continues: "As disturbing as these mounting costs have been to the industry, they have not been as serious as the recent statement of the CIO Steelworkers, that 800,000 steel employes 'need a pay increase', will fight for it this spring and believe that the industry can well afford to pay the increases in wages which will be asked."

Free movies are presented every Saturday at the CIO Hall, Grand Rapids, Mich., for children whose parents want to go shopping in the downtown area.

The Kent County CIO Council, which provides the movies, at first intended the service only for union members but has decided to offer it to any parents provided they promise to call for their youngsters promptly at noon.

HOW COULD HIS CAPACITY HAVE BEEN INCREASED?

It's Rags To Riches In Textiles

IT'S not all wool, but it's certainly profitable!

Sort of like rags to riches.

The textile industry used to be known in this land as the "poor relation" of industry. Textiles put on a sad face in those days. Now, it's all different—best for all industry—a survey by the research department of the CIO Textile Workers' reports. And, the report is backed up by news stories in Business Week and other industry magazines.

The research department's report was released by the union's general executive council.

MOST striking illustration of the profits climb, the report points out, is the relative share of each sales dollar which goes to wages and profits. In 1939, profits before taxes claimed 4.6c and wages took 23.8c from each dollar of sales. During the war (1942), the profits share was 11.2c while only 19.4c went to wages.

But in 1947, profits amounted to 16.6c of each sales dollar, compared to 20.2c for wages.

The industry's total profit before taxes reached $2 billion in 1947, a rise of 33% over 1946, 148% over the war-time average (1941-45) and 1442% over the pre-war average (1936-39)), the report shows. Earnings were so high last year that textiles led all American industry in return on investment.

WHILE corporate return on net worth for all U. S. manufacturing industries was 28% last year, the textile industry's return was 47.6% of net worth (before taxes in both instances). Before the war, profits per dollar of investment were lower than those of industry as a whole. The pre-war rate of return was 7% for textiles compared with 9.4% for all manufacturing.

Moreover, the report indicates that the 1947 textile profit on sales—16.6%—far exceeded the average margin (11%) enjoyed by all manufacturing corporations.

Excessive prices are declared to be the major reason for these extraordinary profits.

The report charges the textile industry with endangering the national economy by a price-profit philosophy aimed at reversing its pre-war experience of low earnings without regard to the risk of forcing consumers out of the market through exorbitant prices.

Rubber Workers To Discuss Policy

The International Policy Committee of the CIO Rubber Workers of America will meet in Cleveland Feb. 7 and 8 to plan the union's wage program for 1948.

"The officers and research department have completed their study of wages, prices and profits as they relate to the rubber industry," the union declared, "and on the basis of these facts the board will submit recommendations for a wage increase to help protect the rubber workers against the rising cost of living."

A Republican Finds 'Something is Wrong' With 'Soaking the Public Highest Prices'

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

ONCE upon a time there was a man. You would have liked him.

This man, whose name was Jones—T. B. Jones—manufactured mousetraps.

Because Mr. Jones—his business associates called him "T. B." or "Chief"—made a better mousetrap, the world beat a path to his door.

His door was aways out in a deep forest, which made it extremely difficult to beat a path to his door.

But, the world did beat that path.

T. B. got so famous for his better mousetrap that the National Association of Prefabricated Mousetraps and Pitfalls, Inc., drafted him to be its president.

It was quite an honor for a man who lived in a forest, to be named head of the NAPMP, so T. B. left his forest factory, taking along several of his de luxe "T. B. Mousey Trappe" and walked along the beaten path to the NAPMP convention at Atlantic City.

T. B. recounted how he developed his business—from the first piece of cheese. "Make a better mousetrap and the world will beat a path to your door," he modestly advised the delegates.

Then he gave further sage advice. "Our prices are too high," he said. "The public is pouring its money down a—shall I say a rathole? We need government controls over prices. We need rationing. We need cooperation with with labor. We need . . ."

At that moment, a bad nasty delegate rose and slew T. B. with a bow and arrow.

Then, the delegates all rose and sang, "Solidarity? Never."

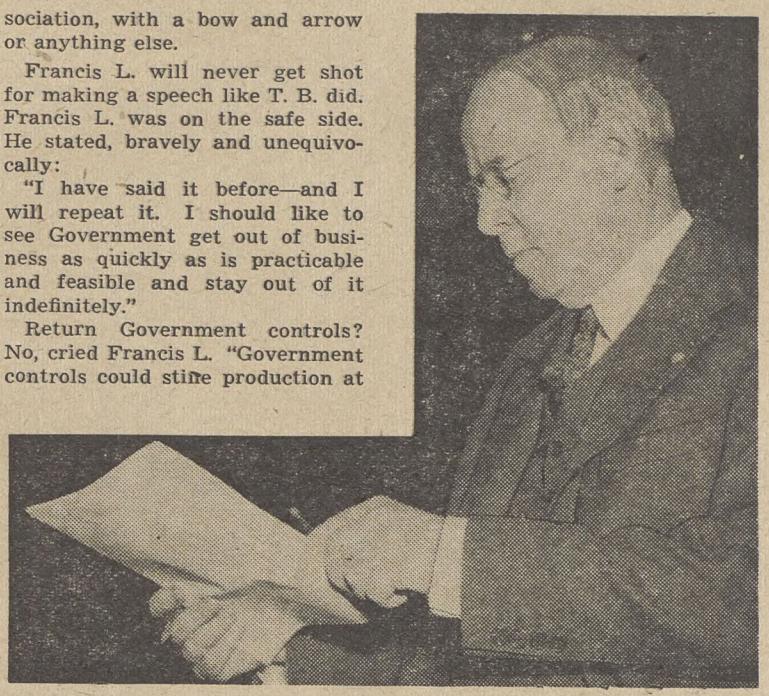
And they all lived happily ever after.

In Atlantic City the other day, no one shot Francis L. Whitemarsh, president of the National American Wholesale Grocers Association, with a bow and arrow or anything else.

Francis L. will never get shot for making a speech like T. B. did. Francis L. was on the safe side. He stated, bravely and unequivocally:

"I have said it before—and I will repeat it. I should like to see Government get out of business as quickly as is practicable and feasible and stay out of it indefinitely."

Return Government controls? No, cried Francis L. "Government controls could stifle production at all levels and cause the farmer, processor, manufacturer and distributor to steer away from those items which are unprofitable, thus still further increasing the shortage of supplies."



Excessive Profits Alarm Senator Tobey

He said controls won't accomplish as much as if "we were to continue a free economy and let prices and wages seek their own level through our fundamental economic laws of supply and demand and real keen competition."

(Dun & Bradstreet's wholesale food price index—of 31 basic foods—last week was at $7.25, only 3 cents below the all-time high set the week before. Francis L. Whitemarsh's wholesale grocers, need we remind you, deal almost exclusively in foods.)

While Whitemarsh was singing his song of a lot of sixpences, the Coin Machines Industries, Inc., was having its annual show in Chicago.

Pinball and other type of coin machines were on exhibit, but most news came out in the prices. Did you realize, when you insert your nickel in the juke box to play "She's Too Fat for Me," that the price of juke boxes has risen from $325 before the war to $1,000 now? (The normal record plays about three minutes. If the machine were played constantly until the purchaser gets back his $1,000, it would take 41.66 days.)

Pinball machines now cost $265 to $580, in contrast to half that much before the war.

On other economic fronts last week, there were indications that some—very few, though — Congressmen were seriously considering rationing and price control and that Wall St. was getting pretty worried about attacks on commodity plungers.

Before the Senate Banking Committee came Mrs. Annie Stein, representing the Natl. Women's Trade Union League. She set off an argument between Sen. Charles Tobey (R., N. H.) and Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D., Va.) over what Congress should do.

Tobey said: "Something is wrong with the picture when great corporations are making the largest profits in history paying the greatest dividends in history, and soaking the public the highest prices in history."

Robertson remarked: "Everybody should try to produce more and put a little more of the Golden Rule into their operations."

"Not a little more, but a little bit," interjected Tobey. "Before God, something's got to be done. When the house is on fire, we've got to put it out. Here's an emergency and we've got to meet it."

Robertson said: "You can't put out a fire by pouring kerosene on it!"

He then declared he thought labor's wage demands had a lot to do with inflation. He declared the auto workers—the unionized auto workers, that is—were the "highest-paid in the country and now they're asking for 30 cents an hour more."

Tobey shot back: "What about the price of automobiles being jacked up all the time?"

He said he thought labor should have an interest in what it produces and should wonder when it sees the price of the articles it makes go steadily higher.

Robertson came back with "let those who think there's money in raising hogs and cattle get out and try it."

Mrs. Stein said that in the meat-packing industry an increase of less than 3% would have covered all 1946-47 wage increases, "yet wholesale meat prices have risen 122% since June, 1946," last month of OPA.

She quoted from Martin Luther's 16th Century writings in which he urged appointment of "wise and honest men who would appraise the cost of wares and fix accordingly the outside price."

She declared "nobody can tell us it is an economic law that made soap flakes go up to 38c and coffee to 54c last Saturday."

In New York, the brokerage firm of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane came out with full page ads in the daily press saying: "Commodity Exchanges Cut Business Risks, Result: Lower Cost of Food to Consumers: Speculators Render an Essential Service." Also, ML, P, F & B said, business ain't so good; its commodity business was off between 33 and 40%; some other firms were off as high as 50%.

* * *

WHEN the Republican Natl. Committee met a few days ago in Washington, it was a perfect example of the biter bitten.

For, the GOP, many of whose Congressional members are fighting all out to end rent control, found that the usually safe Republican city of Philadelphia was planning a fast one. GOP advance agents casing the City of Brotherly Love for the convention, which'll be held there in June, heard reports that Philadelphia hotels were planning to raise rates for the convention—from 30% to 100%. The GOP howled just like any rent control advocate—but nobody noted any change of heart in the rent-control slaughter bloc in Congress.

Incidentally, Republicans were polite to the Philadelphia City GOP administration. Not a single Republican mentioned Philadelphia's (descriptive word is unprintable) drinking water, which is controlled by the GOP machine.

As the CIO News went to press, the only cheap thing around was talk.

Citizens Hit Militarists

THE grave concern of a group of 17 prominent citizens over the road America has taken in allowing military men to infiltrate into top positions of government has been expressed in a booklet entitled "The Militarization of America."

Dr. Albert Einstein, CIO Research Director Kermit Eby, Pres. James Patton of the Natl. Farmers Union and other writers, educators and leaders of national groups joined in sponsoring the report, which was published by the Natl. Council Against Conscription.

"Because of our deep conviction that America cannot remain democratic if the present trend toward military control of our institutions continues," the group wrote in a joint introduction to the peppy, illustrated booklet, "we join in issuing this report and recommending it for most serious study by our fellow-citizens."

AVC Calls Courts Martial Bill Inadequate

The American Veterans Committee has sent a statement to the Senate Armed Forces Committee, giving its analysis of HR 2575, which is an act to amend courts-martial procedures.

The statement was signed by Robert L. Carter, AVC veterans' affairs director, and said of the bill, passed unanimously by the House:

"While many specific features are commendable and appreciable improvement over the present courts-martial system, we cannot bill, passed unanimously by the ent form because it fails to accomplish the fundamental reform which our present system of military justice necessitates.

"The dabs of new paint which HR 2575 has applied cannot hide the fact that military justice is motored by the same discredited engine and moves on the same threadbare tires.

"Military justice must be so administered that the rights of an individual soldier to a fair trial in accordance with accepted notions of constitutional due process will be adequately safeguarded.

"The Articles of War as originally designed were intended to accomplish that dual result. That this purpose has not been accomplished is more the fault of administration than of any weaknesses in the Articles themselves.

"There appears to be general agreement among observers that the fundamental defect in our system of military justice is the coordination of judicial functions and command in one hand. The commander, having courts-martial jurisdiction, holds almost all the duties in connection with the administration of military justice.

"The commander who refers charges for trial would not do so if he were not seriously convinced of the guilt of the accused. His subordinates who sit on the courts-martial are unconsciously prone to accept the decision of their superior.

"HR 2575 does not correct this fundamental defect but continues union of command and judicial function in the troop commander. Section (26) provides a complicated procedure for appellate review, but the powers of the military are guarded far too jealously.

"Such review is in the Judge Advocate General's department, and in subsection (h) after final review by the military the proceedings, findings, and sentences of courts-martial are final and conclusive 'and all action taken pursuant to such proceedings shall be binding upon all . . . courts . . . and officers of the United States.'

"We think that the best solution is to transfer to a civilian Assistant Secretary of the Army the administration of military justice, with immediate supervision of Board of Review both in the District of Columbia and in branch offices.

"The members of the Board of Review should be lawyers. The power to activate or appoint general courts-martial and to order sentences executed should be vested in area judge advocates. He should have an independent office and hold responsibility only to the Assistant Secretary of the Army. He should have a staff of professional personnel equipped to act as law members, trial judge advocates, defense counsels, investigators.

"After review of sentence by the Board of Review and the office of the Assistant Secretary of the Army of sentences of five years or death penalty, an appeal as of right should be allowed to the Circuit Court of Appeals. In all other cases appeals should be allowable with the permission of the Circuit Court.

"The inclusion of enlisted men or courts-martial as provided under Section (3) is commendable. The inclusion, however, should be mandatory and not merely permissive as provided by Section (3). Further, there should be established a definite proportion of enlisted men and officer representation on courts.

"We wholeheartedly approve of Section (14) amending Article of War 24 but would like to have included therein an affirmative requirement that a witness or accused be informed of his right against compulsory self-incrimination.

As to Section (22), Article of War 46, we would like to see included some requirement concerning the competence and qualifications of the officer conducting these investigations and the requirement that the accused be informed of his rights in the course of the investigation and be served a copy of the investigation file."

Duluth Unions To Run Own Hospital

AN ATTRACTIVE brick hospital stocked with the gadgets and equipment needed to mend broken bodies and broken health, which has been standing vacant, will be opened this year in organized labor's West Duluth, Minn., stronghold.

There are no other hospitals in the area. Downtown the hospitals are too crowded. And rates are mounting so high that an operation or another baby knocks a CIO family budget badly out of kilter.

That has seemed like nonsense to Duluth union members. So CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhood members and their families have gone to work to do something about it.

They've set up an 11-member board of trustees, are buying the attractive brick hospital and hope to have it in operation—providing better medical care at a reasonable cost—by next September.

Pioneer Idea

The proposed hospital, known as the Arrowhead Health Center, is a pioneer idea. There is only one other cooperative hospital, a small one, in this whole Upper Midwest area.

But the cooperative tradition is strong in Duluth, the participating families are enthusiastic about their idea and successful operation of the new health center seems assured.

It costs a family $100 for a life membership in the corporation. That means the family owns $100 worth of the two-story hospital the corporation is buying, over an eight-year period, for $100,000. A family which moves away may sell its part ownership to another family for the original $100.

About 200 families—a lot of them CIO people—already are members. The trustees want 10 times that many before the year ends. Campaigns for members are under way in most CIO locals.

The details of the medical services that will be available and what each family will pay beyond its $100 membership are not yet complete. Tentatively it will be something like this:

● Hospital care for as many as 75 days a year will be provided. That's five more days than most prepaid hospital and medical plans provide. Hospital services like X-ray, physical therapy, laboratory services and operating room all will be provided. That, too, is different from most plans.

● The biggest boon for a member family will be free medical care whether hospital care is needed or not. The official prepaid plan in Minnesota, set up by the State Medical Association to stave off the so-called "socialized medicine" it dreads, doesn't play that way.

● The proposed plan covers the cost of a ward bed to any person in a member family. Semi-private or private rooms will cost extra, as in all prepaid plans.

● The costs will be about $2.50 a month for a single person, about $5 for a family of two and about $6 for a family of three or more. (Speaking of families, a CIO wife will have complete medical care if she is having a baby. Other prepaid plans provide hospitalization but not medical care before and after the birth.)

A special advantage of the new health center, CIO families point out, is the democratic operation planned.

The members will own the hospital and operate it by a democratic vote. The doctors and hospital administrators will not own it; they will be employes of the people who need the services they offer.

If any surplus funds accumulate—and the trustees certainly don't see any accumulating in the near future—they will belong to the members and not to the doctors or the hospital.

How It Began

The idea of the cooperative hospital was born back in 1944. Gene Howes, then an AFL business agent and now a field consultant for Central Cooperative Wholesale, was made chairman of the first committee to see what could be done.

This week he smilingly admitted that it's good to have a dream begin to come true.

"We thought about it because we needed a hospital for labor people in West Duluth," he explained. "This is an industrial community and labor people live here. But there were no hospital facilities."

The cooperative hospital idea has been bounced around like a rubber ball ever since then. There have been committees and more committees, most of them not labor groups. One of them surveyed West Duluth residents and found that 65% were in favor of the idea. But it didn't get anywhere.

For a while, Duluth business people thought they'd rather sponsor the hospital than have labor do it. Some of the doctors didn't approve. Nothing happened.

Last spring an informal little committee talked with Dr. Michael Shadid, the father of cooperative hospitals in the United States. He had set up the first co-op hospital, at Elk City, Okla. The committee got excited about it and went to work; they are now the 11 trustees.

Among them are three CIO leaders:

Earl Bester, CIO Steelworkers' staff representative and PAC director in the strong USA district 33.

Joseph Paszak, secretary of USA Local 1210, president of the Duluth Industrial Union Council and a Steelworkers' representative on the state CIO executive board.

Harry Haugland, member of local 4, CIO Textile Workers.

The trustees hired an energetic young man named Charles Weidner to serve as executive director of the hospital. Weidner, who came to Duluth and his new job last September, had just spent two years running the cooperative hospital in Two Harbors, Minn., the only operating co-op hospital in this large area.

CIO Pitched In

CIO locals pitched in and helped Weidner and the trustees to leap their first big hurdle, payment of $20,000 on the hospital by the first of this year. The Duluth Industrial Union Council, USA Locals 1425 and 1096 and TWUA Local 4 chipped in funds and pledges that helped make payment on time possible.

Weidner explained there are other obstacles.

The biggest problem is the one most essential to successful operation of any cooperative—more members. There is interest in the plan, but $100 sounds like a lot of money in one lump. That's why union committees are working to sell the idea to memberships and explain that the $100 can be paid in installments.

The medical staff has not been selected. Nor the operating staff for the hospital—nurses, orderlies, cooks, maids and technicians.

The building is far from ready for use. There may have to be some remodeling and there doubtless will have to be some painting.

When those problems are solved there will be others, but the trustees believe their organization will be strong to handle them. Growth of the organization will mean hospital expansion, they said. The foundation will support two more floors.

That will mean a 150-bed hospital, owned and operated almost exclusively by organized labor, without regard to race or creed or nationality.

INSPECT UNION HOSPITAL: A group of Duluth, Minn., union leaders are leaving the hospital which the trustees expect to have in operation by September. Already $20,000 of the purchase price has been paid through subscriptions by union members and union contributions. The balance will be paid at the rate of $10,000 over eight years.

INSPECT EQUIPMENT: During the tour of inspection, some of the union members stopped to inspect oxygen regulators and surgical instruments. They are, left to right, Reinhart Leslie, Steelworkers Local 1424; Marie Price, Textile Workers Local 4; Henry Walling, Local 1424, who said "I'm a member of the plan myself and have signed up five more families," and Carl Engblom, vice-chairman of the Duluth CIO Council.

Fur, Mine Unions In Pay Talks

CIO Fur Workers, who for years have worked under a closed shop agreement, are seeking the right to refuse to work with non-union members, since T-H prohibits closed shops. The CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers are seeking increases in the United States and Canada.

Now in negotiations with the Associated Fur Coat & Trimming Manufacturers, Inc., the Fur Workers also has requested a wage increase

The Mine, Mill Workers have begun negotiations with the American Zinc Co. on a request for a 25c wage increase, retroactive to Jan. 1.

In Canada the union's 40,000 metal mining and processing workers are seeking a 35½c hourly raise. Canadian as well as American workers are faced with rising prices.

Firms Try T-H In Cable Strike

Strikebound cables companies have pulled two strike-busting weapons out of the bag—T-H (of course) and the old divide-and-conquer technique.

As the New Year's Day walkout by 3000 CIO Communications Association workers and independent All-American Cable Employes continued solid, two American Telephone & Telegraph subsidiaries—Mackay Radio and Commercial Cable—decided to try T-H.

Although just three weeks previously they have been presented with union authorizations, signed, ACA says, by 99.89% of the employes, the companies last week filed petitions with the NLRB for an election to determine the bargaining agent.

Since the ACA has refused to sign T-H affidavits, it is prohibited from appearing on an NLRB ballot. Consequently, the board is expected to turn down the request for an election, and to simultaneously announce that it cannot enforce the union's bargaining rights.

In a joint statement the two striking unions termed the move "a vicious and hysterical attempt at strike-breaking."

The IT&T subsidiaries, in response to an offer by a four-man citizens committee appointed by New York Mayor William O'Dwyer, failed in a second strike-busting tactic when they offered to meet with the committee and representatives of the independent union, but refused to meet with ACA. ACCEA Pres. Kenneth Spilman flatly rejected the offer.

The strikers are seeking a 30% wage increase and other concessions.

60,000 Join CIO Phone Union in Nine Months

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"With the Bell System installing dial equipment throughout the nation, we need every Bell System employe into one large CIO union—and quick."

This quotation from a telephone worker's letter to the CIO Telephone Workers Organization Committee characterized the insecurity and anxiety for "one big telephone union" that harasses employes of the world's biggest corporation today.

So great has this discontent been that less than a year after its formation the CIO-TWOC, launched last May, can today boast that it represents 60,000 telephone employes throughout the nation.

And so enthusiastic is the response to the new telephone union that TWOC expects to increase its membership half again between now and its first birthday, adding another 30,000 to its ranks, TWOC leaders say.

THIS YEAR for the first time telephone workers, squeezed by low wages, rising living costs and a formidable boss, will seek wage increases under the banner of CIO.

The girls with the cheery "number please"—and the men who produce, and install and maintain that intricate telephone equipment have decided to stop playing "Pagliacci." It becomes increasingly harder to present a happy countenance to the public when you're plagued by fear of losing your job to an automaton and by the knowledge that your pay averages $5 a week less than the nation's manufacturing employes.

Two national telephone unions,

PHONE EQUIPMENT TESTER

a statewide union and a small local group have already jumped the hurdles to comprise the present TWOC membership. These are the American Union of Telephone Workers, composed of long lines employes; the American Communications Equipment Workers, composed of maintenance and installation employes; the Federation of Telephone Clerks of Illinois; and the Blue Mountain Telephone Operators of Bangor, Pa.

BY THE END of March TWOC expects to have completed four NLRB elections which would bring 21,761 into its jurisdiction. These involve elections in

- Northern California & Nevada, where an NLRB poll among the United Brotherhood of Telephone Workers recently gave TWOC a majority over the AFL Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the CWA;
- Northern California & Nevada, where traffic employes of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph will vote TWOC affiliation;
- Oregon, where the United Telephone Employes of Oregon are involved;
- West Virginia, where all departments of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. in the state will be polled.

In Maryland only final technicalities remain for affiliation of 6,000 Maryland Telephone Traffic employes, who have already voted for TWOC on two ballots.

TWOC ranks will further be swelled as soon as elections are completed by the addition of close to 1,000 employes now within the CIO Communications Association. This transfer of jurisdiction has been agreed upon by the CIO unions.

Soon to be scheduled also is a poll among the accounting employes of the Bell Telephone Co. of Pennsylvania, Western Division, numbering about 800. Campaigns are underway in about a dozen other states as well.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Regional Director George Craig, Philadelphia, Pa., reports as follows: Rhinestone Creations, Philadelphia, employing approximately 45 people has recognized the Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers as the collective bargaining agent.

The CIO organized this company with Ben Stahl, CIO Field Representative, in charge, assisted by Joseph Bianco, Int'l Representative, PJNW. The company granted, after a one-day strike, a 10-cent per hour wage increase, union shop, check-off. Negotiations for collective bargaining contract are to start immediately. Congratulations to Ben Stahl and Joe Bianco.

Director Craig also reports that the CIO Brewery Workers won an election at the Camden Brewery. The vote was 29 for Brewery Workers and 16 against. Fred Schuler and Harry Kauffman were in charge of this second recent victory for the Brewery Workers in this area.

Regional Director and National Representative Robert J. Davidson, Cincinnati, Ohio, advises a union shop election was won by the CIO Paperworkers at the U. S. Printing and Lithographing Co., Norwood, Ohio, by a vote of 234 yes, seven no.

Regional Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler, Los Angeles, Calif., reports a NLRB election at the Santi-Mode Mfg. Co., Los Angeles, Calif., resulted as follows: CIO Textile Workers 36, no union 6. Harry Stillman, TWUA int'l rep., was in charge, assisted by CIO Field Rep. George Douglas.

The writer attended an educational conference of telephone workers in the Eastern Pennsylvania area Jan. 17, which was a very successful affair and the local people responsible for the arrangements are to be complimented. A number of telephone workers for the first time learned the workings of the CIO, its aims and objectives. Everyone left with the determination to build his union, TWOC-CIO, and participate in its affairs.

Several conventions of telephone workers will be held during March, when time consideration will be given to the wage question. The telephone workers have received smaller increases than other industrial workers. CIO will render every cooperation to them in preparing data and bringing it to the attention of telephone companies and the public.

". . . all of our time and resources shall be given."

With that pledge, CIO-PAC has launched its 1948 crusade, a crusade to give the Government back to the people. Industry and the 80th Congress have presented the issue to PAC and PAC has a platform to fight for—a platform that comes deep from the hearts of CIO and all the American people. PAC wants international peace, the adoption and implementation of the Marshall Plan; a strengthened UN; a world disarmament program; price control and rationing; repeal of the Taft-Hartley law; a higher minimum wage; broadened social benefits; adequate housing; progressive taxation; improved civil liberties. PAC opposes a third party in 1948, universal military training and influence of the military in government. PAC hopes to win the election of Senators and Congressmen who'll achieve these objectives.

14 Unions To Seek Hikes As Prices Soar

By GLORIA CAPLAN

EVERYWHERE it's the same: Prices up, profits up, real wages down.

They would have preferred a genuine price slash this year, say CIO leaders, but neither Congress nor Big Business—the only two who have the power—showed signs of offering relief. So CIO unions are doing the next-best thing—seeking wage increases to recoup what rising prices devoured.

Some 14 CIO unions with national contracts have announced plans for attacking the problem. A few already have won increases, while others must wait until later in the year for contracts to expire or reopen.

Here's the lineup:

TEXTILE: A 15c hourly boost—plus 4c for an insurance fund—for 21,000 employes of the American Woolen Mills, won last week, promises to set an industry-wide pattern. Wyandotte Worsted Co., with 1,000 employes, and four smaller mills employing about 2,000, had previously made the same settlement. Some 150,000 woolen and worsted workers will receive a total of $59,000,000 in increases if the settlement becomes general as expected. Effective Feb. 1, this constitutes a third boost in the industry since V-J Day, the other two totalling 30c an hour.

Recently the union won a 9c hourly hike for 125,000 Southern cotton workers and 10% increases for 100,000 Northern cotton and rayon workers.

AUTO: "The Republicans refuse to authorize any inflation controls whatsoever . . . The Democrats counter with lip service."

And that, says the Auto Workers, is why General Motors, Chrysler, Ford and Packard will be asked in negotiations for a 30c an hour package increase.

Negotiations with GM, scheduled to begin Feb. 28, will spearhead the national drive of the CIO "Big Three" unions—UAW, Steelworkers and Electrical Workers.

For most UAW workers wage increases wouldn't be effective until May. By then, says the union, with prices going up 1% a month, it will take a 25.4c an hour raise just to get auto workers' purchasing power back where it was in June, 1946.

A 25c increase would not provide a wage gain; it would not, as the union's International Executive Board pointed out, permit workers "to share in the progress toward which they contribute with their brains, their muscles and the skill of their hands . . . They have an incontestable claim to share in the fruits."

STEEL: "In spite of the wage increases of 1946 and 1947 the living standards of Steelworkers have shown a steady deterioration . . . Yes! Steelworkers do need a wage increase."

That's how Steel Labor, national organ of the Steelworkers, introduced the union's case for wage boosts. These contracts, which run until April, 1949, will be reopened for wage discussion on April 1.

Amount to be sought will be determined Feb. 18, when the union's 170-man wage-policy committee meets.

With steel companies enjoying a 204% profit increase since 1939 and a 59% climb since 1946, the Steelworkers say the industry can well afford a wage increase. Since 1946 Steelworkers' pay, on the other hand, has risen about 14.2%, in three boosts of 18½c, 5.18c to cover wage inequities and 15c an hour.

ELECTRICAL: "Due to sharply rising prices, the real weekly wage of the average worker in the electrical manufacturing industry has fallen $13.03 since January, 1945," says the CIO Electrical Workers.

Although it has not yet announced the figure to be sought when negotiations begin the middle of this month with the General Electric, Westinghouse, General Motors Electrical division and Sylvania Electric, UE is expected to try to recover at least this amount.

Covered by "Big Four" contracts are some 300,000 workers, who have won two increases (15c and 18½c an hour) since V-J Day. As proof of the industry's ability to pay substantial increases, UE will point to the profits of 23 major electrical manufacturers—profits which are 79% higher in 1947 than in 1945.

A pension plan, a health and welfare plan, severance pay, improved vacations and additional holidays also will be goals

PACKINGHOUSE: The 29c hourly raise for which the CIO Packinghouse Workers are now negotiating with Armour and Swift packing companies can be granted with "absolutely no increase in the price of meat," says UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein. The same, he says, applies to Cudahy, which begins wage talks Feb. 3 and 4, and Wilson, which begins Feb. 5 and 6. John Morrell and Hygrade Food Products will be asked for the same amount when talks, not yet scheduled, begin.

RUBBER: Wage demands for some 100,000 employes of the "Big Four" rubber companies—Goodyear, Goodrich, U. S. Rubber and Firestone—will be formulated at a CIO Rubber Workers wage policy meeting Feb. 7 and 8. "The pressure of continually mounting prices is causing increasing hardship among the families of our members," the union has said.

OIL: CIO Oil Workers will launch its national drive for wage increases with a meeting of the union's wage policy committee Feb. 9.

MARITIME: Four CIO unions—Communications Association, Maritime Union, Marine Cooks & Stewards and Marine Engineers—now have wage demands in arbitration. The first three are asking increases of 25% an hour; the Marine Engineers are seeking 15%.

FUR: Negotiations are now under way between CIO Fur Workers and the Associated Fur Coat & Trimming Manufacturers. A 12½% increase for floor workers is being sought.

WOODWORKERS: When wage talks for some 40,000 woodworkers in five states begin April 1, the lumber, logger and mill operators will be asked for 32½c hourly boosts, plus 7½c for a health and welfare fund.

MINE, MILL: Some 20 regional conferences are now being conducted by the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers to map details of the union's contract demands. The International Executive Board, meeting on Feb. 16, will put final touches on the proposals.

Pure Oil Workers Win 30c After 10-Month Strike

CIO Oil Workers in Toledo, Ohio, after tramping the picket line for 10 months, have emerged with what was described by OWIU District Director B. J. Schafer as "the best contract in the industry."

The Pure Oil refinery strike was the longest ever recorded in Toledo, and was the longest successful walkout in the history of the union.

The 470 strikers won wage increases of 30½c an hour, clear-cut seniority rules—long a bone of contention at the refinery—improvement of grievance procedure, better overtime provisions, maintenance of membership and checkoff.

Wiring congratulations to the victorious strikers, the union's international officers said: "Your group has courageously carried out the longest strike in the history of OWIU against the strong opposition of a company noted for its opposition to organized labor. Your achievements will go down in history as one of the outstanding victories of our union."

Ohio CIO officials said the company had vainly attempted to break the strike by instituting a back-to-work movement, buying newspaper ads and by house-to-house contacting of all strikers.

Fishermen Map Wage Drive

CIO Fishermen will concentrate this year on winning improved wages and working conditions in line with the current CIO wage drive and on helping elect a Congress and national administration friendly to labor and the common man."

Holding its ninth annual convention at Ustoria, Oregon, the union emphasized the importance of political action in defeating the U. S. anti-trust suits against union fishermen.

Delegates unanimously approved a resolution "noting" third party movements and the "growing number of Democrats and others who cry for election of Henry Wallace." In addition to terming the third party movements "steps on the road towards the building of a political union of the common man," the union voted full support of PAC.

Foreign policies of the U. S. Government were blamed for the starvation of millions abroad during the past spring and summer, while "West Coast trawlers were forced into idleness through lack of markets."

A resolution termed the Marshall Plan "dollar diplomacy" and an "abandonment of the Roosevelt good neighbor policy." The three top officers—Pres. J. F. Jurich, Secy.-Treas. Jeff Kibre and Vice-President Oscar Anderson—were reelected.

GM Halted By Denham Injunction

NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham has broken his tradition.

Last week he asked for—and got—his first temporary injunction against a Company, General Motors.

The order was issued by Judge John Bright of Federal District Court of Southern New York. It temporarily restrains the company from putting into effect an insurance plan which the CIO Auto Workers charges had been drawn up unilaterally by GM in "violation of its duty to bargain collectively." GM representatives must show cause why the restraining order should not become permanent.

Another federal court in New York also ruled in favor of a CIO union last week. In rejecting a regional NLRB petition for an injunction against some 300 striking CIO engineers and draftsmen in New York City, U. S. District Court Judge Simon H. Rifkind set what may become a precedent in defining "secondary picketing" under the Taft-Hartley law.

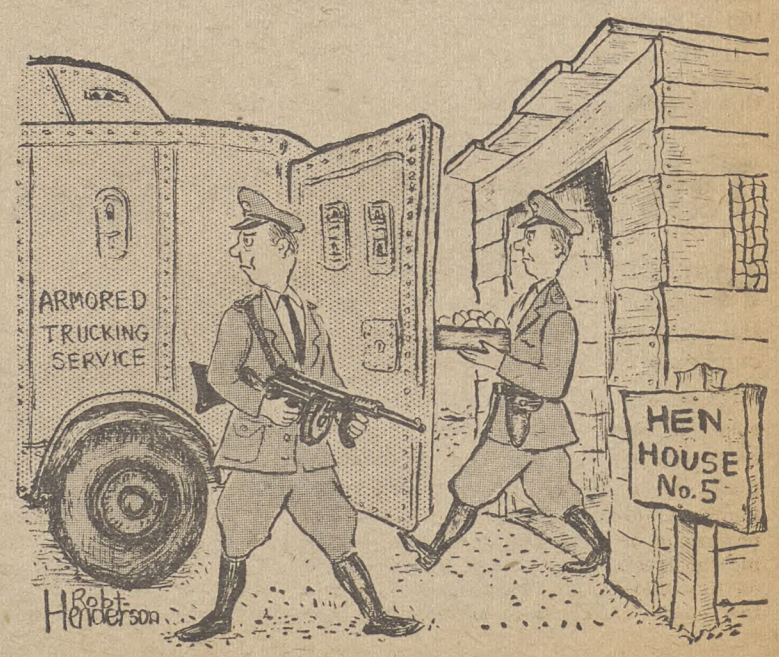
RIFKIND refused to enjoin picketing of the Project Engineering Co. on grounds that the company is not a disinterested party to the five months' strike against Ebasco Services, Inc. Project Engineering, he pointed out, is doing for the struck company the kind of engineering work the strikers themselves would be performing.

"To suggest that Project had no interest in the dispute between Ebasco and its employes is to look at the form and remain blind to the substance . . . Manifestly it was not an innocent bystander or neutral," the judge said.

"It was firmly allied to Ebasco and it was its conduct as ally to Ebasco which directly provoked the union's action."

THE regional NLRB had previously upheld the company's complaint that the picketing constituted secondary boycott, outlawed by the T-H Act.

FIFTEEN, TEN AND FIVE. That's the way the 100-member General Motors conference of the CIO Auto Workers voted to split their 30c-an-hour wage demand. When negotiations open, the UAW spokesmen will propose a 15c across-the-board wage boost, 10c an hour put into the pension fund, and 5c for hospital, medical, surgical and sick benefit insurance.



PAC PUSHING LEGISLATIVE 'PLATFORM'

WITH 1948 only a month old, CIO-PAC is actively engaged on all its widespread fronts to make this The Year.

Four days of meetings in Washington of PAC's board, its staffers, its liaison men and other active participants came to the conclusion that "just as our economic strength rests upon the strength of our trade union organizations, our political strength can be measured only in strength of our political organization."

The down-to-earth work was plotted at a meeting of liaison representatives from more than 20 areas, including those of the Steelworkers, Auto, Electrical, Glass, Maritime, Barbers, Fur, Transport Service, Amalgamated Clothing, Textile, Oil, Lithographers, Mines, Mills, Playthings, Transport and Newspaper Guild.

PAC Director Jack Kroll reminded the group that PAC has active, functioning bodies in every state except North Dakota, Nevada and Mississippi, though individual unions have engaged in political action in those four states. (In North Dakota, more than 200 representatives of the CIO, AFL and the Farmers' Union Non-Partisan League met recently and formulated plans for the November elections. County, precinct, ward and block committees are to be set up.)

Kroll pointed out—and his advice was echoed by several delegates—that there are five steps necessary to successful political action within each international:

Responsibility of staff members to their respective unions for political action; assignments of a definite number of staffers to PAC work with no other duties; functioning of local officers with PAC; full registration, checking of membership lists against lists of registered voters; participation of all local unions in state, city and county council PACs so that work can be coordinated.

KROLL reminded his listeners of the success of local PACs in many areas last November.

He cited as examples Kentucky, Indiana (including Indianapolis, where a mayoralty was won), Ohio (including Cincinnati, home of Sen. Robert A. Taft, and Cleveland), upstate New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania (including the Pittsburgh area). He cautioned the representatives that all was not completely rosy, since proportional representation was defeated in New York City and since a Congressional fight was lost in Eastern Pennsylvania.

He then noted that there will be 43 state legislature elections this year; 32 gubernatorial ballots and 400 municipal votes, in addition to the choice of Senators, the entire House of Representatives and the President.

PAC's specific program for 1948 was brought out further on the Columbia chain's "Cross-Section, USA." There, Kroll joined in discussing political action with Harvey W. Brown, chairman of the Machinists' Non-Partisan League; Byrl A. Whitney, director of the Education and Research Bureau of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, and Alex Rose, Liberal Party official, vice president of the AFL Hatters and a member of the administrative Committee of the AFL Labor's League for Political Education.

Kroll declared: "We will not be diverted from our main objective of electing a progressive Congress in 1948. We oppose a third party in 1948 because we believe it is poorly timed and will do nothing more than split progressive forces at a time when unity is of prime importance.

"In the past five months, we have recruited 200,000 volunteer block workers. We are aiming at 1,000,000 workers. With them, PAC will be active in all Congressional districts where our members live. But, special attention will be given to the 154 marginal districts where 1946 Congressmen were elected by small margins.

"Financing of PAC rests on voluntary dollar contribution drives. If the cost of living continues up, of course, more workers won't have that buck to spare. However, we look to the greatest collection in history.

"We believe our program benefits all Americans. We believe the American people will turn in a registration of 75 million, and a 60 million vote needed in 1948."

KROLL declared "our legislative program—or platform—includes the Marshall Plan and a strengthened United Nations, a conference on world disarmament. We are opposed to universal military training. We will emphasize price control and rationing, a substantially higher minimum wage, broadened social security and health programs, adequate housing and we also stand for progressive taxation, federal aid to education, conservation of our human and natural resources and advancement of the civil rights of all citizens and, of course, repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act."

Asked by the announcer for further comment on the third party candidacy of Henry A. Wallace, Kroll declared: "For any political party to be successful, there must be a substantial organized base and Mr. Wallace's movement does not have that . . . Wallace is a certain loser."

First reaction to the action of the CIO Executive Board and PAC in rejecting a third party in 1948 came from two state CIO groups, the general executive board of the CIO Furniture Workers and the delegates to the District 6 Council of the Electrical Workers.

Meeting in Harrisburg, the Pennsylvania State CIO rejected the Wallace third party. Said State Pres. Harry Boyer: "We refuse to let our strength be split by any third party. The Pennsylvania AFL has also rejected Wallace."

Meeting in Louisville, the Kentucky CIO voted unanimously in favor of the CIO executive board's anti-third party stand and also for the PAC board's resolution.

Kentucky and Louisville CIO and PAC recently scored an outstanding victory in the State elections, helping elect Earle Clements governor during a campaign in which the Republicans attempted to make an issue of Clements' vote in Congress against the Taft-Hartley law.

THE general Furniture Workers board voted to call upon the "membership and officers to mobilize behind the candidacy and program of Henry Wallace in order to return to the paths of peace, progress and plenty."

A UE District 6 statement said the delegates voted support for a statement by the international officers which reaffirmed the autonomous rights of CIO international unions. Opposition to this statement in behalf of union autonomy came only from Locals 613 and 638, which represent about 2000 members. "The autonomy statement makes it clear that UE intends to preserve the right of CIO international unions to make their major policy decisions while at the same time working with PAC on election campaigns.

"Another resolution passed, with only Locals 613 and 638 dissenting urged all locals to seriously discuss the Wallace candidacy."

In Hartford, Conn., the City Industrial Union Council, 90% of whose membership belongs to the CIO Electrical Workers, unanimously indorsed the PAC and CIO stand against the third party.

PAC Proud Of Block Drive

Here is the statement issued by CIO's Political Action Committee:

The work of PAC is clearly defined in the resolution adopted by the CIO Executive Board. We commend the CIO Executive Board on the position it has taken in opposition to a third party and approve its action. All of our time and resources shall be given in full support of this resolution.

The translation of these decisions into the practical everyday work of political action requires, above all, strong organization. Just as our economic strength rests on the strength of our trade union organizations, our political strength can be measured only in the strength of our political organization.

We, therefore, renew our campaign to develop political action along established political lines by building even greater our block, ward and precinct organization. We note with deep satisfaction the advances made in our campaign to secure one million PAC volunteer block workers. We have already reached the 200,000 mark and we are confident that hundreds of thousands more will enlist. We regard these block workers as the shock troops in the battle of 1948, as the vanguard in the drive for good citizenship.

IT is to these people that we turn in our effort to bring out a maximum registration and vote in 1948. Experience has taught the American people that progressive government, actively working in behalf of its interests, can only be achieved when the people turn out to vote. No clearer demonstration of this fact can be shown than the 1946 elections when less than 35 out of a potential of 91 million people bothered to vote. This resulted in the reaction-ridden 80th Congress.

We firmly believe that the pressing issues of soaring inflation, housing and the Taft-Hartley Act will arouse the American people and produce the national registration of 75 million and the 60-million vote required to assure progressive government. We pledge all of our resources to attain this objective. We know that an untapped reservoir of votes rests within the ranks of our own movement which is greater than the vote of any third party.

WE call, too, upon all local union, city, county and state political action committees to search out the best qualified candidates for public office. The CIO Political Action Committee is devoted to the highest type of progressive government in every section of our national life, from the lowest municipal council post to the highest national office.

We call attention to the 43 state legislature elections, the 32 gubernatorial elections, the 400 municipal elections and the host of county elections scheduled for 1948. We urge that all CIO-PAC groups actively engage in these elections by presenting for office, after careful examination, the highest caliber of candidate.

FROM its birth, PAC has urged maximum participation in primary elections. We know that only when the people take a hand in the selection of candidates by both major parties will the people stand a chance to elect honest, progressive representatives on Election Day. This fact is more impressive because in certain sections of the nation, primary elections are tantamount to general elections. We urge continued and increased participation in all primary elections on a local, state and national level.

We recognize, too, that the success of our political organization depends upon adequate finances. Through the evil statutes of the Taft-Hartley law, the enemies of organized labor seek to deny American workers their basic constitutional rights to engage in political action and finance such activity. The members of CIO have no intention of living as second-class citizens.

For funds necessary to carry out CIO's political action work, we shall turn to our members, their friends and families, who form the core of our organization and are the bulwark of our strength. The outstanding success achieved in our 1947 voluntary contribution drive demonstrates the wholehearted support they have given. The 1948 PAC voluntary contribution campaign will begin immediately.

Taft Is Troubled By Stassen's Invasion Of His Own Ohio Preserve

HAROLD E. STASSEN, avowed candidate for President, is under the skin of Robert A. Taft, avowed candidate for President.

It's all because Mr. Stassen, former Governor of Minnesota, had the temerity to enter his name in the Ohio Presidential preference primary. As every ward heeler knows, Ohio is supposed to be the sole possession of Robert A. Taft and a veritable "no trespassing" sign had been erected on the Ohio border (Taft himself is only a few blocks inside that border when he's home in Cincinnati, but he's in Ohio, nevertheless).

THE Washington Post (and other papers) reported at length on a visit Robert A. made to Harold E. in the Minnesotan's suite (700-702) at the Washington Statler. "From all indications," the Post reporter reported, "Taft was not in a benign mood."

"He told Stassen that party harmony would be damaged in the Buckeye state if he (Stassen) went in there; there was danger that the result, instead of being a Taft-Stassen fight, might be a pro-Taft or anti-Taft battle.

"Stassen, according to the story, explained to Taft that he wanted to go into Ohio to show that he was not running for Vice President and to show, also, that he could stand up against a man as powerful as the State's senior senator.

"Why, Taft wanted to know, did he not also go into New York and prove that he could stand up against Gov. Thomas E. Dewey?

"'Stassen's answer was reported to be that it wasn't necessary—that Dewey was slipping."

(Note to Mr. Stassen: In 1944, Taft was reelected by 17,989 votes, or 0.53% of the total Ohio Senatorial vote of 2,983,219.)

IN New Jersey, Republicans are pretty irked at each other.

Gov. Driscoll and the main state party leaders have "dumped" Sen. Alfred Hawkes (R., N. J.), former NAM head, because "he couldn't be reelected anyway," and have backed another candidate as the slated choice in the coming primary.

Rep. Fred Hartley took a few minutes off from attending management banquets to mutter something about "dictatorship" and ran back into the banquet hall just in time for the dessert.

'HOFFMAN RAID' DISGRACEFUL

Four agents of the Federal Government swooped down on the Washington office of the CIO United Public Workers last week.

They were armed with blank subpoenas of questionable validity.

They did not present credentials to prove that one was a deputy U. S. marshal and that the others were employes of the Clare E. Hoffman subcommittee on Labor and Education.

They demanded that UPW's negotiations director and an office secretary turn the union's records over to them.

They told workmen, who were moving the union's office equipment to its new headquarters in New York, that they could not remove an addressograph machine from the office.

They wrote the names of the negotiator and the secretary on the blank subpoenas and ordered them to appear before Hoffman's Committee.

The committee then questioned the union representatives regarding their "loyalty."

This disgraceful performance was carried out in the typical Hoffman tradition. It typified the kind of thinking which caused Hoffman to summon before his committee for questioning two Washington newspapermen who wrote stories which Hoffman considered "unfriendly."

Last fall, Hoffman had the effrontery to order the arrest of Emil Mazey, now secretary-treasurer of the CIO Auto Workers, because Mazey criticized Hoffman's conduct of a subcommittee hearing.

What was behind the "raid" in which civil rights were ignored and ordinary courtesies disregarded?

Negro Workers Out on Strike

About 1500 poorly paid Negro employes of the Government Services, Inc., cafeterias went on strike Jan. 5 in an effort to force GSI to negotiate a wage increase proposal.

GSI took the position that it would not meet with the union because its officers had not filed non-Communist affidavits.

Hoffman, whose record for settlement of management-labor disputes wins him a rating of zero-minus, poked his nose into the controversy. Then Labor Secy. Schwellenbach undertook a White House-ordered study of the strike and Hoffman's committee questioned Schwellenbach's right to step into the dispute.

William S. Tyson, Labor Dept. solicitor, testified that the Taft-Hartley Act permitted GSI to bargain with the union.

Even Denham Says It's OK

General Counsel Denham of NLRB, who has demonstrated all too frequently that he isn't exactly in love with unions, testified that there is no "specific prohibition" in the T-H Act to prevent negotiations with a non-complying union.

And while all the pallavering was going on, the strikers, who need a wage increase badly, were "pounding the bricks" in the worst of Washington's nasty winter weather.

To make the picture a bit clearer we add these facts:

Government Services, Inc., is a non-profit corporation whose trustees are officials of the Federal Government.

GSI for 10 years contended that the NLRB had no jurisdiction over its relationships with its employes. Then, after T-H was enacted, it refused to bargain because UPW chose not to use the services of NLRB.

To us—and to the CIO Executive Board which indorsed the strike—it looks like a clear case of Federal officials engaging in union-busting.

Hoffman's boys were just a bit more bold than some of the others.

Senator Bob Looked Just Ducky In Knitted Outfit

By ALLAN L. SWIM

WASHINGTON is frequently spoken of as a city of bombast, bamboozle and plain old baloney.

It's a city of intrigue—a city in which the double cross is as well known as the Red Cross.

Every other guy you meet is a big shot (real or imagined) and nine out of every 10 persons you talk with peddle a bit of "inside information" about what's cooking in government.

But there's another side of Washington—the social side. And the society writers pull out all the stops when they chronicle the affairs of the big-wigs.

THERE was a gushy little tidbit in the Washington News the other day about the "T" portion of the T-H Team. It was written by Evelyn Peyton Gordon and it said:

"Don't you think that wearing a sweater to a cocktail party, losing your temper with a colleague, remembering folks' names and smiling broadly, indicates that a guy is humanizinz? Well I certainly do. And Sen. Robert A. Taft, who is by way of being a candidate for the presidential nomination, is sure humanizing!

"Saw him Sunday afternoon at a cocktail party, looking very much taller than he used to seem, and sporting a hand-knit—Mrs. Taft knits and knits and knits; for husband, sons and grandchildren — grey cable-stitch sweater under an equally natty grey tweed jacket.

"He was laughing, joking, hands in pocket and was rosy from either his morning golf game . . . or more likely a walk in the snow."

YOU think that's simply fascinating? Well just listen to this—written by Mary Van Rensseler Thayer in the Washington Post:

"Though inventor and wartime Rear Admiral Luis de Florez is probably busy these days evolving plastic bookbindings for Doubleday, Doran, he mushed to Washington especially for the Navy Ball. Whimsical Luis brought along a pocketful of his favorite invention—a tiny battery tipped with an electric light which turns on automatically and burns brightly when submerged in water.

"The batteries were used on trial balloon runs and on life preservers during the war, but light up with equal abandon when plunked in champagne or Scotch."

Mrs. Harry Truman was intrigued by the gadget, so "Luis raced through the snow to a cache he keeps in the Naval Hospital, and in 16 minutes flat brought back enough batteries to pleasure the President for a year!"

OF course, if you're looking for prime examples of snobbery you grab for the society page.

Writer Gordon of the News recently hammered this one out on her trusty typewriter:

"The Ritz-Carlton hotels the world over have been stopping places for royalty. But the Carlton in Washington had a handful of same lunching there the other day. Czar James Caesar Petrillo and Czar John L. Lewis both glared as they settled themselves at separate tables in the smart dining room.

"The fastidious patrons dropped their eyes and daintily sipped clam broth and wondered why the Carlton had to put up with such."

NOW, we don't want anybody to get the idea that we're opposed to hand-knitted sweaters or little gadgets which glow when dunked in grog.

We don't give a hang how many eyes "drop" when John L. and J. Caesar decide to stuff their tummies with good food.

It's just that we think it ridiculous to waste so much newsprint on glorification of the caste system.

And we'll bet a short beer that it will take more than a knit garment to humanize Senator Bob!

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP BY YOMEN

How can we prove that wage increases are really Un-American?

Bi-Partisan Blunderbund

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch points out editorially that if Congress scuttles the European Recovery Program by failing o vote adequate appropriations, losers will be the United States as well as Europe:

On Capitol Hill, a blind blunderbund is being rallied against the Marshall plan. There is a bipartisan banding together of willful men who, if the battle goes their way, will endanger the United States as well as Western Europe.

Under the leadership of Ohio's Senator Taft, these men are determined to cut as much as two billion dollars from the already sharply reduced sum of $6,800,000,000 asked by the President and the Secretary of State for the financing of the first 15 months of the aid program.

It was disappointing to see Senator Vandenberg join these saboteurs to the extent of advocating removal of the program from the control of Secretary Marshall. Now come reports that the United States Ambassador to London, Lewis Douglas, has joined in this move.

But then, he is mentioned as the probable administrator of the fund should it be taken out of the hands of his present superior. More discouraging is Mr. Taft's boast that from 12 to 18 Democrats will vote for a stiff slice off the requested sum.

IF anything, the Administration's figure is low. Originally, the 16 nations assembled in Paris asked for considerably more. They were told, however, that Congress would have to be appeased. So, out came the extra-fine-toothed combs. Everything was slashed to what the State Department believed to be the minimum. Other experts, however, feared that the estimates had been cut to the verge of self-defeat. And now the senatorial cabal would do more hacking.

So long as inflation here and abroad goes unchecked, the cost of the Marshall plan is more likely to rise above the estimates than to fall below them. And to appropriate less than is necessary for the success of the program would be folly, indeed.

That really would be pouring money down a rat-hole because it would mean relief without recovery. No wonder Mr. Marshall told Congress it would be better to make no appropriation at all.

BELLOWERS like Senator Bridges, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, had better realize that in this case they are not playing with a pork-barrel rivers and harbors bill. Europe—and especially continental Europe—simply does not have the means to rehabilitate itself economically. If, unaided, it succumbs to its paralyzing disease, the United States cannot hope to escape the general contagion, nor can Latin America.

Without European markets and European production, the Western Hemisphere cannot continue as a blissful island of capitalism. This may be putting the matter on the most crass level, but that may be the level on which it becomes understandable to the neo-isolationists who parade their short-sighted insularity in the gray garments of thrift.

If American aid is withheld or rendered only inadequately, Marshal Stalin will not need the Red Army for the conquest of the continent.

The Little Guy With Big Ideas

EMILIO, who decided at 16 that he would be a "soldier in the ranks of labor," was in serious trouble.

He had put his thoughts down on paper—and this displeased the King of Italy.

So Emilio was tossed into jail.

There was no freedom of expression in Italy back in those days—back in 1906—and freedom was one thing Emilio much desired.

Emilio, after being released, decided to leave his native Italy behind and migrate to the United States—the land of the free and the home of the brave.

EMILIO found the United States not to be exactly what he had expected it to be.

He found that trade unionists were scorned and harried — and frequently beaten.

That, however, didn't keep him from becoming active in the labor movement.

His first target became the sweatshop conditions in the garment trade, a trade Emilio followed as a tailor. This led him into many difficulties.

CINCINNATI police attempted to keep Emilio and his fellow unionists from holding meetings, but they finally found a place for their sessions.

Then the utility company began shutting off the lights during the middle of meetings. The unionists carried on by candlelight.

Gains came hard in those days. There were long, bitter strikes nearly every year. Unionists were pushed around by "the law."

But gains were made, and Emilio was pleased by the progress of the clothing workers during the 1920s.

And when Franklin D. Roosevelt was elected Emilio thought the "century of the common man" had dawned.

ANOTHER enemy for Emilio dawned on the horizon. It was fascism, which was tearing Europe apart and threatening the world.

Emilio was an active anti-fascist long before Pearl Harbor—and during the war he served long and faithfully in the Office of War Information.

Italy surrendered and Emilio, recalling his youth, became an active member of the American Committee for Italian Relief. He collected funds, clothing and food for the people of war-torn Italy.

EMILIO retired from the active ranks of labor a couple of weeks ago—retired at 65 after many years of hard work.

Hundreds of Amalgamated Clothing Workers members who had worked with the small, gentle-faced man gathered to pay tribute to him. They listened attentively as he said:

"On leaving my post, I have the satisfaction of saying that our workers have proved themselves worthy of their citizenship in industry.

"You are no longer the slaves of yesteryears, the downtrodden of the past. This is now only a memory. You are the builders of a new social structure which must assure peace, justice and true democracy to the world, because, as you know, there is no true democracy when freedom and justice are lacking."

THE little guy who fought for freedom and justice in two countries—the little guy who fought for the underdog—sat down.

His friend of many years, Jack Kroll, PAC director and Ohio CIO Council president, rose to his feet and said:

"The world is a much better place because Emilio Grandinetti was here."

That was Jack's tribute to Emilio—a little guy with big ideas.

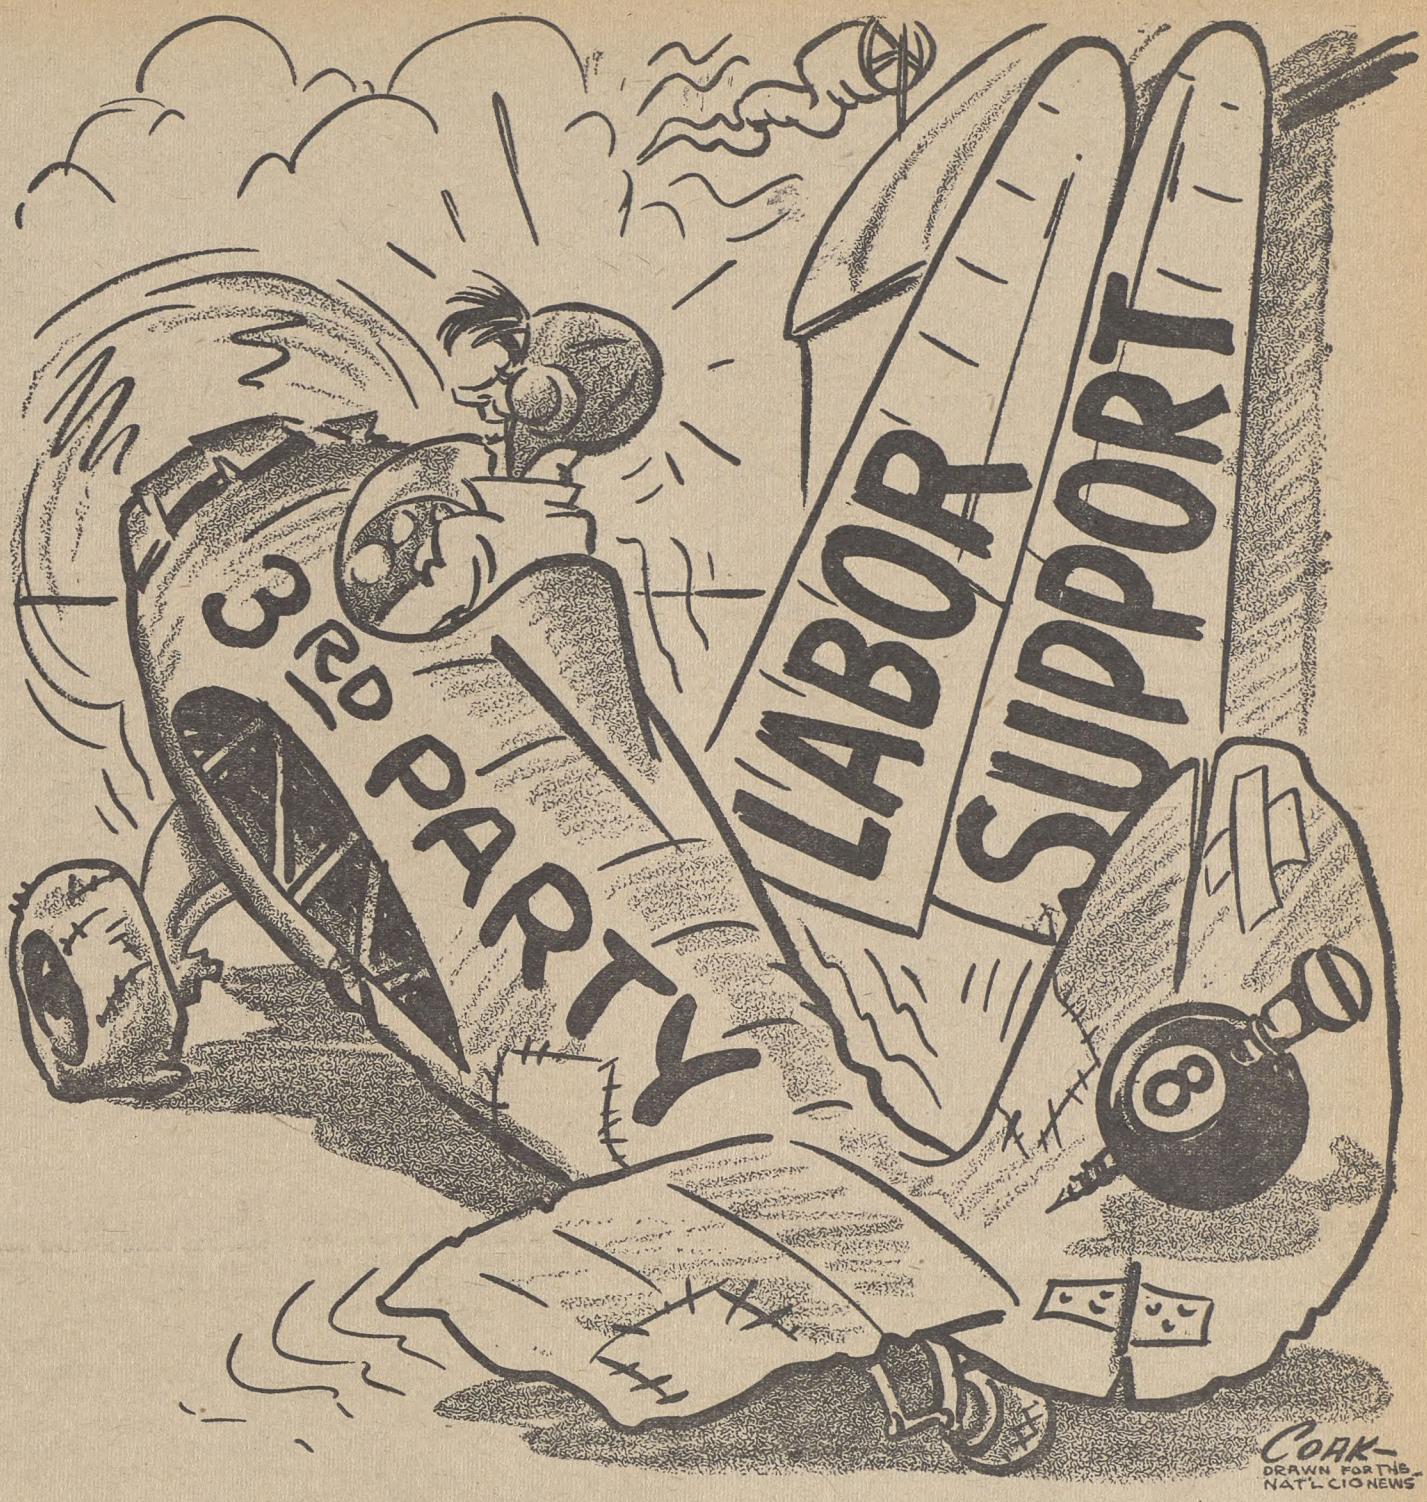
GOING NOWHERE FAST



Robert W. Johnson:

'Set Off Firecracker in Top Industry's Face' With Book

CAN YOU name a big Businessman, head of the world's largest concern in one particular field who is at the same time one of labor's strongest champions?

This "tycoon extraordinary," says Jack H. Pollack, writing in This Week Magazine, is Robert Wood Johnson, head of Johnson & Johnson, manufacturers of surgical dressing and health aids.

"A slender, dapper, boyish 54, Johnson is a complex personality," who is "a constant headache to more conservative fellow industrialists," says Pollack.

As author of "Or Forfeit Freedom," Johnson "set off a firecracker in top industry's face," by this controversial book, reports Pollack, which caused CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey to wisecrack: "When Bob Johnson wrote his book, he forfeited his freedom to be president of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers."

HERE are some other things Pollack tells about Johnson:

"The Sultan of Surgical Supplies made Congress wince when he testified against legislative proposals for a 65c minimum wage—as being too low! Though many employers and law-makers oppose any minimum at all, J. & J.'s outspoken board chairman championed a 75c minimum, arguing that no American family could now exist on less than $30 a week.

"'If a businessman can't pay a living wage, he ought to get out of business,' insists the boss whose company grew from a mustard plaster until it now does a 100-million-dollar annual volume.

"'The eleven million people earning less than a subsistence living are a liability to society, which must meet the deficit to them and their families through charity and subsidies. Why not avoid this waste and pay the bill at its source with a living wage?'

"Johnson himself pays the highest wage in the industry—base rates run up to $1.62½ an hour in many of his 15 plants that dot the globe. . . ."

HERE'S another surprising quote from this unique tycoon:

"Every time I hear the term 'common labor,' it hits me in the belly. When a job is classified as 'common labor' it means management has not learned how to do it well. No labor is common. Didn't Jesus labor as a carpenter?

Johnson claims that management's first obligation should be to its customers, Pollack writes, "then to its workers (he calls them 'industrial operators') and lastly to its stockholders.

"Unenthusiastic about the Taft-Hartley Act, he complains, 'Whoever heard of good employee relations being legislated from Washington'?"

Pollack points out that while labor leaders have lauded Johnson's social-mindedness, "they are wary of his excessive paternalism," and call attention to the fact that not all J. & J. plants are as high-paying as the ultra-modern "showcases" in New Brunswick, N. J.

ABOUT these, however, Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers' Union, which represents many of J. & J.'s 14,000 picked employes, is quoted as saying: "The cooperative spirit at New Brunswick shows what can be done when enlightened management is receptive to a program of responsible unionism."

Supporters of Johnson, writes Pollack, "contend that his business idealism adds up to hardheaded realism. But critics argue that J. & J.'s non-conformist chief 'makes grandstand plays to apple-polish the labor crowd.'

"Unperturbed by squabbles over his policies, Johnson, in less restless moments, leans back in his chair, hooks his thumbs in his suspenders and ponders American history.

"Listen to him: 'You know, it's a pity the craftsman has disappeared. Remember Paul Bunyan who was a hired hand, not a lumber owner? A business is really made up of persons, not buildings, machines and money in the bank! We've got the tools for a Better America. Darn it, we Americans have got to learn how to live and work together or else we'll forfeit freedom.'"

Rieve To Present CIO Anti-Inflation Aims To Congress

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE event organized labor has been waiting for—presentation to Congress of CIO's official proposals to cure the nation's economic ills—was scheduled to occur this week before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, will make the presentation.

He was scheduled to appear and a number of indications that must have been making the people madder and madder every day at industry and Congress. Events included:

• The Gallup Poll showed that 51% of the people favor a return to rationing and price control and that 41% oppose their return (8% expressed no opinion).

The Gallup organization recalled that more than a year before OPA was inaugurated the majority of Americans were in favor of controls, rationing.

• Profit statements by big corporations, including U. S. Steel and the Big 4 packers, made people stand aghast (so did double talk on the NAM's radio program just preceding the CIO's "It's In The Family").

• Average industrial weekly wages abetted by increased year-end industrial activity, rose to $52.51 for December. But, the workers had to work longer hours—an average of 41.1—and, according to the Dept. of Labor, "further sharp price increases reduced the gain in real earnings to small proportions." ($52.51 is worth about $31 in 1939 purchasing power.)

• Federal per capita tax revenue, excluding payroll taxes, rose 677% from 1940 to 1947.

• Several CIO unions appeared before the Senate committee, giving their unions' anti-inflation programs.

But, the people still had a sense of humor and laughed and laughed when they saw or heard of these items:

• If one has the money—and almost no one has—it is now possible in many swank liquor stores to get champagne in every size of container — nip (6½ oz.), pint (13 oz.; why a champagne pint is smaller than the customary 16 oz. we don't know), imperial pint (16 oz., ah, maybe that's it—the champagne for warmongers), bottle (26 oz.), magnum (2 bottles), and from there on they go Biblical: Jeroboam (4 bottles), Rehoboam (6 bottles), Methuselah (8 bottles), Salmanazar (12 bottles), Balthazar (16 bottles), Nebuchadnezzar (king size).

• If one has the money—and almost no one has—there are plenty of "luxury" items on the shelves of grocers—in fact, such sales are off 30%. Stuff like canned caviar, lobster, crab meat, oysters, imported sardines, anchovies, spiced fruits.

• The only burlesque theater in Dayton, Ohio, has cut prices from $1.10 to 85c—or should we say stripped prices?

• The Magazine of Wall St. chortled: "The preliminaries are almost over. The lines of new materials, financing, labor are all being drawn. There will be enough work for decades—prosperity for all—including Russia."

* * *

U. S. Steel announced it has netted (that's profits after taxes and all that) $126,704,272 in 1947—as compared with $88,622,475 in 1946.

Note to those who say labor isn't producing: U. S. Steel said its workers—members of the CIO Steelworkers, of course, produced 20,300,430 tons of steel products in 1947, compared with 15,181,719 in 1946 and 16,812,650 in 1929.

Last week, the CIO Packinghouse Workers, who are seeking a 29c an hour wage increase in negotiations which reopen on 30 days' notice, took notice of the profits of the Big 4 packers—Swift, net of $34,335,000; Armour, more than $30,000,000; Wilson, $15,500,000; Cudahy, $7,121,000.

The union recalled that the percentage return on each dollar of the Big 4's investments in 1946—when excess profits taxes were higher—was 11.2%. For 1947, when finally estimated, it may run above 20%.

* * *

The CIO groups which testified before the Senators were UE, Food-Tobacco and Maritime Committee. Their contentions:

UE: Russ Nixon, Washington representative, told the committee what his union wants:

"The present inflation can only be brought under control by restoration of general overall price ceilings, supported by the power to ration and to subsidize production of food and other necessities

"We feel the Administration and Congress have been seriously derelict in dealing with this matter. The President asks only for 'stand-by powers,' as though this problem were an 'iffy' matter . . . The Administration-Barkley Bill illustrates a feeble, too little, too late, compacent approach . . . The Republicans, with few exceptions, continue their support of the position taken by American Big Business . . .

"The only bill now before the Senate which fulfills these (UE's proposals) requirements is S-1923, introduced by Sen. Glen Taylor (D., Ida.)."

* * *

FTA: This union made its main presentation through the lips of a rank-and-file union member.

The member, Cyrus J. Waud, 36, a worker in the Campbell Soup plant, Camden, N. J., is the father of six children. He attended the session accompanied by his wife, Pauline, and their two eldest daughters, Lois, 11, and Ruth, 9. He makes $40 a week.

Waud's story: "You fellows have got to help me out"; his family budget includes no movies, no smokes or drinks, no bus rides for the kids, who should have 23 quarts of milk a week, get only 12. (Two quarts of milk cost 45c in Camden.) Savings are $20, but the Wauds owe $300. Clothes? Can't remember when they've been able to buy any new ones.

In contrast, he said, Campbell Soup's profits are soaring.

Asked what he wanted, Waud called for a rollback of prices to 1946. He also wanted rationing and price control

FTA gave the committee a statement, in which it asked for enactment of the Taylor Bill, which it said "provides for immediate action to freeze prices at a November 1947 level. Furthermore, it makes this action possible by providing for subsidies. It approaches a fair rollback by providing for bringing down food prices to the lowest level paid by consumers in 1947. Finally, the Taylor bill would establish effective administration and enforcement of the program it proposes."

Sen. Homer Capehart (R., Ind.), who manufactures radios, asked Waud what he thought about rolling back wages as well as prices.

"Can't you see we're underfed?" Waud replied. "What good would that do us?"

* * *

Maritime Commitee: Hoyt Haddock, executive secretary, made the presentation of this CIO group's stand:

He analyzed various bills before the Congress and said the "Taylor Bill is the only one which provides effective tools to meet the problem of runaway prices."

In Pontiac. Mich.. resentment against inflation triumphed over zero weather as hundreds of consumers turned out with shopping bags and baskets to deplete the store of goods stocked in the new Co-op Distribution Center.

A total of 917 families, mostly CIO Auto Workers from the big GM plants centered here, purchased $5510 worth of groceries and appliances during the first 18 hours the Center was open for business.

In all, 678 pounds of Co-op Coffee were sold.

Kaiser Dood It

They laughed when Henry Kaiser sat down to make autos.

Last week, Kaiser-Frazer, Henry Kaiser's auto-making firm, announced its profits figures for 1947. After taxes, said K-F, the firm cleared $19,505,131, as compared to a net loss of $19,284,680 in 1946, first full year of operations.

Green Blue?

Illinois Republicans are casting dark glances at Gov. Dwight Green.

A poll by the non-partisan Better Government Association reports that almost three out of every four Illinois Republicans who have voted in a statewide poll of GOP leaders believe Green's candidacy for a third term will weaken the party's chances for retaining control at Springfield next November.

PRETTY THINGS: These comely consumers were among the crew of co-op stalwarts who greeted the hundreds of shoppers storming the new Co-op Distribution Center, Pontiac Mich. Operating as a streamlined co-op mass distribution warehouse, designed to fight inflation with direct action, the Center marketed $5,510 worth of groceries and appliances in its first 18 hours of operation. Co-op experts are aiding in the operation.

Paying High Prices For Meat Is Public Service--It Says Here

QUIT grumbling about those high meat prices—you're really doing a public service by paying them!

Or that's what the American Meat Institute is about to tell us in advertisements to appear in 395 daily newspapers.

While Congress pondered growing demands for price control and rationing of meat, the institute, says Public Relations Director Norman Draper, decided it had better inform the public of the real lowdown. He says:

"It is a long-range operation. This program is undertaken to correct public misunderstanding, because if the meat industry is to have maximum freedom to continue serving America efficiently, it is necessary to build greater public knowledge and appreication of what the industry does."

By "maximum freedom," he apparently meant freedom from price or rationing control. (Since June, 1946, when OPA was ended, meat prices have more than doubled.)

The first ad takes the thesis that a pretty lady, buying her pot roast from her meat dealer, was really helping the farmer. Then, inferentially, the institute puts all the blame on the farmers for high prices, since it says: "the packers' profit, after paying all expenses, averages only a fraction of a cent a pound, and meat prices always are established by the demand for the available supply of meat."

The Federal Trade Commission, as early as 1920, declared that "the packers make use of the word, 'cent', 'fraction of a cent', 'only a few cents', in the knowledge that the public regards a 'cent' as a very small element of value. This practice obscures the real facts as to profits. A profit of a cent per unit, far from being a small profit, may be an exorbitant profit."

The FTC said the way to find out whether a "cent" profit is reasonable — whether on the pound or on the dollar of sales —"is by aggregating such profit and comparing it with the capital invested in the enterprise".

Bro. and Sister reader, take a gander at the story on meat profits on this page and also the chart up there at the right hand side.

Carrots Decontrolled, Bunny Meat High

An intriguing argument for the return of price controls was handed to a group of flabbergasted midwestern Congressmen.

An Illinois rabbit-breeder testified that inexpensive rabbit meat produced in quantities could help force down high meat prices. "But the trouble is," he told the Congressmen, "rabbits need carrots but since the end of OPA carrots have become too expensive to buy for rabbits. Now everybody knows that eating carrots promotes night vision and the reason that rabbits are so prolific is that they can see what they're doing."

maximum rent provisions and protect tenants from illegal eviction. (Under the present law, unless a complaint against an illegal rent increase or eviction is initiated by the tenant, the housing expediter can take no action.)

7. That local rent advisory boards, representative of all interests and required to act only after public hearings, be empowered to make recommendations.

All these provisions, with the exception of the last, are included in the Wagner-Murray bill.

IN ATTACKING the provision of the 1947 Rent Law which allows a "voluntary" 15% increase, Montgomery said: "We believe that Congress placed in the hands of landlords an instrument for frightening and deceiving and . . . coercing tenants into paying 15% higher rents in the belief that this was necessary to keep a roof over their heads after Feb. 29 of this year."

Sen. Harry P. Cain (R.-Wash), subcommittee chairman, retorted majority of the people with whom he had talked were "happy" to pay the increase.

Waybur told the committee that rent "is as inescapable as death or taxes. Families can starve themselves a little, "but under present circumstances they can't reduce their housing a little; they either have it or they are out in the street."

Waybur's testimony, which urged strong controls for the next two years, followed that of a property owner and industrialist, Walter H. Freygang, who demanded an end to eviction controls, because that is the only way "to maintain discipline" among tenants.

"Today the worker in the South (and this is only a little less true in the North)," Edelman testified, "is far less fearful of losing his job than of being put out of his house. And as a rule he has to move if he quits his job or is fired . . . The result is that employers are frequently able to terrorize thoroughly hundreds of employes by the threat, open or implied, that a man's family will be put on the street if he doesn't behave."

Other witnesses appealed for strong controls:

● Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods said that rent controls can be laid aside only when the country has "a lot of rental accommodations . . . We don't have them now." He charged that many landlords are turning in "phony leases on apartments where there are no tenants at all" to get the units freed from rent control.

● Secy. of Commerce Averell Harriman warned that the critical housing shortage made continued rent control imperative. Any elimination or relaxation of controls, he said, would have a "disruptive" effect upon the national economy. He, too, recommended a two-year extension of controls.

● New York's Mayor William O'Dwyer, submitting testimony through a spokesman, hit the 1947 Rent Act as "weak," and pointed out that because of its insufficiency New York State had been forced to pass its own rent legislation.

● Minneapolis Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey echoed O'Dwyer's plea for continued controls—tightened and adequately enforced. Like O'Dwyer, he complained that present eviction restrictions are inadequate and proposed recontrol of properties exempted under the present act. "Congress should recognize the mistake it made in its estimate of the housing situation when it passed the present act and abandon the half-hearted and apologetic approach," he added.

● Sen. Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) also threw his weight behind strong controls for the next two years. In addition to proposals presented by other witnesses, he suggested that local boards be established to hear tenant and landlord complaints.

The subcommittee hopes to have some kind of bill ready to report to the Senate by Feb. 5.

Thanks, J. O.

J. O. McClintock, official of the Chicago Board of Trade, makes things crystal clear.

Defending speculation in the grain market, he said—and we quote:

"The present system of grain marketing adopted the element of speculation which exists in every form of our commercial and economic life and caused it to produce essential factors that must necessarily exist in a desirable plan of grain distribution.

Virginia has a permanent registration—if you pay your poll taxes.

But, the Byrd machine has taken a step to help insure its continuation in power. It has moved for an elimination of the present registration, with names to be enrolled yearly—six months in advance of the election. The poll tax stands, of course.

Sen. Cain said. The Cellar Rent Control bill in the House has been bottled up in Rep. Wolcott's Banking & Currency Committee with no sign of hearings in sight. CIO spokesmen have expressed fear that the Congressmen would await the Feb 29 expiration—or thereabouts—of the present act, and then hurriedly jam through a haphazard piece of legislation.

And just in case you were planning to avoid the rent problem by buying a house, the Commerce Dept. has disclosed that the selling price of the average house last November was $9060—double the 1939 price.

U.S. Bars RadioFor Publisher

THE Federal Communications Commission has put the kibosh on plans of an Ohio newspaper publisher to open radio stations in Mansfield and Lorain.

S. A. Horvitz, who has papers in the two cities, was denied the license on grounds that his planned stations couldn't be trusted to operate "in the public interest."

Horvitz was shown at the hearings as a man who carried a big axe in his papers—the only ones in the two cities—against other stations. His papers refused to carry program listings of Mansfield's only station, WMAN; refused to carry ads listing the programs; and refused to carry ads from manufacturers who sponsored programs carried by the local station.

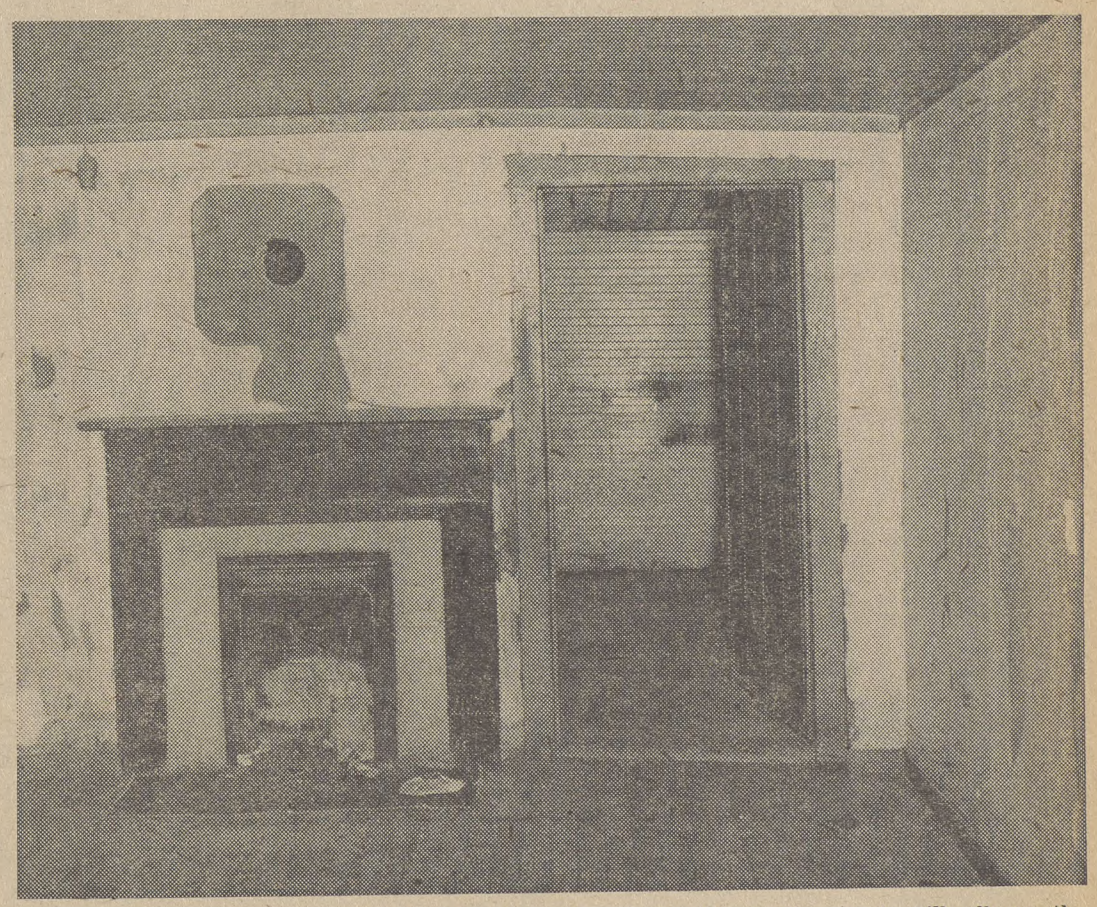
Backing up the complaints against Horvitz's ideas on public service was Julius Uehlein, president of the Lorain CIO Council.

The local CIO official argued that a license for Horvitz would pave the way for monopoly control of information reaching the people of Lorain and Mansfield.

Uehlein told The CIO News that the two papers have frequently been anti-labor in their handling of the news.

At the same time the FCC turned down a license application from another Ohio group, the Fostoria Broadcasting Co. The commission noted that Laurence Harry, head of the proposed station, has announced he'd carry no controversial talks on his station during the first year of operation.

FCC said it was pretty clear that Harry failed "to understand the responsibility of a broadcast licensee to use the facility as a medium for community service and education "



COMPANY LANDLORD: CIO Textile Workers at Hadley-People's Co., Siler City, N. C., are threatened with eviction from inelegant company houses such as is pictured here is they dare strike to enforce demands for the 9c raise won in mills all over the South. Adding insult to injury, the company boosted rents 500%. Since the houses are not in a rent control area, they are immune to federal rent regulations.

York, Pa., Papers Say

PA. CIVIL AIR PATROL PLANS SPY SYSTEM

"STATE Civil Air Patrol Asks Industrialists, Businessmen to Aid Spy System Formation," says a three-column headline over a front page story in the York, Pa., Gazette and Daily. The York paper is a liberal and commercial publication, not connected with any labor organization.

The headline is supported by the following story:

"Pennsylvania industrialists and businessmen are being asked by the Pennsylvania wing of the Civil Air Patrol to aid in establishing a gestapo-like spy system with tenacles reaching into every place of employment in the state.

"The industrial spy system, reminiscent of Hitler's technique in securing information about 'subversives,' would work this way:

"1. Industrialists and business men are asked to enlist at least one member of their firms in the Civil Air Patrol.

"2. Such 'enlistees' will be sent to intelligence and security classes and a 'great number' will attend the Army Counter Intelligenee school at Holabird Signal depot, Baltimore.

"3. After completing the course, the Army-trained informants will return to their jobs and will report to the CAP all persons considered by their employers 'to have communistic or subversive tendencies.'

"4. The espionage system would be financed in part by contributions from the industrialists and businessmen.

"The plans to transfer Nazi Germany's gestapo system practically intact to the United States were announced by Col. Phillip F. Neuweiler. Pennsylvania CAP commander, in a publicity release received yesterday by The Gazette and Daily.

"In addition to outlining an espionage program, Colonel Neuweiler also indicated in the release that war with Russia was to be considered a probability and that CAP members would be taught 'the Russian language, Russian military tactics, Russian politics and all characteristics of the Russian people.'

"The Federal Bureau of Investigation and the State Police have been asked to screen candidates for the CAP course, the colonel declared.

"The excuse for instituting the espionage program also has been taken from Hitler's book, a study of the publicity release shows. Colonel Neuweiler declares that the United States is in danger of attack, and by implication he names Russia as the attacker. The 'growing menace of communism' naturally was mentioned.

"Many of us in CAP are certain that any open and violent attack against the peace of the United States will be preceded by an intensive enemy-guided 'softening up' campaign utilizing sabotage, propaganda, and many other underground subversive activities.' he declared in the release after stating that CAP courses would be directed against Russia."

A spokesman for the national CAP at Washington, who is also a captain in the U. S. Air Forces, said that the statement issued by the Pennsylvania wing is not in keeping with the national organizations policy.

He added that the release was inaccurate and was further distorted by the newspaper.

The spokesman said that plans of the national organization are in a tentative stage and must get the approval of Central Intelligence Office and the FBI. The plan is not to have CAP members in each plant but to have a man trained in espionage in each CAP unit to be ready to act in a national emergency, he said.

The CAP, he pointed out, is ready to act in cases of natural calamities, such as floods, in so far as the civil aviation facilities are available.

Asked what is being done in the Pennsylvania situation, the spokesman said that a series of Pennsylvania meetings and one in Washington will be held to draw up a program in keeping with national CAP policy.

REP. HOFFMAN (R., MICH.)
Termed "hellbent on breaking the strike" by CIO Public Workers, Hoffman, now conducting an "investigation" of the Government Services, Inc., walkout in Washington, disclaimed a raid on union headquarters by his agents, but apologized for what he said may have been "unauthorized" actions by them.

2 More Unions Vote to Sign

Two additional CIO international unions have decided to file non-communist affidavits and financial statements which are required for unions desiring to use the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

A membership referendum of the CIO Shoe Workers authorized, by a vote of 31,000 to 1,080, the elimination of three vice presidencies to comply. Julius Crane, a vice president, had refused to sign because: "I'm convinced that this provision will create a second-class citizenship in this country. Only union leaders are subjected to the requirement."

The CIO Furniture Workers executive board has also voted compliance with the T-H provisions. Final action on the decision will be referred to the union's national convention June 7.

Name CIO Lawyer To School Board

Harry C. Clark, CIO regional attorney, will become a member of the Kansas City, Mo., school board in the spring.

Under the system in operation in Kansas City for a number of years, both Republican and Democratic county committees approve each other's selections for board vacancies. This double approval is tantamount to election.

A veteran of World War I, Clark won over four candidates on the first ballot, receiving 24 of the 42 votes cast. His name was submitted to the Democratic committee by the Greater Kansas City Industrial Union Council.

Clark also had the support of AFL. One of the committeemen, Andrew Harvey, an official of the AFL Electrical Workers union, praised the labor lawyer, recalling that two years ago Clark was endorsed by 148 organizations as an independent candidate for the board post.

He is not the only CIO man to be advanced in civic affairs in recent weeks in Kansas City. James J. Leary, CIO regional director, and Harold Edwards, assistant district director of the CIO Steelworkers, were named first vice chairman and board members respectively of the Community Chest.

AVC Head

FLAYS NEGRO POLICY OF ARMY, AIR FORCE

CHAT PATERSON, national chairman of the American Veterans Committee, characterized as unsatisfactory letters received from Secretary of Army Royall, Secretary of Navy Sullivan, and Secretary of Air Symington in reply to an AVC plea for abolition of racial discrimination and segregation in the armed forces. The AVC statement was in line with the recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

Paterson said that he had relayed the replies to Secretary of National Defense James Forrestal. He said that he had told Secretary Forrestal that "as matters now stand, the Navy is the only branch of the armed forces which is committed to a policy of non-segregation.

"We feel it is incumbent upon you as Secretary of National Defense, especially in view of the experience gained as Secretary of the Navy, to require every component of our armed services to adopt and practice a policy of non-segregation and non-discrimination * * * *"

Alaska CIO Asks Better Deal For Resident Cannery Workers

THE SECOND annual All-Alaska CIO convention held at Ketchikan, the "salmon capital of the world," has called for action to improve the "deplorable" lot of resident cannery workers in the Territory.

The delegates in a resolution declared the working conditions of this group of cannery workers is "the worst of any group in industrial employment in Alaska" and urged the press and general public to demand fair treatment for them.

The convention called for action to improve the "deplorable" lot of resident cannery workers, declared to be "the worst of any group in industrial employment in Alaska," and urged the press and general public to demand fair treatment for them.

Employers in the fisheries use the resident workers as a convenient pool for casual labor, one resolution stated, when regular employes hired and shipped in from the States are not sufficient. These resident workers are subjected to discrimination of all kinds and working conditions are of the poorest.

Charging that many Alaskan industries totally disregard the Federal Wage-Hour Law, the convention requested the Secretary of Labor to assign an inspector to Alaska to enforce provisions of the Act.

In the political field delegates voted endorsement of Gov. Ernest Gruening for reappointment, asked for statehood for Alaska and pledged cooperation in legislative and political campaigns with AFL unions.

Other action taken dealt at length with the fisheries industry. The convention recommended, among other things, that the fishing industry organize to seek federal assistance on the same basis as farmers. Delegates argued that fishing banks and streams are being depleted while farm lands, including ranges producing livestock in competition with fisheries, are being rehabilitated.

One resolution recommended that Alaska's delegate in Congress, E. L. Bartlett, be given an administrative assistant in Washington.

Murray Protests To Marshall On Greek Anti-Labor Law

THE Americans have a word for it—"fascism."

The "it" is the Greek anti-strike law, passed last December, which permits life sentences for strikers in "illegal" walkouts and death penalties for strike leaders.

Last week, Pres. Murray wrote to Secy. of State George Marshall, strongly urging that the State Department voice the protest of American workers against the Greek law.

Murray said the anti-labor law, which makes even the Taft-Hartley law look like a pink-tea affair, is "completely inimical" to democracy, in Greece or anywhere else.

Makes Charges

He charged that it's the sort of law to be expected of a fascist government; that "rightly or wrongly" many American workers have believed the law couldn't have been passed without an OK from the American mission in Greece; and that the strongest pressure should be placed on the Greek regime to repeal the law.

Text of Pres. Murray's letter to Marshall follows:

"At the unanimous request of the Executive Board of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, which met in Washington January 22-23, I am writing to you to request that the government of the United States lodge a strong protest with the Greek government concerning the vicious anti-labor law passed by the Greek Parliament on December 8, 1947.

"In the six weeks since its passage, every segment of American labor has been tremendously concerned with the implications of this law, which permits the sentencing of strikers to long terms in prison and the execution of strike leaders. In our opinion there is no force in the argument that this law will aid the Greek government in its fight against the guerilla rebels. It is, on the other hand, the type of governmental action which is of tremendous help to the propaganda of these guerillas.

"American labor looks upon this new Greek law as completely inimical to the interest of democracy and to the continued development of a free labor movement. The law is typical of those passed by fascist governments everywhere in the world. Having fought a costly, bloody war against fascism, the workers of the United States, like those throughout the world, are loath to watch without vigorous protest the re-emergence of punitive legislation against union members and union leaders.

"In addition, many CIO members are rightly or wrongly, reaching the conclusion that the government of Greece could not have acted as it did against the labor unions of the Greek without at least the tolerance of the American Mission in that country. A forceful protest by the State Department to the Greek government would instantly help to clarify our position. It would, also, indicate to American labor that our foreign aid program to all of Europe is firmly based on a policy of encouraging in every way possible the fullest expression of the democratic rights of of the common people.

"Failure of the State Department to lodge a vigorous protest against the Greek anti-strike law may very well diminish the support among American industrial workers for the European Relief program. The ERP at the present time has the backing of the overwhelming majority of American workers, who see in it an opportunity to provide economic rehabilitation and a strengthening of the basic democratic foundation of European society.

Dept. Failed

"It is my understanding that the Greek government has indicated that the December 8 law will be applied only in "emergencies." This statement does little to lessen the evils of the legislation.

"I urge that a strongly worded protest from the American government be sent to Greece to demonstrate to the world that the United States stands, as it always has, for the ideals of liberty and economic justice."

CIO Attacks Greek Court-Martial; Hits 'Lack of Information'

CIO has informed the State Dept. of its strong disapproval of a Greek government court-martial of Antonios Ambatielos, secretary of the Federation of Greek Maritime Unions.

Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs, said the State Dept. claimed "a complete lack of information" on the matter, but has asked for a full report from the American embassy in Athens.

Ambatielos, a leading Greek union official, was arrested in the port city of Piraeus on what the Greek seamen's union describes "as trumped-up charges of organizing sabotage."

"Persons court-martialed on such charges face the danger of quick execution if convicted," the Greek union declared.

In Washington, meanwhile, CIO was told by the State Department that the case is being closely watched by American officials in Greece. The Greek government, according to State Department sources, has "assured" American representatives that Ambatielos will not be railroaded but will receive a fair, open trial.

THE case has drawn sharp protests from a number of union officials, including Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers; Pres. Morris Pizer of the United Furniture Workers; Pres. A. F. Whitney of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; and Pres. Alvaney Johnson of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

CIO's protest was made public by Ross in a letter to Hoyt Haddock, head of the CIO Maritime Committee.

"The CIO has continued to make representations to the Greek Government and our State Department concerning labor developments in Greece," Ross said.

HE SAID that Clinton Golden, former vice-president of the CIO Steel Union, had threatened to resign his post as labor adviser to the U. S. Mission in Greece following adoption of the vicious anti-strike law early in December.

Golden was "persuaded to stay on condition that he would receive support from the State Dept. in his efforts to improve the situation," Ross wrote to the Maritime Committee. "I need not tell you that he is very unhappy there and may feel himself compelled to resign in any case."

Complete authority has been given the U. S. Mission by the government "to bring the strongest possible pressure on the Greek government to support Clinton Golden and to obtain repeal of this law," Ross said in his letter.

Carey, Ross To Attend BTU, WFTU Sessions

TWO CIO representatives leave Feb. 4 for Europe for further talks with leaders of the British Trades Union Congress and the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and Michael Ross, director of international affairs for CIO, will visit London and Paris on the trip. CIO Vice-Pres. Frank Rosenblum, a WFTU bureau member, will be unable to make the trip because of local commitments.

The WFTU is scheduled to hold another meeting of its 9-man executive bureau some time this month. Discussion of the Marshall Plan is expected to be a feature of the WFTU session.

At the last WFTU bureau meeting in November, Carey explained the CIO position of support for the foreign aid program, and of CIO's demands that it be free of political strings. He urged that it be upheld by the WFTU on the basis of the world labor group's constitutional pledge to help post-war relief and reconstruction.

Russian and Italian spokesmen on the WFTU bureau opposed placing the matter on the agenda at the last meeting.

The current world labor get-together has been postponed from Feb. 1 to a date later this month.

Last week the British Trades Union Congress demanded that the WFTU set a definite date for the meeting no later than mid-February. If the WFTU fails to call the executive meeting promptly, the British union leaders said, they will move independently to bring together spokesmen for unions in the 16 "Marshall Plan countries" outside the mechanism of the WFTU.

CIO Rallies To Back ERP, Hit By Hoover

THE European Recovery Plan, reeling a bit before the pinch-penny onslaught led by ex-Pres. Herbert Hoover, will get strong support this week from CIO.

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey appears before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Feb. 3 to underline CIO's belief that only a generous, non-political aid program can pull Europe out of its post-war chaos.

Carey's testimony is expected to follow the general outline indicated several weeks ago in CIO Pres. Murray's 10-point-principles letter to the White House.

CIO officials have called for a four-year program, along the lines recommended by the European countries and the Harriman Committee report. It stresses the need for a separate organization to administer the aid to Europe, so that economic help will be divorced from politics and the pressures of changing foreign policies.

MOST serious blow to the Marshall Plan proposals came from Hoover, who indicated that he believed European prosperity is just around the corner—a prediction which American workers heard about their own economic standards during the early thirties.

Hoover urged a cut in the first 15 months' help from $6.8 billion to $4 billion. Hoover's statement was issued from Florida, where he is vacationing.

Even more important, he suggested that the aid program be transferred from a plan for getting the European economic system back on its feet, to a mere international WPA set-up. Hoover urged that no steel or other capital goods be sent to Europe, nor should the U. S. give money to pay for food or other needed supplies from other countries.

CIO has voiced strong opposition to the idea that America act merely to set Europeans up in the apple-selling business, and has similarly emphasized the need for a four-year program so that European countries will be able to do at least a minimum amount of planning for the future.

SECY. MARSHALL, while willing to compromise the issue of who will administer the program, has testified he'll stand pat on demands for the $6.8 billion appropriation.

Congressional committees have heard considerable testimony from spokesmen of private and civic organizations, with most liberal groups indicating strong support for the Marshall Plan.

Some industrialists, however, have urged a paring down of funds and widespread American controls over the affairs of European countries. The Natl. Association of Manufacturers has advocated that no country which fails to promise to end all price controls should receive American help.

And one complained that because neither England nor Holland has any serious Communist "menace," those two nations should get no Marshall Plan assistance!

Lithographers Strike In 3d Mo.

Some 60 CIO Lithographers at two Baltimore printing plants have entered their third month on the picket lines in a fight for reduction of the work week and wage increases.

Closed by the walkout are the National Color Printing Co. and the Crocker Union.

A third Baltimore plant, the Damse Co., ended a 10-day strike with an agreement which reduces the work week to 37½ hours beginning Feb. 1, to 36¼ hours beginning Oct. 1. Other gains were wage increases of $6 and $7 a week, double pay for Saturday and after two hours of overtime on other days, and improved vacation provisions.

HOUSING HOLDUP: Many veterans who managed to get a place to live didn't get very much, this photo-exhibit to be presented to the joint congressional housing committee shows graphically without any room for doubt. On the left is a hole made in a wall by an 8-year-old boy who tossed a baseball. The others show a porch breaking away and a foundation falling apart. Probably those GI pup tents would have been better.

HEATED DISCUSSION: Mrs. Dorothy Darling (left, pointing) was fined $100 by a Philadelphia judge for not furnishing tenants with adequate heat despite city housing commission orders. The expressions on the tenants' faces (in the middle) show how angry they were.

Jewish Committee Drive Backed; Carey Gives ERP's Goals

THE American Jewish Committee has CIO's full support in its campaign "against discrimination and for fundamental freedoms for all men."

That message was sent by Pres. Murray to the AJC's 41st Convention in New York. The Jewish group also heard an address by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who described CIO's own efforts to strengthen American democracy.

"We of the CIO have come to realize that our group interests are closely linked with freedom and prosperity for the entire American people, and for the people of the entire world," Carey told the meeting.

CIO's importance to America, he said, has been to "give the poor and exploited a medium for entering into the true citizenship of our country." As CIO representative on the President's Civil Rights Committee, Carey pointed out, he merely served as spokesman for "millions of unofficial, unpretentious people in the ranks of labor who love and cherish our heritage of civil rights."

Voicing CIO support for foreign aid programs, he told the Jewish Committee that "America's power today is the power of the good neighbor."

CAREY charged that "it would be folly to accept the ideas of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers that we withhold aid from European countries until and unless they adopt an exact duplicate of our free-enterprise economy and promise to eliminate price controls.

"No doctor could write a better prescription for hatred of America, for cynicism about what must be a humanitarian program.

"The CIO stands flatly for an economic aid program without political strings; we want Europe to get on its feet, not to join the Elks or the Chamber of Commerce or the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

"Our aid program must be a guiding light toward an ideal, not a strait-jacket to bind the democratic forces of Europe."

Court Restores Vets' Seniority

Meyer Bernstein, CIO Veterans Committee representative, has called attention of all CIO affiliates to a ruling of the Federal District Court in northern Indiana. The court ruled that a veteran who received a promotion in the basis of time in service is entitled to back date his promotion to the time that it would have come into effect had he not been in uniform.

The case arose out of the suit filed by Gilmer S. Morris, who had been a railroad telegrapher, and a member of the AFL Telegraphers Union before entering the service. While Morris was in service three of his juniors in the South Bend division of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad were promoted to dispatcher.

Upon return to civilian life Morris passed the qualifying exam for dispatcher and was promoted, but was listed below the men over whom he had had as a telegrapher. He asked the court to restore to him seniority he would have earned on the new job if he hadn't been called up.

The court agreed that he was entitled to it. The Selective Service Act which requires that veterans be rehired without loss of seniority, Swygert ruled, takes precedence over the terms of the railroad's contract with the Train Dispatchers Union-AFL which states that seniority shall date from the time of passing the qualifying examination.

Loney Named Head OF UE District 6

Stanley L. Loney, president of CIO Electrical Workers Local 617, Sharon, Pa., was unanimously elected president of the UE District 6 Council at its bi-monthly meeting.

Loney succeeded Thomas J. Fitzpatrick, who resigned to assume his position as recently elected president of UE Local 601. Fitzpatrick in turn was elected vice-president of the District Council, a position formerly held by Loney.

T-H Act Forces S. Car. Strike

Add Columbia, S. C., to the list of cities affected by the Taft-Hartley-provoked strikes.

Some 130 employes of the Shakespeare Fishing Tackle Co. walked out last week when the company refused to negotiate with CIO Steelworkers, which claims to represent a majority. The company's excuse: The union, which has refused to sign T-H affidavits, is not certified by the NLRB. Union offers to conduct a card check or independent election to determine the bargaining agent were rejected by the company.

In addition to seeking recognition of the union, strikers are seeking a 25c hourly wage increase, improved working conditions, seniority rights and grievance structure. W. H. Crawford, USA district director, said the minimum wage in the fishing tackle plant is 60c an hour.

In reply to plant manager V. L. Johnannessen's claim that he knew no reason for the strike, Crawford said the company had been notified of the workers' vote to strike by State Commissioner of Labor R. L. Gamble. Gamble said he had tried in vain to bring about a meeting of company and union representatives.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Brother George Brown, Dir. of Org. International Woodworkers of America, Portland, Ore., reports the union won a representation election at the VanDine & Johnson Lumber Co., Springfield, Ore., by a vote of 18 to 15 for IWA has engaged in nine union security elections during January, resulting as follows:

Bennett Lumber Co., Springfield, 27 for, none against; Northwestern Forest Products, Inc., Springfield, 33 for, 2 against; Fall Creek Lumber Co., Springfield, 69 for, 4 against; Fall Creek Box & Mfg. Co., Springfield, 31 for, 6 against; South Fork Logging Co., Springfield, 42 for, 1 against; Cascade Lumber Terminals, Inc., Springfield, 45 for, 2 against; West Oregon Lumber Co., Springfield, 15 for 1 against; Timber Products, Inc., Harrisburg, Ore., 18 for, none against; East Lynne Lumber Co., Sweet Home, Ore., 22 for, 10 against.

There are innumerable petitions filed for union security elections, but the results of the elections that have been held so far certainly give the lie to the framers of the Taft-Hartley bill that the employes do not want Union Security.

Regional Director James J. Leary, Kansas City, Mo., advises Local 266-8, CIO Woodworkers, won a union security election with 38 out of 39 elegible to vote, casting ballots for union security. One man failed to vote. This won the third union security election, won unanimously by the CIO. The officers of the local were assisted by Brother Henry A. Schwarzott, CIO Field Represenative, in arranging for the election.

Regional Director Ben Henry, Des Moines, Iowa, reports the Marine & Shipping Workers won an election at the Green Coloniel Furnace Co.'s plant in Des Moines by a vote of 72 to 25 for the Independent Furnace Workers 25. Rep. Floyd Pieper was in charge of the campaign for the IUMSWA and is to be complimented for his work in holding this plant in the CIO.

Pres. Willard S. Townsend, of Transport Service Employes, Chicago, has informed us the successful completion of negotiations with the Pullman Co. in behalf of the workers and members of the union. This is a spendid achievement and he should be commended.

The CIO Executive Board met in Washington last week, at which time matters of major importance and of vital concern to our membership were passed upon, among which were declarations to the effect that (1) CIO is in no way committed to any political aspirant; (2) CIO will not support a third party movement in 1948; and (3) declared that we should give our full strength and undivided effort to elect a progressive Congress to support our program—a program for the people.

The board called upon every member and friend to increase their political activity this year and lend support to the progressive policy of the CIO-PAC. Nothing can be gained by division, neither can labor permit others to establish for them a third party movement without being consulted. Any third party movement which is going to speak for labor must emanate from labor. The present move can only tend to divide our people. Whatever we do, we should be united.

The CIO has declared itself in favor of this policy, and everyone who believes in the CIO and its united program will support this policy. It is the only way that we can be effective and have any hope of electing a Congress that will stand forthrightly for human rights, as against greed, avarice and special privileges, which is now being exemplified by the constant rise in profits and cost of living and attacks upon labor. "United We Stand, Divided We Fall," is an old and true slogan. Let us remain united!

'Living Reality'

10 SENATORS OFFER WAGE-HOUR BILL

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

A BILL to give to give "living reality" to the badly-battered U. S. Wage-Hour law was tossed into the Congressional hopper last week by 10 liberal Senators, headed by Sen. Elbert Thomas (D., Utah).

The bill, which quickly gained CIO support, would bring about four major improvements in the present wage-hour law:

1. Lift minimum wages from the present 40c an hour level, which was established in 1940, to a more realistic 75c an hour.
2. Broaden coverage of the wage-hour law by giving protection to all workers engaged in any activity "affecting" interstate or foreign commerce.
3. Abolish exploitation of children in industry and in the big "factory-farms."
4. Extend benefits of the wage-hour provisions to all workers in big industrialized farms.

Joining Sen. Thomas in sponsorship of the bill (S. 2062), were nine other Democratic Senators: Pepper (Fla.), Chavez (N. M.), Green (R. I.), Magnuson (Wash.), McGrath (R. I.), Murray (Mont.), Myers (Pa.), Taylor (Ida.), and Wagner (N. Y.).

THE law as it now stands on the book is "completely meaningless," Thomas said.

"The Act is still on the books, but its purpose has been to a great degree negated."

Passage of time, the effect of the war, the "resulting inflation, and weakening amendments voted last year have helped make the law lose much of its effectiveness.

The 40 cents an hour guaranteed workers under the law "today will buy barely half as much food as they did when the law was passed," Thomas noted. "And over half of our working population is still excluded from the benefits of the Act.

"The time is long overdue for action to change this law from a historical landmark to a living reality."

SPEAKING to the Senate, Thomas—a onetime missionary in the Far East, who later served on the Senate Civil Liberties Committee—said his amendments were in the spirit of Pres. Roosevelt's first request for a minimum wage law.

The strengthening amendments, he said, were offered "with the same pride and spirit which I felt when I came before this body years ago" to recommend the original wage law.

The Thomas bill, while bringing the minimum wage up to 75c an hour in four months after passage, would also permit the setting up of special industry-labor-public committees which could recommend base pay rates of up to $1 an hour.

It brings a number of groups under both minimum wage and overtime provisions for the first time—seamen, workers in fish-processing and flower-processing, telephone switchboard operators, employes of chain and department stores.

EXEMPTIONS for workers in seasonal industries and for workers covered by the "unworkable" area-of-production clause, have been cut from the Thomas bill, so that they would get wage-hour benefits.

In addition, workers on farms hiring eight or more employes would be covered by the wage provisions of the law, and would get the 75c minimum.

A third section of the law would bar child labor in all industries affecting interstate commerce and on all farms employing eight or more workers.

Thomas said it was a matter of "national shame" that child labor has been permitted so widely in years past.

There was no indication when the Senate Labor Committee, which is headed by Sen. Taft, will hold hearings on the Thomas bill or on other proposals affecting the wage-hour law.

REPUBLICAN spokesmen have claimed, ever since passage of the wage-hour amendments a year ago, that they favor an increase in the minimum wage. No action has been forthcoming, however.

No bill similar to the Thomas proposals has yet been filed in the House, though it is probable that such action will be taken by a liberal Congressman in the near future.

A group of members of the House Labor Committee, headed by Rep. Hartley (R., N. J.) held long hearings last fall, but has not yet reported its proposals, if any.

During testimony by CIO and other groups favoring an increase in the 40c minimum and general strengthening of the law, many of the Congressmen serving on the sub-committee gave observers the impression they favored action to cut down the law even more.

Murray Calls For:

'Mighty Crusade, Another New Deal'

A "mighty crusade for progressive government, for another New Deal" must be undertaken by the American people.

That call was sounded by Pres. Murray, who spoke on Jan. 30—the anniversary of FDR's brith—over a coast-coast Natl. Broadcasting network. Murray discussed the "CIO and the 1948 elections."

American labor "is in politics", the CIO president said, and it must now "engage in political action to maintain our organization and move on to the social and economic advances which are the just due of the American people."

CIO's Political Action Committee is the instrument through which the voice of progressive-minded Americans can best express their ideas and develop their strength for the '48 elections, Murray told the network audience. It was his first radio appearance since he attacked the Taft-Hartley bill just prior to its enactment last June.

In 1948, he predicted, PAC "will be more active than ever. It will be better organized than ever. It will be more powerful than ever. It will be more successful than ever."

Murray voiced once again his criticism of third party activity, which he said would lead to a split vote and to "disastrous defeat."

"WE are opposed to it," he said. "We believe that it is politically unwise to inject this movement into the political scene in 1948."

People who support the "third party frolic in political fantasy," the CIO head declared, argue that "victory in 1952 will be made much easier by giving the people a taste of raction in the next four years.

"This is dangerous thinking. The people have problems in 1948. They need homes in 1948. They need relief from inflation in 1948. They want repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act in 1948.

"The nation cannot stand still for the next four years, waiting for another presidential election."

Reaction, once given the reins of power, "will move swiftly to crush all apposition," Murray predicted.

But CIO-PAC's program is by no means a mere negative resistance to third-party plans, Murray's speech made clear.

PAC will continue its educational activities—"to bring all the facts and information on the issues to the American voters." PAC will seek to secure the "best possible candidates" for public office. PAC will increase its efforts to rouse people to a more active part in the primary elections.

PAC will increase its efforts to turn out a worker vote that will go to progressive candidates. And PAC will continue to seek a maximum registration and voting turnout.

CIO's political work, Murray said, will be based on the legislative program of the CIO.

"It's not a narrow program, benefiting labor alone," he emphasized. "It is a broad program, extending vast benefits to every section of American life."

ON the domestic scene, it will push for price control and rationing; for higher minimum wages and better social security; for a national health insurance program; for decent housing, and a fair tax policy; for civil rights legislation and repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

On the international scene, it will back up CIO's demands for a generous, non-political Marshall Plan to aid Europe; for world disarmament, and for opposition to compulsory peacetime military training.

The national CIO, Murray said, "is committed to no one" seeking the Presidency.

"The only thing that the CIO is committed to is the welfare and security of its members and the entire American people."

PAC AT HOME, ERP ABROAD: While fighting to remove the poll tax, CIO is making the best of situation, particularly at Fort Worth, Tex., (above) where 17 CIO members have been deputized as tax collectors. Mrs. A. L. Armstrong, a veteran's wife, is about to pay her $1.75 poll tax to Nancy Drynan, CIO member. Linda Armstrong, like most Cowtown children, is dressed like a cowboy. (See page 8). Thomas-Wagner HCL Bill Backed

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

"Our job is to have heart for the little people. We cannot afford not to do this."

Thus spoke Sen. Charles Tobey (R., N. H.), after hearing CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve present the CIO's 10-point program to curb inflation. Tobey is chairman of the Senate Banking & Currency Committee, which is considering all inflation legislation.

Even as Tobey spoke, Sens. Elbert Thomas (D., Utah) and Robert F. Wagner (D., N. Y.) were introducing in the Senate a bill which in principle meets most of the CIO's proposals. It is Bill S-2126.

EMIL RIEVE

Tobey, a deceivingly mild-appearing New Englander, has been a refreshing breath of fresh air compared to most of the rest of his party—and a fair number of Democrats, too—in the Congressional study of the high cost of living.

In statement after statement, Tobey has demanded that his committee must in all humanity stop temporizing and find a cure.

Said Rieve: "Profits after taxes in 1945 were at the rate of $1 for every $7 of wages, while at present, the ratio has declined to $1 of profit for every $4 of wages."

C. of C. (through Dr. Emerson P. Schmidt, director of economic research): "With some exceptions, profits are substantial and satisfactory. But they have not yet reached a normal boom-time peak in relation to the national income. Last year, corporate net profits were about $17 billion, but $5 billion of this was due to inventory appreciation. Another $2 or $3 billion was due to underdepreciation of physical assets.

"If we take the remainder of $10 or $11 billion and adjust it for price increases, that is, for the increase in the cost of corporate living, we find that profits are indeed subnormal."

SEN. TOBEY

(Tobey interrupted the C of C. representative to hurl this cry, "I challenge you to disprove that industry now is making its largest profits, paying its largest dividends and soaking the public its highest prices in history and yet you claim profits are subnormal!" Schmidt, in reply, asked: "What is normal?")

NAM (through Morris Sayre, president): "Government policy of financing the war and the New Deal primarily by borrowing is the root cause of the upward pressure on prices."

In offering the CIO's main six points and corallary four points (see adjoining column), Rieve by inference praised the Thomas - Wagner Bill.

Rieve, who is administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, had this to say of the other anti - inflationary bills before Congress:

Barkley Bill: Will not effectively control prices. Its flexible price ceilings will give rise to a repetition of what we had in 1946 when livestock and meat were withheld from the market in order to push up prices. The CIO cannot support a bill which confines price control to the wholesale level except in the greatest emergencies, nor can we support a bill which fixes ceilings upon wages while only placing a rubber band around prices."

Capehart Bill: "Which proposes a simple price freeze, is not in itself sufficient. One cannot separate the price freeze from the problem of adequate enforcement. We cannot support a bill which simply freezes prices and leaves the problem of enforcement, rationing and allocation and other anti-inflation measures to be taken care of sometime in the future."

Taylor Bill: "Is unrealistic. It holds out an alluring promise in expectation. It would encourage American people to believe that prices are going to be rolled back. We would like to believe this but cannot. We are interested in getting action against inflation, therefore we feel the Taylor Bill which has a worthy objective—price roll backs—is not feasible and, therefore, unrealistic."

Union Made

Sen. Charles Tobey (R., N.H.) remarked that American textile manufacturers are producing goods as good or better than the reputed quality of British wares. He mentioned Forstmann's as an example.

Quipped CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve, who is also president of the CIO Textile Workers. "One reason for that may be that Forstmann's has a contract with our union."

CIO Anti-Inflation Plan

The CIO's anti-inflation program recommended to Congress by CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve:

1. That all prices be frozen as of January 5, 1948, the opening date of the second session of the 80th Congress. As soon as possible, thereafter, the price freeze should be removed from those commodities which do not basically affect the cost of living or industrial or agricultural production.

2. Authority should be granted to allocate and ration those basic commodities which affect the cost of living and industrial or agricultural production, thus assuring that scarce materials and facilities will be made available for essential purposes at home and abroad.

3. Bank credits must be controlled. We heartily endorse the suggestion made by Marriner Eccles, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, before this committee, that commercial banks be required to establish special reserves, thus limiting the extent of bank credit expansion.

4. Adequate enforcement procedures including an emergency court of appeals, must be a necessary part of any bill which establishes an anti-inflation program.

5. An economic stabilization coordinator should be appointed to administer the program. This coordinator to be given full power and authority, under the direction of the President, over the executive branches of the government to carry out an effective and consistent anti-inflation program.

6. These powers and authority should exist until March 31, 1950 with authority to terminate part or all of the controls sooner if necessary.

In addition to these provisions which should be incorporated into a coordinated anti-inflation program, we suggest:

(a.) That controls over consumer credits, which have already been recommended by this committee and approved by the Senate, be immediately enacted.

(b.) Elimination of speculation on the commodity exchanges is essential. The authority which now exists over the stock exchanges, to regulate margins, should be extended to the commodity exchanges.

(c.) Rent controls should be extended. The loopholes of the present rent control bill, such as the 15% voluntary increase, the decontrol over new construction, etc., should be eliminated.

(d.) A tax should be imposed upon speculation and excess profits to drain off excess profits and to put a damper upon the desire of businessmen to push prices higher and higher.

WHEN Rieve declared that Congress had done much to bring on the present critical situation Tobey interrupted to say:

"Yes, it killed OPA, repealed the excess profits tax, passed a limited rent bill—with a sword of Damocles hanging over the tenants' head."

But, Tobey said with a straight face: "We did repass Regulation W on consumer credits—that was very little—we rose to great heights." (Regulation W had expired in November, 1947. In December, consumer credits tripled.)

RIEVE started off by saying that the CIO was not going to waste time by saying "We told you so," about its predictions that the death of OPA and other actions of Congress would bring about a severe inflation.

SEN. WAGNER

Tobey brought an appreciative laugh from the audience when he dryly recalled: "Other people made predictions then, too."—referring to the NAM's oft-repeated statement, made in June, 1946:

"If OPA is permanently discontinued, production of goods will mount rapidly, and through free competition prices will quickly adjust themselves to levels that consumers are willing to pay."

During the presentation, Tobey asked Rieve what he thought would happen "if we do nothing at all about inflation?" Rieve replied:

"Well, it's hard to be a prophet, and I'm not boasting that I'm an infallible predictor, but I think the cost of living would rise 15 or 20% in one year. That might take us back to 1929 (the depression year)."

Rieve asserted that "wages are not and have not been a major factor in bringing on higher prices." Under "other circumstances," he said, there might be a case for wage controls "but today great inequities exist between wages, prices and profits. Money wages have been unable to keep pace with rising prices, and, as a result, real buying power lags considerably behind rising living costs."

SEN. THOMAS

The CIO officer said a weekly average wage of $62.41—$9.90 over the present average—would be necessary to regain the average worker the standard of living he enjoyed in January, 1945. Living standards have fallen about 20% since that time, Rieve said, while corporate profits after taxes are "90% higher than they were in 1945."

Rieve warned against continued depletion of accumulated savings.

"In the desperate attempt to maintain something approximating an adequate standard of living, the wage earner has been depleting his small wartime savings and many are being driven deeper and deeper into debt," he told the Committee. "This is a real economic tragedy of the inflation."

High Cost Of Loving

The cost of wives has risen so sharply in Morocco that many Arabs are doing away with harems and restricting themselves to one wife at a time.

Before the war, an Arab could "buy" a Grade A wife for 5000 francs. Now, they cost from 100,000 to 200,000 francs.

N

GOP Goes To Aid Of Landlords

WHILE the battle over rent controls continued in the House Banking and Currency Committee, a Senate subcommittee approved a bill extending controls for 14 months—until April 30, 1949.

Under the Republican-sponsored measure rent ceiling will remain at present levels, but tenants who agreed to 15% rent boosts under the "voluntary" increase provision of the 1947 act will find themselves without rent ceilings when their leases expire this year.

(Sen. Charles Tobey [R.-N. H.] last week referred to the 1947 Rent Law as a "sword of Domocles hanging over the tenant's head.")

The bill, which omits most features sought by CIO and tenant spokesmen, would permit increases of any amount, provided the lease extends at least until Dec. 31, 1949. It would also remove restrictions on the use of scarce materials for such nonessential construction as amusement and recreation buildings.

Acting Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods, in testimony before both the House and Senate committees, had urged the extension of rent control minus the voluntary increase for at least two years and sought more teeth in the new law.

MEASURES introduced in both houses which include Woods' suggestions and have CIO support are the Murray-Wagner Rent Control Bill in the Senate and the Celler Rent Control Bill in the House.

Woods told the House committee, which will wind up hearings Feb. 11, that he had checked up on one of the Senate subcommittee's landlord witnesses who sought the death of rent control because he wanted a "fair return" on his investment.

The landlord, Woods learned, had notified his tenants that if rent control were allowed to expire, ther rents would be upped from $42.50 to $75 a month.

When Woods—who has rescued tenants in 46 areas from blanket rent increases—cited other examples of unscrupulous actions by landlords, Rep. Charles K. Fletcher (R., Cal.) asked whether such tenants did not have recourse to the courts. Woods replied that they did, but that tenants who pay only $25 or $30 a month rent are reluctant to hire a lawyer to take the case to court for them. The new law, he said, should authorize the government to institute action against violators instead of requiring tenants to do so. (The GOP bill in the Senate omitted this feature.)

Oh, Yeah!

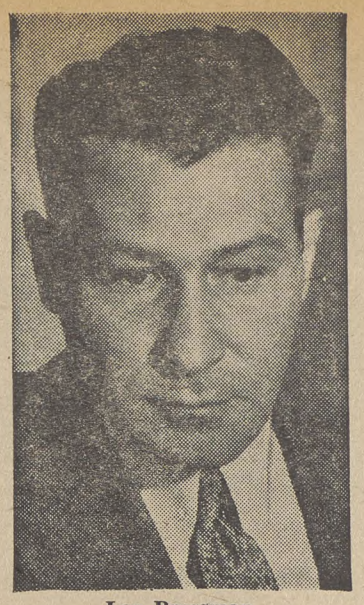
NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham came up with this disclosure at a meeting of the Minnesota Employers' Association recently:

"It has been interesting to note that the hue and cry that the Taft-Hartley Act is a union-busting slave labor act seems to have completely disappeared and it is gratifying to see that the dire predictions that employers would insist upon utilizing it as a medium for the elimination of unions from their plants have completely failed to materialize."

(Ed. note: A partial listing of strikes provoked by employers who insisted upon utilizing the Act "as a medium for the elimination of unions from their plants" would include: A city-wide strike of the Chicago Typographical Union, AFL, against the four daily newspaper publishers; a CIO Electrical Workers strike at the Cory Corp., Chicago; a CIO Steelworkers strike at Consolidated Vultee Corp., Nashville, Tenn.; a CIO Steelworker strike at the Shakespeare Fishing Tackle Co., Columbia, S. C.; a CIO Public Workers strike at 40 cafeterias, Washington, D. C.; a CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers strike at Phoenix, Ariz., lettuce sheds.

After passage of the act, the Remington-Rand Co. abrogated a strike settlement agreement and local union contracts to withdraw recognition from CIO Electrical Workers who had held contracts from one to six years at the company's seven plants.)

". . . Yes, friends, modern appliances have done away with the drudgery in the home."



Lee Pressman

Pressman Quits Legal Posts

LEE PRESSMAN resigned Feb. 6 as general counsel of the CIO and the United Steelworkers, positions he had held for 12 years.

In his letter of resignation Pressman said he wanted to enter private law practice and be free to engage in such activities as working for the election of Henry A. Wallace.

Under an arrangement worked out between Pressman and Philip Murray, head of CIO and Steelworkers, Pressman will be available to handle special legal matters relating to the Taft-Hartley Law.

Pressman engaged in private practice in New York and served as attorney for several governmental agencies before becoming counsel for the CIO and Steelworkers in 1936.

Pressman said that his "sole objective" in the future, despite his plans to re-enter private practice, would be to work in the interest of labor.

Pressman, who became associated with the labor movement when the steel union was known as the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, took an active part in CIO conventions and played a leading part in many of the legal battles of the CIO.

He was regarded by many Washington newsmen and attorneys as the country's top labor lawyer.

Murray said when announcing Pressman's resignation that his successor had not yet been named.

U. S. Opens Test Of T-H Politics Ban

A deputy U. S. Marshall walked into the CIO News office last Thursday and handed subpoenas to two officials of the CIO's national publication.

Allan L. Swim, editor, and Richard E. Bauer, business manager, were summoned to appear before a Federal Grand Jury in Washington Feb. 9 and give testimony in regard to the July 14, 1947, issue of the CIO News.

Thus Uncle Sam set in motion machinery which may bring about a constitutional test of the political freedom and press freedom curbs contained in the Taft-Hartley Act.

The front page of the CIO News last July 14 carried a statement from CIO Pres. Philip Murray, indorsing Judge Ed Garmatz, successful candidate in a special Congressional election at Baltimore.

Murray said he was issuing the statement "not in a spirit of defiance or bravado or bitterness," but because he believed Congress was without power to deny citizens their constitutional right of freedom of expression.

Subpoenas were served on Swim and Bauer after they had been questioned in their office several times by FBI agents, who sought to ascertain the relationship of the CIO News to the general CIO movement. Pres. Murray also was questioned in his office by G-men.

CIO attorneys say that under the T-H Act the CIO itself and its officers—not employes of the CIO News—might be held legally liable for actions such as publication of the July 14 Murray statement.

Maximum penalty for individuals is a $1000 fine and a year in jail, or both, and for organizations, a fine of $5000.

(See Swim column on Page 4.)

Delay Decision At Martin Plant

THE long-drawn-out issue of representation at the Glen L. Martin airplane plant in Baltimore, Md., was further delayed as the regional NLRB recommended the re-examination of 508 of the 617 challenged ballots.

The CIO Auto Workers will likely object to the recommendation, on which the NLRB must rule.

In the NLRB election on August 21—last NLRB election in the nation conducted before the Taft-Hartley act went into effect—the CIO Auto Workers led with 2,729 of a total 6,277 valid votes cast. Next came the Intl. Association of Machinists with 1916 and third was "no union," with 965.

Greeks To Kill Anti-Strike Law

THE Greek government has assured American diplomatic representatives that it will propose repeal of the country's vicious anti-strike decree some time this spring.

This information was given by Secretary of State George C. Marshall to CIO Pres. Philip Murray. The CIO leader, acting on a resolution of the January Executive Board, had sent a strong letter of protest to the State Dept. about the Greek law.

The law was passed Dec. 8 and provides sentences of up to life imprisonment for "illegal" strikers and up to the death sentence for strike leaders.

"The Greek government has assured them (Greek Confederation of Labor) it will propose repeal to Parliament as soon as the democratically-elected National Labor Congress, which will meet in March, has chosen a responsible National Executive for the Greek labor movement," Marshall wrote.

"These assurances, which we understand fully satisfy the leaders of Greek labor, were repeated yesterday, Feb. 1, in an official public statement issued jointly by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

"They expressed the unanimous view of the Greek government that, with the democratic election of a trade union executive responsible to its members, the emergency which the law was intended to meet with has ceased the exist."

House Aids Vets As GOP Eyes Votes

THE Republicans' desire to woo the veterans this election year led to the passage by the house of bills boosting subsistence allowances for vet-students and ceilings for on-the-job trainees.

That is what happened, according to Washington observers.

Both measures had been approved by the House veterans committee at the last session of Congress. Then, observers point out, the bills were pigeonholed by the House Rules Committee so that they could be used to garner votes nearer election time.

Not to be outdone by the Republicans, the Democrats helped to roll up a large vote for the bills. The subsistence increase was passed 370 to 6, and the on-the-job training boosts got 371 yeas and 5 nays.

The former measure went to the White House, but the latter measure went back to conference to iron out differences between the Senate and House versions.

Meyer Bernstein, CIO veterans' representative, immediately wrote Sen. Wayne Morse, chairman of the veterans subcommittee of the Senate Labor Committee, urging him to give full support to the House measure.

The present ceilings on on-the-job training are $175 for single men and $200 for married men. Unmarried trainees receiving less than the maximum salaries may collect a subsistence allowance of $65 a month, while married veterans are entitled to $90 a month.

The House version would revise the ceiling as follows: $250 a month for single veterans; $325 for married men with one dependent and $350 for married men with two or more dependents.

Raising of the ceilings is a victory for the CIO point of view, which has fought the ceilings ever since they were considered by the 79th session of Congress in August, 1946.

The CIO joined with the American Veterans Committee and other veterans in the fight against the ceilings.

AVC members were particularly jubilant over the passage of the increased subsistence measure, and were planning victory dances in many of their 200 college chapters. The bill would raise from $65 to $75 a month the allotment for single veterans, and from $90 a month to $105 for veterans with one dependent and $120 for veterans with two or more dependents.

Takes More Than Hot Air

At the risk of sounding like a cracked record that keeps repeating something over and over again, we are going to say today what we've said several times before:

American wage earners are badly in need of substantial wage increases.

We could cite some fancy statistics from the bale of data at hand to back up our contention—but we won't.

Every person who plunks down a $5 bill for a sack of groceries that a small child can carry knows that the unreasonably high cost of living is not the figment of some agitator's imagination.

It's as real as a nagging toothache and nearly as painful.

You don't have to be an economist with a string of university degrees to figure out that industry can afford to grant substantially higher pay.

The profit figures of industry, which show that stockholders have been sopping up more than their fair share of the financial gravy, tell the story in no uncertain terms.

They reveal that raises can be granted without straining the corporate set-up.

There's another thing we've said before that we want to repeat:

Labor would have preferred price reductions to wage increases. The CIO would have preferred price control to the hot air that was circulated so freely by the NAM when OPA was being led to the legislative slaughter pen.

Now labor needs wage increases to catch up with the high cost of living and price control to keep the same old thing from happening all over again. ★ ★ ★

Profits Given That New Look

We haven't been able to figure out exactly what the "New Look" does for the average feminine figure but we know—for sure—what it does to the average corporation profit figure.

It makes it look much smaller than it really is.

You can give the public relations "fashion experts" credit for the new style in profit reporting.

Back in the good old days of nickel hamburgers and 10-cent beers, corporations reported earnings on the basis of invested capital.

If an outfit earned $100 on each $1000 invested, then it had a profit of 10%.

In recent years profits figured on this basis got too high to "look good" to the public—so the experts decided to give them the "New Look."

You'll know exactly what we're talking about the next time you pick up an advertisement which says something like—

"The packers' profit, after payment of all expenses, averages only a fraction of a cent a pound, and meat prices are always established by the demand for the available supply of meat."

Of course, we could be crude—and a bit old-fashioned—and says the same thing in a different way—

"The packers' profit, after payment of all expenses, averages only 14% . . ."

It looks different, doesn't it, with the "New Look" missing?

Political Freedom Test Started

CIO News Officials Summoned Before Grand Jury in Taft-Hartley Case

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE Federal Government last week took a major step in a case designed to test the constitutionality of the political freedom and press freedom portions of the Taft-Hartley Law.

Richard E. Bauer, business manager of the CIO News, and I, the editor, were summoned to appear on Feb. 9 before a Federal Grand Jury in Washington, presumably to testify in regard to the July 14, 1947, issue of the CIO News.

This was the issue which carried a statement from CIO Pres. Philip Murray endorsing the candidacy of Judge Ed Garmatz in a special Congressional campaign in Baltimore.

Murray's action in this case was in accordance with a statement on political freedom approved by the CIO Executive Board.

MURRAY'S position in this matter was outlined in a statement from him carried in the July 14 issue. He said:

"I have been reared in the tradition of respect for the law of the land. In my public and private life I have adhered religiously to the principles of that training. Consistent with these principles, I deem it the duty of citizenship to abide by and respect the highest law of the land—the Constitution of the United States.

"It has always been my understanding that that document guarantees the basic American rights of free speech, free press, free assemblage and forbids the denial of life, liberty or property without due process of law . . .

"If the Taft-Hartley Act means what it has been proclaimed to mean, it flagrantly flaunts fundamental principles which have been cornerstones of American tradition and American freedom ever since the founding of our great nation."

MURRAY stated further that he felt he would be "remiss in the performance of my duty as an American citizen if I did not speak and act firmly in support of these great traditions and those vital freedoms which have made America what it is today.

"Under the procedures of our courts it is possible to strike down unconstitutional laws only by taking affirmative action in reliance on and in the exercise of liberties guaranteed by the Constitution.

"This I have decided to do."

Then Murray "directed and requested" the editor of the CIO News to carry his statement indorsing Judge Garmatz.

He said his action was taken "not in a spirit of defiance, or bravado or bitterness" but in an effort to obtain a court test designed to "vindicate these liberties."

"I firmly believe the action which I now take is fully legal under the laws of our land," he said.

THERE you have it—the thinking which prompted the CIO nearly seven months ago to launch an attempt to prove a portion of the T-H Act unconstitutional.

The CIO's position is simply that Congress cannot enact enforceable measures which abridge basic freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution.

It contends that Philip Murray cannot be legally silenced on political matters because he is the head of a labor organization.

It contends that Allan L. Swim, as editor of the CIO News, has as much right to discuss political issues and candidates as he would have if he were still working for Roy Howard, a wealthy publisher.

In this matter, however, the CIO is not acting merely in behalf of its officers and editors. It is attempting to prove that Congress has no right to curtail any citizen's freedom of expression.

IN this case the Federal Government has a touchy and important matter on its hands, and Government officials know it.

It is touchy and important because a basic freedom is involved and because of the way in which Section 313 of the T-H Act can easily be interpreted.

Under this interpretation no newspaper—daily, weekly, labor, religious—would be permitted to comment on political candidates or issues.

Section 313 says it is "unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office . . ."

Labor unions come under the same ban.

IF CIO officials should be arrested on charges of violating the Taft-Hartley Act, the case undoubtedly will be interpreted in dozens of different ways.

Those unfriendly to our organization will say, no doubt, that we are "defying the law of the land" and that our test case is "merely another example of the arrogance of labor leaders."

Those friendly to us will say that we are trying to protect one of our most important basic freedoms.

Nobody, however, should underestimate the importance of what is involved.

The nation will have taken a long step away from democracy if labor unions and their officials are silenced politically!

This obviously in a case that should go to the Supreme Court as quickly as possible—if the Grand Jury returns indictments.

Win Severance Pay After 6-Year Fight

Six years after the paper folded, former employes of the Philadelphia Evening Ledger have received checks this week for part of their severance pay.

The distribution was the closing chapter in a legal battle by M. H. Goldstein, Philadelphia Newspaper Guild counsel, which established three legal precedents of interest to all Guild locals. They were:

Severance pay is wages; bankruptcy is a discharge within the meaning of severance pay clauses in Guild contracts; severance pay is a cost of administration when trustees continue to operate a newspaper after it has been thrown into bankruptcy.

The 231 claimants whom Goldstein represented therefore became general creditors, and ultimately received what the other creditors got—22 per cent of their claims. They asked $249,497.22, were awarded $57,347.53. Payments ranged from $24 to $3139.62.

It Was 'Darn Good News Story' But--

ALMOST any betting man in town would have given you odds of 10-to-one that the union was going to lose.

The organizer in charge called a "council of war," reviewed the entire situation and then let out a loud yell for help.

Reinforcements started pouring in. Organizers in other towns left their jobs temporarily so they could give a hand. Publicity and public relations men started turning on the steam.

The situation seemed to improve a little. Then it became slightly worse. It improved again—and then it got bad.

Really bad!

SOME very unkind and ungentlemanly words about the editor of the local weekly newspaper and the local ministers were uttered by the angry organizing crew.

"Lookit that!" declared one of the men, pointing to large front-page headlines. "Why the dirty . . ."

The headline said the local ministers had held a meeting and voted almost unanimously in opposition to the CIO effort to organize the big dye plant.

"And I thought the preachers were with us—nearly 100%," one of the organizers said. "They really sold us down the river."

A quiet-voiced man said, "The preachers are with us nearly 100%. There's something phony about this story and I'm going to find out what it is."

AFTER doing a bit of checking and learning that the local ministers, generally, were pulling for the CIO, two union representatives called on the editor.

He froze up like a clam when the men told him they represented the CIO. He thawed out a bit when one of the men said he had formerly been a printer, that he had fed a press just like the one the editor owned.

Finally the three got down to business.

"We came to talk to you about the part your paper is playing in efforts to keep us from setting up a union at the dye works," one of the CIO men said.

"We've really been giving you hell, haven't we?" the editor asked. "Well, I don't mind telling you why."

HE SETTLED back in his chair, lighted a cigaret, smiled as if enjoying a private joke, then continued:

"This organizing campaign of yours is just like a political campaign to me, and in politics you get on one side or the other.

"If you're smart you get on the winning side—and that's what I decided to do here.

"If you guys win you won't have any trouble getting along with me. Why, I've lost out in many political campaigns and I always got along well afterwards with the winning candidates on the other side.

"That's the way I play it, so I don't see what you guys are so burned up about."

THE former printer said he was "burned up" about the story on the ministers' meeting.

"What was wrong with that story?" the editor demanded.

"Well, we made a survey which showed 17 out of the 21 ministers in town are on our side, but that's not all. We did some careful checking and found out that the ministers didn't even hold a meeting!"

The editor laughed, then said:

"H-m-m-m, but you'll have to admit it was a darn good news story!"

A few days later the CIO took a bad beating in a recognition election.

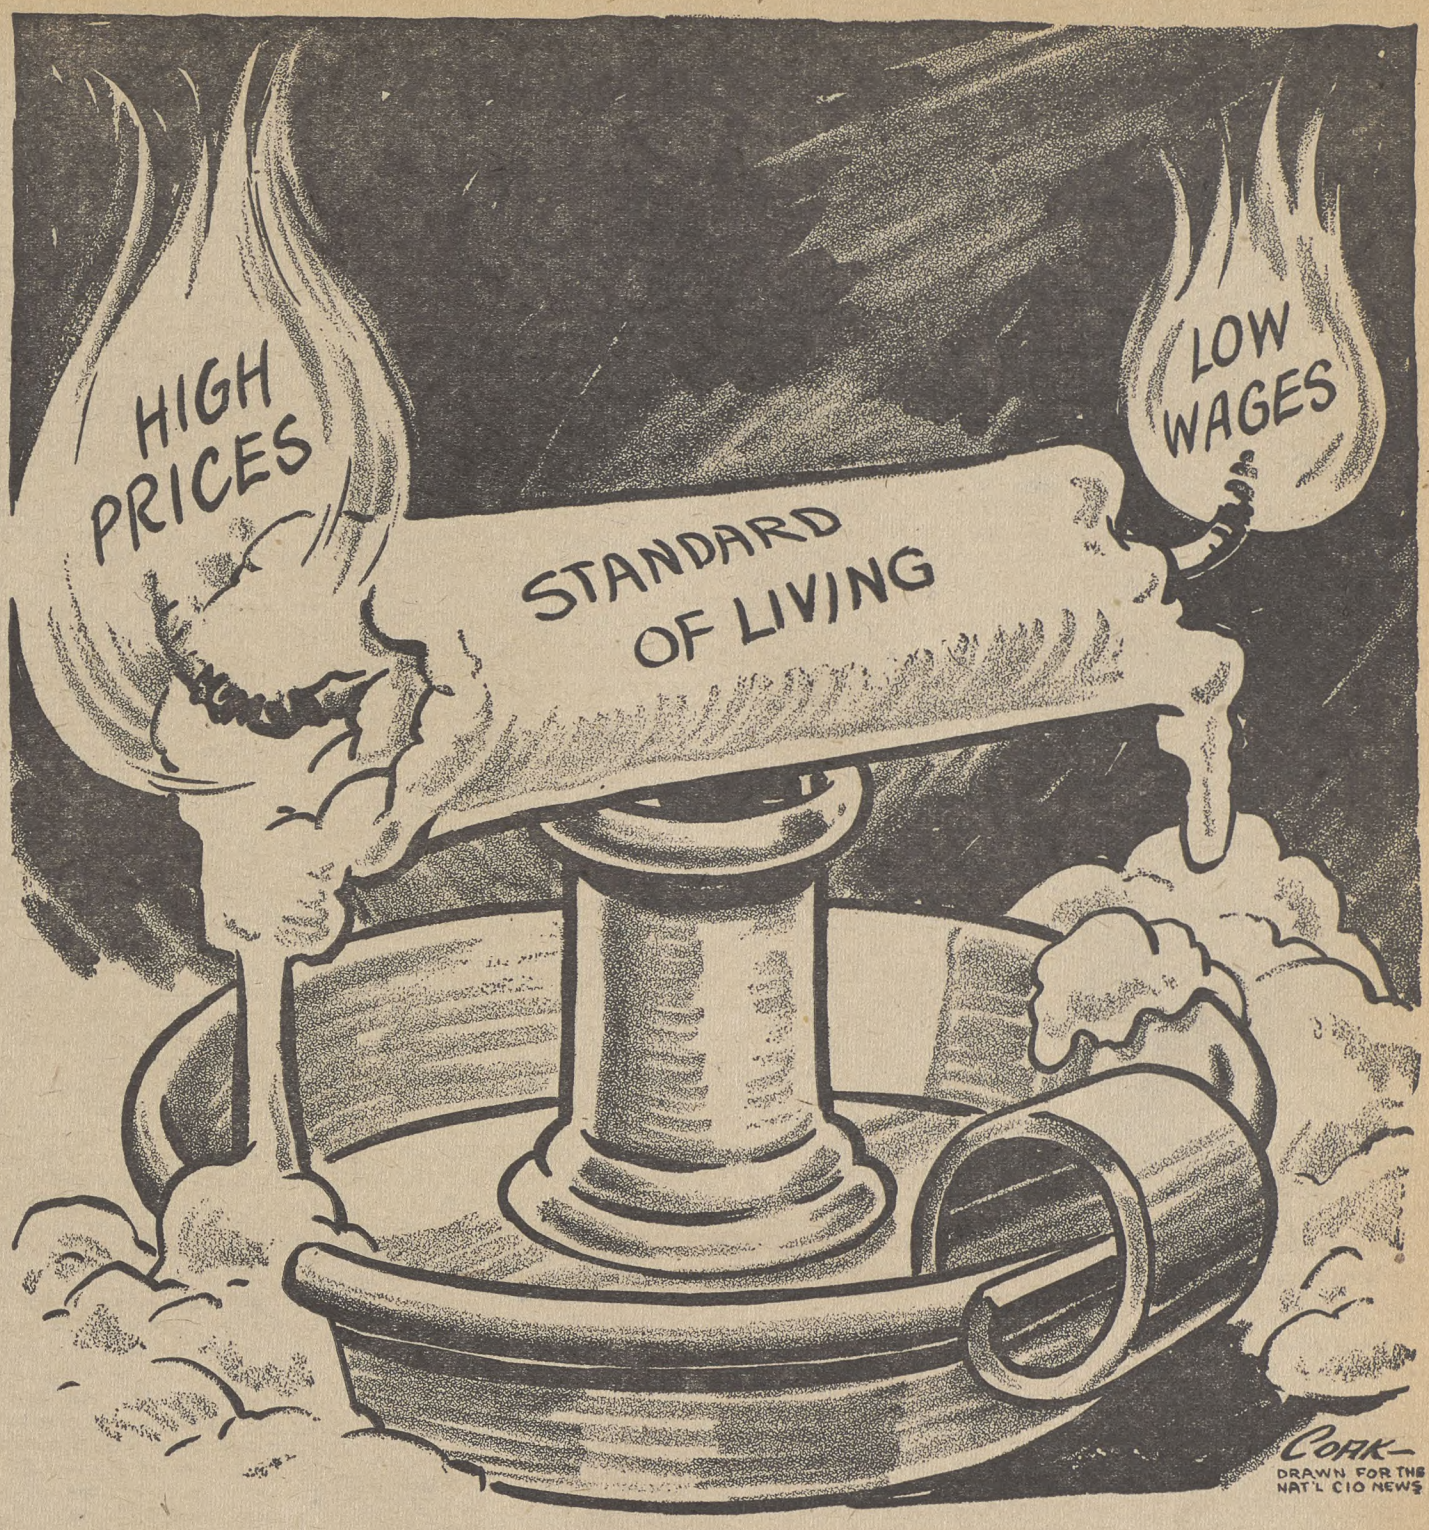
BURNING AT BOTH ENDS



See Good Labor-Management Relations Increasing Production

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

YOU'VE probably been reading a lot lately about the need to ditch the 40-hour week and make employes work longer and harder. The excuse given for this is that the U.S. and the rest of the world are badly in need of more goods of all kinds.

Nothing but driving the workers harder will save the day, according to some of our big industrial tycoons and politicians, quite a few of whom never do anything more strenuous than lift their big feet off a desk, crawl into a car, or wiggle their tongues. Some of them call this working 14 to 16 hours a day. You must have read of these boasts they often make.

Is it true that the longer work week and the speed-up must be brought back if we are to get sufficient production of the goods needed?

A convincing answer to this question—and it is "no"—can be found in a book just off the press, called "Labor-Management Cooperation and How to Achieve It." It's the joint work of a machinist and a management consultant, who got their heads together from their opposite viewpoints to talk over ways of getting our industrial machine functioning to its greatest efficiency.

E. J. Lever, former official with the CIO United Steelworkers, writes from his background as a machinist, and Francis Goodell, from that of management consultant.

In industries where the workers are organized into well-established unions, and fairly harmonious relations exist between the men in the plant and the management, the logical way to approach the problem, the authors say, is through Joint Production Committees.

These call for teamwork, ranging all the way from the fellow who sweeps the floor to the top manager. A successful committee will make a plant a living organism instead of just a collection of machines.

It is through these committees that the problem of getting the most efficient production by bringing out the latent abilities of the men who run the machines can be approached at the roots. The biggest waste in our industrial system lies in distribution, which can't be blamed on the workers.

Next to that "come the wastes due to undirected energies—to the failure to provide leadership which focuses men's capacities on common purposes, calls forth their enthusiasm, and uses all their capacities," says a chapter on "Engineering Approach to Waste."

When workers have no outlet for their capabilities they feel frustrated and can't be expected to do their best on the job. They often get ideas for improving a machine or think up ways of doing a better job, and should have a channel through which they could pass these ideas and get credit for them.

Foremen too often feel insecure themselves and listen reluctantly to new ideas, fearing that they may be put on the spot for not having thought up these things themselves. Or sometimes they do pass on ideas they get from the workers, but take the credit for them. Workers who have met such experiences give up and take refuge in a "what's-the-use attitude."

Lever and Goodell explain how Joint Production Committees can provide a way to give sympathetic response to workers' ideas for improving the job through their JPC representatives, and give management a deeper insight into problems of the men on the bench. Workers would also get a broader picture of the industry as a whole and the role they play in it.

This is the sane and sensible way, these writers believe, for tackling the problem of eliminating waste in industry and improving the efficiency of production. Lengthening the work day is not a solution.

Labor-management cooperation is full of sound suggestions based on experience, common sense and human understanding. Unions interested in the organization and proper fuctioning of Joint Production Committees as a means of bringing a more satisfactory working life to their members will find this book a helpful guide.

Carey Answers Points Raised By Opponents Of Marshall Plan

RARELY ever in American history has any governmental proposal caused as much discussion as has the European Recovery Program — the Marshall Plan. Few governmental proposals have been attacked in such bitter terms as have been hurled at the plan by diverse critics.

Opponents of the plan include such variety as Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), the Daily Worker and the Chicago Tribune. The plan has been called a waste of public funds, a Wall St. Plot, a scheme to lead us into World War III, a wrecker of the United Nations, etc.

Because of the perplexities arising out of such attacks on ERP—and because CIO supports the Marshall Plan—the CIO News assigned Staff Writer Arthur Riordan to assume the role of Devil's Advocate and to put a series of questions to CIO Secy. James B. Carey, a member of the Harriman Committee which drew up the implementation of the Marshall Plan.

Carey's answers to Riordan's questions follow:

Q. What do you consider to be the basic ideals of the Marshall Plan?

A. America's plan to aid Europe and the world is but a partial repayment for the most valuable gift of all, the great mass of human beings who have come to inhabit our land. They—the immigrants — far out-value the dollars or the coal and iron or cloth with which we hope to repay Europe and help her to regain her economic stability. We must be wise and generous and tolerant. We will endanger our own ideals to the extent we seek to force them on other peoples. The CIO stands flatly for economic aid without political strings; we want Europe to get on its feet, not to join any American organizations.

Q. Why aren't Russia and her so-called satellites — Czecho-Slovakia, Jugoslavia, etc.—included among the Marshall Plan nations?

A. All were invited to participate in the Committee of European Economic Cooperation. Russia refused, as did all the others except Czecho-Slovakia. That nation at first accepted, but withdrew at Moscow's insistence.

Q. Is it a Wall St. Plan?

A. The Wall St. smear against ERP, repeated time and again, collapses when one examines the list of those for and against the plan. The C. of C. and NAM state they are for European aid, but qualify their indorsement so as to make it meaningless. For instance, NAM wants us to withhold aid until the various countries adopt an exact duplicate of our free enterprise economy and promise to eliminate price controls.

Ernest Weir, steel industry spokesman, has said: "Pouring American dollars into Europe will not restore any sort of free economy there, but will help more than anything to destroy it here."

So, most opposition to the Marshall plan comes from conservative business organizations —in other words, Wall St.

Q. Does the CIO stand in favor of the Marshall Plan disagree with that of the World Federation of Trade Unions, of which CIO is a member?

A. No. When WFTU was set up in 1945—I was and still am one of its greatest advocates—there were four areas of agreement. They were:

(a) Participation in the war effort (the war was still on, you know); (b) a campaign for a just peace after the war; (c) postwar relief and rehabilitation of peoples and areas stricken by the horrors of the war and (d) structure of WFTU.

Support of the Marshall Plan certainly comes under Point (c).

Q. Wouldn't it be better—as Henry A. Wallace and others demand—to let the United Nations operate an aid program?

A. The UN Charter calls specifically for nations to work jointly and singly for the reconstruction of the economic and human resources of the world. UN doesn't have the resources —it is not so set up—to handle this program. Also, UN doesn't handle peace treaties. And I heard no one raising criticism or even eyebrows when Britain and Russia recently signed a trade agreement.

Q. Won't the Marshall Plan (a) tend to cause further disharmony in Europe by splitting the East against the West, (b) won't it cause the participating nations to lose their independence, (c) won't it make them satellites of the U. S., and, finally (d) won't it lead us into World War III?

A. That's quite a mouthful. As to (a), the Marshall Plan doesn't split the East of Europe against the West; Russia chose to boycott ERP of its own accord. But, despite that, there is no bar to ERP nations dealing with Eastern Europe. As I said before, Britain has just recently signed a trade pact with Russia and there is no greater advocate of the Marshall Plan or more severe critic of the Soviet than Britain.

As to (b) and (c), the plan, since it promotes self-determination, will make these nations less dependent on others and more self-reliant.

As to (d), nations which have solved their economic problems, which have well-fed, well-housed, and working populations—working under just and healthy conditions—are not prone to war. I see no indication—and I served with many government leaders the Harriman and Civil Rights committees — that any responsible American leader, either in or out of the Government is the remotest kind of warmonger. I have the impression all responsible persons are working day and night for peace. The irresponsible are few and don't hold government office.

To sum it up, ERP will educate people to work together, to achieve a greater community of mutual interests.

Q. Under ERP, it is said that Germany, our foe in the recent war, gets more steel than France, our ally. Is that true?

A. No, Germany, which in the Ruhr Valley has the greatest deposits of ore in Europe, will receive no steel under the plan. Germany will produce its own ore and operate its own mills.

Q. Doesn't ERP mean that the German industrialists of the Ruhr — the industrialists who made the Hitler war machine possible—will be put back in power?

A. No one, and particularly the CIO, wants to see the military potentials re-instated in Germany—or in Japan, either. But, this question must be resolved in practical fashion, and not become cluttered up with ideological shriekings.

We must think of the reconstruction of Germany as we might of the reconstruction of New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Ohio. Suppose those three states—producers of coal and iron and machine tools and electrical equipment and textiles—had joined forces and waged war on the rest of the nation, only to be beaten. Certainly, it would be impossible then for the American economy to recover if we rejected the reconstruction of industry in those three states.

We must approach German reconstruction with the same attitude. Europe needs the resources and capability of German production. YOU can't make a decent apple pie out of one apple.

You can't make decent apple pie by keeping it in the oven for only 30 seconds.

And no matter how hard you try, you can't make an apple pie out of blueberries.

Translated into the bigger—and more important—arena of world affairs, you can't run a European Recovery Program on low appropriations. You can't produce results from ERP without giving the program time to work. And you can't produce democracy in Europe by typing up the recovery program with political strings, which promote interference in the affairs of the nations receiving U. S. aid.

That was the gist of a series of statements offered to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week by a number of CIO leaders who appeared in the high-ceilinged caucus room of the Senate Office Building to plead once again that Uncle Sam should be neither "too little or too late."

CIO's presentation of facts was led off with a 29-page statement by Pres. Philip Murray. It was read to the Senate sub-committee by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

He was followed by Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union, speaking in behalf of a number of CIO waterfront unions; and, a couple of days later, by Pres. Walter Reuther of the United Auto Workers.

The Senators listened carefully, asked few questions, and appeared to regard the CIO testimony as highly important.

THE Murray statement warned that Congress would act in "well-nigh criminal" fashion if it sliced the State Department's request for a $6.8 billion recovery appropriation down to the $4 billion suggested by some Republican leaders. Equally disastrous, he said, would be any Congressional action to make the ERP a piecemeal year-by-year affair in which the European countries would have no idea whether their economic plans were coming or going.

While the CIO testimony was being given to the committee, Secretary Marshall sent to the Senate another of his appeals for the voting of necessary funds to carry on the project. To vote less, he said, "would jeopardize the success of the program."

Pres. Murray's statement on behalf of CIO gave deep emphasis to the need of keeping the ERP free from "political or economic strings designed to restrict the social or economic or political forms which the European people should freely choose for themselves."

SUPPORT for CIO's non-political recovery program came a day or so later from Chester Bowles, former OPA administrator in the days when prices were being kept down. Bowles, chairman of an international advisory group of the UN Appeal for Children, returned from Europe with sharply-worded criticism of both present American and Russian relief policies.

He said both countries are using food shipments to stricken areas of Europe to "sway the minds of the people as much as they are to ease the hunger pangs in their stomachs."

PRES. Murray's statement listed three major methods of developing world peace:

"1. The first step is to take care of destitute people. The Congress has already wisely provided stop-gap aid to meet the immediate needs of starving, freezing and discouraged peoples in the 16 countries now listed as cooperating in the European Recovery Program.

ONE aspect of the Marshall Plan which may hurt American labor, American industry and the program itself, was singled out by the CIO President for criticism. He referred to proposals allowing the ERP administrator to turn over ships to the European nations, and to suggestions that as many as 500 American vessels be given to the relief-receiving countries.

Pres. Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union devoted most of his testimony before the Committee to the dangers of such a mass transfer of American ships. Speaking for the CIO Maritime Committee, Curran said that the request to give Europe 500 American ships indicates the Administration "has written off the American Merchant Marine."

The American people can't accept that decision, Curran said, particularly with the jobs of half a million people at stake. Instead, he proposed three safeguards to be written into the bill:

1. American relief commodities must be carried in U. S. flag vessels.

2. All sale of vessels to foreign countries must be stopped at once, and no U. S. ships should be chartered for foreign flag operations.

3. All steel exports should be carefully watched, so that American shipyards won't be "starved" while European yards "reach new peaks in construction."

Jobs in the merchant marine started to disappear in mid-1947, Curran reported, with unemployment jumping "tenfold." If 500 ships are given to Europe, he predicted, another 25,000 seamen's jobs will go up the spout.

Curran said the ship transfer proposal has been alibied as a temporary measure to save American dollars for the countries of Europe. But that saving will be relatively small, while additions to foreign fleets "will have a drastic effect" on every American shipping line, he said.

"After careful study, it is our considered judgment that the over-all effect will be a loss and not a saving to the American people," he told the Senators.

REUTHER, appearing for the UAW-CIO, challenged the "brazen pressure" of businessmen to gain control of the ERP machinery. Adequate labor representation, he told the committee "will be no favor to labor—it will be a help to the ERP."

The UAW leader suggested the Senate Foreign Relations Committss might well take a "second look" at the proposal to spend $6.8 billion for aid during the first 15 months of the program. Rather than give thought to cutting that amount, Congress would do better to increase it, he said.

"I suggest that it is better to provide for too much than to be caught short with too little," he said.

A stingy aid program, he predicted, "may buy us a little time but it will fail to win the friends and allies we need if we are to make democratic and human values secure in the world.

"But no program will succeed unless Congress takes steps to halt inflation and increase output."

He said that fears that industry and agriculture may produce too much at some future time have held us back now "from producing enough for our own needs and for the full, prompt implementation of the new ERP."

And he lashed at the "voices of isolation, short- sighted selfishness and sinister division" which have been trying to cut down the ERP program.

unions in Germany is the answer to this problem, not widespread destruction of Germany's economic facilities.

Q. Does ERP call for transfer to European registry of 500 American merchant ships? And wouldn't such a move throw thousands of U. S. seamen on the beach?

A. The Marshall Plan outline does not specifically call for the transfer of any ships. Before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, I presented the statement of CIO Pres. Philip Murray in support of ERP. In that statement, he remarked that the State Dept. proposal contains two provisions dealing with shipping. The first would place in the hands of the administrator authority to charter any merchant marine vessel owned by the U. S. which the U. S. Maritime Commission certifies as excess to its current requirement.

The other provision provides that when the administrator determines a sale to a participating country would further the purposes of the program, the USMC shall effect the sale under formulas set forth in the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946.

"Various dollar figures have been put forward as estimates of the saving that would result from the transfer of possibly 500 more American vessels to foreign registry or by sale," Murray said. "These estimates disregard the hardships suffered by our unemployed seamen, our unemployed shipyard workers, the families of all of them, the expense in unemployment benefits, the loss in taxes, and the destruction of a maritime labor force created by expenditure of more than 225 million dollars during the war.

"We urge Congress to provide in ERP for carriage as far as possible of relief and rehabilitation cargoes in U. S. flag vessels. This does not mean the exclusion of foreign registry ships from transport of recovery aid. It does mean efficient use of all facilities. We must not permit the Merchant Marine to be offered up as a false sacrifice to patriotism on the altar of profit-taking."

On Your Left...

From The Daily Worker:

"As Marshall Plan witnesses troop before Congress, the country gets a clearer idea of the whole fantastic, ruthless, war-breeding grab which the plan really is.

"The idea of helping the needy, the hungry, and the war-ravaged victims of the German-Japanese Axis is forgotten. That was for publicity, for sucker-bait. Wallace's five-point plan for European recovery debunked the Marshall Planners completely because it was based on relief without strings, and without preparations for war.

"John Foster Dulles, like Bernard Baruch, outlined a vast grabbing of Europe's raw materials, of colonies, and of her manpower for future war."

Q. There is an argument that the Marshall Plan will destroy civil liberties in the countries where it will be used. Is that true?

A. Europe is just recovering from the recent war, during which all its basic liberties were temporarily — almost permanently—wrecked. The people of Europe have for centuries fought out of bondage towards freedom. The Marshall Plan envisions feeding, implementing and clothing them so that they can fight further to prevent any recurrence of the liberty-destroying policies of Hitler.

ERP will not force civil liberties upon any people, any more than it will force political ideas on them. But, ERP gives the people of Europe the opportunity to restore and improve their liberties, for healthy, working people are more apt to be tolerant; their faith in themselves has been restored.

Q. The charge is made that the CIO permitted enactment of an anti-labor law in Greece. Is this so?

A. No. The people who make such a charge are the same ones who say the U. S.—and the CIO—shouldn't interfere in the internal affairs of any other country. In one breath, they say we shouldn't interfere. In the other, they claim we should.

Actually, this reactionary measure—it is a parliamentary decree; not a law—should not have been passed in Greece or any where else. This law is clearly in conflict with the American objectives in Greece. The U. S. should continue to press for its repeal, as has been demanded by the CIO and by Clinton Golden, former CIO Steelworkers officer, who is a labor adviser to the American Mission to Greece. othere

(Last week, State Secy. Marshall wrote Pres. Murray—in answer to Murray's protest against the Greek law—that "the representatives of the U. S. Government in Athens have on several occasions expressed to leading members of the Greek government our concern over the extreme provisions of the law.

("The leaders of labor of Greece have also consulted with Greek officials with a view to achieving repeal.

("The Greek government has assured them it will propose repeal to Parliament. These assurances, we understand, fully satisfy the leaders of Greek labor.")

Q. It is apparent to many observers in this country that the American Mission to Greece, set up under the Truman Doctrine, has been at odds with American diplomats in that country. Couldn't the same situation exist under ERP? Doesn't ERP tend to force political domination of administrators upon each nation?

A. The long-range Marshall Plan, unless wrecked by Congress, envisions non-political administration in every country. The CIO favors teeth in the law, under which any administrator using political pressure, can be removed quickly. And, if the dipolmatic corps interferes, the State Dept. should remove the culprit, or shift him out of the danger zone.

On Your Right . .

From Col. Robert R. McCormick's Chicago Tribune:

"It will be a blessing, not only to this country, but to Europe as well, if Mr. Marshall's tactics cause Congress to kick his plan out of the window.

"The intolerable burdens that the plan would place on this country are evident. Less attention has been given to its equally evil consequence in Europe. Europeans have been brought to their present plight by their own economic and political follies. If they will reform themselves they will not need our money; they could stand on their own feet, as eventually they will have to anyway.

"The Marshall Plan encourages them to continue their own governmental abuses. Not until Congress makes clear that we cannot and will not support Europe will the Europeans make serious efforts to support themselves."

More Costly Than War

Workers maimed and crippled in a single year in American industry equal in numbers the total number of veterans disabled during four full years of fighting, according to U. S. Asst. Secretary of Labor John T. Kmetz. During 1946, 16,500 workers were killed on their jobs and more than two million were totally or partially disabled.

CIO Canvasses Door-To-Door To Get Poll Taxes Paid

By HARVEY O'CONNOR

SEVENTEEN CIO deputy poll tax collectors braved biting northers, snowdrifts and ice. It was all part of the final week of a poll tax drive to see that citizens of Fort Worth, Tex., qualified to vote in the 1948 elections.

When the drive stopped at midnight Jan. 31, Fort Worth had rolled up the biggest poll tax collection in its history, with nearly 90,000 citizens qualified to vote. CIO deputies, who made history by being the first ever to canvass in Fort Worth for poll tax payments from door to door, rested weary feet or joined in the festivities of the poll tax jamboree at the Packinghouse Workers hall. Admittance to the jamboree was a poll tax receipt.

The iron determination that kept CIO canvassers out in working-class neighborhoods in the bitterest weather in recent years was matched by the resentment shown by citizens against federal and state legislators.

"It's worth $1.75 for me to scratch Pappy O'Daniel," was the comment most met as CIO and other unionists dug into their pockets to pay for the right to vote. Their resentment swept on to include Beauford Jester, the Magnolia Petroleum (Standard Oil) governor of Texas, who had just branded a veterans bonus as "un-Texan," and state legislators who passed what Texas unions call the worst anti-labor laws under the Star Spangled Banner.

THE poll tax campaign started early with CIO. In September, the Tarrant County Industrial Union Council set up its PAC. On Oct. 1, CIO members began qualifying as deputy poll tax collectors. Ten thousand copies of a poll tax payment leaflet were circulated in workers' neighborhoods. Unions named PAC committees. Union secretaries were deputized.

A drive was started for neighborhood committeemen (block workers) to assist the deputies. As the campaign entered its final weeks, the committeemen distributed poll tax leaflets in advance of the deputies and steered deputies into districts where they could collect the richest harvest of receipts.

On the final day, Jan. 31, deputies opened sub-stations in worker neighboorhoods where there were no official sub-stations. Grocers and druggists were delighted to provide facilities.

'Oh, Pioneer!'

Pioneers always have to pay the price for progress.

That's the way it was when CIO deputy poll tax collectors started the first house to house canvassing in Fort Worth, Texas's history.

Alarmed householders began phoning the police and squad cars rushed out to pick up deputies.

It took front page news stories by the county tax collector to reassure Fort Worth that door to door canvassing was O. K.

NANCY DRYNAN
"Political Action is mostly leg action."

WHEN it was all over, Dorothy Bobo, secretary of Packinghouse Workers Local 54, had high honors for tax receipts, with nearly 700 paid. Other deputies had collected from 100 to 300 receipts.

Among the unions which had deputy poll tax collectors were Packinghouse Workers Local 54, Oil Workers Local 208, Transport Workers 509, American Communication Equipment Workers Local 77, Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Local 220 and Newspaper Guild Local 171.

And American Veterans Committee members worked side by side with CIO poll tax deputies, in every veterans' housing project in town.

The Progressive Voters League, a Negro political organization, handled the poll tax campaign in the Negro sections. The league had 10 deputies on the job, aided by CIO neighborhood committeemen.

REVIEWING the campaign, PAC decided that Cowtown's first door-to-door canvassing campaign had had these good results:

1. A crew of canvassers were trained in the essentials of political action. "Political action is mostly leg action," Chief Deputy Nancy Drynan of Newspaper Guild Local 171 summed it up. "Lots of leg action and some lip."

2. Canvassers pounding on doors aroused thousands of citizens to the seriousness of the election, particularly when they noticed icicles sprouting from the deputies. "I knew it was bad, but didn't know it was that bad" many of them said after they had opened doors and admitted canvassers. "Here's our $3.50."

3. Neighborhood committeemen brought the CIO message to dozens of workers' communities throughout the city by spreading the poll tax leaflets.

Deep In The Heart

Poll tax payments close Jan. 31 in Texas, six months before the first primary, four months before closing dates for filing candidates, three months before precinct conventions. Thus, a poll tax campaign has to be conducted cold, without issues or candidates to fan interest.

Poll taxes cost a man and wife $3.50. Result, majority of women in Texas are disfranchised as meager budgets and high prices do not permit luxury of two poll taxes in one house. Also, many workers told PAC canvassers they could not afford even a single poll tax.

Highest poll tax collection in Tarrant County history—between 80,000 and 90,000—means that only one in two of citizens of voting age is qualified to vote.

Poll tax enacted when Bourbons regained control of Texas, ousting the Populist movement 50 years ago. Since then, voting has been so discouraged that in last Fort Worth city election only 5,000 votes were cast for council, in a city of 350,000.

The Australian ballot hasn't hit Texas yet. Citizens vote on open tables. Their ballots are numbered to correspond with poll book, so that judges can either examine vote while it is being made, or afterward.

CIO Spokesman Ignored

Health Bill Foe Testifies 3 Days

By GLORIA CAPLAN

A four-month-old baby died on a desk in Minneapolis Mayor Hubert Humphrey's office last month because he was refused admission to the city's general hospital. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Jensen, the child's parents, said they couldn't afford to place the baby in a private hospital.

In Rockingham, N. C., a CIO Textile Worker, on strike for many months, had to call a midwife to deliver his baby last August when doctors, who presumably assumed that no cash fee would be available, refused to attend her.

The Rockingham incident and numerous others indicating the lack of medical care available to workers were related by CIO Textile Workers Legislative Representative John Edelman in testimony filed with a subcommittee on health of the Senate Labor Committee last week.

The subcommittee, headed by Sen. H. Alexander Smith (R., N. J.), refused Edelman time to present the CIO's case supporting the National Health Insurance Bill (S. 1320), sponsored by Sens. Wagner (N. Y.), Murray (Mont.), Pepper (Fla.), all Democrats, and others. The subcommittee did, however, find three days in which to hear Dr. Marjorie Shearon, a registered lobbyist and vehement foe of the health measure.

ON the first day of the hearing Dr. Shearon appeared at the elbow of Sen. Forrest Donnell R., Mo.) as consultant while he directed questions at Wilbur J. Cohen, assistant chief of the Social Security Administration's research bureau. The following day—and two days thereafter—Dr. Shearon appeared at the hearing as a witness.

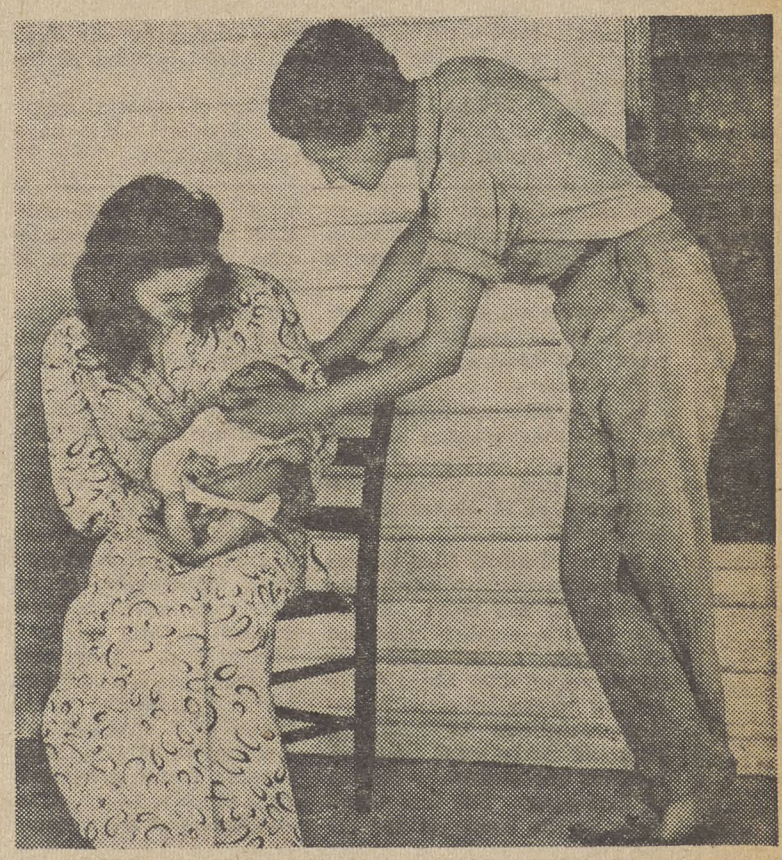
As a witness, the doctor (Ph.D. in paleontology. Funk & Wagnalls Dictionary defines paleontology as "the branch of biology that treats of the ancient life of the globe or of fossil organisms, either plants or animals.") lambasted Dr. I. S. Falk, chief of the Social Security research bureau, and his "fellow travelers," who favor national health insurance. Surrounded by books, papers and her own writings on the subject, she drew a dark picture of life in which patients would be pushed around by "bureaucratic" administrators and "compelled" to pay a 1½% payroll tax to finance a program of complete medical care.

SHE called for repeal of the Social Secuity Act "before the nation is entirely engulfed by the legislative program which is being promoted." In one of her pamphlets, which are subscribed to by the American Medical Association and other physicians' organizations opposing the bill, she referred to the Social Security Act omniously as "the first tangible evidence of our national move to the left. That act followed the Socialist line," she added.

Among Dr. Shearon's attacks was one directed against Dr. Falk for "packing" a mission to Japan with doctors who believed in compulsory health insurance.

(A check on Japanese legislation reveals that the country instituted compulsory health insurance 20 years ago.)

Dr. Shearon has been an employe of the Republican Natl. Committeee, was hired by Sen. Robert Taft as health consultant to the Senate Labor Committee, and describes herself now as "self-employed" in the writing and selling of a "Medical Legislative Service." Shortly before the hearing she registered as a lobbyist.



DELIVERED BY MIDWIFE: Mr. and Mrs. Buck Singletary, seated on the porch of their company house in Rockingham, N. C., admire their four-week-old baby, delivered by a midwife. A CIO Textile worker on strike many months, Singletary was unable to obtain a doctor to attend his wife during her confinement, because the MDs apparently felt there was no money in it.

Truman Says Rights' Aims Are A 'Must'

A NUMBER of Southern Democrats were threatening to bolt the Democratic Party, but not for the same reasons Henry A. Wallace did.

Arkansas and Delaware Universities admitted Negroes to graduate schools . . .

In Swainsboro, central Georgia, 200 robed Ku Klux Klanners defied the state law against the KKK, paraded around the courthouse square, burned a cross and listened to an unidentified Grand Kleagle declare the Klan does not "hate any race or creed, but we stand for complete segregation."

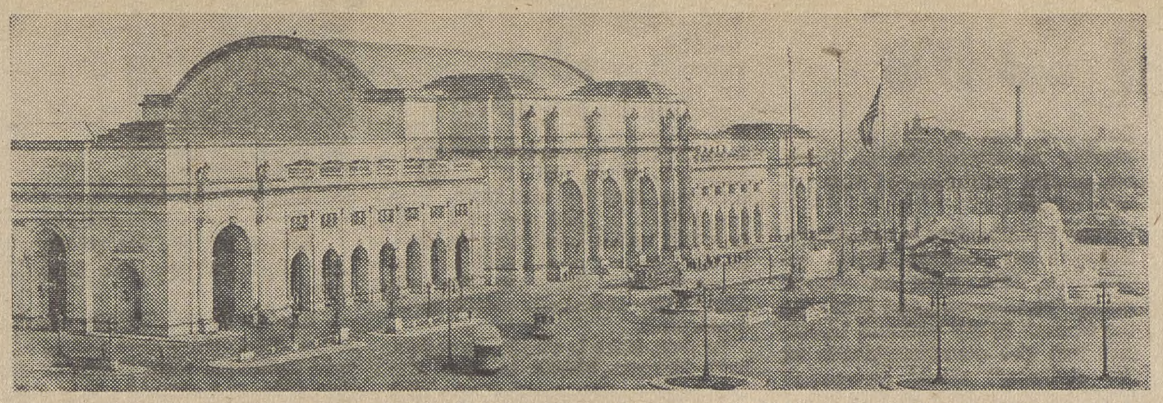
In New York, a conscientious objector was denied his high school diploma when he refused to take a loyalty oath on the grounds that might bind him to bear arms . . . .

An all-white jury in New Jersey—in Irvington, to be exact—fined the Montclair Skating Club $200 for refusing admission to two Negro women. The rink's treasurer, Mrs. Gene Malcolm, took the position the club was "private" and non-members were admitted only "if I thought a person might make a good club member." . . .

The august Supreme Court was puzzled over a case before it. The State of North Carolina says it does not bar Negro jurors—but few ever appear on jury panels. .

ALL that was happening while Pres. Truman offered Congress a program to implement the "Secure These Rights" program of his Civil Rights Committee. Main points of the Truman plan:

- Create a Civil Rights Division in the Justice Dept. and set up a permanent Presidential Commission on Civil Rights and a similar House-Senate body.
- Strengthen existing statutes to assure equal treatment to all residents, whether citizens or not.
- Provide federal protection against lynching.
- Abolish poll taxes and furnish more adequate protection of "the right to vote."
- Establish a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission to prevent "unfair discrimination" in employment.
- Prohibit discrimination in interstate transportation facilities.
- Provide suffrage and home-rule for residents of the District of Columbia.
- Grant statehood for Hawaii and Alaska and greater self-government for Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.
- Strike out racial restrictions barring some Orientals from obtaining citizenship.
- Settle promptly the claims of Japanese-Americans growing out of their wartime evacuation from the West Coast.



ABANDON FREEDOM when you disembark from railroad trains at this building—Washington, D. C.'s, Union Station. All Americans, whether white, Negro, Oriental, or anything else, lose their franchise to vote when they move into the District of Columbia and establish residence. They have no voice whatsoever in the government of their city. Negroes leaving Union Station and entering D. C. from the North or West find Jim Crowism riding high. Negroes going from the West or North to the South suddenly find themselves segregated when they change to a Dixie train. And, this is the main entrance into the Capital of the Land of the Free.

TRUMAN said the program represents the "minimum" required of the Federal Government at present to "inspire" other peoples "whose freedom is in jeopardy."

He further stated that our position in world affairs, where peoples "are faced with the choice of freedom or enslavement," makes adoption of his minimum program "especially urgent."

Chances of passage under the present Congress seemed pretty slim. The Republicans piously said it was up to Truman to get his Democrats to back his program to insure its passage. Some Southern Democrats fumed. The Daily Worker demanded "deeds," not words." The Moscow Radio said Truman's program was "nothing but election campaign propaganda."

Democratic party officials—answering both the Republicans and the Worker—pointed out that even Pres. Roosevelt at the height of his political power was unable to avert a Democratic filibuster against the anti-lynching and poll tax bills.

But, the Democratic Natl. Chairman, Sen. J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.) pledged a fight to achieve Truman's goals.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, who was a member of the Truman Civil Rights Committee, commented:

"The President is to be congratulated for his unequivocal demand for legislation to extend the principle that the protection of civil rights is the highest function of government. The CIO fully supports the President's request for legislation designed to correct these weaknesses."

The South—that is, the professional Southerner South — was mighty burned up at Truman. There were threats of secessions, of a move to call a separate Democratic convention of Dixie Democrats (Philadelphia merchants please take note.)

Governors, Senators and Representatives sounded away like so many Senator Claghorns, but Sen. John Overton (D., La.) let the cat out of the bag. He noted that he had received only two personal complaints about the Truman situation. He advised one of the two by letter "men like you should call local mass meetings in various cities throughout the South."

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS HOUSE

MR. COX (E. E., Ga. Dem.) Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute."

"THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?"

"There was no objection."

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

"MR. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to challenge any statement made by my President, but I would be a miserable slave to fear if I did not take exception to the recommendations made in his message of Feb. 2 (the Civil Rights message.)

"When I read this message, I wonder if, after all, Henry Wallace is such a bad man.

"The President attacks the people of that section of the country whose supporters he must have if he is to hope to be reelected. The whole thing sickens me."

And, another:

"PERMISSION TO ADDRESS HOUSE"

"MR. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute."

"THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?"

"There was no objection."

"THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE"

"MR. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, time and time again, I have said on this floor that Harry Truman never had a better friend in this than I have been, but that message of yesterday was the most discouraging thing I have ever heard read.

"Why should we go to Europe and spend $17 billion under the so-called Marshall Plan, allegedly fighting Communism, which means $6 million for the overburdened taxpayers of every individual county I represent? Why should we go that extent and then have a President of the U. S. under some pressure we cannot understand come in with that message and try to ram the platform of the Communist Party down the throats of the people of the U. S.?

"Mr. Speaker, there is one way we can take care of ourselves. We can elect independent electors throughout the country, then let those electors decide who shall be President. When we do that, we will put a stop to those smearing Communists who creep into every bureau and every commission that is appointed and attempt to undermine and attempt to destroy everything our people have fought for and everything we hold dear."

TRUMAN and his advisers must have been rather startled about a wire he received from the Daily Worker. Said the Worker:

"Issue an executive order demanding that the Univ. of Oklahoma carry out the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in the case of Mrs. Ada Sipuel Fisher now being denied permission to study law."

They were perplexed (1) because the Supreme Court is a higher authority than the President and (2), the court, in a decision criticized for its inadequacy, had merely ordered Oklahoma to provide law studies for Mrs. Fisher, but not necessarily at the State university. She is now asking the court that she be given University law studies, not segregated ones.

'American Faith'

Pres. Truman offered this summary of "our American faith" in his civil rights message:

"We believe that all men are created equal and that they have the right to equal justice under law.

"We believe that all men have the right to freedom of thought and of expression and the right to worship as they please.

"We believe that all men are entitled to equal opportunities for jobs, for homes, for good health and for education.

"We believe that all men should have a voice in their government and that Government should protect, not usurp, the rights of the people."

Civil Rights Meet Speakers Selected

Walter Reuther, president, CIO Auto Workers; Edward J. Sparling, president, Roosevelt College, Chicago, and Thurgood Marshall, general counsel, Natl. Association for Advancement of Colored People, will be the principal speakers at the CIO Civil Rights Conference, to be held Feb. 19-20, Hollenden Hotel, Cleveland.

Reuther will address the opening session. Sparling and Marshall will talk at the dinner.

Packinghouse Union Takes Strike Vote

Some 100,000 CIO Packing workers are voting on whether to strike if current negotiations with the "Big Four" meat packers fail.

The union, which is asking a 29c hourly increase, described the 9c an hour settlement recently accepted by 11,000 AFL Meat Cutters as "totally inadequate, completely unrealistic and in flagrant disregard of the real needs of the packinghouse workers."

Questioning the "good faith" of the packing companies, UPA said: "They have maneuvered an agreement on inadequate terms with a small minority of their employes, which for all practical purposes is an attempt to make the 'tail wag the dog'."

Large Chicago Home Area Ends Racial Restrictive Covenants

CHICAGO is showing the way in the campaign against restrictive covenants in the rental or purchase of houses.

The Oakwood-Kenwood Property Owners' Association—the association covers the large area from Oakwood Boulevard on the north, to 41st st. on the south and from Cottage Grove to Lake Michigan—has just announced a new kind of community conservation agreement.

The agreement, which has no racial restrictions, was developed over a year of study and conference between representatives of the association—all white—and of leading Negro organizations, brought together under the auspices of the Chicago Mayor's Commission on Human Relations, and the Metropolitan Housing Council.

The agreement's pledges included those of subscribers to maintain their properties in accordance with certain minimum standards, limits the number of persons who may occupy a given room area, and defines the minimum rentable accommodations which may be offered upon conversion into smaller units.

Its underlying theory is to make every owner responsible to the community generally for the proper maintenance of his property, and to give to each affected owner a means of enforcing this responsibility.

As soon as the agreement was adopted, the association withdrew further enforcement of racial restrictive covenants which had been in force in the Oakland-Kenwood area.

Ford Local Votes For Affidavits

Members of Ford Local 600, United Automobile Workers, have voted about 7,500 to 4,600 in favor of having their officers sign non-Communist affidavits as required by the Taft-Hartley law.

The union election committee blamed the sub-zero weather for the light vote among the 70,000 workers at Ford's River Rouge plant.

Women's Changing Role

The American woman's changing role as worker, homemaker and citizen will be discussed at a 3-day conference held by the Women's Bureau, U. S. Dept. of Labor, Feb. 17-19.

Rep. Hoffman

Would Toss Unions Back 50 Years

UNIONS weren't set back far enough by the Taft-Hartley Act and employers have "no legal obligation at all," according to Rep. Clare Hoffman (R.-Mich.).

The Congressman, whose subcommittee conducted an "investigation" of a CIO Public Workers strike at 40 cafeterias in government buildings in Washington, didn't offer a suggestion as to how far he thought unions should be pushed back.

His opinion, however, came to light last week when Abram Flaxer, international president of the striking union, charged that unions had been "thrown back 50 years by the Taft-Hartley Act."

"Do you think that's far enough?" snapped Hoffman.

The subcommittee chairman's novel interpretation of the Wagner Labor Act, as amended by the T-H Act, was contained in an exchange with witness Albert C. Boehm, of the Natl. Food Corp., operator of the Pentagon building cafeteria which is not involved in the strike.

THE business spokesman incurred Hoffman's displeasure by testifying, "I've always found the union to be a responsible organization." (His firm settled amicably with the union as the strike in the other 40 cafeterias got under way.)

"As we interpret the law, there is no requirement for a union to comply with the Taft-Hartley Act as long as the question of representation does not occur . . . there is a duty on our part to bargain . . ."

"There is no legal obligation to bargain at all," retorted Hoffman.

The subcommittee spent the final two days of the two-week hearing in attempting to prove communist affiliation of the union's officers.

Flaxer declined to answer questions on his political beliefs, because he said, such an answer would "assume that the issue (in the strike) is my political beliefs and not the economic needs of the strikers," would encourage the committee's "unfair and improper" course in ignoring the economic issues and serving as a "strikebreaking" agent, and would violate his freedom of opinion.

"If this committee desired to play a constructive role in this strike, the committee would be looking into the shamefully low wage of $21.91 a week paid to the strikers."

TWO local union officials—Richard A. Bancroft, president, and Oliver T. Palmer, business agent—similarly refused to answer the bombardment of political questions.

After forcibly ejecting an attorney for the union, the subcommittee called Clarence Mitchell, national labor secretary of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People, but he was almost immediately interrupted and dismissed by Hoffman, who complained that he was not answering properly.

Mitchell said he had appeared at the hearing voluntarily at the committee's request. After his dismissal he was subpoenaed to appear the following day. Although he appeared the next day, with a prepared statement, the committee failed to call him. In the statement which he was not permitted to read Mitchell said: "I was prepared to answer all reasonable questions and hoped that the information submitted by me would contribute to a just settlement of the strike . . . The majority of these workers are colored. The sole interest of the NAACP is to see that these people are permitted to return to work at a better wage."

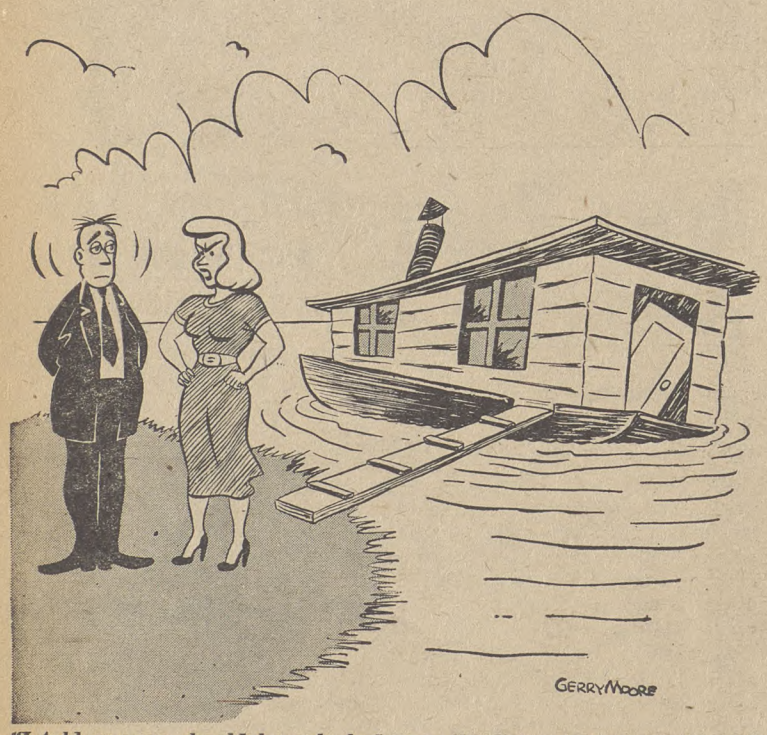
The cafeteria strike began Jan. 5, when Government Services, Inc., private operators of the cafeterias, refused to bargain with the union on grounds that the union officers had not signed non-communist affidavits.

It's 118 To 1

The union shop is a sure bet in the CIO Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers. In fact, it's almost 118 to 1.

The NLRB conducted a union shop poll among Fletcher Enamel Co. employes at Dunbar, W. Va.

The result: 707 for the union shop, 6 against.



"I told you we should have looked over the house before signing the lease."

$$$$$$

Don't waste too much envy on that man with the $10,000 salary as a Government administrator. Suppose, just for example, that he was making $10,000 in 1939 and still has that as his basic pay. In 1939, he had to pay about $300 income tax and Social Security. That left him $9700—and really worth $9700—to spend.

In 1948, if he is single, he would have to make $24,000 to equal the purchasing power of that 1939 take-home pay. If he is married with two kids, he would have to make $23,600.

Or, to put it even more bluntly, those 10,000 in 1948 dollars have now only $4708 in 1939 purchasing power for a single man; $4805 for a married man with one child; $4988 for a married man with two young ones.

(Editors' note: Boy, does it cost to live in Washington!)

CIO Unions to Urge Equal Pay Bill

Spokesmen from at least four CIO unions will appear before the Senate Labor Committee Feb. 11 to support the Equal Pay Bill.

The bill was introduced in the Senate by Sens. Pepper (D., Fla.) and Morse (R., Ore.), and in the House by Rep. Helen Douglas (D., Calif.). It provides equal pay for both sexes on any particular type of work.

The measure has strong support from CIO unions, which have opposed the Equal Rights Amendments to the Constitution proposed by some women's rights groups. Union argued that that amendment would wipe out many present laws to give women special protection in industry on

Win 9 Dixie Polls In Two Weeks

Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee has announced that workers in nine plants throughout the South in the past two weeks chose CIO unions to represent them.

The CIO's Southern drive, meanwhile, is digging into new areas and laying the groundwork for further organization, Bittner said. Bittner listed eight plants in which bargaining rights were won for CIO through elections and one in which management agreed to recognize CIO.

Plants where employes voted for CIO and the victorious unions were:

Bedford Furniture Co., Bedford, Va., Textile Workers; General Shale Products Corp., Johnson City, Tenn., United Stone and Allied Products Workers; Dixie Bedding Manufacturing Company, Miami, Fla., CIO.

Gaylord Container Corp., Westleco, Tex., United Paperworkers; International Motor Rebuild, Garland, Tex., Auto Workers; McKinney Pant Mfg. Co., McKinney, Tex., Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Zero Plate Co., Dallas, Tex., and West Box Co., Fayetteville, N. C., both Woodworkers.

McKay-Fowler Co., Arcadia, Fla., agreed to recognize CIO as its employes' bargaining representative after a "cross-check" of membership cards established that the union had a majority.

The writer attended a Statewide conference with telephone workers at Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 1, accompanied by the Secretary of CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, Brother Ted Silvey. In spite of the bad weather, the conference was well-attended. A constitution was adopted and steps taken to expedite NLRB election. All delegates expressed determination to drive forward to victory. Regional Director and State President John B. Easton presided. Jesse D. Shepherd was elected president of the state organization, with C. G. Roach as vice-president and Edna White as secretary.

The writer, in company with TWOC Vice Chairman John J. Morgan, also addressed a conference of the Empire Telephone Workers Executive Board in Syracuse, N. Y., last week. Those in attendance showed a keen interest in CIO and its development, and many questions were asked and answered. The meeting adjourned with a good feeling toward CIO.

The Communications Association Executive Board approved the agreement entered into between Pres. Joseph Selly and TWOC transferring the telephone workers of that organization over to the TWOC on the West Coast. Votes of the membership are being taken now, and in addition to that final vote of the United Brotherhood of Telephone Workers is also being taken this month. CIO expects victory in each case for the CIO Telephone Workers.

Reuther Asks Action On St. Lawrence

"Prompt, favorable action" to approve an agreement with Canada on the St. Lawrence River seaway and power project was asked last week of the Senate by Pres. Walter Reuther of the United Auto Workers.

Reuther asked Sen. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), to support seaway legislation.

'Spare the Rich' Bill Sails Through House

EDITION Three of the Knutson "spare the rich" income tax bill sailed through the House last week on a tidal wave of votes from Republican and southern Democratic Congressmen.

The bill—much like two earlier versions proposed by the burly Minnesota Congressman — picked up 297 votes to only 120 cast against. The margin was 19 more than enough to over-ride a possible veto.

CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan, in a letter to Congressmen just before the bill came to a vote in the House, said the bill failed completely to provide either "justice or equality" in its treatment of rich and poor.

CIO economists point out that under the Knutson bill, the several million families earning under $2000 a year will have a tax saving of about $1 a week.

BUT the 212,000 families making over $25,000 a year will save more than $85 a week.

Knutson—the heavy-set publisher of the Wadena, Minn., Pioneer Journal—sweetened up the present bill (HR 4790) in an effort to make it more presentable to low and middle income earners.

It provides for a $100 increase in personal exemptions; permits splitting of income for tax purposes by husbands and wives—in order to take advantage of lower rates in the lower brackets; and offers straight cuts in the tax rates of from 10 to 30%.

Cowan, noting the 6½ billion cut in revenue involved in the bill, said this is no year to cut the government's revenue.

"Whatever tax relief is voted this year should go to the real victims of inflation," he wrote to Congressmen. "No tax relief whatever should be approved which is not offset by increased levies on other sources."

The CIO proposals call for an increase in personal exemptions from the present $500 to $1,500; for tightening of loopholes through which corporations and wealthy persons escape taxes; and steep increases in taxes on excess profits.

THE Knutson bill, Cowan added, is "individually unjust and economically disastrous.

"The working people of America are not deceived and will not be baited to approve the scant tax relief this bill gives them, while enormous sums are dished out to those who are well able to buy clothes and pay their grocery bills even at present exorbitant prices."

The 26 million taxpayers with net incomes under $2,000 will get only about one-quarter of the 6½ billion dollar tax cut. But the 4% of families with $5,000 net incomes will get one-third of the benefits.

In the House, veteran liberal Rep. Sabath (D. Ill.) called the Knutson bill both "unfair" and "dishonest". He said it was obviously directed toward the interests "of the well-to-do classes who are afforded greater tax reductions."

And Rep. Sam Rayburn (D. Tex.)—who was Speaker of the House until the GOP won control in the '46 elections—urged the bill be reconsidered.

He called for a policy of reducing taxes of those least able to pay.

But the combined votes of the Republicans and their allies among the southern Democrats killed the proposal.

Censorship Sought For Movies, Radio

Reported efforts to line up the newspaper, radio and movie industries behind a "voluntary censorship" plan are causing considerable worry among leaders in the three communications branches.

Variety, trade paper for the entertainment industry, said that Secretary of Defense James Forrestal—a former investment banker— has been holding conversations with industry executives to win support for the plans.

The paper said censorship "stalks" the movie and radio industries and described the Forrestal efforts as "ominous." It said many of the radio people fear that "voluntary" censorship would lead quickly to "compulsory" dictation over contents of newspapers, radio programs and movies.

Anti-Bias Bill Okehed By Senate Committee

THE Senate has taken one step along the lengthy path leading toward passage of federal legislation to bar discrimination in industry.

By a 7-5 vote, the Senate Labor Committee approved the anti-discrimination bill (S. 984), which was introduced last year by Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.) and a group of several other Senators from both parties.

The bill is scheduled to come up for debate after the Senate has finished with the Marshall Plan—several weeks or months away. It is expected to receive attempted filibuster treatment from die-hard Southern Democrats who have opposed all previous FEPC bills, anti-lynch proposals and removal of the poll-tax in federal elections.

Party lines were completely split when the bill came up for vote in the Labor Committee.

Voting for it were five Republicans and two Democrats: Ives, Aiken (R. Vt.), Smith (R. N.J.), Morse (R. Ore.), Jenner (R. Ind.), Thomas (D. Utah) and Murray (D. Mont.).

Opposed were three Republicans and two Democrats: Taft (R. O.), Donnell (R. Mo.), Ball (R. Minn.), Hill (D. Ala.) and Ellender (D. La.).

Sen. Pepper (D. Fla.), another member of the Labor Committee, was absent.

THE bill is considerably milder than earlier versions of Fair Employment Practices Committee legislation offered in Congress during the war and in the immediate post-war period. It sets up a government agency with power to make recommendations and seek voluntary compliance with anti-bias standards.

The commission would also have some powers—less than in the previous bills but still with plenty of teeth—to force compliance.

Sen. Taft, who opposed the bill, said that both Smith and Aiken had voted for it after reserving the right to seek removal of all compulsory powers when it reaches the Senate floor.

Sen. Ball—the tall, gangling man from Minnesota who will have labor opposition when he runs for re-election this year—voted against the bill. Ball, a prime mover in the 1947 push to pass the Taft-Hartley bill, has capitalized for years on the fact that he bears some resemblance to Abraham Lincoln.

Capital observers, who recall that Lincoln freed the slaves, have rarely seen any mental similarity between the Civil War President and the Minnesota senator.

Taft said that he would have preferred his own bill, but didn't press the matter—he said—in order to avoid further confusion. He voiced belief that the bill deserves thorough consideration by the Senate.

The bill is one of three key civil rights measures which CIO has urged the Congress to pass at this session. The others would make lynching a federal crime and hold local law enforcement officers responsible for failure to act in lynching cases, and illegalize the polltax.

Of these, the polltax bill has passed the House, but has not been cleared in Senate committee; the anti-lynching bill has made no progress in committees of either House or Senate; and the anti-bias bill has only now received Senate committee approval, with no action yet registered on the House side of the Capitol.

T-H TEST PERILS PRESS FREEDOM

"The CIO has been singled out for prosecution by the Federal Government because it chose to exercise its constitutional right to freedom of expression and freedom of the press."

That's what CIO Pres. Philip Murray said after he and the CIO were indicted last week by a Federal Grand Jury on a charge of violating the political expenditures portion of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The indictment was returned in Washington nearly seven months after Murray, acting in accordance with a policy adopted by the CIO Executive Board, decided to launch a constitutional test of curbs placed by the T-H Act on freedom of political expression.

Murray authorized the CIO News to publish a CIO endorsement of Judge Ed Garmatz, successful candidate in a special congressional election at Baltimore.

Publication of the statement was illegal, the indictment charges, and Atty. Gen. Tom Clark says the Government intends to enforce the T-H Act "as written."

Clark, however, said the case "can present a problem" because of possible conflict between the power of Congress to regulate elections and "the constitutional freedom of speech and the press."

Murray, at Pittsburgh when the indictment was returned, said the ban the Government is attempting to place against the CIO News could be evoked against any newspaper published by a corporation.

"More—much more—than the right of Philip Murray to issue political statements through the CIO News is involved in this case," he said. "The vitally important freedom of the entire press is involved." Murray said he was not acting "in a spirit of defiance or bitterness" when he authorized publication of the Garmatz indorsement in the July 14, 1947, issue of the CIO News.

His action, he said, was taken "in the hope that such authorization would enable the courts of the U. S. to rule again that no act of Congress can abridge our basic constitutional rights of freedom of press and freedom of expression."

Murray and the CIO were indicted two days after three CIO News staff members and a representative of the CIO Organizational Department were called to testify before the Grand Jury.

Prior to this, Murray and the editor and business manager of the CIO News were questioned several times by FBI agents regarding the financial connection between the CIO and its official publication.

The Justice Dept. announced Murray would be arraigned in Washington Friday, Feb. 20. Maximum penalty under the T-H Act would be a fine of $1000 or a year in jail, or both, for Murray and a $5000 fine for the CIO.

Murray said the CIO has retained Charles J. Margiotti, former attorney general of Pennsylvania, and Lee Pressman, former CIO general counsel, to handle the case.

Washington reporters predicted the case would attract worldwide attention; not only because Murray and the CIO are involved but because it deals with freedom of the press and expression.

Consistent with those principles I deem it the duty of citizenship to abide by and respect the highest law of the land—the Constitution of the United States.

It has always been my understanding that that document guarantees the basic American rights of free speech, free press, free assemblage and forbids the denial of life, liberty or property without due process of law. Those guarantees and those protections, I am advised and firmly believe, are and must be available to all without distinction, caste or class.

I firmly believe that the action which I now take is fully legal under the law of our land. It is my understanding that the issue as to whether proper respect will be paid to the fundamental guarantees and principles of our Constitution must now rest in the hands of the law enforcement agencies of the federal government.

The Statement, The Man And The Basic Rights Involved

DOES THAT UPROAR MEAN PRICE CUTS?

THIS is what the soothsayers were saying about 10 days ago when the commodity market broke:

Some glib radio commentators—who have a ready solution to any problem that rises—were chortling. This proved that labor was all wet; this proved that soon everything would be jake; this proved that labor was nuts in asking for new wage rises; this proved that NAM had been proved right in its prediction at the deathbed of OPA . . .

An editorial writer in Cincinnati took to his typewriter and blasted Pres. Truman all over the lot. Truman, wrote he, had blundered at a press conference when he demanded lower prices. For, wrote the editorial writer—who shall be nameless because we don't know his name—that was being taken care of very well by business, and naturally business knows more than the President.

News stories in the papers for a few days took on journalism's usual note of joy; a fast survey showed declining prices in some stores; it was easy to predict that this would quickly be the general picture . . .

DAVID LAWRENCE'S (that's David Lawrence the publisher, not David Lawrence the Mayor of Pittsburgh) U. S. News began to talk ever so cautiously of what we could expect after the boom subsides . . .

At the end of the week a fortnight ago, the Wall St. Journal quoted an unidentified Pittsburgh meat packer as saying that "by next week (that's last week to you and us) you'll be able to go to your butcher and buy meat cheaper than at any time in the past three months . . ."

There was no doubt that the figures sounded good. Radio and news reporters found that bacon was down as much as 12 cents in Springfield, Ill.; flour was off 14 cents for 25 pounds in Detroit; butter, the jittery commodity, was down a little here, a little more there. But, these are all speculative commodities . . .

Some Congressmen wanted an investigation, not about why prices had stayed up so long and then apparently were collapsing—perish forbid that a Congressman should worry about prices—but of whether or not anyone was making any dough out of this. (One gent did make from $200,000 to $400,000 selling short) . . .

That's what they were saying when the commodity markets first broke.

* * *

THIS is what was doing and what they were saying as this issue of the CIO News went to press:

There was an intensification of price cutting in the retail field, but that affected only advertised items.

Wholesale prices had declined substantially, but no one could find a significant decline in retail prices of most foods.

But, there was significance in the statement of the Chamber of Commerce's organ, Business Action:

"So far as can be judged now, the decline seems to be more of a correction of the uptrend rather than any extensive readjustment of prices that might lead to the kind of collapse that followed the 1929 break in the stock market."

There was also significance in the fact that Business Action did not mention food prices.

* * *

THE housewife was puzzled last week. She had heard and had read about all these price cuts—but she saw little evidence of reduction when she was buying her family's daily bread and meat and other foods.

Substantial economists were carefully eyeing the situation; keeping mum until they found out whether it was a flurry, a temporary thing or a permanent trend.

Skeptical Americans — so long used to high prices and fed so often with the cry that every market recession meant "this is it"—remained skeptical.—A. R.

Consider Lifting On-Job Ceilings

Meyer Bernstein, CIO veterans' representative, urges that CIO unions and their members immediately wire Senate members of the Senate-House veterans' conference committee asking that they approve the House version of the bill lifting wage ceilings for on-the-job trainees. The bill will be considered this week.

Members of the committee are: Wayne Morse (R. Oreg.), Robert A. Taft (R. Ohio), Joseph Ball (R. Minn.), Lister Hill (D. Ala.) and Elbert Thomas (D. Utah).

The present ceilings on on-the-job training are $175 for single men and $200 for married men. Unmarried trainees receiving less than the maximum salaries may collect a subsistence allowance of $65 a month, while married veterans are entitled to $90 a month.

The House version would revise the ceiling as follows: $250 a month for single veterans; $325 for married men with one dependent and $350 for married men with two or more dependents.

Civil Rights Meet In Cleveland

The CIO Civil Rights Conference will be held Feb. 19 and 20 in Cleveland.

The delegates, at the Hollenden Hotel, will attend panel sessions and draw up a long-range program. Speakers will include Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers.

Tax Refunds

Could Help Boost Pay

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THREE giant corporations received such whopping big income and excess profits tax refunds in 1947 that these alone could finance substantial wage increases for all their employes.

Biggest slice of the $2,897,000,000 total paid out by Uncle Sam went to the United States Steel Corp., which received a tidy $63,648,179.31. Westinghouse Electric took second place with $59,095,907.82. Its competitor, General Electric, received $25,087,526.70.

The amounts were paid out by the U. S. Treasury during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947.

Government sources did not make public reasons for the excess profits rebates. These could arise from simple overpayment or could represent a refund covering profit reductions caused by the 1946 strikes.

Such payments are provided by the carry back-carry forward provisions of the excess profits tax law. In effect they amount to government subsidization of corporations during strikes.

In the case of U.S. Steel, whose 1946 profits did not take a dip despite the strike, it was understood the refunds resulted entirely from overpayment.

A substantial part of the GE and Westinghouse tax receipts may have constituted repayment for the strike period.

On the books the corporations may apply the refunds to their 1946 profits or they may add the amount to their capital fund. In either case they represent profits in excess of those mentioned in profit statements. In the case of U.S. Steel, for instance, the rebate was almost as large as its net profits for the entire year of 1946—$88,683,530.

If parcelled out into wage increases—a hypothetical case—the rebates could provide the following boosts for every domestic employe—including corporation officials and clerical staff:

- Westinghouse (90,000 employes): 31c an hour.
- U.S. Steel (250,000 employes): 12c an hour.
- General Electric (140,000 employes): 9c an hour.

Neither of the CIO unions which have contracts with these corporations — the Steelworkers and the Electrical Workers—has announced the amount of wage increases they intend to ask in negotiations.

CLARK PLANS MORE POLITICAL CHARGES

THE Justice Dept. plans "additional prosecutions" under the political expenditures section of the Taft-Hartley Act, according to Atty. Gen. Tom Clark.

All violators of the Taft-Hartley Act's ban on political activity, —whether by labor unions, corporations or banks—will be prosecuted, Justice officials said.

There have been no complaints, however, of any violations by business groups similar to that filed against the CIO.

Government prosecutors handling the case against the CIO and its President, Philip Murray, said that Attorney General Clark had instructed them to bring charges against any and all violators without discrimination.

Justice officials said that grand jury indictments would be sought if any evidence is turned up in the course of their current investigations of a direct or indirect expenditure by a bank or corporation.

Commenting on the indictment of the CIO and its president, Philip Murray, Clark said:

"This indictment results from the fact that Mr. Murray and the CIO used the 'CIO News' to publicize their support of one of the candidates for Congress in the special election held on July 15, 1947, in the Third Congressional District of Maryland. Section 304 of the Taft-Hartley Act prohibits the expenditure of the funds of a labor organization for such a purpose.

"This statute can present a problem in the accommodation of the constitutional power of the Congress to regulate Federal elections with the constitutional freedoms of speech and the press. The Executive Branch of the Government will, of course, enforce the statute as it is written. The Department of Justice has, therefore, initiated this prosecution and has assigned to two of the Attorney General's senior assistants, Mr. Jesse Climenko of New York and Mr. Turner Smith, the duty of representing the Government.

"The Department is preparing additional prosecutions of other reported violations of this statute."

THE six-page indictment against Philip Murray and the CIO makes only one specific charge—that the CIO "unlawfully did make expenditures in connection with an election in which a Representative to Congress was to be voted for . . ."

About one-half of the indictment is devoted to the statement Murray issued through the July 4, 1947, issue of the CIO News.

The first part of the indictment states that the CIO is a "labor organization" as defined by Section 304 of the Taft-Hartley Act, that Philip Murray is president of the CIO and that the CIO News is owned, edited and published by the CIO.

The CIO is then accused of using the CIO News to publish the Murray statement "with the intent thereby to violate the provisions of" the T-H Act.

Final action of the indictment charges that a "substantial sum of money" was spent illegally in the preparation and distribution of the July 14 issue of the CIO News.

Hosiery Workers Oppose 3d Party

The national executive board of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers has announced it opposed formation of a third party.

The union, in a resolution, said, "A third party would serve only to split and divide the forces of progress at the very moment when unity is our greatest need and political activity of labor must be conducted on an independent and nonpartisan basis, giving support to the progressive forces in both major parties."

CIO Assisting In ITU Case

The CIO charged the Congress which passed the Taft-Hartley Act with "interference . . . with the judicial system" for the purpose of depriving unions and their members of basic civil liberties.

The accusation was made by CIO Associate General Counsel Frank Donner in a brief mailed to the U. S. District Court in Indianapolis.

The CIO was the first of four labor groups to submit arguments in support of the International Typographical Union. The printers are fighting a request by the NLRB for an injunction to halt alleged unfair labor practices.

Donner's brief dealt with only one issue involved in the case; that is, whether an administrative agency of the government—the NLRB — has the constitutional right to use the U. S. courts as its own "adjunct" and to overrule the court when it disagrees with the board.

The T-H Act, both the CIO and ITU argued, deprives the district court of judicial power granted by the Constitution in that the court's decision is no longer conclusive.

The CIO has submitted briefs in two other federal court cases.

One, now before the Supreme Court, involves the constitutionality of a New Jersey ordinance prohibiting the use of loud speakers.

The other case before a U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals involves the right of veterans to receive vacation-time credit for time spent in the armed forces. A brief submitted by the CIO Steelworkers argues that denial of this benefit constitutes a violation of the Selective Training and Service Act (GI Bill of Rights).

Seek Pay Rise Without Price Hike

INCREASES of 30c an hour will be sought in negotiations by the CIO Rubber Workers and Oil Workers.

The Rubber decision, which will affect some 200,000 workers, was reached at a meeting in Cleveland of 200 members of the International Policy Committee.

Part of the increase will be earmarked for welfare, insurance, hositalization, sick and accident and retirement funds. The amount to be set aside will be determined by the local unions.

A system of automatic cost-of-living bonuses also will be asked by the union.

THE Oil Workers Wage Policy Committee stated that "the failure of Congress to enact price control leaves us no other recourse" than to seek a general increase.

"Although Congress is prepared to hand out billions in tax reductions to profiteers fattening on the people's needs it is deaf to appeals to bring down prices."

Both unions emphasized that the increases could be granted easily without price increases.

"If business will content itself with moderate profits," said Rubber Workers Intl. Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, "it can pay higher wages without raising prices."

The union bargains on a nationwide basis with Goodyear, Goodrich and U. S. Rubber and locally with Firestone.

"A thin slice of their profits" would be sufficient to provide wage boosts for the Oil Workers, the OWIU said.

The oil industry, it is estimated, has enjoyed a record-breaking profit year due to a 13% rise in refinery workers' productivity since January, 1946, and due to increased prices, which advanced nearly 100% since June, 1946.

ON A local level, CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers in Camden and Chicago and Transport Workers in New York and Philadelphia were pushing for increases.

FTA is seeking a 30c raise at two Campbell Soup plants. TWU is asking 30c an hour for bus drivers and maintenance employes of the East Side Bus Co. and the Comprehensive Omnibus Corp. in New York and 40c for 11,000 operating employes of the Philadelphia Transportation Co.

MURRAY SAYS T-H CAN GAG MANY PAPERS

"WHAT has occurred in respect to the CIO News can occur in relation to many newspapers, because the Taft-Hartley Act forbids banks and corporations—as well as unions—from making expenditures in connection with political elections."

That was the comment of CIO Pres. Philip Murray after he and the CIO were indicted by a Federal Grand jury for violating the political ban of the T-H law. The indictment was based on a story supporting the candidacy of Judge Ed Garmatz (D., Md.) for Representative which Murray ordered printed in the July 14 issue of the CIO News. (Garmatz won.) Murray's statement follows:

The Congress of Industrial Organizations has been singled out for prosecution by the Federal Government because it chose to exercise its constitutional right to freedom of expression and freedom of press.

The Taft-Hartley Law, under which the prosecution will be conducted, was designed to weaken or destroy trade unions and to deprive their officials of the right to discuss political matters freely.

It has long been our contention that democracy would be seriously threatened if any group of citizens was deprived of its right to engage in free and open discussion of political candidates and political issues.

It was because of this feeling that I, last July, authorized action designed to test the constitutionality of those sections of the Taft-Hartley Act which curb political freedom and freedom of the press.

AS A result of my action, The CIO News on July 14, 1947, carried on its front page a statement from me urging CIO members to support a certain candidate in a special Congressional election at Baltimore. That and only that act constitutes my alleged offense.

The statement so published which represents my views in this matter today as it did seven months ago, said in part:

"The CIO has been requested by its members within the Congressional District involved to give publicity to the action of its State PAC and to urge that members of the CIO unions in the District cast votes for Judge (Ed) Garmatz.

"The Congress of the United States, however, has recently enacted a law, commonly known and referred to as the Taft-Hartley Act. This law purports to make it illegal for American working men and women organized into labor organizations and acting through their duly elected officers to expend their common funds to make their views heard and known in matters relating to elections for federal office.

"Senator Taft, the foremost sponsor of the new law, has publicly stated his view that it is the purpose, intent and effect of the new law to stifle the voice of labor in political matters and particularly to prevent labor from supplying in its own publications, distributed among its own members, facts and information with respect to current election issues and candidates.

"I HAVE been reared in a tradition of respect for the law of the land. In my public and private life I have adhered religiously to the principles of that training. Consistent with these principles, I deem it a duty of citizenship to abide by and respect the highest law of the land—the Constitution of the United States.

"It has always been my understanding that that document guarantees the basic American rights of free speech, free press, free assemblage and forbids the denial of life, liberty or property without due process of law. Those guarantees and those protections, I am advised and firmly believe, are and must be available to all without distinction, caste or class.

"If the Taft-Hartley Act means what it has been proclaimed to mean, it flagrantly flaunts fundamental principles which have been cornerstones of American tradition and American freedom ever since the founding of our great nation.

"I believe that I would be remiss in the performance of my duty as an American citizen if I did not speak and act firmly in support of these great traditions and those vital freedoms which have made America what it is today.

"Under the procedure of our courts it is possible to strike down unconstitutional laws only by taking affirmative action in reliance on and in the exercise of the liberties guaranteed by the Constitution.

"This I have decided to do."

I DID not authorize publication of this statement in a spirit of defiance or bitterness. I acted in the hope that such authorization would enable the courts of the United States to rule again that no act of Congress can abridge our basic Constitutional rights of freedom of press and freedom of expression.

What has occurred in respect to The CIO News can occur in relation to many newspapers, because the Taft-Hartley Act forbids banks and corporations—as well as unions—from making expenditures in connection with political elections. Obviously no corporation which publishes a newspaper can take a stand in a political campaign without making an expenditure.

More—much more—than the right of Philip Murray to issue political statements through The CIO News is involved in this case.

The vitally important freedom of the entire press is involved.

If we in the CIO could have obtained a Supreme Court ruling on the constitutionality of those sections of the Taft-Hartley Act involved in this case merely by initiating a civil proceeding, we would have done so.

This could not be done, I have been advised, under prevailing legal precedents. My action was thereby taken as a means to obtain a final decision which we hope will assure continued protection for basic American liberties.

TAFT WANTS TO SILENCE VOICE OF UNIONS

SENATOR TAFT was in Indiana on a political speaking tour when the CIO and its president, Philip Murray, were indicted on a charge of violating the political expenditures section of the Taft-Hartley Act.

United Press reported from Gary that Taft said there is a possibility that "the government made a mistake" in returning the indictment.

SEN. TAFT
Says U. S. May Have Erred

"The Government is making a mistake in penalizing Mr. Murray if the union newspaper was a bona fide newspaper," Taft was quoted as saying.

"If, on the other hand, it was a union newspaper used as a campaign broadside it was clearly illegal."

Taft's views regarding use of union newspapers are revealed by statements he made in the Senate when the T-H Act was up for consideration.

Sen. Pepper, during debate, asked Taft if Labor, a railroad union publication, would be considered as making a political expenditure if it carried a statement in support of a Presidential candidate.

"If it were supported by union funds contributed by union members as union dues it would be a violation of the law, yes," Taft replied. ". . . If the paper called Labor is operated independently, if it derives its money from subscribers, then, of course, there would be no violation. The prohibition is against a labor organization using its funds either as a contribution to a political campaign or as a direct expenditure of funds on its own behalf."

There was an exchange between Pepper and Taft regarding the effect of the ban on newspapers generally. Then Pepper asked:

"Does the Senator know how a newspaper published by a corporation can get any money to provide editorials for the paper if it does not get it from the corporate treasury?"

Taft replied:

"They get their money from advertising. They are business concerns, operating newspapers. So far as I know, no one has ever thought that a corporation could publish a pamphlet for one candidate as against another without violating the Corrupt Practices Act . . . They could not publish a special newspaper for that purpose under the previous law."

Pepper said:

"I wonder if the Senator, upon reflection, really means that the newspapers of this country cannot publish an extra paper if they want to oppose some candidate or cannot put out a whole special edition giving their views about a political party or a political candidate. That is one of the civil rights in this country. If that be the correct premise—and I think it cannot be denied that it is—is not the Senator denying to labor organizations which may happen to own a newspaper the right to the same freedom of press . . .?

Taft replied:

". . . They could conduct a newspaper if they wanted to, just as a corporation can conduct a newspaper. But why should a labor organization be able to publish pamphlets or special newspapers against one candidate or in favor of another candidate, using funds which that organization collected from union members?

"That is what happened in the state of Ohio."

And the Senator from Ohio said it would be illegal for a union to publish the voting record of an office holder.

Silent!

Two CIO News staff members with a total of 34 years of newspaper experience say they don't intend to write what they regard as an interesting, important story.

They are Allan L. Swim, editor, and Henry C. Fleisher, assistant editor, who were called before a Federal Grand Jury last week to testify regarding use of the CIO News to indorse a political candidate.

The reason for their silence: Witnesses before a Grand Jury are not permitted to discuss the testimony they give.

THE MURRAY INDICTMENT

Phil Murray was indicted last week because he chose to exercise what he considered basic freedoms guaranteed by the U. S. Constitution.

He and the CIO were charged at a Federal Grand Jury hearing with violating the curbs placed on freedom of the press and freedom of expression by the infamous Taft-Hartley Act.

The indictment was returned nearly seven months after Murray used the CIO News to publish a CIO indorsement of a candidate in a special Congressional election at Baltimore.

The case, of course, will go to the Supreme Court unless the CIO president is acquitted by a lower court.

Let's examine the case carefully and see exactly what is involved.

A Republican-dominated Congress last year enacted the Taft-Hartley Act, which took away from labor unions gains they had made throughout the years through collective bargaining and strikes.

The Act was designed to weaken unions and give greater strength to employers. The ultimate result of this, of course, would be less money in pay envelopes and larger dividends for stockholders.

That in itself was bad enough—but the sponsors of T-H thought it would be a good idea to attempt to hog-tie labor politically as well as economically.

So they wrote into the Act provisions designed to silence union officials and union newspapers in political matters.

The idea behind this little scheme was to keep labor from using its political strength to unseat those responsible for the T-H legislation.

CIO Sought Quick Test

Last June the CIO Executive Board adopted a statement which said, in effect, that the CIO did not intend to give up without a struggle the basic freedoms of expression and press—essential bulwarks of democracy.

This paved the way for the action Murray took on July 14, when the CIO News carried a front page statement from the CIO chief relating to the Baltimore campaign.

The FBI openly began an investigation of the case last fall. Then, last week, a Grand Jury in Washington returned an indictment against Murray and the CIO.

The Justice Department and the Grand Jury, of course, were merely doing what they were required by law to do. They cannot determine the constitutionality of legislation.

The principal issues involved in the case are:

1. Can Congress ban open discussion of political issues and candidates by newspapers?

2. Can Congress deny any group of citizens the right to speak freely about political issues and candidates?

The CIO contends the Congress has power to do neither.

It contends that curbs on freedom of the labor press could lead to government control of the entire press. It believes that the power to silence union officials could be extended to include all persons who oppose the political party in power.

That is why the CIO views the "Murray case" with a feeling of pride.

It views the indictment as an important part of the fight that must go on continuously if we are to retain our basic liberties.

Hank May Have Meant Well But -- He Caused Trouble

By ALLAN L. SWIM

TOO much fiction is being written about Henry A. Wallace and his desire to occupy the White House.

One group is trying to picture him as the savior of mankind, the knight in shining armor and the architect of a world order in which everything will be sweetness and light.

Another group is characterizing him as a bumbling buffoon, a tool of the Kremlin, an idiotic dreamer and as a wishy-washy demagog.

Somewhere between these two extremes you find the real Henry Wallace — the shaggy, good natured guy who has a knack of going off on tangents.

WE'LL let those who know Wallace best interpret his motives and assess his ideology. The purpose of this column is to show what his candidacy means to organized labor.

Let's start with his record as a government official.

He served as secretary of agriculture, vice president and secretary of commerce. In none of these posts did he distinguish himself as a champion of the things for which labor was fighting.

It's true that he "went along" with Roosevelt when FDR was the man of the hour, but he didn't roll up his sleeves and get into the fray when the chips were down and the going was tough.

CIO officials who called on him for aid learned to regard him as a "preaching liberal"—not as a "practicing liberal."

IT SHOULD have been obvious to anybody with political savvy that a successful third party would have to stem from the labor movement.

There simply is no other group in the country large enough to smash the two-party tradition.

Wallace, figuratively, thumbed his nose at the leadership of the CIO, AFL and the independent unions. They, in turn, thumbed their noses at Wallace.

In the process, however, a political split occurred within the CIO. Officers of unions representing about one-sixth of the CIO membership decided to climb on the Wallace bandwagon.

This was Hank's first contribution to the unity needed to get a progressive Congress elected in 1948.

THE two best organized groups backing Wallace are the Progressive Citizens of America and the Communist Party. Also lined up behind him are many sincere non-Communists who are fed up with the behavior of both the Republicans and Democrats.

It would be a mistake to underestimate the appeal Wallace has for idealists who are tired of machine politics and believe firmly that a fresh approach to our problems must be taken if we are ever to achieve peace and prosperity.

It would be an equally bad mistake to underestimate the power this minority wields in national elections. Here lies the great danger to organized labor.

THERE is a good chance that the complexion of Congress can be altered considerably this year even if there is a split in the general labor vote and the extreme radical vote.

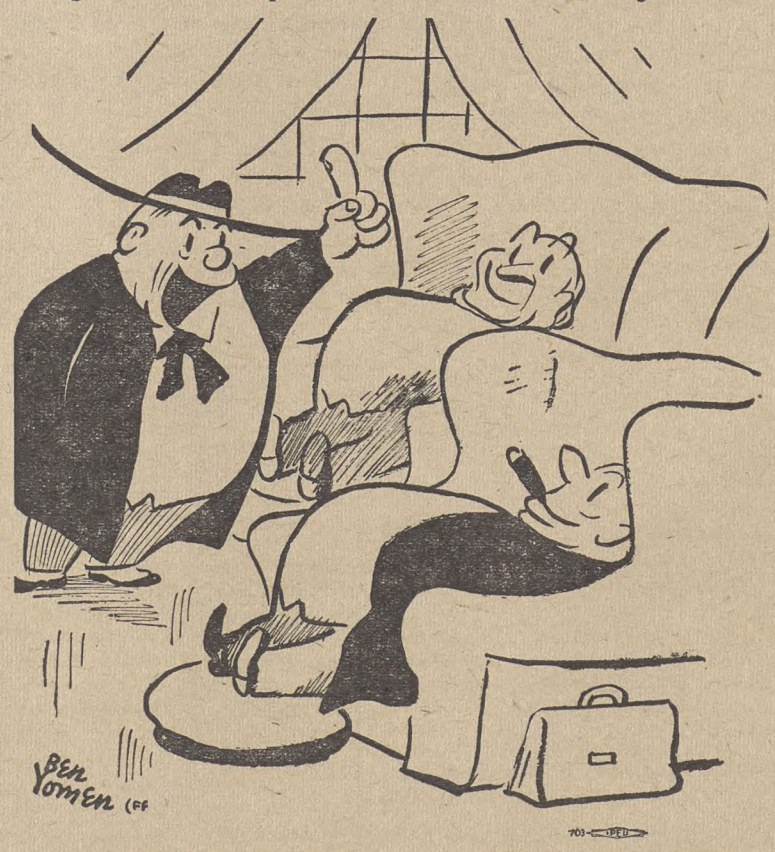
However, a split in the so-called liberal-progressive vote might easily prevent this change from being made.

There's little doubt about who will win if the conservatives and reactionaries play on one team and the rest of the voters divide their forces between two teams.

Wallace may make a good showing in the election—but even his most avid backers are not predicting he'll win.

He may have meant well when he embarked on his third-party odyssey but in November he may find himself in the position of the doctor who said, "The patient died but the operation was a huge success."

Congressman Drip — By Yomen



"Let's pass a law making it illegal for workers even to talk about wage increases."

It May Happen In Your City

HERE are excerpts from the Ohio CIO Council's radio script telling of the continuing effort to "put over" the payroll tax on the people of Columbus, Ohio. The attempt may be made in many U. S. cities:

Last November Columbus witnessed a pretty average political campaign. They told the voters just how they felt on every issue.

Did I say they discussed every issue? That's wrong. They never mentioned the payroll tax. They never mentioned it until four days after the election. Then the city council began to talk as one man about the need for a payroll tax.

They showed, by the completeness of their discussion, that the payroll tax wasn't a new idea to them. They had gone all over it before.

BIG commercial and industrial property in Columbus is deliberately undervalued for tax purposes. Couldn't we have honest valuation on commercial and industrial property and thus increase income from the real estate tax?

The Columbus City Council says that under the payroll tax everybody pays his fair share.

Well, the $10-a-week wage earner pays the same ratio of tax as the $1,000-a-week man. It that a fair share?

The Columbus City Council says that the tax is only equal to a pack of cigarettes a week.

That's true. It is only equal to a pack or two of cigarettes a week. But is also equal to a couple of loaves of bread a week. Or a quart or two of milk for your youngsters.

And the city council doesn't tell the people of Columbus that it has left a loophole in the law. This loophole allows the council to increase the tax any time it wants to.

IT'S TOO important an issue, they say, to be allowed to go on the same ballot with the other contests. They deem it more important than the choice of delegates to the presidential conventions of both parties; they deem it more important than the choice of candidates for governor, for United States Representative; for the State Senate and House.

Are the members of the city council telling the truth when they say that they want the people to vote on a payroll tax?

For Columbus is being used as an experimental laboratory. And the little guy—the wage earner—you—and me—the little guy is the guinea pig.

This little guy can show the politicians that he can't be fooled . . . that he can't be pushed around . . . that he can spot a dishonest, unfair tax when it is proposed.

But the little guys are watching, too. In Dayton, Springfield, Cleveland and Lorain—to name only a few Ohio cities—and in other cities in every state in the nation, little guys are watching.

They know that the decision rests here in Columbus. They know that their future is being charted in the Columbus experimental laboratory.

But they aren't worried. They have faith in the guinea pigs. For they, too, are little guys—wage earners! And they trust other little guys.

He Grew Whiskers To Please A Child

SOMETIMES he did the darndest things. That's why some folks considered him as a bit of a crackpot or a radical.

Take the case of the whiskers as an example.

He'd always considered his clean-shaven appearance satisfactory. Then he got a letter from an 11-year-old girl whom he didn't know.

She suggested that he cultivate some "brush" on his chin, and added that her brothers would like him better that way.

He stopped shaving. Later he met the little girl, and when he gave her a big kiss his face was outlined by a luxuriant beard.

There's nothing to indicate that he ever used a razor again.

THIS fellow knew what hard work was, because he did plenty of it as a young man. Calloused hands were as much a part of him in his youth as whiskers were in his adult life.

His appreciation of the role played by labor and his outspoken championing of the working man didn't make him the pet of employers.

In some circles he was considered a rabid radical. After all, he once said:

"All that harms labor is treason to America. No line can be drawn between these two.

"If any man tells you that he loves America, yet he hates labor, he is a liar. If any man tells you he trusts America, yet he fears labor, he is a fool."

THIS whiskered fellow made quite a name for himself—such a name that things he said and wrote were recorded later in many books.

On one occasion he said:

"Labor is prior to, and independent of, capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor, and could never have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital and deserves much the higher consideration."

He also said:

"INASMUCH as most good things are produced by labor, it follows that all such things ought to belong to those whose labor produced them.

"But it has happened in all ages of the world that some have labored and others, without labor, have enjoyed a large portion of the fruits. This is wrong and should not continue. To secure to each laborer the whole produce of his labor as nearly as possible is a worthy object of any good government."

SOME folks make remarks that are repeated over and over again. Our whiskered friend was like that. Millions have used his quotation that—

"God must have loved the plain people; he made so many of them."

He was "plain people" himself—even after he became famous. He loved the people and did everything he could to please them.

This trait caused him to get shot at the peak of his career—and, in a way, a newspaper story was responsible for his death.

HIS wife wanted him to quit work for an evening and take her to the theater. He didn't want to go—and said so.

The newspaper reported he would be on hand for the performance at Ford's Theater that night—and at the last minute he changed his mind and decided to go—so the audience wouldn't be disappointed.

The story provided the tip-off to Actor John Wilkes Booth, who went to the theater, too, and assassinated the man with the whiskers—Abraham Lincoln.

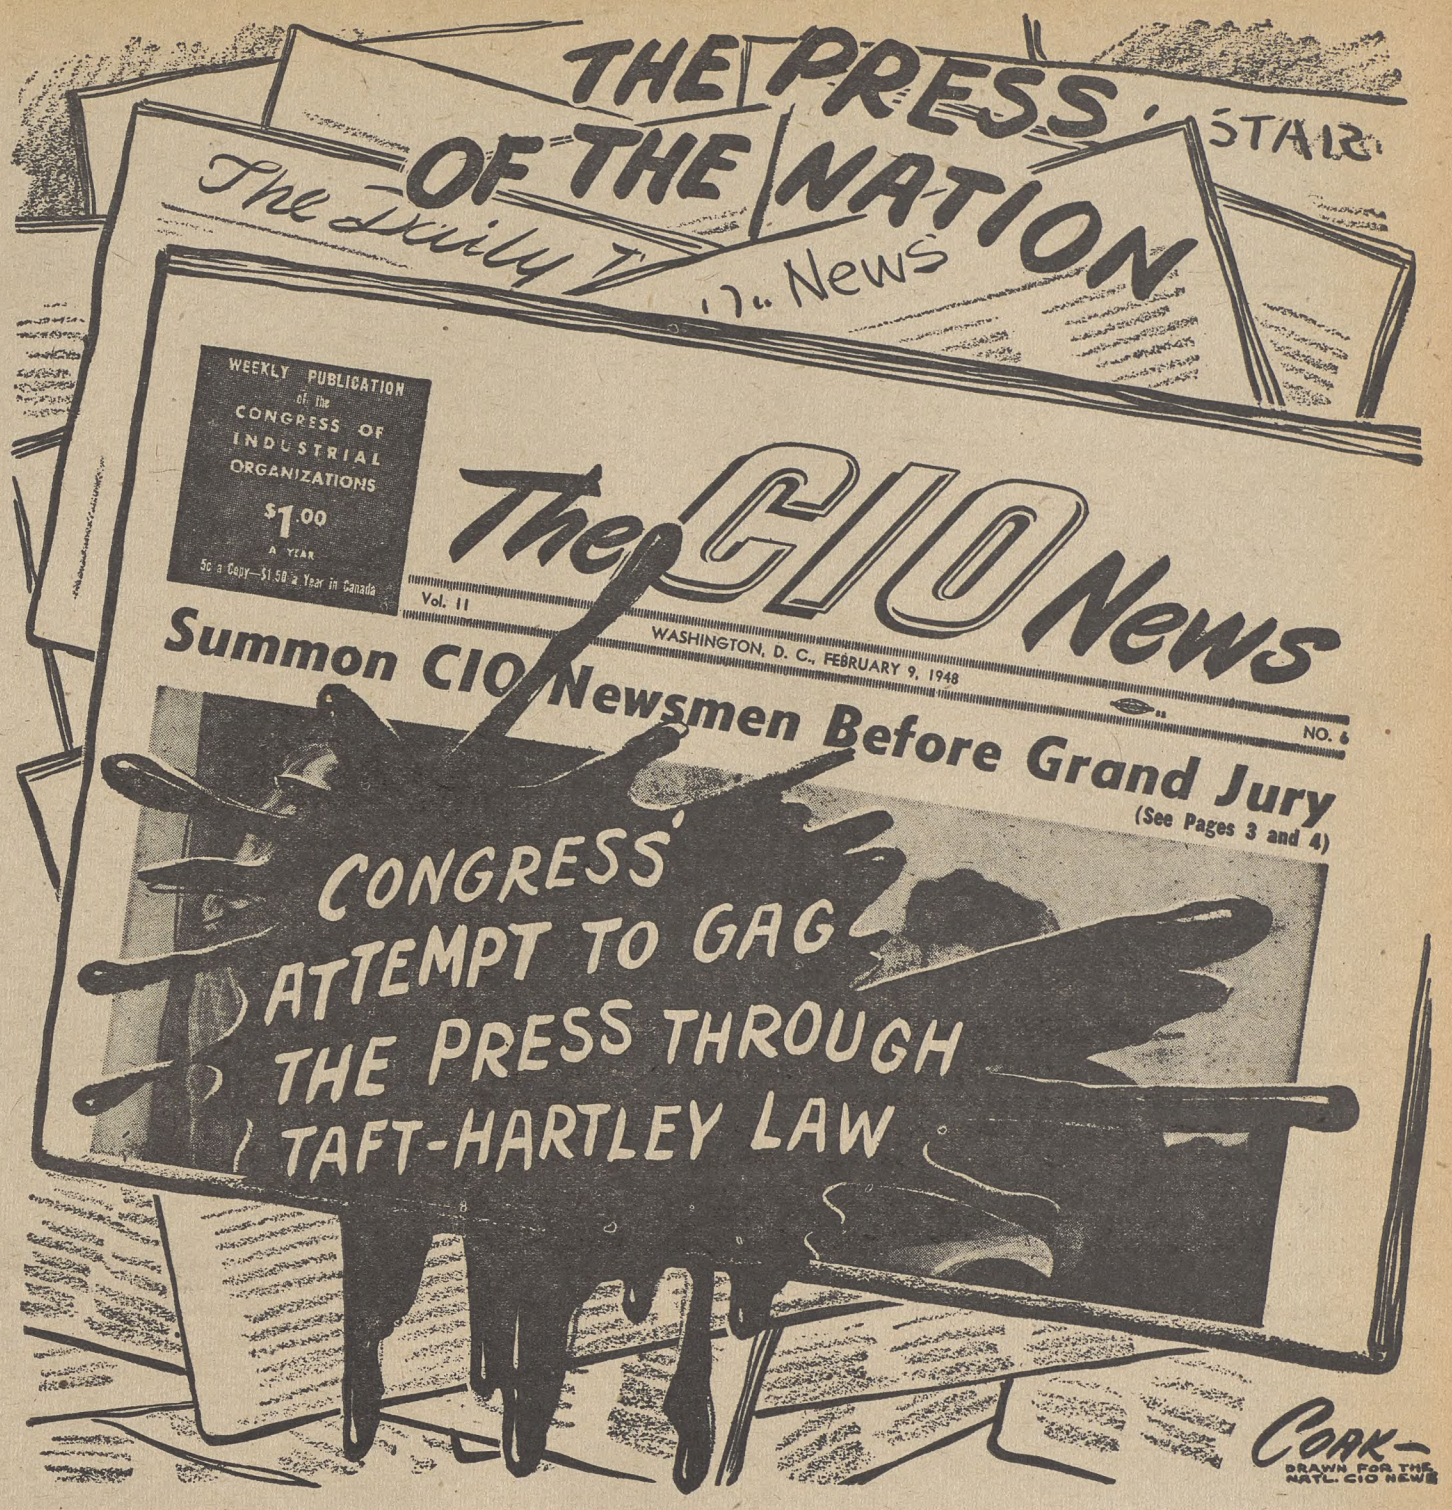
FREEDOM SMEARED



You Can Call a Man "Horse Thief" Over Air--But Look Out If He's Not

IF YOU'RE making a political speech on your home-town radio station, the station management has no right to censor your remarks on grounds they may be libelous.

On the other hand, if you commit libel—the trouble is your baby, not the station's, and you may be subject to legal action.

This view of the problem of radio censorship was voiced recently in a proposed decision of the Federal Communications Commission.

The particular case considered by the FCC involved a political broadcast in Port Huron, Mich., back in 1945. But if the FCC puts the decision into final form, it will be important to every labor union spokesman during the 1948 election campaign.

Here's what the FCC majority had to say:

"We are of the opinion that the prohibition against any censorship by licensees (stations) of political speeches by candidates for offices is absolute, and no exception exists in the case of material which is either libelous or might tend to involve the station in an action for damages."

The FCC went on to say: "The actual speaker is, of course, completely liable for the contents of his remarks."

TRANSLATED into non-official language, that means simply that no station manager can tell you that you can't call Candidate John Doe a "horse-thief."

If you want to call Mr. Doe a horse-thief, the FCC says the station isn't liable; but if Mr. Doe can prove he never stole a horse, you or your organization may have an expensive time of it before a jury gets through with your case.

The Communications Commission pointed out that under the law, stations are generally given the power to determine what programs go out on the airways. But in the case of "political broadcasts by candidates for public office," the station owner has no such freedom of decision.

"Once they determine to carry broadcasts by a candidate, they are obligated to offer, without censorship, equal opportunities to use their facilities to all candidates," the FCC says.

Any other policy would lead to meddling by the station on problems affecting major campaign issues and would seriously limit the effectiveness of radio in pre-election activities. The stations, if they apply censorship in political broadcasts, "must in effect set themselves up as the sole arbiter of what it true and what is false, what is in fact libel and what is not, an exercise of power which may be readily influenced by their own sympathies and allegiances."

But the history of the Communications Act makes clear that nobody wanted the stations to hold this power of political censorship.

Different Now

It gives you a funny feeling to look through a company organ and find an article written by the president of a CIO local.

But the Portsmouth Steel News is different. It not only mentions the union but carries a double column of news sent in by the Secretary of Local 2116, United Steelworkers of America.

(Of course, the fact that Harold Ruttenberg, former research director for the USA-CIO, is the company's vice-president may have something to do with this.)

John Payton, president of Local 2116, has a short, colorful article in the January issue telling about the old Sheet Mill of long years ago and how the strong, tough men who worked in it "year after year withstood all the heat and the heavy lifting and seldom missed a day."

It was the discussion at a union-management meeting about the new Sheet Mill soon to be in operation that started him thinking about the past, Payton says. He recalls the men as he saw them "coming in the main gate and down through the mill on their way to work, dressed in the only clothes a sheet mill worker could wear—the heavy shoes, overalls belted at the waist, heavy gloves, sweat shirt and skull cap.

"One shoe was always covered with a protective piece of leather to prevent the foot, placed forward when doubling, from being burned by hot sheet."

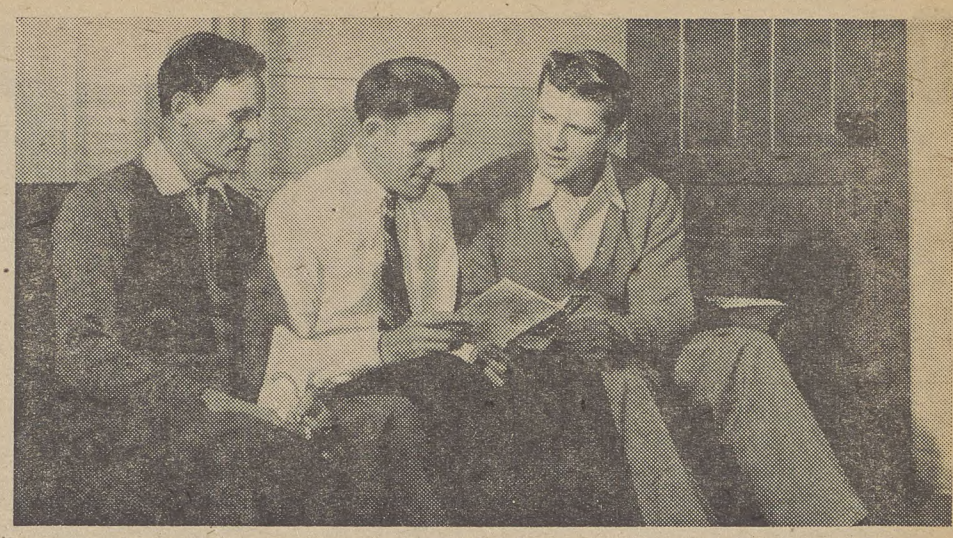
Oh! Men were men in those days, says Payton.

A Lot of Work Goes into an Organizing Drive

1 An organizing drive is beginning to click when a worker such as this one volunteers to pass out literature to her fellow employes. Before volunteers pitch in, CIO organizers have to do much spade work. Much work often has to be done before volunteers assist in the campaign. The pictures on this page show some of the tasks confronting a CIO staff when it sets up headquarters in a town to organize a plant.

2 The work begins when William Smith, CIO Organizing Director for North Carolina (center), confers with members of his staff to map the strategy to be followed in the campaign. To Smith's left is Joe Kirk, a Navy veteran who saw action in the South Pacific and a former textile worker. The character of the community, the attitude of the potential union members and the size of organizing task must be considered. Ed Stone, CIO Organizing Committee Public Relations Director (at Smith's right), helps plan publicity for the drive.

3 Kirk passes out literature at a plant gate. The worker seems to have caught Kirk's enthusiasm as he explains what the union will do to improve the conditions of all the workers in the plant. This is just one of the many day-to-day tasks of the organizers during the months of a big campaign.



4 Kirk's job also includes visiting workers at their homes. The worker in picture 3 has invited Kirk to his home, where he gets an opportunity to tell the benefits of union membership not only to his host but also to his brother. Kirk appears to have an attentive audience, but sometimes an organizer must make several visits to a home to gain a member. Visiting homes is well worthwhile because it is one of the most effective ways of signing members.

5 Kirk seems well satisfied with his work as he goes through membership file for the plant at the office of the organizing campaign. He is able to tell how near the campaign is to its goal by checking the number of members against the total number of employes at the plant. The job of checking and revising the files goes on continually.

6 The campaign rolls along as Bob Freeman, another organizer and a veteran of the Battle of the Bulge, appears to have convinced another worker that her future would be improved by union membership. She has accepted a copy of the organizing paper, and seems to be interested in what Freeman is saying.

Administration Victor Over IUMSWA Critics

BY ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE administration of Pres. John Green won adoption of its major program at the convention of the CIO Shipbuilding Union last week in Cleveland and elected its entire slate of officers.

John Green

The convention heard a detailed analysis of CIO policy by CIO Pres. Philip Murray (see other story on this page).

These were the highlights of the 13th annual convention:

1. Murray declared that while there was no mandatory policy that affiliated unions must follow the majority decisions of the CIO executive board, that "it has always been considered that there is a moral obligation to go along."

2. Green and his fellow executive officers—Vice Pres. John Grogan and Secy.-Treas. Ross Blood—won rollcall victories on two key issues, seating of delegates from Provisional Metalworkers' Council locals and merger of IUMSWA and the CIO United Railway Workers. The PMC delegates were seated by a rollcall vote, 295 1-3 to 123 2-3. The Rail-Ship merger passed on a voice vote.

3. The convention authorized the General Executive Board to work out details of wage proposals to be made when many contracts open in June.

4. The delegates passed resolutions backing CIO policy on many matters, including the Marshall Plan (about 6 no votes out of 419), against a third party (about 20 no votes), FEPC (unanimous), etc.

5. The GEB's action in ordering signing of non-Communist affidavits under the Taft-Hartley Act was approved, coupled with a pledge to exert every effort to win repeal of the law. There were about 12 noes on this resolution.

6. Heard a number of guest speakers praise the union's record and discuss a number of vital issues.

THE fight against seating of the Metalworkers' delegates (they had 71 votes) was led by Tommy Saul, executive secretary of Local 1, Camden, N. J., of which Green also is a member. Saul, who said he backed Pres. Murray's entire program, took the position that per capitas had not been paid properly. Other opponents of the seating based their opposition to the number of votes allowed the Metalworkers; still others argued they should not be seated because their industry has no common ground with Ship.

Charles Leone, Local 61, and Secy.-Treas. Blood led the fight to seat the delegates. Leone accused the opponents of being "disrupters"; Blood made a long analysis of dues payments by the Metalworkers and declared they had fulfilled all requirements. His point carried on both a show of hands and the rollcall, which was on a technical motion to accept the Credential Committee's report. The Metalworkers locals formerly belonged to the CIO Mine, Mill Union, but withdrew in 1947.

Clergymen: Representatives of the major denominations delivered daily invocations. Of particular interest was the Rev. Francis B. Sayre, Cleveland Episcopal minister. The Rev. Mr. Sayre, the grandson of the late Pres. Woodrow Wilson, is the president of the UN Trusteeship Council and served as a Navy chaplain during World War II.

Other speakers included Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., who attacked Henry A. Wallace; CIO Org. Dir. Allan S. Haywood, PAC director Jack Kroll, who is also head of the Ohio CIO; A. F. Whitney, president of the Bro. of Railway Trainmen, who hailed his "good friend, Phil Murray"; and Green, who said that the IUMSWA, which "always fought Communists and Fascists," must "fight just as hard against irresponsible power seekers."

Buckmaster, president of the CIO Rubber Workers.

Murray Declares:

'MORAL OBLIGATION TO FOLLOW POLICY'

CIO Pres. Philip Murray's address was one of the highlights of the CIO Shipbuilding Union convention.

The address was divided into five major portions: inflation, Taft-Hartley, the third party, the Marshall Plan and the CIO in general. Here are the highlights:

Inflation

"The 18 months since Congress killed OPA have been almost terrifying.

"And there has been a conspiracy to make people believe that labor's wage increases have been the mightiest factor in the living cost.

"In the spring of 1947, the CIO, after long and careful study of the entire domestic economy, held a meeting in the City of Washington. That meeting issued a report to the American people which declared that if no reins were placed by Congress, industry's profits for 1947 would be almost unimaginable—would top 17 billion after taxes.

"Immediately, the cry arose that CIO's estimate was unthinkable. NAM denied, everybody except labor denied it. But, the official figure at the end of the year proved CIO was correct.

"Congress is still refusing to do anything about inflation. It ignored CIO's correct predictions in 1946, when it was killing OPA; it ignores them now. I have always been a public supporter of the free enterprise systm. But, never have I said that I would support a system of extortion. It's not free enterprise now—it's national blackmail.

"I charge the responsibility for the debasement of the American currency lies on the doorstep of Organized Business.

"We in CIO want a balanced economy affording a better distribution of the national wealth.

"Prices continue to rise, extortion becomes more widespread and the people suffer and suffer and suffer. Under these circumstances—with Congress refusing to act, with business ignoring its duty to the public—is it any wonder we are asking for new wage increases?"

Taft-Hartley

"I have been told that I might be indicted any day now. And why might I be indicted?"

Voice from delegates: "For exercising your Constitutional rights."

Murray continued: "That fellow's got something. The Taft-Hartley Act says I can't get mussed up in politics. This damning piece of legislation said it was going to 'return labor to the rank and file.' But, never in history has so diabolic a piece of hypocritical legislation been enacted by the Congress. It was designed by Fascists, aimed to destroy American labor." (The next day, Murray was indicted.)

Marshall Plan

"At Boston, the CIO, by resolution and by interpretation from me, approved the Marshall Idea. There was not a single dissent to my interpretation.

"Next, the CIO board backed the Marshall Plan. To my opinion, the Marshall Plan is designed to be used for rehabilitating peoples and countries. It shall not be used, as some people have ascribed to it, as a political breadbasket. It will aid the despairing, feed the hungry, succor 20,000,000 starving children, give them an opportunity, with God's grace, to look the sun in the face again.

"I have talked the plan over with Secy. Marshall, its promoter, and he agrees with my interpretation of it—and the CIO board's interpretation.

"A lot of mischief is being spread around this country—a lot of tripe. Some gullible people are being misled by misrepresenters of the plan.

"In 1939, when Europe was be-

Shopshape

There are 94 union shop contracts held by the CIO Shipbuilding Union, the convention was informed.

There are also 67 maintenance of membership contracts, two preferential shops and two in which IUMSWA is the exclusive bargaining agent. In addition, 17 contracts are being negotiated.

SHIP SHAPES: These four were the only feminine delegates to the convention of the CIO Shipbuilding Union. Left to right, they are: Eva Hudak, Local 645, Torrington, Conn., works for Torrington, Co., where she makes surgical needles and is plant chairman; Viola Concannon, Local 699, Torrington, works for Torrington Foundry, where she makes egg beaters and is financial secretary of the local; Emelia Slogeris, local 251, Waterbury, Conn., works for Shoe Hardware Co., makes zippers for boots and is chief stewardess; Alice Greene, local 251, Waterbury, works for Benrus, makes watches and is on the grievance committee.

Broun Prize To Andrews

A SERIES of exposes of the manner in which the State Dept. handled its early loyalty dismissals won for Bert Andrews, New York Herald Tribune Washington correspondent, the 1947 Heywood Broun Memorial Award of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

Louis Lyons, curator of the Nieman Foundation at Harvard University, described the articles as "the most significant reporting, not merely of 1947 but of several years."

Judges were Lyons, Robert S. Allen, Washington correspondent and author, and William L. Shirer, radio commentator.

Five others were singled out for honorable mention. They were:

1. Edward J. Donohue, Scranton (Pa.) Times, for his coverage of a milk strike, which "led to a reversal of the editorial attitude of his own paper."

2. Ralph Andrist and Ralph Backlund of Station WCCO, Minneapolis, for programs called "Neither Free Nor Equal," attacking racial discrimination.

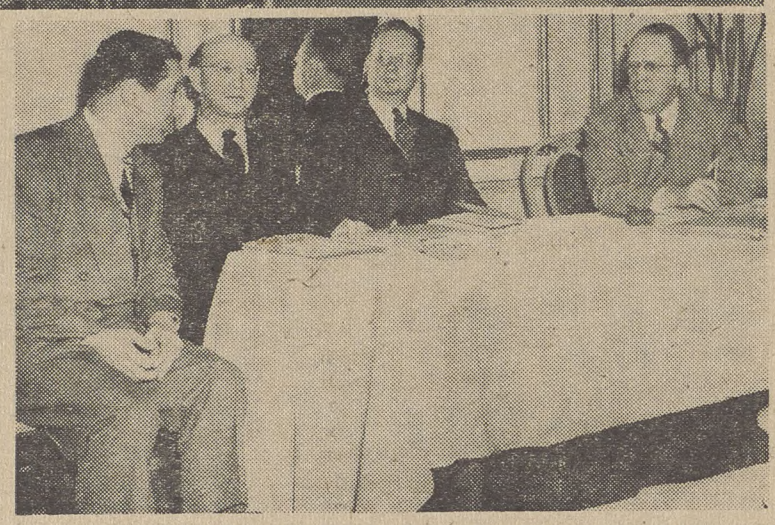
3. Herbert Block, Washington Post cartoonist, who signs his work "Herblock."

4. Alfred Friendly, Washington Post, for coverage of the Lilienthal hearings, which "played an important part in exposing and defeating the sordid and sinister opposition to this great public servant."

5. Dillard Stokes, Washington Post, for his U. S. Supreme Court coverage.

The judges were so impressed with the qualities of the entries that they took it upon themselves to raise an additional $600 to provide $100 cash awards to all six winners. Top man gets $500.

Getting Lowdown On Compensation



Announcement of the Workmen's Compensation and Safety School of the Ohio CIO Council (shown in session above) stated that the 250 delegates from 185 local unions would be in for two days of intensive study. As he left the final class, one of the delegates said, "They weren't kidding." Right, some of the teachers at the school, l. to r., Jacob Clayman, Ohio Council's general counsel and school director; Sam Griff, an attorney for Council 3, CIO Auto Workers; George H. Thompson, supervisor of the claims section of the Ohio Industrial Commission, and William Lavelle, Ohio Council's secretary-treasurer.

The theme of the school was that injured workers are being deprived of thousands of dollars in compensation because of insufficient knowledge of the workmen's compensation law, legal technicalities, and a blatant disregard of the law on the part of some Ohio corporations.

Lavelle said the turnout of delegates was "most gratifying." Lavelle said the response was nearly twice what had been expected.

"We are sure this school will provide a real stimulus for workmen's compensation and safety committees in local unions," he said. Lavelle pointed out the primary purpose of the school had been to supply local unions with persons sufficiently informed to advise members on compensation details and safety procedures. He added he was "sure this purpose had been achieved."

During the two days of intensive study, the delegates:

- Heard officials of the Industrial Commission enumerate pitfalls that hamper injured workers in collecting compensation to which they are entitled.
- Heard Labor attorneys describe legal steps to be taken in filing claims.
- Saw safety films produced by the Industrial Commission.
- Toured the Industrial Commission offices for a first-hand glimpse of the working of that department.
- Had practical problems they had encountered solved by a panel of experts.

Claim Waste In UMT Plan

UNIVERSAL military training would be an ineffective waste of taxpayers' money, the January CIO Economic Outlook says. The issue is devoted to a detailed breakdown of UMT cost.

"Today there is a concerted drive by the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and other veterans organizations, the army and other military-minded organizations to have Congress establish UMT," the Outlook says.

The bulletin says that although government military authorities estimate the cost of peacetime conscription running about $1,750 million for the first six months, the true cost would run higher, between $3 billion and $5 billion a year.

"If the Fort Knox experiment could be taken as an example of what UMT would cost," the Outlook continues, "the total would reach nearly $6 billion, or about $6,000 each for a million men. This is over 12 times the annual cost of educating a man in college."

THE bulletin includes a chart showing estimated government expenses for the current fiscal year, with 29% going to national defense, and 33% paying for past wars. Only 9.7% are listed as peace outlays.

Under government expenses going to build "a better USA" the Outlook lists nearly $7 billion, making up but 18.8% of the federal budget. These embrace various government expenses including those for social welfare, health, housing, security, education, labor, agriculture and natural resource development.

Assuming that the compulsory draft costs but $3 billion yearly, the Outlook says these alternative "real weapons of peace" could be provided for the same expense to the nation:

1. An international education program.

Or, 2. An international relief program.

Or, 3. A 3,000% increase in American contributions to international organizations.

IF a $3 billion fund were spent yearly in the U. S. to improve American living standards instead of pay for compulsory war training, the bulletin says, it would pay for all these:

A 10-room school, a $50,000 library and a $150,000 hospital in every county, giving each county 10 school buses, a psychiatric clinic and 10 doctors, 10 nurses and 10 recreation workers. Modernizing old schools, building more than 400 trade schools, paying teachers in a network of junior colleges, subsidizing 10,000 graduate students.

Ask Immigration Law Change

AMERICAN women who marry foreign husbands have a serious gripe under the terms of the present Immigration Act, the CIO pointed out in a statement presented to the House Judiciary Committee.

The CIO is supporting a bill (HR 5137) proposed by Rep. Lesinski (D., Mich.) to amend the Act. As it now stands alien husbands of citizen wives whose marriage took place after July 1, 1932, can come to this country only as immigrants with a prior preference under the quota.

Alien wives of American husbands, however, are admitted on a non-quota basis. The proposed amendment would permit husbands as well as wives to enter as non-quota immigrants.

"The present discriminatory procedure," declares the CIO statement, "rests upon a view that women are not entitled to equality of treatment under the law with men. It retains the obsolete common law theory which presumed that a woman is subject to the protection and dominance of the husband and is obligated to follow him both in residence and citizenship."

Effect of this double standard, states the CIO, is to force women to follow their husbands into foreign countries, or to leave them abroad and return alone.

Murray To CIO: 'Moral Obligation To Go Along'

ing overrun by Hitler and Britain was standing alone, Roosevelt advocated lend-lease. I backed him then.

"Get this: F. D. R. was being called an imperialist, a warmonger, the White House was being picketed.

"Not long after, in 1940, I became president of CIO under the most peculiar circumstances imaginable. (Cry from delegate: "You've done a damn good job.")

"I was picketed at Atlantic City in 1940. I was not and am not an imperialist. I was not and am not a Wall St. warmonger. I had and have no ties to any other country than this one country.

"I was under fire until June 22, 1941. Then, I was brought up from the bottomless pits of hell and elevated to sainthood.

"Well, here I am again. Destined to be damned!

"Mark you, I think the enactment of the Marshall Plan will avert war, for whilst you avert hunger you avert war.

"Yes, I support the Marshall Plan—but I oppose any profit-mongering by business out of the plan."

Third Party

"About two weeks ago, the CIO Executive Board rejected the bid of the third party by a vote of 33 to 11. Under my presidency, it has been the policy of CIO to confer on all policy matters. I have never taken it on myself to do it alone. This action of the Board was not mandatory on any affiliated union. But, it has always been considered that there is a moral obligation to go along. Unfortunately, this board decision has been misinterpreted. It has been said that the board and Phil Murray are dictators. That is T—R—I—P—E.

"As to the third party. I don't know of any labor leader — any important labor leader—who was consulted in advance on the candidacy. I say that if a third party is ever to succeed it should come from a broad base of representative people—from a substantial segment of labor. This one does not have that. All a third party will do in 1948 is to divide labor—splinter it, split it—not accomplish a single other thing.

"I do not subscribe to the idea that it is better to back a losing third party, get a reactionary Congress and then the people will rise in 1952. I say that there is no comfort from that. I say that if reaction wins in November, we won't be having very many labor conventions in 1952.

"I owe no allegiance to any political party or politician. I open this heart of mine to give you the benefit of its beats—and I think they are your beats, too. See to it that you lend power to this great country of ours and its great trade union movement."

CIO In General

"We must, in the presence of God, pledge ourselves to perpetuate and strengthen this CIO of ours.

"This I believe to be the truth: false doctrines, strange paths will not lead us to the attainment of our objectives. Reaction won't repeal the Taft-Hartley Law.

"May God guide your convention."

The convention then, without a dissenting voice, passed a resolution lauding Murray and calling on him to "continue his leadership of the democratic and progressive forces within the American Labor movement, leading them on to greater victories against the dictatorial totalitarian governments abroad and their would-be imitators at home."

Vote CIO Shop Over 50 to 1

The overwhelming vote of CIO-organized employes of the Masonite plant here was offered today by CIO state director Robert W. Starnes as "proof that, in spite of what certain law-makers say, the average worker believes in and wants union shop protection for his job."

The vote, conducted by the National Labor Relations Board was: for the union shop, 2,260; against, 41, more than 50 to 1. Total eligible to vote was 2,568.

dered several weeks ago after five of the local's officers were reluctant to sign the affidavits.

NO GAS, NO WORK: Thousands of CIO Auto Workers jammed Detroit's Unemployment Compensation Commission offices to pick up jobless pay checks after many factoriees closed down because of a gas shortage that followed the recent bitter cold spell.

Blames Utility Company For Shortage of Gas

IF WORKERS, rather than a gas shortage, had caused the present "industrial paralysis" in Detroit—fur would have been flying in all directions.

"The governor no doubt would have called out the militia and Congress would be considering legislation to make men work or go to jail," a Congressional committee was told by Don Montgomery, Washington spokesman for the CIO Auto Workers.

Montgomery blamed the current Michigan gas shortages squarely on the Michigan Consolidated Gas Co. In the western part of the state, he told the House Interstate Commerce Committee, "many industries have been virtually abandoned by the gas utility, and most of them will be forced to curtail or completely shut down."

And workers in those plants, Montgomery said, "have been sold down the river" by the Federal Power Commission, the state public utilities committee and the utility corporations.

SOME 88,000 auto workers have been laid off, he said, with a loss of over $6½ million in pay and a 25% drop in output.

The increased demand for gas has been foreseen by Michigan Consolidated for years, Montgomery told the Congressmen. But they delayed any action to build new plants as part of a "deliberate plan" to force the government to license their construction of a new pipeline. Such a line, the UAW official said, would permit the company "to perfect its monopoly control over the supply of natural gas to large areas of Michigan."

He called on the Federal Power Commission to take control of the western Michigan situation at once to prevent further distress and to avoid a repetition of the same crisis in the future.

In Michigan, the UAW-CIO, looking for means to meet the crisis, announced it was sponsoring a demonstration of a new process by L. C. Karrick, former government engineer, which would produce huge quantities of gas from coal—as well as electricity, crude oil and smokeless fuel.

UAW Pres. Reuther said cost of the Karrick process, if proved successful, could be covered easily by the present loss in wages caused by the gas shortage.

MEANWHILE, in Washington the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee is hearing testimony from scores of corporation spokesmen in behalf of the Rizley bill (H.R. 4051). The bill, already passed by the House, would cut the government's present power to control production and gathering of natural gas, and would permit big rate increases.

The bill was severely criticized by House liberals before its passage last July. Passage, it is expected, would increase the nation's gas bill by several million dollars a year.

Lithography Firms Seek Open Shop

Some 60 CIO Lithographers in Washington, D. C., ended their second week on strike as the three affected lithographing firms announced determination to operate as open shops.

Central issues in the walkout are the union's demands for reduction of the work week from 40 to 35 hours and 15 to 20% wage increases.

Malcolm Lightfoot, president of the local, charged the companies with "dealing with technicalities." The charge was in reply to the firms' accusation that the proper procedure for reopening the contract had not been followed.

The struck companies are the Guthrie Lithograph Co., Saul Lithograph Co. and Webb & Bocorselski Co.

Nine other plants in the city have agreed to a 10% wage increase effective last December, a 37½-hour week beginning March 15 and a 36¼-hour week beginning Sept. 1.

Education:

Extension Hearings

DISCUSSION of the Labor Extension Service Bill (S. 1390), backed by organized labor, will take place at hearings scheduled before the Senate Subcommittee on Education for five days starting Feb. 16.

Sub-committee members are Sen. George D. Aiken (R., Vt.), chairman, H. Alexander Smith (R., N. J.), Forrest C. Donnell (R., Mo.), Irving M. Ives (R., N. Y.), Elbert D. Thomas (D., Utah), Allen J. Ellender (D., La.), and Lister Hill (D., Ala.).

The Labor Extension Committee, 2117 Pennsylvania Ave., N. W., Washington 7, D. C., urges CIO unions and members send in contributions to aid the committee's work, as funds are urgently needed.

It also asks that letters and wires be sent to members of the Senate Subcommittee at the close of the hearings Feb. 20, requesting them to report the bill favorably to the full Committee on Labor & Public Welfare and to the Senate.

Iowa State Teachers College students had a chance to learn about organized labor from a CIO representative at a conference on Religion and Social Issues held earlier this month at the college. The two-day conference was interwoven into the regular school curriculum.

Svend Godfredsen, education director of the CIO United Packinghouse Workers, spoke to some 1,500 students at a series of discussion groups and lectures. He also was interviewed over the Tall Corn Radio Network, covering all of Iowa.

Godfredsen said he found the students "open-minded and receptive, though not always in accord with labor's position. Nevertheless, I think if labor could do more of this type work, it would be of genuine significance as these youngsters go out into the American community."

Arbiter Backs ACA On 'Hot Traffic'

In an important move, an arbitrator has ordered the reinstatement with full back pay of 62 Western Union employes fired for refusal to handle "struck copy."

The employes, members of the CIO Communications Workers in the company's domestic division, New York City, were suspended for four months for refusing to handle cable copy originating in strikebound cables offices.

The issue was referred to arbitration in accordance with the contract. The question of legality of the "hot" traffic ban under the Taft-Hartley Law is now under consideration by the NLRB. Other ACA members are striking against four cable companies with "hot copy" an issue.

Union In Suit

CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen are seeking $500,000 damages in a suit against the strikebound Sunset Line & Twin Co., Petaluma, Calif., and the Calif. Association of Employers.

The defendants are accused of "conspiracy to refuse to bargain." The NLRB had previously dismissed a company complaint accusing ILWU Local 6 of "coercing and intimidating" scabs.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Regional Director John B. Easton, Charleston, W. Va., reports: Negotiations have just been completed between Local Industrial Unions 1213, 1250 and 1570 and the West Virginia Brick Co., Standard Brick Co. and Barboursville Brick Co. A general wage increase was secured in the amount of eight cents per hour for all hourly paid workers. Piece rate jobs were increased at least eight cents per hour. Vacation pay was increased at the rate of seven dollars for each vacation week and requirements liberalized.

All three locals have ratified the agreement. The Charleston Clay Products Co., employing members of LIU 1543 in the Charleston area, has agreed to put the same provisions into effect. Field Rep. O. W. Singleton conducted the negotiations for Locals 1213, 1250 and 1570. Rep. Hank Wolford assisted in negotiations for 1213. Rep. Harry Colebank conducted the negotiations for LIU 1543.

Martin Gerber, Director, Region 9, UAW, New York, advises that in an NLRB election conducted on February 4 among the employes of United Motors Service Division of General Motors, Kearny, N. J., the results were UAW-CIO 112, union 9. The organizational drive was conducted by the officers of Amalgamated Local Union 713 and new unit will become a division of this Local Union.

Regional Director Frank J. Bender, Baltimore, Md., reports that the Amalgamated UAW Local 842 of Hagerstown won a labor board election at the Victor Products Co.'s plant on February 2, with votes as follows: Eligible 78, UAW 43, against 31, challenged 1, void 2, making a total of 77 votes. The election campaign was conducted by Joe Craig, president of Local 842, B. B. Cross, chairman of Fairchild Production unit and E. Stine, chairman of the Victor Products unit.

Regional Director William B. Taylor, Louisville, Ky., reports a Ky. Local 302, CIO Auto Workers, received 147 votes in a union shop election at Shuler Axle Co., Louisville, Ky. Only one vote was cast against the union shop. John Coleman is president of the local.

Regional Director Ben Henry, Des Moines, Iowa, announces that the United Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers of America won an election in the Ia-Conda Phosphate Chemical Plant in Perry, Iowa. The results were 62 for UGCCWA-CIO, 1 against. This campaign was conducted by Martin Wente, District President of UGCCW.

The Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers of America held its Convention in Cleveland last week, where the writer is in attendance. CIO Pres. Philip Murray spoke for aid to Europe and against the Third Party. He presented the position of CIO on these important matters with vigor and clarity, and was roundly cheered by the delegates. Union Pres. John Green did a masterful job in steering the convention and was ably assisted by Sec.-Treas. Ross Blood, Vice-Pres. John Grogan and others.

Affidavits Fail To Spur Bargaining

Government Services, Inc., continued its refusal to bargain with striking cafeteria employes after officers of the local union signed non-communist affidavits.

GSI, which operates 42 cafeterias in government buildings in Washington, based its refusal on the ground that national officers of the CIO Public Workers have not filed the affidavits.

Even if national officers were to sign, GSI said, it would then insist on an NLRB election among the strikebreakers it has hired before recognizing the union again.

Protesting the affidavits filing, the local's president, Kenneth Bancroft resigned.

Women Ask Equal Pay

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

"PAY should be based on the nature of the job, not on the sex of the worker. It's a matter of simple justice."

Mrs. Helen Moore of the CIO Auto Workers thus summed up her testimony in favor of a bill to provide women equal pay for equal work, given at Congressional hearings last week.

Hearings on two identical bills, HR 4273, introduced by Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Calif.) and HR 4408, introduced by Rep. Margaret Chase Smith (R., Me.) were held before a subcommittee of the House Educational and Labor Committee.

"Women have to pay the same prices as men. There's no special price tag for women," Dorothy Scott, another UAW member, told the subcommittee.

Both women spoke from their own job experiences. Mrs. Moore, employed in the cut and sew department at General Motor's Fisher Body plant in Lansing, Mich., said 500 or more of some 4200 workers there were women. She has been working for 26 years.

Miss Scott, a clerk in the stationary stock department at the Hudson Motor Car Co., Detroit, said that about 1400 of the 14,000 employes at her plant were women. As an example of pay discrimination, she told the subcommittee how women in her plant who were paid a lower rate than men appealed to the union for help, and after prolonged negotiations last summer won their case. Their pay was then boosted from 88c to $1.20 an hour.

THE UAW's statement in favor of the equal pay bill was presented in detail at the hearings by William H. Oliver, co-director of the UAW's Fair Practices and Anti-Discrimination Dept., assisted by Paul Sifton, UAW legislative representative.

Explaining that the union's stand on equal pay for equal work was part of its full production and full employment policy, Oliver said that the UAW has firmly advocated equal-pay clauses in all contracts, but that state and federal legislation is needed to give authority to maintain the equal pay principle.

Lower pay rates for women also work against men, Oliver said, and cited the Delco-Remy plant in Anderson, Ind., where a wage differential induced the company to hire more women after V-J Day while refusing to hire males.

Following the testimony of the UAW representatives, Ruth Roemer, legislative representative for the CIO Electrical Workers, presented a statement for her union. She said that 250,000 of the union's total membership of 600,000 were women.

TWO important reasons why the UE opposes wage discrimination based on sex, Miss Roemer said, were: (1) it is a rank injustice to women workers, and (2) it tends to depress wages all down the line and makes men's jobs insecure.

A table presented in the UE statement giving wage differentials based on sex in various plants indicated that in General Electric plants the lowest hiring rate for women on an hourly basis was 15c below that of men. In Westinghouse plants, the table showed that the differential varied from 3½c to 18c an hour.

EQUAL PAY FOR WOMEN: Representatives from the CIO Auto Workers confer with Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas in her office on the bill for equal pay for equal work which she introduced in Congress. They are (l. to r.) Paul Sifton, legislative representative, Mrs. Helen Moore, William Oliver and Dorothy Scott.

Pontiac Auto Union Streamlined Co-op Aims To Cut Prices, Stand Competition

A NEW kind of food store is doing a booming business in Pontiac, Mich. It's a cooperative started originally by the CIO Auto Workers with active support from other labor and co-op groups.

But this is not what makes it unusual. A number of labor-supported cooperatives are now in existence or in the process of getting sarted.

What makes the Pontiac Co-op Distribution Center different are the new methods worked out in an experiment designed to help consumers make immediate savings on their food bills while at the same time developing a permanent cooperative founded on sound principles.

Designed to handle groceries on a big scale at low operating costs, the Pontiac Co-op has no frills or expensive equipment, says the Cooperative League of the U.S.

The center is in a low-rent building, formerly a big garage, out of the shopping center and accessible by auto.

Instead of being placed on shelves, all goods are piled up in mass displays made out of cases of merchandise. Thus equipment and need for capital are held down to a minimum.

The stock—staple groceries and a few other items such as tires, tools, drugs—is kept down to slightly over 200 items, compared with the usual 1,000 or more in the average grocery store. This is a practically unheard-of experiment in cost-paring, says the League.

Goods to be sold were selected on the basis of potential savings and established consumer value, on which prices can be slashed. Competing brands were eliminated.

The organizing drive which preceded the final opening of the store "probably enlisted more types of ballyhoo than any co-op has ever enjoyed," states the Cooperative League.

"It made use of everything from sidewalk stencils to personal calls by 'angels' bringing patronage refunds. Included were sound trucks, billboards, stickers, meetings, posters, radio programs and other devices.

"Strong support by members and officers of the UAW-CIO, whose Pontiac membership is about 15,000, accounted for a good deal of the character and speed of the drive."

Another feature of the organizing drive were the Co-op Fairs —special sales held Fridays and Saturdays. More than $2,500 worth of Co-op groceries were distributed each week through these fairs.

Sales of co-op shares were pushed. The Pontiac Fairs sold $1 in shares for every $2 in groceries.

Goods were sold at low prices. The difference between the price and the cost to the store was returned as refunds. Volunteers went around the city returning refunds in shiny new dimes and selling co-op shares.

THE Pontiac Co-op got off with a good start at the grand opening Jan. 23. On the first two days more co-op groceries were sold than in any other store in the country, Cooperative League officials said.

Sales for the two days totaled $6,100 from groceries and $1,500 from shares, according to Pres. Ed Varion of Yellow Truck Local 594 of the UAW, which was one of the prime supporters of the project.

Union and cooperative leaders regard the Co-op Distribution Center in Pontiac as the "pilot project" of a nation-wide development.

The co-op warehouse system is working—or is in process of organization—in a dozen industrial centers in Michigan, Indiana, California, Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa, according to a review of UAW co-op activities issued by Victor Reuther, UAW education director.

FE Indorses Wallace

A Special convention of CIO Farm Equipment Workers declared all-out war on the Taft-Hartley Act and pledged support to Henry Wallace.

By a vote of 432 to 204, the delegates, meeting in Chicago, rejected "any and all collaboration with those seeking to apply" the T-H Law. The union thus will stand on its previous policy of refusal to sign non-communist affidavits and file financial statements.

To finance a "Taft-Hartley war fund" the union will seek a $5 contribution from each member.

The convention also served notice that it would seek substantial wage increases to recover purchasing power lost through rising prices.

In a message wired to the delegates, Wallace praised the union's work in bettering farm-labor relations.

The union became the first to back Wallace in convention.

Canada Labor Studies Raise

The Canadian Congress of Labor National Wage Committee is meeting in Toronto this week to review its 1948 wage outlook.

Similar committees were organized in 1946 and 1947 to coordinate wage programs of the C. C. L. unions.

Top officials of the international and national unions comprising the C. C. L.'s membership of 360,000 will attend the conference.

A number of unions have already held their own conferences to consider their wage position. In some cases, no definite demands have been framed yet because of the constantly changing price structure. As a result, expectations are that prices as well as wages will form an important part of the Toronto discussions.

In Cleveland

Think Labor Laws Tough

THE following is from the Cleveland Press, Scripps-Howard daily newspaper:

"With labor organizations pledged to an all-out fight on the Taft-Hartley law and other labor legislation in this election year, The Press assigned its 'I believe . . .' pollsters to find what the public thinks. 'I believe . . .' is supervised by Press Reporter William Bebout.

"Clevelanders who think existing labor legislation is too tough outnumber by 2 to 1 those who think it should be made tougher.

"That's the finding of a poll which reached members of union and non-union families in just about the equal numbers. Of those answering poll questions, 46.5% came from families where one or more members belonged to a union; 53.5% came from "non-union" families.

"And here's the way they answered the question, "Do you think any new labor legislation should be more severe, or less severe, than the present Taft-Hartley Law?"

More severe	24.5%
Less Severe	50.5%
Satisfied as is	6.5%
No opinion	18.5%

"These Clevelanders also subscribed to the notion that labor unions have gained in prestige since the end of the war. But the percentages ran more against the unions than on the question of whether unions were unduly burdened by present laws.

"Here's the breakdown on the question. 'Do you think labor unions have gained or lost in public esteem since the end of the war?'

Gained	48%
Lost	39.5%
Same	4.5%
No opinion	8.0%

"Those polled who are members of organized labor expressed almost unanimous opposition to the present Taft-Hartley Law, and suggested amendment or repeal."

N. Y. News Guild Backs Chicago Printers' Strike

Full support to the AFL Typographical Union in its fight against the Taft-Hartley act has been voted by the executive committee of the CIO Newspaper Guild of New York.

"The fight of the ITU against the Taft-Hartley act, the board and its union-busting general counsel is the fight of the entire labor movement," the committee said. NLRB injunction moves against the printers "indicate the true intent of this act and confirm the worst fears of organized labor," it declared.

Too Little, He Says

Sen. William Langer (R., N. D.) probably is the first Senator in history to chide a union official for asking too small a wage increase.

At a hearing before the Senate Civil Service Committee, Langer accused witness Charles Stengle, AFL Government Employes, of speaking against the Federal employe. Stengle recommended an $800 annual increase, even though the Senator has introduced a bill raising Federal employes' pay $1,000. The CIO, through UAW Legislative Representative Paul Sifton, endorsed Langer's bill.

MURRAY OUTLINES CIO BODIES' DUTY

CIO regional directors and officers of industrial union councils throughout the country should be thoroughly familiar with major points of CIO policy, according to a circular letter written by Pres. Murray.

Murray cited a few key resolutions adopted by the CIO Executive Board and the Political Action Committee as particularly important. He said:

"1. The CIO opposes any movement for a Third Party in 1948.

"2. The CIO is not committed at this time to any presidential aspirant and our Councils, as well as our regional directors and field representatives, should be governed by this policy.

"3. Support for the European Recovery Program on the basis of the 10 points made in my letter of Nov. 16 to Pres. Truman, and a vigorous fight to control inflation at home, are the two principal points of our legislative program. CIO representatives and Councils should lend every effort to the accomplishment of these purposes.

"4. The CIO proposes in the coming months to fight actively for substantial wage increases through collective bargaining and at the same time for passage of an effective anti-inflation program by Congress.

"5. We are renewing our campaign to develop vigorous political action along established lines, participating to a larger extent than ever before in politics on a state and local level, and using our full strength, undivided, in an effort to elect a progressive Congress that will support our programs."

MURRAY'S letter, addressed to all Councils and regional directors, was sent out late in January. Last week, John Brophy, CIO councils director, called upon Sec.-Treas. Philip Connelly of the Los Angeles CIO Council to "clarify its position" on political action problems and the Marshall Plan.

Brophy wrote to Connelly that a Los Angeles "Policy Statement on Political Action" cannot be regarded "as being in harmony with national CIO policy."

Statements adopted by the CIO Executive Board and PAC, Brophy wrote, "make it clear that the CIO is opposed to formation of a third party in 1948 and favors the Marshall Plan. Any statement by any industrial union council which takes a compromise position on these points is in conflict with CIO policy and in violation of Rule 8, governing Councils."

The council statement had said there are sharp differences among unions in the Los Angeles area concerning the third party, the candidacies of Pres. Truman and Henry Wallace, and American foreign policy.

The statement—passed by a 3-2 ratio—said the council and its political arm would "take no action pro or con" upon these issues.

If the Los Angeles council clarifies its position, Brophy said, "there will be no confusion whatever among CIO members in Los Angeles with regard to the national CIO program."

AT the same time Brophy wired Pres. Morris Zusman of the California state council — which held a board meeting on Feb. 14-15—that all councils have "the duty and obligation" under CIO rules "to give full faith and support to the program enunciated by the national CIO."

The CIO official's wire to Zusman, who is a leader of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, voiced hope that "there will be no wavering or evasion in this regard. The times demand from all of us loyal support of majority policy decisions adopted by national CIO."

Carborundum Strike Settled

CIO Chemical Workers at the Carborundum Co., Niagara Falls, N. Y., returned to work after a 29-day strike with a nine-cent hourly increase and promise of more to come March 15 for most of them.

Two-thirds of 3,500 employes will receive the straight hourly raise. As pieceworkers, the others will receive increases of one to nine cents in base pay. A cost-of-living boost will be based on Bureau of Labor Statistics figures for the period between October 15, 1947, and March 15, 1948. Improved vacations are also provided.

A company offer of seven and one-half cents had been rejected twice by the membership.

Congress in Tribute to Lincoln, But Ignores Problems of '48

CONGRESS was so busy praising Abraham Lincoln last week that it made little progress meeting the current problems of the nation.

Activity on Capitol Hill slowed down as Congressmen headed out into the countryside for political speeches to mark the anniversary of Honest Abe's birthday.

● No noticeable action was taken on a variety of civil rights bills. The GOP strategy committee left up to its Senate leaders the choice of which measure they would care to act upon. Although the anti-bias bill had won a 7-5 vote in committee, some GOP leaders said the anti-lynching bill might be the first offered for debate and vote. Action is unlikely for the next several weeks.

● Senate discussion on the European Relief Program is scheduled for March 1. A report is due soon from the Foreign Relations Committee, which heard CIO testimony two weeks ago. Hearings still continue in the House.

● Rent control legislation must be passed by March 1 if tenants are to receive any real protection. The present law expires on that date.

● Anti-inflation proposals appear to be on ice while Congressmen watch the effects of the present drop in commodity prices on the Chicago exchange.

● Wage-hour legislation — to broaden the present law and lift minimum wages to 75c an hour—is still tied up in Senate and House Labor Committees.

Textile Bests Denham

NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham has been slapped down again by a federal judge.

U. S. District Court Judge Johnson J. Hayes, Greensboro, N. C., ignored Denham's plea to dismiss a CIO Textile Workers charge against the Amazon Cotton Mill, Thomasville, N. C. Instead, the judge granted the union's request to order the company to bargain collectively.

Says USES Belongs In Labor Dept.

A House Committee apparently has decided that the Dept. of Labor is too pro-labor and therefore should have no control over the U. S. Employment Service, a recent hearing indicated.

Pres. Truman has recommended that the USES and the Bureau of Employment Security be shifted from the Federal Security Agency to the Labor Dept. But the House Committee on Executive Expenditures over-ruled the President's proposal.

Paul Sifton testified before the committee for the CIO Auto Workers.

He said the Labor Dept. is the "natural place" for the two agencies, and voiced criticism of "unsupported charges of bias against the Labor Dept." Sifton noted that heads of the Agriculture Dept. invariably come from the world of agriculture, that business men usually head the Dept. of Commerce, and that "bankers, financiers and capitalists" normally get the Treasury Dept. post. But nobody uses the "bias" charge against these departments, Sifton said.

'CIO Deserves The Support of Papers'

From Editor & Publisher:

"The Department of Justice interpretation clashes head-on with the First Amendment.

"...The Supreme Court determination of Section 304 (of the Taft-Hartley Law) declaring it unconstitutional can't come too quickly. And if for some strange reason that should not be the final decision, the Congress should rewrite it or void it completely.

"In this job, the CIO deserves the support and assistance of individual newspapers and newspaper groups which have as much at stake in the issue as the labor press."

Don't Be Fooled By Price Drop

"We feel constrained to remind the public that this month's drop in food prices is not indicative of a trend," CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in behalf of the CIO Full Employment Committee. "As a matter of fact, during the six of the 19 preceding months retail food prices dropped, but each time they jumped back until in January, 1948, retail food prices were 44% higher than in mid 1946." (See Story on Page 3.)

Steel Prices Hiked Again

The Steelworkers' policy board last week voted to ask for a substantial wage increase under their contracts' wage reopening clause. A few days later, finished steel prices went up an average of $5 a ton. USA-CIO Prs. Philip Murray said that without considering the recent hike additional income received from other price increases since last October are sufficient to provide a "reasonable" wage boost. (See Story on Page 3.)

WALLACE'S ALP CANDIDATE ELECTED TO CONGRESS

A WALLACE-backed candidate scored an upset victory in New York City's special Congressional election last week, defeating the favored Democrat by 10,119 votes. Only 42% of the eligible voters cast ballots.

The victor was American Laborite Leo Isacson, former member of the State Legislature, who carried the 24th (Bronx) District with 22,697 votes to 12,578 for Democratic Karl Propper; 3840 for Liberal Dean Alfange, who once ran for Governor on the ALP ticket, and 1482 for Republican Joseph A. De Nigris. Thus, Isacon received 4797 more than the combined votes of his three opponents.

There are 24 Congressional districts in New York City (3d to 26th) with the seats held by 14 Democrats, 8 Republicans and 2 ALP members, including Isacson.

Henry A. Wallace campaigned personally for Isacson, making two appearances at rallies in the area. After the result, he declared the victory was a "repudiation of the get-tough double-standard foreign policy. It is a real victory over bossism and machine politics. This proves that the so-called third can become the first party in 1948."

PROPPER had the support of Mayor William O'Dwyer and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who also made personal appearances in the district.

All four parties received much lower totals than in 1946, when Democrat Rep. Benjamin Rabin won with 38,316 votes (43%) to 24,943 (27%) for the ALP, 16,931 (19%) for the GOP, and 8504 (9.5%) for the Liberals. But, while the ALP lost only 9% of its vote, the Democrats were losing 63.4%.

Political observers were surprised at the low Democratic vote, since the Bronx is the home area of Democratic Leader Edward J. Flynn, former Democratic Natl. Chairman during a portion of the Roosevelt Administration.

Asked for comment on the Isacson victory, Flynn said: "The Communist menace in this country is much greater than most people thought."

Isacson, who got his chance to run when Rabin resigned after being elected to a court post, will serve out the rest of the term, approximately 11 months. He is expected to be the ALP candidate for a full term in November. He takes his seat as soon as the result is certified by State authorities.

IN ANOTHER special election, also held in the Bronx, Democratic candidate Bernard McDonnell won an easy victory to fill an Assembly vacancy in the 1st District, scoring 3525 votes against 779 for GOP Simeon H. F. Goldstein and 394 for Liberal Jackson Goldman. There was no ALP nominee.

Republican Congressional Election Committee Chairman Clarence Brown (R., O.) viewed the Isacson victory as a certain guarantee that the Republicans would carry New York and the Nation in the fall. Others saw the Isacson victory as a boon to the Presidential nomination hopes of Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), because they believed New York was now sure for the Republican ticket.

DEMOCRATIC Natl. Chairman Sen. J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.), declared:

"It was a light vote and the Democratic Party never benefits from a light vote.

"The Democratic Party will make a grave mistake if it does not learn a lesson from the results.

"It is evident that the fight against Communism on the left and Toryism on the right cannot be won unless every Democrat resolves to get out and vote.

"The moral is an obvious one. Democrats must have the courage to work and the will to vote if we are to carry out a successful fight for Democratic principles."

CHAIRMAN Brazilla Carroll Reece of the Republican Natl. Committee said:

"The smashing victory of the Henry Wallace candidate is additional evidence that much of the political strength of the so-called Democrat Party in recent years has not been Democrat at all—it has been supplied by the various 'splinter' parties such as the ALP in New York.

"There is an old saying that 'He who sleeps with dogs will get up with fleas,' and you can accumulate a lot of fleas in 16 years."

The national CIO-Political Action Committee criticized the "failure of the Democrats to get their people to the polls." It said that National PAC had no organization in the district, and had not endorsed any candidate.

CIO 3d PARTY POLICY O.K.'d IN 5 STATES

FIVE additional state PAC bodies have adopted resolutions endorsing the stand of the National CIO and CIO-PAC against a third party in 1948. They are Minnesota, Massachusetts, Missouri, Kansas and Utah. Other large state bodies which have backed the CIO and PAC stand include New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

The Denver PAC also backed the CIO stand.

Jack Kroll, PAC director, has notified the California PAC that all PACs and their officers "are obligated to observe the political policy of PAC." He sent a similar notification to the Los Angeles PAC. Both the city and state PAC groups have declined to adopt resolutions along the line of the CIO Board statement.

In another communication, CIO Organization Dir. Allan Haywood notified Harry Bridges that in his capacity as Northern California CIO Regional Director, he must follow CIO and PAC policy on the third party. Bridges, who is also president of the CIO Longshoremen, has announced he is for Henry Wallace's third party.

The Minnesota resolution was adopted after a vote of 24 to 13 upheld a paragraph endorsing the anti-third party policy and stated the obligation of PAC officers to follow that policy. The Massachusetts PAC vote was unanimous, that in Missouri had one "no" and one abstention; that in Kansas had one abstention; that in Utah resulted in two dissents.

Kroll's letter stated that "although each person has the right to vote as he prefers, no officer or delegate, or committee member of a PAC is to support, by public comment or otherwise, any candidate who is not endorsed by PAC.

"Our California State PAC should conform with this policy and I expect it to express itself accordingly. Certainly, any resolution not in conformity with this policy, such as the statement adopted on Feb. 4 (by the L. A. CIO and subsequently adopted in similar form by the California State CIO) should be brought into line."

Morris Zusman, Amalgamated Clothing, resigned as chairman of the State CIO as a result of passage of the resolution.

Other PAC activities last week included:

In Washington, national PAC headquarters issued a new leaflet on labor election activities. Titled "Organization," the leaflet is part of PAC's "How We Win" series.

The conclusion: "The year 1948 is the crucial year in the field of politics, just as 1937 was the crucial year in the factories and workshops.

"We made the decision and did the job in 1937. We can do it again in 1948."

Copies of "Organization" may be obtained from PAC at these rates: 100 copies, $1; 500 copies, $3.25; 1000 copies, $6. Write CIO-PAC, 728 17th st., N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Utopia Is So Easily Accomplished; Or So One Political Party Says

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

UTOPIA is just around the corner! Maybe most of you don't know that and maybe most of you haven't seen a Presidential campaign pamphlet arguing that thesis, but that's what it says here.

Utopia means a lot of things to a lot of people. To many of us it means a place to which Bing Crosby, Bob Hope and Dorothy Lamour were filmed on the Road To. Ah, that Dorothy Lamour!

But, let's set Dottie aside for a moment. (That's easy for me, chum, since all I'm doing is writing about her. You don't know her personally either.)

Here's the Funk & Wagnalls Dictionary definition of Utopia:

"U-to-pi-a. n. L. An imaginary island, seat of an ideally perfect social and political life; described by Sir Thomas More in a romance. 2. Hence, any state or place of ideal perfection. U-to-pi-an. 1. a. 1. Pertaining to or like Utopia. 2. n. Excellent, but existing only in fancy or theory; ideal. 11. n. 1. A dweller in Utopia. 2. n. One who advocates impracticable reforms; a visionary. Syn. See IMAGINARY.—u-to-pi-an-ism. n. Highly optimistic views."

Now, sternly setting aside any thoughts that a real Utopia would be in the presence of Dorothy Lamour—we cannot allow material things to interfere. Let's get on to this Utopian campaign pamphlet.

"Why Utopia should not become a realization must be classed with the other mysteries of this old world, yet it is so simple, so easily accomplished that it is really surprising that it has not been realized long centuries ago," says the pamphlet. "All that is necessary is to effect a change in our artificial environments."

As you might guess, the pamphlet then says: "This brings out the question of how this present environment was brought into existence." This was all very simple, "as soon as it was discovered by the 'sweat of the brow,' alone, bread could be produced, certain men, more cunning than the average, began to scheme and study, even burning the midnight torch in their efforts to thwart this edict of the Creator; and they made the great discovery it could be done."

DOROTHY LAMOUR
Ah, for Utopia!

The pamphlet then traces the growth of capital—those who controlled labor and "tribute" (profits) and of those who were forced through economic pressure to become "robbers."

Money reform would seem to be the solution to all this, or so the pamphlet argues. Also: "Love." Now, again, take Dorothy out of your mind. This "love" is love of humanity, which "is the one essential part of our lives."

The moral of all this seems to be that having reformed money and achieved love, you have Utopia.

ALL this is outlined in a pamphlet, "The Long Trail," written by John Zahnd, national chairman and candidate for President in 1940 of the U. S. Greenback Party. Attention, open candidates Robert Taft, Harold Stassen, Earl Warren, Thomas Dewey and Henry Wallace; also attention Harry Truman (we think we can say with a fair amount of confidence that Mr. Truman will run.)

We hate to say it, but Mr. Zahnd's daily routine of life is hardly what we'd call Utopian. He rises at about 4 A. M. and says that he enjoys the early morning hour the best of life. As near as possible, he always retires at 9 P. M. He thinks that "early to rise and to bed is what keeps him healthful and active."

That may be Utopian to Mr. Zahnd, and we defend his right to think it is, but such early going to bed makes one miss a lot of the better things of life (Advt., Including the CIO's "In The Family" Quiz Program, every Tuesday at 10:45 P. M. EST over the Natl. Broadcasting network NBC).

THE Greenback Party (a "greenback" is colloquial for American legal-tender—for the $1, $2, $5, etc., bills which aren't worth so much today.) "as a political party is pledged to give us the perfect government and it is the duty of every 'Patriot' to get in line and help redeem themselves from bondage."

Mr. Zahnd, who was born in 1877 in a one-room log house in West Virginia (on the Cole run near New Martinsville) hired out as a farm boy at 13. After becoming 21 he was a commercial traveler (traveling salesman) for a dozen years; then he ran a supply and feed store in New Albany, Ind.

In 1912, he was an independent candidate for Congress, sponsored by the Socialists and Prohibitionists. He didn't win. He ran for President in 1924, 1928, 1932 (with a woman, Miss Florence Garvin, Rhode Island, as running mate), 1936 and 1940. He didn't win.

However, he never lost his faith in the ultimate achievement of Utopia, as his pamphlet indicates.

It doesn't look as if he'll achieve it this year, since Greenbacks vote in 1944 was so low that the authoritative World Almanac doesn't even list it.

* * *

As this piece was being written, Washington's Utopian spell of premature spring was fast being blown away and the temperature was falling far below Utopian standards. But, as the poet says, "Can spring be far behind?" (Don't shout "Yes," you cad.)

But, Utopia—ah, that Dorothy Lamour!

Steel Raises Prices Again Before Union Drafts Wage Proposals

THE CIO Steelworkers will seek substantial wage increases and social insurance funds for its 875,000 members when the two-year contracts reopen on April 30.

Last week, however, before the union had submitted a single proposal, the industry announced a price rise on semi-finished products averaging $5 a ton.

Total additional income from this rise, plus that netted from an increase the industry took last October, would amount to $297 million a year, the union estimates.

Additional income received from other price hikes since last October, totaling $229 million, would have been sufficient to provide a "reasonable" wage increase said USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

THE price boost was explained by the Wall Street Journal this way:

"What happened was that the steelmakers involved decided to shift certain price quotations from a basis of a 'gross' ton (2240 lbs.) to a 'net' ton (2000 lbs.). With this shift to a lighter weight the price quoted by Carnegie-Illinois, for forging grade blooms billets and slabs, for instance, actually dropped yesterday (Feb. 19) from $55 per ton to $54 per ton."

Thus, at the old rate, 2000 lbs. of steel would have cost $48; at the new rate it will cost $54—a 12½% rise.

Last wage increase received by the Steelworkers was a 15% hourly package boost in April, 1947.

A 175-man wage policy committee, meeting last week in Pittsburgh, endorsed the union's executive board call for the wage boost.

BEFORE wage talks begin, Murray said, some 610 conferences will be held involving about 75% of the union's membership. Formal notice of the wage reopening will be submitted to the companies on April 1.

In accordance with the no-strike, no-lockout provision of the contracts, the union will not call a strike to support its demands, Murray said. Neither will the union try to apply a pattern settlement with U.S. Steel "if that giant employer grants a wage increase"—to the steel fabricating industry, he said.

Auto: In Detroit, meanwhile, some 70,000 CIO Chrysler employes were tooling up to launch the United Auto Workers' wage drive.

Discussion of the Chrysler Division's demands for a 30c hourly raise plus an additional 5c for medical and hospital benefits and a pension plan will begin this week.

These talks will probably precede those at General Motors by about a week, since notice of the contract reopening must be submitted to GM by Feb. 28.

Talks with the Ford Co., third member of the industry's "Big Three," will not begin until May 15 under the two-year agreement.

Packinghouse: In Chicago CIO Packinghouse Workers officials set a strike deadline date after the union's 100,000 members voted to strike if negotiations fail.

Date for the strike, which would affect the industry's "Big Four"—Armour, Swift, Cudahy and Wilson—was not announced.

The union, now in negotiations, is seeking a 29c hourly boost.

Electrical: Contract parleys between the CIO Electrical Workers and Westinghouse Electric have been recessed until March 1. Affected by the talks are 70,000 employes in 25 main plants.

Although no wage figure has been announced, the union is expected to seek in the neighborhood of $13.03 a week, the amount by which, according to union officials, the workers' purchasing power has declined since January 1945.

Textile: At the expiration of CIO Textile Workers' contracts in the rug and carpet industry on May 31, the union will seek increases of 20c an hour plus 5c an hour to adjust present wage inequities.

About 35,000 employes will be affected by the negotiations. Last April they won an 11¼c hourly raise.

WAY TO CUT LAYOFFS: When gas shortage paralyzed industry in Detroit, Pres. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers (left) arranged this demonstration of a process that could produce huge quantities of gas from coal—as well as electricity, crude oil and smokeless fuel. L. C. Karrick, developer of the process, is at the right.

T-H TEST MOVES TOWARD HEARINGS

CIO's test of the Taft-Hartley Act moved forward last week as Pres. Murray pleaded "not guilty" to violation of the law's ban on political expenditures by unions.

Murray, accompanied by his attorneys, appeared at U. S. District Court in Washington, D. C., for arraignment. Accompanying him were Charles Margiotti, former Pennsylvania attorney-general, and Lee Pressman, former CIO counsel, who have been retained to handle the case.

U. S. District Court Judge Alexander Holtzoff set the trial date for Monday, March 22.

CIO's counsel then filed a motion to set aside the indictment on grounds that the Taft-Hartley Act's ban on political expenditures by unions and corporations is unconstitutional.

The parties agreed on March 5 as a date for hearing CIO's arguments on the motion to kill the indictment.

THE motion to dismiss the indictment was filed in the name of CIO and of Murray.

It argued that section 304 of the T-H Act, which amends the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, abridges rights of freedom of speech, press, peaceful assembly and petitioning of the government, as set forth in the 1st and 5th amendments to the Constitution.

It asserted that the T-H Act's section 304 violates these constitutional rights both as applied and construed and on its face.

The law's provisions, the motion continued, "are based upon an arbitrary classification, and discriminate against labor organizations, their officers and their members"; "fail to provide an ascertainable standard of guilt" in violation of the Fifth and Sixth Constitutional amendments; and, the provisions, as construed and applied, "invade the rights of defendants," protected by the Ninth and Tenth amendments.

THE motion was backed up by a series of "points and authorities."

It argued that "Congress could not find that an evil would result from publication" of Pres. Murray's article in the CIO News endorsing Judge Garmatz in the Baltimore special Congressional election last July.

Labor political action "is an important and legitimate means for the effective exercise of political rights by working men and women," the statement asserted.

"The use of union dues by defendants to finance the publication (of the issue of the CIO News with Murray's endosement) could not create substantial evils of sufficient weight to warrant the curtailment of liberty of expression."

And it concluded that "even if an evil could result from the publication," Congress must correct the evil without suppressing civil rights.

The brief declares publication of an article of the type of Murray's by an "unincorporated association" such as CIO is a "vital aspect" of the right to free assembly and petition for the redress of grievances. It pointed out that the federal government may not impose "criminal sanctions" on one type of association —such as a labor union—for certain activities, while permitting other types of associations to engage in them.

The CIO and Murray were indicted by a federal grand jury Feb. 11. The government charges they violated the T-H law when the CIO News last summer carried Murray's endorsement of Judge Edward Garmatz, Democratic candidate for Congress in a special election in Baltimore.

Since the CIO News is financed in large part by the organization, the government charged that distribution of the paper in the 3rd Maryland district was an illegal expenditure in a federal election.

MEANWHILE, Washington reporters heard rumors that the government might soon move against Pres. Walter Reuther and the CIO Auto Workers for similar activity in a special Pennsylvania election in mid-September, 1947.

The election occurred in the Allentown-Bethlehem area, where unions supported Democratic candidate Philip Storch, who is a working member of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

The UAW paper carried an endorsement of Storch by Reuther, while Steel Labor, organ of the steel union, printed a statement by Pres. Murray.

THE USA-CIO executive board, meeting in Pittsburgh, pointed out that the action against Murray was no "ordinary criminal proceeding" but presents "the profound issue of whether a labor organization and its leader may be punished for an expression of political views in a newspaper."

"If the indictment is successful then the freedom of our entire press is at stake, for the Taft-Hartley law plainly prohibits similar activity on the part of corporations. . . .

"We are confident that the courts will vindicate those rights . . . which Senator Taft and Congressman Hartley have so arrogantly trampled upon."

'Price Drop Not Indicative Of Trend'

THE CIO while expressing the hope that the "inflationary pressures for higher retail food prices have spent themselves," last week warned "the public that this month's drop in retail prices is not indicative of a trend."

In a statement issued by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in the name of the CIO Full Employment Committee, the CIO said:

"The break in the commodity market which began on February 4 has caused considerable speculation among all gorups in America. Newspapers report that retail pirces of food have followed the drop in commodity prices.

"The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports, after a telegraphic survey, that retail food prices in the past month dropped 3.5%. This reduction on prices is in the best interest of the American people as a whole. We fervently hope that the inflationary pressures for higher retail food prices have spent themselves.

"But we feel constrained to remind the public that this month's drop in retail prices is not indicative of a trend. As a matter of fact, during six of the preceeding 19 months, retail food prices dropped, but each time they jumped back until in January, 1948, retail food prices were 44% higher than in mid 1946.

"THE retail price reductions reported by the BLS of 3.5% must be placed in their proper perspective.

"1. Retail food prices have increased 44% in the past 19 months.

"2. Prices of clothing and rents —the two other main components of the measure of the cost of living—instead of falling are continuing to rise and have risen in the past month.

"3. There is no indication at all that this month's retail food price drop is indicative of a downward trend.

"WE of the CIO believe that the inflationary factors that existed a few months ago, to a large extent, exist today. The demand for steel and consumer durable goods remain high. The prospects for the Marshall Plan expenditures indicate that our export balance may be almost as high as it was at the peak in 1947. The underlying position in agriculture still remains strong.

"We, therefore, see no reason to believe that the present commodity break will continue. We feel that the reduction in retail food prices which have occurred may not be long lasting. Already there are reports that retail food prices are inching upward, wiping out some of the retail food price cuts of last week.

"It must also be remembered that the average wage of workers in manufacturing industries at the end of 1947 was a little above $52.00 a week. The Department of Labor has very conservatively estimated in a budget which is nowhere near adequate, that it required approximately $66 at the end of 1947 to maintain a family in basic necessities.

"THE difference in actual wages and what the BIS conservatively estimates, is in excess of $13. Even if food prices do decline for another month or two, which we highly question, living standards of American workers still lag $13 to $14 behind what is necessary to maintain a family in basic necessities.

"The CIO at its executive board meeting on January 23 stated that, "The CIO proposes in the coming months to be actively fighting for substantial wage increases through collective bargaining and for passage of an effective anti-inflation program through the Congress." There is nothing that has occurred in the past few weeks that alters the CIO's determination to pursue these objectives."

PRESS COMMENT ABOUT US

We were slightly amused but generally pleased by editorial reaction to the recent indictment of the CIO and its president on a charge of violating the political expenditures portion of the Taft-Hartley Act.

We chuckled a bit over the efforts of those writers who used several hundred carefully-chosen words to reach the conclusion that the CIO wasn't doing wrong by seeking a test of the T-H Act.

Naturally, we got a kick out of the editorial which said that newspapers should "put up" support for the CIO in the case or "shut up" regarding freedom of the press.

We, of course, didn't shout with glee after reading a couple of pieces which said that the CIO News wasn't a newspaper, in the true sense of the word, and that we overstated our case when we claimed freedom of the press was involved.

The thing which attracted our attention most was the absence of comment in newspapers which ordinarily cut loose editorially every time a CIO official wiggles his ears.

Such silence deserves mention.

It particularly deserves special mention because Editor & Publisher, official trade journal for the newspaper industry and ofttime critic of CIO, declared editorially: ". . . in this job, the CIO deserves the support and assistance of individual newspapers and newspaper groups which have as much at stake in the issue as the labor press."

It probably deserves special mention because many of these papers shouted about freedom of the press in the past every time the Newspaper Guild said anything about wanting a union shop clause in its contract.

However, as we said before, we were generally pleased by press reactions to the CIO's efforts to assure press freedom.

* * *

Up, Up, Up, Down, Up . . . Prices went up. Labor complained. Prices went up some more. Labor complained again. Prices kept on going up—month after month. Finally labor said, "Something's got to be done about it." Nothing happened.

Then, a couple of weeks ago, there was a break in the commodity market. This provided a field day for some of the radio commentators and newspaper "experts."

They explained it to the nation. It was the old law of supply and demand at work. Prices had gone too high and consumer pressure was forcing them down. There was nothing to get alarmed about. The country wasn't heading for a major crash.

And some of the commentators appeared unable to understand why the unions didn't announce immediately that they were forgetting about their plans for securing wage increases.

Finally the market steadied. Prices started going up again. "Bargains" started disappearing from the grocery counters.

We're not experts, so we admit frankly we don't know what caused the market break.

We do know a couple of things, however:

There has been no real reduction in the cost of living.

The "experts" who guessed wrong when the market was nosediving won't quit experting in self retribution.

MORE PRODUCTION—NOT MORE HOURS

That's Labor's Goal, Mr. Businessman, Not a Lot of Money for Doing Nothing

By ALLAN L. SWIM

SOME commentators and business speakers would have the public believe the average unionists want to report for work at 12 o'clock, quit at noon and draw $400 a week for doing nothing!

Their pet theme is:

"Labor believes it can get more and more and still produce less and less. Production is the keynote of prosperity and full employment."

Part of that sounds pretty good if you say it real fast, but let's tear it apart and see how much truth it contains.

ANY guy who can count to four on his fingers knows you can't eat two apples if you produce only one.

He also knows that an apple doesn't do him any particular good if somebody else eats it.

If he was born in or prior to 1925 he can easily recall a period in which labor was crying for the privilege of producing—a period in which there was no prosperity but plenty of unemployment.

The depression years would at least indicate that something more than production — perhaps purchasing power and distribution machinery — regulates our economy.

This doesn't detract from the importance of production. It merely puts production in its proper place.

THE average production worker —be he a unionist or not—will give a good day's work in return for a good day's pay, but he's human enough not to want to work himself out of a job.

To him there seems to be something darn unfair about being laid off periodically although officers and office workers of his company draw salaries the year around.

There's something to the idea that men who have steady work will work steadily. Just ask employers who instituted the Guaranteed Annual Wage.

And there's something to the old saying that you can't expect to get a dollar's worth of work out of a man you pay only 75 cents.

PRODUCTION—not the number of hours an employe works—is the important thing from the standpoint of the smart employer.

Industry makes profit from the articles it sells, not from the amount of sweat it can extract from its workers.

Institution of the stretch-out is a poor substitute for installation of labor-saving devices and adoption of improved techniques.

Employes feel they should benefit from new machines, not become their victims. They feel that the benefits of new production techniques should be shared by the employer, the employe and the public and should not go to the employer alone.

SINCE the end of the war, labor has been yelling as loudly as management about the need for greater production.

Time and again the CIO has pointed out the need for expansion of steel producing facilities—but the steel industry has shown no enthusiasm for such a project.

There's nothing to show that labor has been laying down on the job. Latest statistics reveal:

1. Manufacturing production in 1947 was about 90% above the 1935-'39 level.

2. The number of persons employed in manufacturing last year was about 55% larger than the average for the 1935-'39 period.

Employment up 55%. Production up 90%. Draw your own conclusions.

This'll Tax Your Patience

CAPITAL COMMENT, Democratic Natl. Committee organ, carries this item:

"Congressman Bertrand W. Gearhart (R., Calif.), in a radio debate:

" 'The income tax is a creature of Communism . . . the sales tax is a tax based upon the principle of ability to pay.

" 'The poor man buys little and pays less. The rich man buys more and pays more.' "

"This is bunk. Under a sales tax, the poor man spends all of his income to support his family and pays a tax on all of his income. The rich man buys more; his tax bill is lowered since he pays no tax on the large part of his income that he does not have to spent for any day-to-day living.

"The sales tax follows the Republican formula of forcing low-income groups to pay more taxes while permitting high-income groups to pay less!"

Retired Worker Protests

HERE'S a letter from a 65-year-old retired railroad worker in New Mexico who has an annuity of $66.80 a month on which he and his wife have to live. The letter was written to A. B. Martin, national director of the CIO United Railroad Workers.

"We who are on retirement at this time and especially those of us on small annuities are having a very hard time to make ends met. My wife and I are finding it extremely hard to get by on just the necessities of life on our annuity of $66.80 per month.

"I had to retire at age 62 and come southwest where the weather is warm and dry on account of health. I had a good many years railroad service. My last continuous employment with the Santa Fe was over 30 years as B & B foreman at Kansas City, Kans.

"I am now past 65 years and it seems us old people have been forgot as we have to get by and pay the same high cost of living that all others have to pay which can hardly be done and live in any kind of decency.

"The Congress of the U. S. surely knows how badly we need an increase in our annuities in order to live the American way of life which should afford us with enough to eat and wear and does not at this time."

The Republican - controlled Congress has refused to do anything about adequate housing for veterans.

But, Speaker Joseph Martin (R., Mass.), boss of the GOP, who could get a law passed if he said the word, declares piously:

"Life would mean little without the home."

How "Free Press" Reacted To Free Press Test

HERE is some of the editorial comment concerning the Taft-Hartley indictment of the CIO and Pres. Philip Murray:

Since only a relatively small number of newspapers commented on this freedom of press test, it is fitting that we start with comment from Editor & Publisher, official newspaper industry trade journal, which has often been at odds with CIO:

"The Department of Justice interpretation clashes head-on with the First Amendment to the Constitution."

"We do not believe it was the intent of Congress to put such restrictions on an important section of the American press. But that is beside the point, because that part of the law is so loosely drawn that the enforcement bodies can interpret it in that way.

"The Supreme Court determination of Section 304, declaring it unconstitutional, can't come too quickly. And if for some strange reason that should not be the final decision, then Congress should rewrite it or void it completely.

"In this job the CIO deserves the support and assistance of individual newspapers and newspaper groups which have as much at stake in the issue as the labor press."

AND, now, on to the liberal viewpoint of a paper founded by Alexander Hamilton:

New York Post (Independent): "It can't happen here! That was the reaction of many to the federal indictment. No, not in America, they protested, can a labor leader be dragged into court like a common criminal.

"Murray openly invited arrest by disobeying the Taft-Hartley law which forbids a national bank, corporation or labor union from making any expenditure in connection with a national or Congressioal campaign.

"In narrowest terms he's (Murray) fighting Republican attempts to emasculate the political power of the CIO. But he's also fighting for you . . . Murray has gone to bat for us."

THEN, let us go out toward the West to Wisconsin:

Madison, Wis., Capital Times (independent): "Powerful corporate interests that own newspapers may endorse what candidates they want and may crucify the candidates they don't want, but there is no interference with them. And there shouldn't be.

"But the unions do not have the same right. . . . If the American people permit this law to stand they have permitted American fascism."

NOW let's take a paper that calls itself "Independent Republican":

New York Herald Tribune: "We have expressed our welcome of this test and now would encourage Mr. Clark (Atty. Gen. Clark) to throw the book at the rest of the press, whatever its financial basis. Let's find out whether newspapers are still free to set forth their opinions of candidates, or whether, in this loosely drawn clause, the T-H Act supercedes the Constitution.

"It was, of course, never the intent of Congress that it should. That intent, obviously, was merely to forbid direct contributions to campaign funds by powerful interests, corporate or union."

THE identification of newspapers in this article as "independent," etc., comes from the N. W. Ayer & Sons Directory of Newspapers and Periodicals, 1947. It is strange that the New York Post, an acknowledged liberal organ, and the New York Sun, a consistent conservative representative, are both listed as "independent." That term in the past usually referred to papers such as the Post. Here's the Sun's reaction:

New York Sun: "Indictment will be recognized for what it is—a test of the constitutionality of those provisions of the law which prohibit union expenditures for political purposes . . . hence, the test case, by arrangement, so to speak."

IN the Nation's Capital:

Washington Evening Star (Independent): "The indictment . . . raises a constitutional question so clothed with doubt and so important that the need for judicial determination is self-evident.

"In deliberately seeking a court test, Mr. Murray is entirely within his rights. He is neither 'defying' the law nor flouting the authority of Congress, and, this being so, it should be entirely clear that no stigma attaches to his indictment."

From Baltimore's famed "Sunpaper":

Baltimore Evening Sun (Independent Democratic): "The issue as to constitutionality is one for the courts to settle. But if it should be decided that the indictment in this case is valid, a serious gap will have been found in the protection which the Constitution has supposedly thrown around freedom of speech and the press."

AND last, but certainly not least, we come to the syndicated column of David Lawrence, undaunted spokesman for industry, who senses a plot:

David Lawrence: "The Dept. of Justice may have mischievously drafted the indictment of Murray in order to bring Congress into ridicule for its law prohibiting expenditures by unions in political campaigns."

ONE of the last states where you'd expect to find a liberal viewpoint on this suit is Arkansas. But, read this one from the Arkansas Gazette (morning circulation 87,809 daily; Sunday 99,790):

Arkansas Gazette (Independent Democratic): "The T-H Act—passed at a time when public resentment against union abuses was running high—banned political contributions by unions, a worthy enough objective, but under the circumstances one hardly characterized by a sense of even-handed justice.

"Businessmen's organizations such as NAM and C. of C. constantly publish and disseminate political propaganda reflecting their special point of view. Their right to do so is beyond question. So should the right of labor organizations, such as we believe the Supreme Court will recognize when the case finally reaches it for decision."

However, most of the free press remained free—free from commenting on this test, involving free press.

Who's On The Spot

The following paragraph is from the Editor & Publisher story on the classified advertising clinic of the Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers Association attended by classified advertising managers (CAMs) from six states:

"D B. (Barney) Barnhart, CAM of the McKeesport (Pa.) Daily News and chairman of the PNPA Classified Advertising Committee, who presided at the two-day sessions, told delegates they could expect to be 'on the spot' for the duration of the economic crisis. His own plan, he explained, is a new form of sales psychology, which prompts his staff of adtakers to say to a customer: 'You want this run for seven days, don't you?" and book the sale on that basis before the customer has an opportunity to choose otherwise."

Payroll Data

The Civil Service Commission reports that the number of persons holding Classified Civil Service jobs in the departmental service in Washington, D. C., now totals 146,000.

The CSC says stenographers, typists and correspondence clerks, with 28,900 employes, make up the largest occupational group. Accounting and auditing workers, who total 15,200, come second; and mail, file and record clerks, 12,700, come third. Engineers, who total 7658, make up more than a third of the 21,689 departmental employes in the Professional Service. Engineering draftsmen, 617, and laboratory mechanics, 401, are the largest groups in the 2286-man, semi-professional service.

Guards, 2855, and messengers, 2518, make up the largest groups in the crafts and service occupations. Geologists, forestry workers, mail, file and record clerks and non-professional legal workers were the groups that increased most in 1947.

You Can Get Equal Pay Law —Truman To Women's Conclave

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

A HUNDRED YEARS ago women who had the nerve to ask for the right to vote, or for decent pay and better working conditions were considered "unnatural."

They were hooted, hissed and ridiculed publicly for wanting even a small part of the political and economic rights granted to men.

Only a few humble jobs outside the home were open to women in those days, and the pay was on a starvation level. When a woman married she lost all her property rights. She didn't even have the right to her own personal earnings. If she had property it was taxed without representation since she could not vote nor take any part in law making.

How far women have come since those days was brought out at a conference held by the Women's Bureau of the Labor Dept. last week in Washington to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the first women's rights convention in Seneca Falls, N. Y., in 1848.

President Truman, Labor Sec. Lewis B. Schwellenbach, Women's Bureau Director Frieda Miller, as well as trade union leaders and representatives of women's organizations, were among the speakers at the conference. It was attended by more than 250 women including delegates from 43 trade union groups, CIO, AFL and independent.

Urging American women to use their great power as consumers as a weapon in their fight against inflation, President Truman reminded them that "women control the bulk of the nation's wealth," and channel its day-to-day spending.

HE mentioned the equal pay bill now before Congress and other measures aimed to end specific sex discriminations. Women can get these and other things they want, Truman told the conference, "if you make your goals known and persist in demanding action."

Following President Truman's address, Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach discussed the Women's Bureau Conference specifically in the light of the Seneca Falls meeting 100 years ago, noting the great differences between the two gatherings.

There was then no Women's agency to work for improvements in the status of women. "Indeed, anyone who seriously suggested such a Bureau at that time would probably have been laughed to scorn," Schwellenbach said.

"A century ago the struggle of workers to unite to improve their conditions was a discouraging, often a dangerous one. Labor's right to collective bargaining was far from being recognized.

"Women's right to promote their economic welfare and political freedom was also a discouraging struggle, and sturdy as those women were, they must often have been heavy-hearted and discouraged. But this gathering here today shows that they never gave up."

Miss Miller's speech was crammed with basic facts and figures revealing the changing role of the American woman as worker, homemaker and citizen. Here are some she mentioned:

● The most basic single fact of concern to the conference, she said, was that 17 million women today are either working or seeking work. This is 28% of the entire labor force.

● Figures for December 1947 show almost three million more women in the labor market than in 1940.

● The census of 1870, the first one to give figures for women, recorded two million women in the labor force.

● While the entire labor force has more than doubled since 1900, the women in it have tripled, and now are 28% of the total force as compared to 18% in 1900.

● Today about half the women in the labor force are 35 years or older, a marked shift from the pattern of earlier years, when women in the 20-24 age group were most numerous.

● Significant changes in the occupational and industrial distribution of women workers are shown by the fact that in May 1947 women in durable goods manufacturing were about 13% of the total employed, as compared with 9% in 1939.

● Women's average wages still fall below those of even unskilled men, as shown by the figures for December 1947, when earnings of all workers averaged $53.72 a week; unskilled men averaged $43.46, but women's earnings averaged only $36.94 a week.

● Because of their new war-born training and skills, women are today, as never before, in a position to be used by unscrupulous employers as wage cutters.

"We cannot afford to risk the threat to general wage levels that unequal pay to women involves," Miss Miller said.

One of the main outside speakers at the conference was Gladys Dickason, vice-president and research director for the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who talked on American Women on the Job.

In discussing the opinion often expressed that women should only work if they had to support themselves or others, Miss Dickason said that any attempt to control employment of women on this basis would involve a Means test which would be a gross discrimination against women.

"Women should be regarded as people and treated on the same basis as men in regard to work," she said, pointing out that a great many men work who don't actually need to do so.

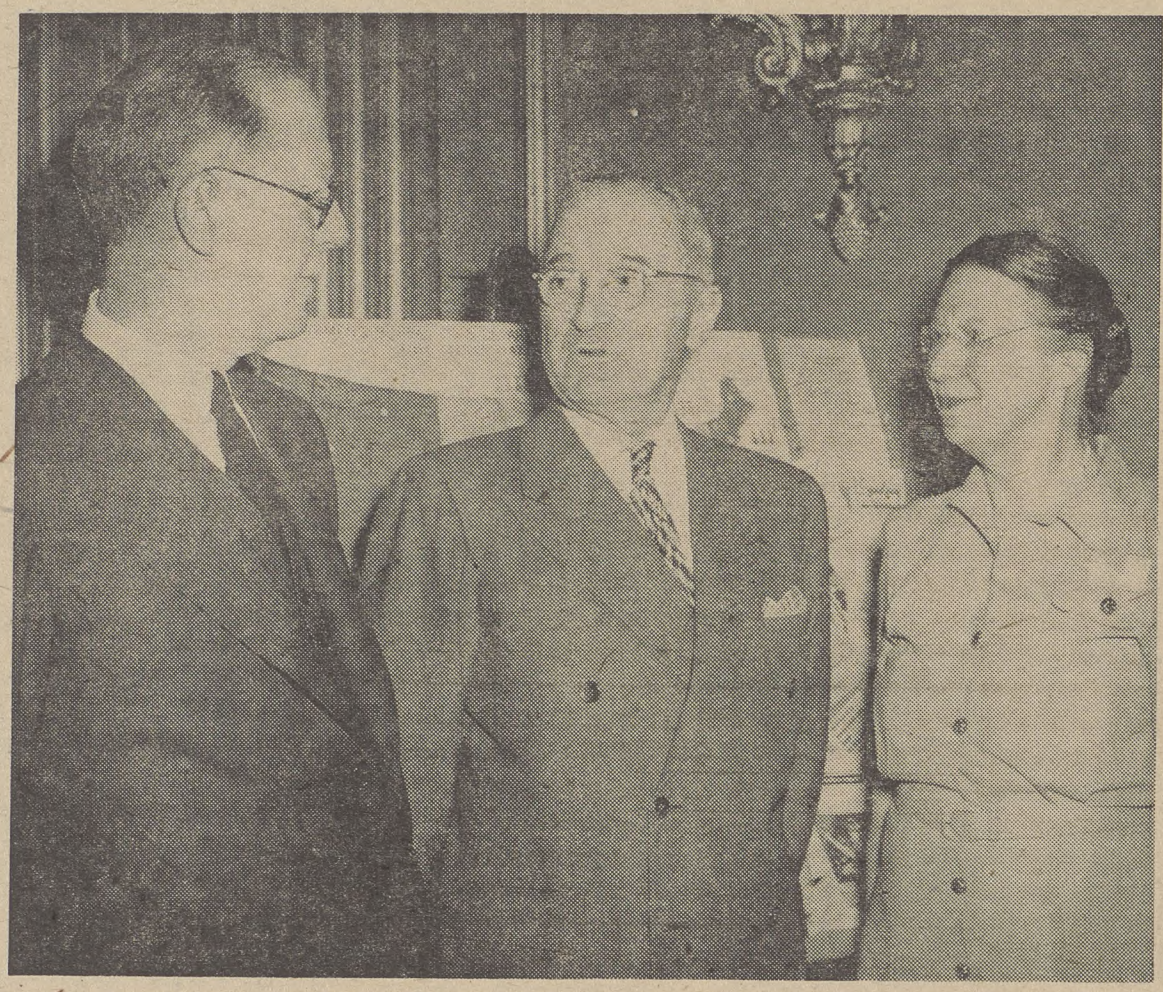
But recent surveys show that the large proportion of women who take jobs do it because they have to work, and not just to make some additional money to spend on themselves, she said.

Miss Dickason stressed the importance of maintaining minimum wage regulation and other protective legislation for women while the struggle continued to raise the standards for all workers, men and women.

"The line of progress lies in not giving up any of the laws protecting women," she said, while efforts are being made to improve legislation covering both sexes.

One of the greatest gains made by women in recent years, Miss Dickason declared, has been the benefits won for them by unions.

Through their unions to which they now belong in greater numbers than ever before, women today have greater opportunity to exercise their capacity for leadership, said Miss Dickason.



OPEN WOMEN'S PARLEY: President Truman (center) poses with Labor Sec. Lewis B. Schwellenbach (left) and Miss Frieda Miller, Director of the Women's Bureau of the Dept. of Labor, at the opening of a conference of women leaders in Washington. The meeting commemorates the 100th anniversary of the movement for women's rights. Women constitute 28% of the Nation's labor force, Miss Miller said.

GLADYS DICKASON

"Women should be regarded as people." Miss Dickason insisted at a meeting of women leaders. Vice-president and research director of the CIO Clothing Workers, she urged passage of equal pay bill for women.

Textile Local Hits Amusement Tax

The Textile Workers of Local 181, Hazelton, Pa., have denounced the city's new amusements tax.

The tax was adopted under a recent law passed by the Legislature, which gave cities power to levy taxes for revenue in any way they see fit. John Edelman, Textile Legislative Representative, told Local 181's members that the only fair system of taxation was one based on "ability to pay."

Scranton, about 45 miles from Hazelton and also in Pennsylvania's hard coal region, is considering a wage tax. Philadelphia has a similar tax, as do several Ohio cities.

Murray O. K.s Education Bill

IF CONGRESS is really concerned with improving industrial relations, it should certainly pass the Labor Extension Service Bill, CIO Pres. Philip Murray told the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare last week. He called the bill "labor's challenge to the 80th Congress."

The proposed law would set up an educational service for workers in the Dept. of Labor similar in scope to the extension service provided for farmers under the Agriculture Department.

SEN. MORSE

Through Federal grants-in-aid, state schools and colleges upon request from local or regional groups, could set up educational programs for workers along the line of their special needs and as a means of promoting good labor-management relations.

Murray's statement endorsing Bill S. 1390 was read to the Senate Committee by Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization.

STRESSING the importance of giving unionists the know-how needed for effective collective bargaining the statement declared:

"The bill, by providing the tools of fact and reason, will give labor educational parity with other citizens for the first time.

"All of the techniques that come under the heading of scientific management, the problems of job evaluation, time and motion studies, wage determination, and incentive plans are debated across the table.

"Certainly all union officers will not become industrial engineers, but adequate understanding of these methods is essential because they have become the core of collective bargaining. . . .

FOLLOWING the presentation of Murray's statement, Kermit Eby, CIO Director of Education and Research, told the committee it was important to extend educational facilities available to workers as a means of strengthening our democratic institutions.

Another CIO witness, Victor Reuther, education director, Auto Workers, also emphasized that the bill "would provide the tools we need to get greater democratic participation on the part of our people."

On the first day of the 5-day hearings, testimony in favor of the bill was given by Secy. of Labor Lewis B. Sshwellenbach, and Reps. Thor C. Tollefson R., Wash.), and Ray J. Madden (D., Ind.), the two sponsors of the bill in the House.

Sen. Elbert Thomas (D., Utah), a member of the Committee and together with Wayne L. Morse, (R., Ore.), a sponsor of S. 1390 pointed out that all wings of the labor movement favored the bill.

At the beginning of his state-Pres. Murray expressed the appreciation of the CIO "for the splendid work of the National Committee for the Extension of Labor Education and its chairman, Hilda W. Smith."

Frank Fernbach, staff member of the CIO United Steelworkers, and CIO liasion representative to the Natl. Labor Extension Committee testified on behalf of this committee

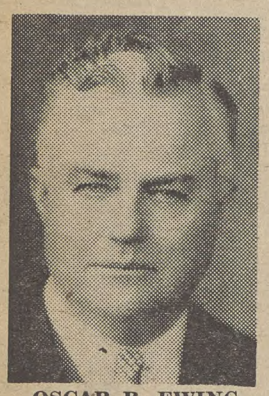
Negro Internes Get Break

SEGREGATION in the capital of the World's Greatest Democracy is beginning to be wiped out.

Latest example is an agreement in principle to allow graduates of Howard University, a Negro college situated in the District of Columbia, to become internes and/or residents at Gallinger Hospital. Gallinger is a general hospital. In the past, it has barred Negro internes and residents, who are now admitted only to Freedman's hospital in D. C.



OSCAR R. EWING

The agreement was reached among Oscar E. Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, Howard and the District Commissioners. Specific details were to be worked out, with the first Negro doctors receiving their posts next fall, when the new batch of internes and residents takes over.

Ewing revealed that Georgetown and George Washington universities have agreed to give up their exclusive arrangement to supply internes to Gallinger. Georgetown recently opened a new hospital which has announced it will have a policy of no discrimination against potential patients. The CIO presented Georgetown with $50,000 to outfit the F. D. R. Memorial Children's Ward.

There are now some 37 interneships and 25 residencies at Gallinger. The number of Negroes admitted will be determined when the details are worked out. Seventy percent of the patients at Gallinger are Negroes.

Under the agreement, Howard professors will treat patients at Gallinger and take their students with them on their rounds.

Howard University now trains about half of the Nation's annual output of new Negro doctors. Ewing said the district commissioners were "most sympathetic on the Gallinger proposal. The opening of the hospital's facilities to Negro doctors has long been the aim of Negro and other liberal organizations."

Leaves $10,000 GI Insurance To Branch Of NAACP

A NEGRO veteran of the European Theatre of Operations, always a firm believer in the objectives of the Natl. Association for Advancement of the Colored People, has left that organization a substantial token of his esteem.

Harold L. Finley named the St. Louis NAACP Branch as beneficiary of his $10,000 army life insurance.

As a result of his overseas service, he had spent considerable time in an Army sanitarium at Danville, Ill. Last November in a fit of despondency, Finley shot and killed his sister and then killed himself. Last week, the Army notified the St. Louis NAACP of the insurance.

St. Louis NAACP members believe the bequest is the largest single contribution ever made to a branch of the association.

Professor Hits House Group

The tactics of the House Committee on Un-American Activities —particularly its attacks on the Southern Conference for Human Welfare—have been analyzed in the Harvard Law Review by Dr. Walter Gellhorn, professor of law at Columbia University.

Gellhorn's analysis has been hailed by Dr. Mitchell Franklin, civil law expert at Tulane.

Gellhorn says: "We have sought to appraise the Committee report which denounced the Conference. That report is a document which discredits its authors rather than the organization it sought to destroy. The accusations that the Conference is insincere—that is, that its asserted interest in southern welfare is but a disguise to mask its service to the Soviet Union—are not founded on credible evidence. From semi-truths the Committee has drawn conclusions which would be strained even if the factual assertions of the report were beyond challenge.

Admen Launch Fight On Bias

The advertising profession — through the Advertising Council, Inc., has launched an ambitious counter attack against racial discrimination.

Virtually every type of advertising medium will be used in the campaign, which will stress: accept or reject people on their individual merits; do not listen to or spread rumors against a race or religion; speak up, wherever you are—in school, business, union meeting, social group — against group prejudice.

The program will be known as "The United American Campaign." Allan L. Swim, editor of the CIO News and Publicity director of the CIO, is a member of the council's Public Policy Committee.

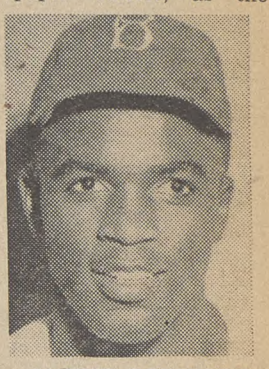
It is expected that many organizations will cooperate with the Council in this work of publicizing anti-discrimination work. Already many have indicated their intentions to participate in many ways.

MURRAY . . .

Honored For Tolerance

ANOTHER outstanding tribute for his many efforts to advance the cause of American democracy has been given to CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

He was elected, by a nation-wide balloting of organizations and newspaper editors, as the winner in the field of Labor and Industry, of the Thomas Jefferson Award for the Advancement of Democracy in 1947.



JACKIE ROBINSON

The award is presented annually by the Council Against Intolerance in America. Co-chairmen are Henry A. Atkinson, Arthur Capper and Bishop Francis J. Haas.

Ballotting was held to select the individuals in various fields of American life who, during the past year, accomplished the most for the advancement of the democratic ideal and the promotion of racial and religious tolerance and equity.

To reach its conclusions the Council contacted more than 1000 organizations and 500 newspaper editors.

The first Jefferson Award was given to the late George Norris in 1943.

The final tabulation of the Council's vote revealed that, in addition to Murray, the highest number of votes in other fields were won by Ford Frick, Branch Rickey and Jackie Robinson, in the field of Public Service; Archbishop Joseph E. Ritter, in Education; Cartoonist Bill Mauldin, the Arts; Sinclair Lewis, Journalism and Literature, and Charles E. Wilson, also in the field of Labor and Industry.

Presentation of the award to Murray will be made at a dinner April 11 in New York.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey represented Murray and the CIO on Pres. Truman's Civil Rights Committee, which issued the Now-Famous "To Secure These Rights" report. That report has constituted the President's recommendations to Congress.

NAACP Leader Says:

Few In US Can Equal Truman's Record For Protecting Civil Liberties

FOLLOWING are excerpts from an article by Walter White, executive secretary of the Natl. Association for Advancement of Colored People. The article appeared in the New York Herald Tribune:

As was to be expected, Pres. Truman is being denounced not only by Southern Bourbons but conservative Republicans, and some of the supporters of Henry Wallace are charging him with "playing politics" because of his message to Congress on civil rights.

Others less active on the political front are puzzled even as they are gratified at the forthrightness of his stand on this issue. A distinguished liberal editor asked me, "How can he be so wrong on issues like Jim Landis and Marriner Eccles and so right on civil rights?"

Without going into errors of omission and commission, I can add a personal footnote on the history of the President's position on lynching, disfranchisement, discrimination in employment and segregation.

Few men in public life have ever had so consistent a record as Truman's. As a Senator, he voted consistently for anti-lynching legislation and other measures which were included in his memorable address to the Congress on Feb. 2.

His attitude on these issues has been in marked contrast with that of President Roosevelt. The late President was opposed to lynching and other evils which disgraced America at home and abroad.

But, he repeatedly told me that the time was not ripe for a head-on collision with the Southern Senators and Congressmen who, under the seniority rule of the Senate and as a direct by-product of disfranchisement, chaired important Senate and House committees.

Roosevelt issued his famous Executive Order 8802 establishing a Fair Employment Practice Committee, only when he was convinced that a threatened march on Washington was not a bluff.

Whenever the professional Southerners reared up on their hind legs and threatened secession from either the Democratic party or the Union Roosevelt would hastily dispatch Jim Farley or some other emissary to smooth ruffled Dixie feathers.

Truman's attitude has been markedly different. When a small delegation, representing labor, church and civic groups, presented to him on Sept. 19, 1946, the facts regarding the wave of lynchings and other anti-minority practices which were then sweeping the country, Truman's face became pale with horror.

His voice trembled with deep emotion as he assured us that steps must be taken immediately to stop this wave of terrorism before it got out of hand. It was at this conference that he made the decision to create the Committee on Civil Rights, whose memorable report is a current best seller.

It is this observer's measured opinion that if the President wanted to play politics he would have followed the course of his predecessors of evading or postponing action on this most explosive of American issues.

But if the President was thinking of votes as far back as 1946, when he started governmental machinery rolling against prejudice, he very shrewdly called the bluff of the professional Southerners who by their bluster have terrorized his predecessors.

The Governors, Representatives and Senators who have screamed loudest against the President and in defense of lynching, disfranchisement and racial proscription are realists. They don't want to lose their jobs. They most certainly are not going to support Henry Wallace nor the Republican candidate.

In this quiet Missouri fashion Harry Truman has demonstrated that he is in earnest when he says that "we must correct the remaining imperfections in our practice of democracy."

Politics Makes . . .

The political field is something to look at.

Case No. 1.

Pres. Truman certainly has diversified opponents.

Truman is opposed by Henry Wallace, who says the President is too tough on Russia.

Truman is opposed by Ex-Penna. Gov. George Earle (D.), who thinks the U. S. should drop an atom bomb on Russia. (Wallace and Earle don't support each other, needless to say.)

Case No. 2.

Says Sen. Wherry (R., Neb.):

"It was the Republican leadership that was responsible for ending OPA.

"I am pretty much convinced today more than ever high prices themselves are the surest cure for high prices."

Financial Writer Says:

Truman Tax Plan Not Politics But Blow At Inflation

President Truman framed his tax proposal as a means to maintain maximum production and employment, Nathan Roberstson declares, in an article appearing in the current issue of the Guild Reporter, newspaper publication of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

Excerpts from Robertson's article follow:

HOUSE approval of the Knutson tax bill has squarely put up to the voters of this country, particularly the members of organized labor, the issue of whether they are going to let Confress get away with wrecking our economic system and destroying all hope for continuing full employment.

Two years ago the people of this country, led by labor and liberal groups, forced Congress to pass a full employment law, designed to avoid future depressions such as the one that almost wrecked the country from 1929-1933.

The law set up a workable machinery for using our collective brains to avoid depression. The machinery now is working, and passage of the Knutson bill provides the first major test of whether we are going to use it, or let the Knutsons in Congress destroy it.

[The Knutson bill would give the several million families earning under $2,000 a year a tax saving of about $1 a week, but the 212,000 families making over $25,000 a year would save more than $85 a week, CIO economists point out.]

HERE are the basic facts the papers have ignored:

● The President's program was drafted not by his political advisers, but by the Council of Economic Advisers set up under the full employment law to direct the President in using the government's fiscal policy as a means of maintaining maximum employment and production.

● The program was based on a finding, included in the President's Economic Report to Congress, that despite shortages of goods in this country at the present time, our basic ability to produce was outrunning our ability to buy and absorb the goods we were making.

Only short term conditions, such as rapidly expanding credit, spending from war savings, and exports, were providing a market for the goods we were producing, the report said, and when these disappear, as they are bound to eventually, we are likely to head down into another depression.

● This unbalance between production and purchasing power—similar to the one which set off the depression in 1929—was developing as a part of the rapidly spiraling inflation, a more obvious threat to stability and continuing full employment.

● As long as we are not faced with depression, it is important to continue to collect more taxes than we spend, so we can pay off the terrific public debt which now exceeds $250,000,000,000 and requires interest payments that might wreck our economy in time of depression.

● But while we need to continue high taxes, we need to adjust those taxes to meeting the unbalance developing inside the inflationary spiral between production and purchasing power.

● The way to do this is to lower taxes on the low income taxpayers, because the purchasing power of consumers dropped by 8% during the past year, despite the monetary increase in consumer income. Purchasing power was maintained only because consumers increased their spending 3.5 billion dollars more than their incomes increased—through borrowing or spending of savings.

● At the same time, there is one segment of the economy that is experiencing the greatest prosperity in all history, and can well afford to pay more taxes. That is the corporations, whose profits rose last year from $12,500,000,000 to $17,000,000,000, after taxes, or 70% higher than ever before in history until last year. This profit total was more than twice what corporations netted in the fabulous boom year of 1929.

● Despite all the propaganda about how business needed more profits for expansion, business expenditures, for new plant and equipment last year were three times what they were in 1939, when taxes were comparatively low. Total private construction last year was almost 10 billion dollars as co mpared with 7.5 billion in 1929, when the boom was at its peak.

On the basis of these economic findings, the President proposed a tax bill that would add $3,200,000,000 to consumer purchasing power by cutting taxes $40 for each taxpayer and dependent.

This would mean that a family with four members would have $160 less taxes to pay. It would not necessarily mean, as conservative opponents have contended, that this would create that much additional purchasing power in time of inflation.

Many of those families during 1947 found it necessary to spend that $160 either out of their savings, or borrowing. If they got a tax cut they would not expand their spending, in most cases but would find it possible to more nearly get along on what they were earning.

The credit boom, which is worrying economists would perhaps recede a little.

In order to prevent this adjustment for the needy and fixed income people from lowering tax collections, and thus adding to inflation, the President proposed to transfer that tax burden to the profiteering corporations by enacting an excess profits tax that would collect about the same amount of money.

In most cases they could make still bigger profits, two or three times what they did before the war without getting caught. A company with an investment of $1,000,000 could make at least 15%, and probably much more, before paying an excess profits tax.

THIS tax program, which was shunted aside in Congress without any real consideration and wasn't even supported by the Democrats in the House, was a historic proposal. It was the first time a President has proposed a tax program not to raise more revenue or to cut taxes, but only to correct an economic maladjustment in our system.

The House has passed the Knutson bill, instead of the President's, in the face of a warning from Secretary Snyder that it would create a deficit of $2,000,000,000 at a time when we should do something about paying off the debt. Snyder showed clearly, incidentally, how the Knutson bill was designed to help bix taxpayers, instead of the little fellows who need help.

The battle is now in the Senate, where the full employment bill originally was saved two years ago. Only public pressure, led by labor and liberal groups, can save the national economy and the full employment program. This is the big test for that dream of lasting prosperity.

WouldDeport Ferd. Smith

FERDINAND SMITH, secretary of the National Maritime Union and an NMU representative on the CIO Executive Board, was arrested in New York Feb. 16 and held for deportation.

The CIO union official was charged with illegal entry into the U. S. and with being "a member of an organization advocating the overthrow of the government by force and violence." Smith is a native of Jamaica, West Indies.

FERD. SMITH

He was taken to the Ellis Island immigration station, following which the NMU's counsel, William Standard, sought his release on a writ of habeas corpus.

Smith, one of the CIO's executive board members who voted last month against the policy decision to oppose the current third party movement, has been a leader of the wing of the NMU opposed to the leadership of Pres. Joseph Curran.

In 1944, he resigned his union post after it had been charged that he held the office unconstitutionally. NMU rules provide that all officers must by American citizens. A year later he ran for office and was elected to his present post after announcing he had taken steps to acquire U. S. citizenship.

An early leader of the NMU, Smith is one of the nation's most prominent Negro union officials.

NMU Pres. Curran, who has frequently challenged Smith's right to hold national office in the NMU, issued no comment about the arrest.

Pres. Michael Quill of the Greater New York CIO Council, sent a strong wire of protest to Atty.-Gen. Clark. He said the deportation proceedings are "outrageous" in view of Smith's "patriotic leadership . . . in keeping ships sailing for victory in the war" and asserted that deportation powers are being used to "disrupt unions."

A statewide election in West Virginia amongst the telephone workers has been ordered for March 25 and 26. The vote in Oregon is now being taken, and card-signing is progressing in Maryland.

Poll Shows Public For Upping Pay Base

The present Wage-Hour Law minimum wage rate of 40c an hour has been law since 1940.

Since before the war and during it, there have been several attempts to raise the minimum to a figure more consistent with the cost of living, Congress has failed to take any steps, having pigeonholed every move to increase the rate. Last week, the Gallup Poll indicated that the public was far out of step with Congress on this. Of those interviewed, 66% were for an increase to 75c; 29% for not increasing; 5% had no opinion.

Transport Union Wins 15c Increase

The Philadelphia CIO is preparing for a battle against a transit fare increase, requested by the Philadelphia Transportation Co. after 11,000 CIO Transport Workers won a 15c wage increase.

The wage settlement narrowly headed off a threatened strike.

CIO is expected to urge the State Public Utilities Commission to reject the petition for a fare rise on grounds that it would work undue hardship on the city's wage earners.

The company holds a complete transportation monopoly, operating all the bus, trolley and subway and elevated lines in the city.

Expect Rent Control To Be Extended at Least A Year

ALTHOUGH the Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of federal rent control and the Republican Policy Committee has endorsed the "principle" of extending control for "a year or so," tenants can't sigh "thank goodness" yet.

With tenants facing expiration of controls on Feb. 29, several encouraging—and other not-so-encouraging — developments took place on Capitol Hill:

● The Senate Banking and Currency Committee figuratively thumbed its nose at its subcommittee's attempts to raise rents. Rejecting Sen. Harry P. Cain's (R., Wash.) proposal to decontrol large areas and permit blanket 15% increases in others, the committee reported out what is considered by CIO a relatively agreeable measure.

● Fears expressed by union and tenant spokesmen that controls would expire before a new law was enacted—or that the legislators would ram through an ineffectual compromise measure to beat the deadline—were somewhat allayed. A 30-day extension of the current law was approved by the House Banking & Currency Committee, which has made no progress in drafting a permanent rent bill.

Sentiment in the Senate appears favorable toward the temporary extension, if the lower House fails to come up with a complete bill before Feb. 29. Such a move would eliminate the necessity for a last-minute compromise bill.

ON THE negative side of the ledger were other developments:

● Republican Sens. Cain and John W. Bricker (O.), rebuffed by the full Senate committee, warned they would try to get the help-the-landlord features of their original measure into the Senate bill through amendments from the floor.

To "give the landlords a break," the Ohioan said he would support, or possibly introduce, amendments to grant all landlords 15% rent increases in areas where a single landlord's operating costs have risen 30%.

Such a measure, CIO spokesmen have pointed out, would be unfair, since it ignores the landlords' increased income. Despite higher costs, there have been fewer vacancies. Furthermore, they stress the inaccuracy of using a single landlord's costs as a yardstick for the entire area.

Even more objectionable to the CIO is Bricker's proposal to decontrol areas which have at least a 2% vacancy rate. The majority of big cities in the country would be affected by this move.

ANOTHER amendment to aid landlords will be introduced by Republican Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (Wis.). This would give states which have their own rent control laws the final say on rent rises.

Chairman Jesse P. Wolcott (R., Mich.) of the House Banking Committee, indicated that his committee would be in no hurry to get to work on a long term rent-control bill.

● The Senate Banking committee postponed action for the second straight day on confirmation of Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods until Congress enacts a rent bill. Woods has incurred the wrath of the real estate interests by his refusal to grant rent increases in city areas.

The Senate bill would:

1. Extend rent control for 14 months until May 1, 1949.

(CIO recommended a two-year extension.)

2. Maintain the 15% "voluntary" increases in the current law until Dec. 31, 1949.

(CIO recommended the elimination of this provision.)

3. Decontrol rented rooms in private homes but not rooming houses.

(The CIO sought control of all rental units.)

4. Decontrol all dwelling units renting for $225 or more a month.

(The CIO wasted no worry over those who could afford such rents.)

5. Permit the administrator to allow a recent increase where the landlord can prove he is operating at a loss.

6. Provide punishment up to one year in jail and a $1000 fine on any wilful violator of the law. The administrator would have the power to institute court action in such cases.

(The CIO recommended that this power be given the administrator.)

7. Require landlords to give 60-day eviction notice on all grounds except non-payment of rent or where the tenant is a "nuisance."

(The CIO recommended a six-months notice to enable tenants to find other quarters.)

The Lowdown On Rent Control

Rent controls are scheduled to die Feb. 29—unless

● The 30-day extension bill, now before the house, is passed by Congress; or

● Both Houses act with next-to-impossible speed to pass a long-range bill by the end of the month.

In the House: Rep. Wolcott's Banking Committee has made no move toward drafting a bill. Committee O.K.'d a 30-day extension of present controls.

In the Senate: A bill extending controls for 14 months is now on Senate floor. Banking Committee has not acted on a 30-day extension bill.

CIO urges members to send wires and letters asking enactment of both temporary and long-range bills.

REIGN OF TERROR FAILS TO DENT GEORGIA STRIKE

A REIGN of terror has failed to daunt the 250 members of the CIO Woodworkers who have been on strike for five months against the Burgin Lumber interests in Georgia to gain recognition of their union.

The strikers are employes of the Marion Box & Brokerage Co., and the Burgin Manufacturing Co., Buena Vista, and the Burgin Lumber Co., Cuthbert. The strike started last Sept. 18 at Cuthbert, but spread to Buena Vista, 70 miles away, Oct. 6.

The reign of terror was climaxed recently when shots were fired in meetings of the strikers at Springvale, near Cuthbert, and at a Buena Vista church. The Springvale meeting was shot up twice the same night.

E. P. Geiger, Auto Workers organizer, and Ned Kocher, Steelworkers organizer, assigned to the CIO Organizing Committee, who were at the Buena Vista meeting, said that the audience just got down on the floor when the shots started coming through the windows, and when the firing ceased continued their meeting.

THERE has been intimidation of strikers and organizers ever since the strike began. Several strikers were arrested in Buena Vista but were later released when they promised Frank Lowe, brother-in-law of the Burgin brothers, that they would go back to work. Special policemen were put on duty to keep CIO organizers from talking to strikers on the street.

Then Cuthbert Councilman R. F. Burgin, one of the Burgin brothers, and his fellow members passed an ordinance requiring organizers to pay a $1500 license fee. Charles H. Gillman, Georgia CIO director, had himself arrested, and that case is still pending on the courts.

The T-H act is also being used to harass the strikers, the mill operators charging a secondary boycott, because the sawmill workers supplying the Burgins decided to walk out.

THE strikers have no faith in the T-H Act. Several weeks ago they voted against letting the NLRB conduct an election.

Asked to explain the reason for the strikers' morale, E. L. Luter, CIO representative, said:

"It is the first time they ever had an opportunity to help themselves, and also it is the first time they were ever helped by anybody."

IUMSWA Picks Green's Slate

JOHN GREEN was reelected president of the CIO Shipbuilding Union unanimously and swept in an entire slate of supporters of his administration.

Secy.-Treas. Ross Blood was reelected, defeating Chris Flori, Local 13. Vice Pres. John Grogan was reelected over John McVoy, Local 13.

Elected to the board were Syd Rose, Local 12; John Driscoll and Angelo Verdu, Metal Trades; Michael Hermelin, Local 16; Gabriel Polito, Local 25; Charles Hansen, Local 18; Antony Loughney, Local 14; William Harker, Local 1; Richard Carter, Local 49; F. Taylor, Local 24; William Howell, Local 9; Charles Leone, Local 61; A. B. Martin and Richard Houlihan, Rail.

The board then elected Thomas J. Gallagher, director of organization, to the board, where he will have voice and vote. W. M. Sheets, Rail, was named as board alternate.

POOR STARVING NAM— NEXT IT'LL PASS CUP

SOON you'll see a number of pro-big business ads which shall be NAMless.

The ads, prepared by the Natl. Association of Manufacturers' public relations conference, will appear in many newspapers. They will carry the names of local business firms, rather than that of NAM.

The ads were planned at the NAM convention in December, "to overcome the fantastic misconception that the American people as a whole have about the size of corporate profits."

Each ad winds up with the statement that profits are only 4c on the sales dollar. One ad—so help us—actually shows a would-be John Wanamaker setting up a new business, working with youthful energy, and ending up his first month with 4c in his pocket!

And who is the New Wanamaker's best friend? His banker, natch. That benefactor solaces Jimmy with: "Few people realize how modest a profit margin American business operates on. But, don't be discouraged. Think what you've already done. You've made jobs in the factories you buy from. You've made jobs for your employes and you've ended up with a reasonable profit for yourself. That's pretty good."

(If this had been a Broadway musical comedy, Johnny would have then gone out on a tear with the four cents clutched in one chubby hand and a blonde in the other.)

* * *

NAM's drive will make no headway with housewives and CIO members, for our members recall that in December—in the same month that NAM was planning the ad campaign—the CIO had refuted its arguments in advance.

The refutation was done through the CIO Economic Outlook, monthly publication issued by the CIO Dept. of Education & Research.

The publication noted that profits for 1947 were at an all-time high of 17 billions, after taxes.

"When profits are high, corporations try to make them appear as small as possible," Economic Outlook said. "This disappearing trick is usually accomplished by:

"1. Understating true profits by padding costs and reserves.

"2. Relating profits to total sales instead of to net worth."

Economic Outlook took Armour & Co. as an example. Armour was claiming in nationwide ads that it was making only 1.8c profit on each sales dollar. Economic Outlook proved that actually Armour was making 30.7c on each sales dollar after "overlooked adjustments" were taken into account. And, Armour was typical of industry in general.

UE Says NLRB Broke T-H Law

CIO Electrical Workers have tried to turn the tables on the Natl. Labor Relations Board by charging the Board with violating the Taft-Hartley Act.

UE claimed that the NLRB violated the Act by holding hearings on whether to order a representation election at the Westinghouse Electric Corporation's Lamp Division plant at Bloomfield, N. J.

Two independent unions have requested an election at the plant, where UE holds a contract not due to expire until April 1, 1949.

Acting on the union's petition, Federal Judge Harold R. Medina temporarily restrained the NLRB from continuing the hearing, then denied a permanent injunction. The judge said he could issue an injunction only when the Board acted beyond its jurisdiction, a situation which did not apply here.

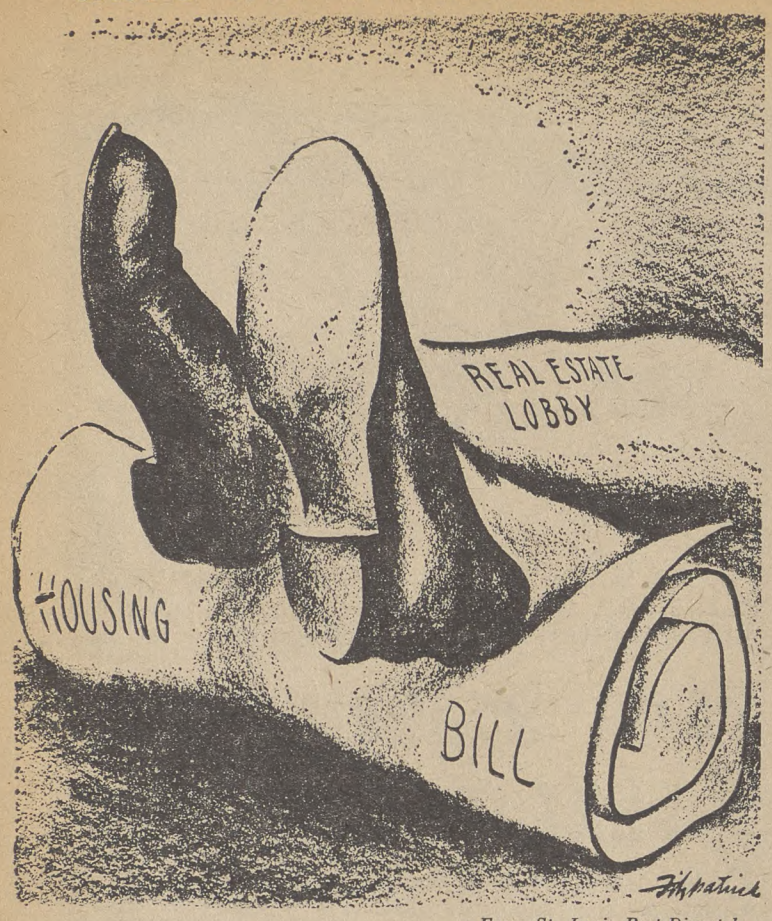
The union is now appealing the case in the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Under Section 103 of the T-H Act, contended the union, the NLRB was prohibited from calling an election "before the end of the contract period or until one year after the effective date of the act, whichever first occurs." Aug. 22, 1948, therefore, would be the earliest date at which an election could be ordered, according to the union.

In Washington, meanwhile, the NLRB handed down three decisions affecting inspectors, foremen and plant watchmen.

The Board ruled that inspectors are eligible for membership in the same union as production and maintenance workers. Foremen and plant watchmen, even though not armed, uniformed or deputized, are not eligible.

WHO'S WHO ON CAPITOL HILL



—From St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Sens. Cain, Bricker, Buck Tried To Raise Rents 15%

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THERE would have been a powerful lot of Cain-raising around the country if Washington's Republican Sen. Harry P. Cain along with John Bricker (R. O.) and C. Douglass Buck (R. Del.) had succeeded in an attempt to raise rents by 15%.

To those familiar with these boys' past performances their scheme, squashed by the full Senate Banking Committee, came as no surprise.

Cain's one-year service in the Upper House has been studded with battles in behalf of the real estate interests.

In a House-Senate Conference Committee last June, drawing up housing legislation, Cain threw his weight in with Buck and Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R., Mich.) to knock out a provision which would divert vital construction materials from bowling alleys, skating rinks and other such non-essentials and channel them into sorely-needed housing for veterans.

(Columnist Drew Pearson last June reported Wolcott as telling the Natl. Association of Home Builders, one of the high-powered real estate lobbies, "It is my purpose to introduce legislation within the next week which will repeal with two minor exceptions, the Veterans Emergency Housing Act of 1946." He kept his promise.)

SO iron-clad is Cain's opposition to rent control, he was not even moved to protest when notice was served that his $175 a month rent in the exclusive Westchester Apartments in Washington would be upped 17½%.

Said he: "I believe in free enterprise even in the matter of rents. If the rent is raised too high, I'll move out."

(The Senator did not comment on how his philosophy would apply to less-moneyed tenants unable to find other quarters for the rent they could afford.)

Not so adamant in their opposition to controls were Westchester tenants Sens. Buck and Alexander Wiley (R. Wis.), both of whom fought rent curbs down the line, but balked when the issue hit closer to home.

Bricker, long a defendant of the property owners, is a director of the Buckeye State Building & Loan Association in his native Columbus, Ohio. The outfit is affiliated with the powerful U. S. Savings & Loan League, which employs Morton Bodfish as its very effective lobbyist in Washington. The League spends about half a million dollars a year for lobbying, according to Drew Pearson.

Pearson once quoted Bodfish as boasting in a confidential bulletin that Sen. Bricker was one of the realtors' friends, pointing out that the Senator had helpfully introduced four bills for them.

BRICKER obtained his directorship of the building & loan association through his friend and consultant John Galbreath, one-time head of the Natl. Association of Real Estate Boards, according to Pearson.

With Galbreath and Austin Wood, a West Virginia radio station and newspaper owner, Bricker has been trying since the fall of 1946 to obtain a license to erect a radio station in Columbus, Ohio.

As familiar as the Senator should be with the real estate lobby through his own and his friend's connections, he once denied indignantly that such a lobby even exists. This was following Pres. Truman's heated denunciation of the real estate lobby last July.

With a voting record 100% wrong, according to the CIO News Voting Record on the first session of the 80th Congress, Bricker fought to keep the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill stymied in committee.

Last December, at a closed meeting of freshman Senators, he wrote off the existence of a housing crisis with the assurance: "The housing shortage should be over by the end of next year."

Of Buck, who—the CIO voting record shows—cast two "right" votes out of a possible 10, little more need be said than that he is related by marriage to the fabulous duPonts.

Hope Seattle Folks Read This Box

Sen. Harry P. Cain (R., Wash.) fought persistently in the Senate Banking and Currency Committee for a provision to decontrol rents in areas where 1% of the dwelling units are vacant.

When the committee rejected the proposal, he fought as valiantly for a 2% vacancy requirement.

But when the committee indicated it might go along with a 2½% figure, the Senator balked and withdrew his proposal altogether. The provision—with a 2% requirement—will be introduced as an amendment from the Senate floor.

Coincidentally, the largest city in the Senator's home state, Seattle, has a 2.2% vacancy rate.

END HOUSE SHORTAGE: COUNT SAME UNIT TWICE

IF you count the same house twice—once when it's begun and once when it's completed—you can arrive at the Natl. Association of Home Builders' impressive figures on the number of housing units completed and started in 1947.

It was the NAHB which complained most bitterly about former National Housing Expediter Wilson Wyatt's computation methods. The home builders have their own way.

In the organization's Feb. 13 newsletter appears the boast that the builders "completed and started" a total of 1,689,100 houses during 1947.

According to the U. S. Housing and Home Finance Administration, 854,600 housing units were started and 834,500 units were completed in 1947. Most of those begun in 1947 were finished during the year. Thus the same unit appears in both tallies.

By adding the two figures together, the NAHB arrived at its "total."

The Newsletter pointed out that this achievement was possible "during our first year of comparative freedom." (This refers to the annihilation of Wyatt's Natl. Housing Authority.)

No mention was made of the fact that some 340,000 of the units completed in 1947 were begun during Wyatt's administration.

The newsletter also neglected to note that the number of units begun was still far below the 1925 level of 937,000 units.

The CIO estimates that 1½ to 1¾ million new houses annually for the next ten years are required to fill current need.

Fishermen Hit Jury Selection

Is a trial jury "representative" of the general public if workers are under-represented on the panel from which the jury is selected?

That question may become a key factor in the government's anti-trust case against the CIO Fishermen & Allied Workers. The union and a dozen of its officers were convicted of alleged price-fixing by a U. S. district court in Los Angeles last July and fined a total of over $12,000.

The union's appeal to the San Francisco Circuit Court of Appeals was to be filed Feb. 23 by attorney Ben Margolis.

It argued that the defendants had not had a fair trial because of the absence of a just proportion of workers on the jury panel; and it said the anti-trust law was never intended to apply to groups of workers.

According to the union, the Los Angeles district court jury list is about 25 years old and has never been brought up to date. The union claims that the Society Blue Book, golf and country club membership lists and the telephone book—in one of which are workers adequately represented—are used as a basis for selection of panels.

Asks Swede To Vie In UAW Bowling

A Swedish bowling team planning to travel 4,900 miles to compete in the ABC Bowling Tournament in Detroit has been urged by Walter P. Reuther, CIO Auto Workers' president, to compete instead in the all-American International Bowling Tournament to be held in Detroit April 3 through May under the sponsorship of the Natl. Committee for Fair Play in Bowling.

Reuther addressed a letter on behalf of the committee to Hans Berger, president of the Swedish Bowling Association and a member of the team, informing him that "according to the regulations of the American Bowling Congress, Negroes and all other non-Caucasians are forbidden to participate in the ABC tournament and are excluded from all other activities in ABC."

Says Congress Aids Anti-Union Slander

Pres. Grant W. Oakes of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers has demanded an opportunity to answer testimony before a House agricultural committee by an industry spokesman who he said had "criticized, impugned and vilified" his union.

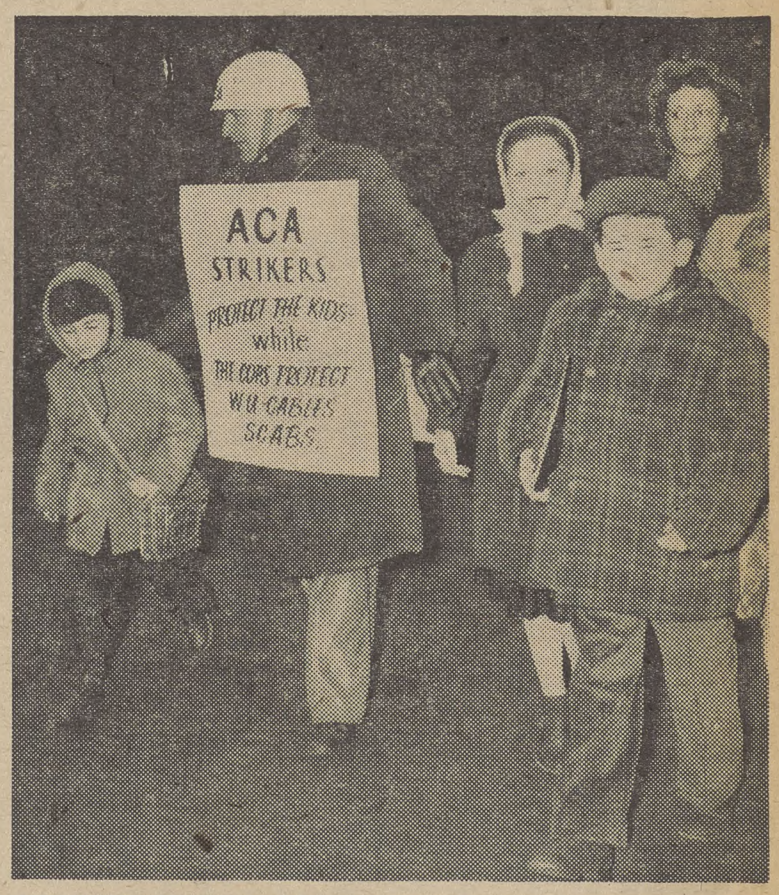
In a wire to the committee and Sec. of Agriculture Clinton Anderson, Oakes criticized the House committee for "allowing industrialists to utter irresponsible statements for public consumption while withholding notice of hearings from the union."

The testimony under question was offered by Pres. John L. McCaffrey of the Intl. Harvester Co., who heaped blame for shortages of farm implements on the union.

Name Calling

Henry A. Wallace has been attacked in many ways. But Robert Lenihan, delegate to the CIO Shipbuilding convention, used a new method.

Lenihan—assailing the Wallace third party, but urging formation of a workers' party now—attacked Wallace as "the son of a publisher."



STRIKER TURNS COP: When New York City police were too busy escorting strike breakers through the picketlines of the CIO Communication Workers at four cable companies in New York City, Chairman Frank Lenahan of Western Union Cables Local 11 guided school children across a busy corner. Mayor O'Dwyer promised indignant parents he would assign four policemen to the intersection and would install traffic lights.

'DON'T HAGGLE ON ERP FUNDS'

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE democratic nations won "a brilliant military victory" in World War II but have failed to insure a stable peace. Adoption of the Marshall Plan is a necessary step towards gaining world peace and security, George Baldanzi, vice-president of the CIO Textile Workers, told a House group last week.

BALDANZI

Appearing as CIO's principal witness at House Foreign Affairs Committee hearings, Baldanzi declared:

"We didn't stop to figure on what to spend when the shooting war was on. We dare not, and must not, haggle or bargain at this point on the exact sums we should appropriate, or whether this or that estimate is correct, in order to positively and firmly assure the people of Europe those conditions which spell the difference between peace or war in the world."

Whatever the cost of the European Recovery Program, the sum is small, compared to that of another conflict, Baldanzi warned the Congressmen.

THE CIO spokesman said that adoption of the Marshall Plan would continue the American wartime objective of building world stability "by creating sound social conditions in those nations in which a peculiarly dangerous form of totalitarianism had become imbedded."

He would not favor the ERP proposals if he says any danger that constant improvements in American living standards would be postponed or hampered, Baldanzi declared. But if "fair and sensible sharing, or indeed any kind of sacrifices become necessary," he predicted the American labor movement will do its part.

Baldanzi's testimony was the first from CIO to the House group. Early in February, Sec.-Treas. James Carey and other union spokesmen appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Baldanzi, like other CIO witnesses appearing before Congress, urged that the aid program be free of political strings, that it be set up to permit labor participation, and that it be accompanied by anti-inflation measures to hold down the living costs of Americans and the long-run cost of the four-year program to help Europe.

ANOTHER CIO witness was Hoyt Haddock of the CIO Maritime Committee, who repeated the protests of other union officials against plans to transfer a large number of U. S. ships—perhaps as many as 500—to European governments.

CIO witnesses have contended that such a move would cripple the American merchant marine, rob thousands of seamen of their jobs, and do little to save the European country any appreciable number of U. S. dollars.

Under the Administration's proposals, the government would have power to sell or charter the ships to foreign countries. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in reporting out the ERP bill for the Senate debate, banned the sale of a projected 200 ships, but gave its o.k. to chartering 300 ships under foreign flags.

Sec. of State Marshall, in a letter to Chairman Weichel (R., Ohio) of the House Merchant Marine Committee, stuck firmly to the proposal that the government be authorized to dispose of 500 vessels.

Secy. of Defense James Forrestal admitted that the sale or transfer of 500 ships would have an impact on our military strength, but he claimed the U. S. stands to gain more than it has to lose by the transfers.

The Natl. Maritime Union and other seafaring groups have argued that the transfers will kill off up to 25,000 jobs directly, and that effects of the loss of American merchant vessels will be keenly felt in the ship repair and supply industries.

SENATE debate on the Marshall Plan is scheduled to start next week. It provides for an independent agency—the Economic Recovery Administration—to handle the program. House hearings on ERP are slated to end within another week.

There were indications that labor's demands for representation in the recovery organization have been heeded both by Congress and the Administration.

Louis Stark, veteran New York Times labor reporter, said that labor recognition in the set-up has been "assured." He declared Sen. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), who will guide the recovery bill through the Senate, has indicated agreement with the proposals and that "no objection will be interposed by the State Dept."

The story added that European labor movements are planning to ask the same status in their own governments' recovery organizations as that to be accorded American workers. That will include representation on advisory committees, and in the actual day-to-day administration of recovery funds and materials.

Importance of labor to the success of the recovery program has also been recognized apparently by two Congressmen who last year helped lead the campaign for the Taft-Hartley Act to weaken American unions.

Rep. Nixon (R., Calif.) and Rep. Kirsten (R., Wis.), who visited Europe recently, said that if Communists obtain control of the labor movements of western Europe, the Marshall Plan is doomed to failure.

NEWS reports from Europe indicated that a conference of unions in the 16 Marshall Plan nations seems in the offing, probably on March 8. The British Trades Union Congress said invitations to the meeting, which will be held in London over a 3-day period, will be endorsed by labor organizations in Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands.

A British union spokesman announced that both CIO and AFL will be invited to attend the conference. Sec.-Treas. Carey and Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross of the CIO are now in Europe.

They conferred a week ago with the British union heads, and then went to Paris for talks with the World Federation of Trade Unions.

NEWS agencies reported a dispatch from Tass, Soviet news agency, that Carey had been invited to Moscow for talks with Vasili Kuznetsov, head of the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions and the Russian member of the World Federation of Trade Unions executive bureau.

The CIO secretary-treasurer was reported from Paris to have requested such discussions, in a series of cables and phone calls to Moscow, in the hope of working out agreement within the WFTU over Marshall Plan problems.

The WFTU bureau meeting has been postponed indefinitely since mid-February, reportedly because the Soviet, French and Italian members had been unable to find a satisfactory time for discussing the CIO's proposals for support of the Marshall Plan.

The British TUC stand indicated no basic conflict between the 16-nation meeting and the WFTU.

"The TUC took an active part two years ago in forming the WFTU," a British labor spokesman said, "and it is distinctly not our policy to do anything that would jeopardize the unity of European labor."

NATURAL GAS GOUGE HIT AT HEARINGS

A PROPOSAL to gouge $50 million out of the pocketbooks of American natural gas consumers was roundly assailed last week by a CIO union representative at Senate Commerce Committee hearings.

The proposal is the Moore-Rizley Bill (HR 4051), already passed by the House and now the subject of Senate investigation. It would soften the government's control over natural gas pipelines and over rates charged by monopoly utility companies.

The complaints came from William Hanscom, Washington representative of the CIO Oil Workers.

Estimates by two-Federal Power Commissioners — Leland Olds and Claude Draper—have predicted that increased consumer costs will reach the $50 million figure if the bill is passed by Congress, Hanscom reminded the committee. Even supporters of the bill have admitted that it will result "in some increase in consumers' bills," he said.

HANSCOM scoffed at theories that raising the price of natural gas and giving looser rein to the big utility companies will result in more output of gas.

"We think that the bottleneck to increased distribution of natural gas is the current notorious shortage of steel pipe," the CIO official said.

And he made clear that raising gas prices will not mysteriously produce steel pipe for the transmission lines.

"Until steel is made available to produce pipe, and until pipelines are laid, rate increases for natural gas will do nothing to increase production," Hanscom predicted.

"The only thing increased rates will do is to increase the costs to American consumers for their consumption of natural gas."

HE SAID that increasing the steel industry's capacity, as recommended by CIO, is the only way to get materials for additional natural gas pipelines.

The Moore-Rizley Bill is an amendment to the Natural Gas Act of 1938, which permits the Federal Power Commission to license monopoly suppliers and to exercise control over rates.

The act, Hanscom said, has saved American gas consumers more than $140 million in rate reductions since 1940, while both the pipeline companies and the gas industry have been allowed a "fair and substantial profit."

Vol. 11 WASHINGTON, D. C., MARCH 1, 1948 82 No. 9

Subject of Controversey: "Rebels" from the South and "damn Yankees" from the North, and politicians and voters from all over the nation were arguing the merits of President Truman's civil rights program as the CIO held a national Civil Rights Conference at Cleveland. The controversy stemmed from the report which W. Richard Carter, CIO Ship union board member, is shown reading at the Cleveland meeting. (See stories on Pages 2 and 3 and editorial comment on Page 4.)

An Example of Brotherhood

By ALLAN L. SWIM

A Negro who formerly worked as a Red Cap presided.

An Episcopalian rector, the grandson of Woodrow Wilson, delivered the invocation.

An Irish Catholic mayor welcomed the delegates.

Principal speakers at the banquet were a white college president and a Negro attorney.

Nearly 300 men and women of many nationalities and creeds worked together for two days without friction resulting from their color or origin.

Thus the CIO Civil Rights Conference at Cleveland, Ohio, Feb. 19-20 provided a working example of the understanding and tolerance which the conference sought to foster.

It was a "work" conference, devoted largely to the development of techniques by which the CIO might do a more effective job in the field of civil liberties.

WILLARD S. Townsend, president of the Transport Service Employes and chairman of the meeting, said:

"America has two approaches to eliminating the inconsistencies and gaps between our stated ideals and our day-by-day actions.

"The first is the official approach through governmental acts and policies.

"The second is through the private acts and attitudes of citizens, religious groups, business groups, voluntary associations of workers and many other types of organizations in our communities.

"The recommendations contained in the Report of the President's Committee are a blueprint for action in both of these fields."

POLITICAL ACTION: Jack Kroll (standing), chairman of CIO-PAC, is shown leading a panel discussion of ways to improve civil liberties through political action. Kroll's panel was one of four at the CIO Civil Rights Conference at Cleveland which discussed methods of implementing the Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. Other panels discussed use of existing CIO facilities, publicity and education, and working with community groups. At the table with Kroll are Michael Mann (L.) and Philip Weightman.

ONE goal of the CIO is to "finish the fight on the civil rights front" within the next 10 years, said Victor Reuther, United Auto Workers education director.

"Our objective in this field is to wipe out the human deficit that threatens to drag us down into moral bankruptcy in the eyes of the world," he said.

"We have closed our eyes and our hearts to the daily injustices done to millions of our fellow Americans. That injustice has piled up bitterness all over the land, has weakened us spiritually and economically. Now history is calling for payment. Our credit is running out.

"Passing laws in Washington is not enough. We have to make civil rights healthy and strong in every factory, every union hall, every town meeting and every courthouse of every city and town. We need action—now."

THOMAS A. Burke, mayor of Cleveland, declared that it is "pretty silly to go out all over the world to fight for democracy and not practice it at home.

"Because of my religious beliefs I'm a member of a minority group in the State of Ohio—yet in Cleveland I'm a member of a majority group.

"All of this talk about minority and majority groups just doesn't make sense!"

CONSIDERABLE progress in the civil rights field can be made through the courts, "but the problem can't be solved there," said Thurgood Marshall, general counsel of National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

"There are those who say you can't legislate against prejudice. But it's not a question of legislating against prejudice. We're not trying to. We're merely saying that governments should recognize fundamental civil rights in their laws.

"The Supreme Court has ruled three times that we can have equality in a segregated system—when all of us know that it just isn't so.

"If we can ever break down the evils of segregation, many other evils will disappear."

Marshall denounced the government's "loyalty order," restrictive property covenants and balloting restrictions which prevent Negroes from voting.

DR. Edward J. Sparlin, president of Roosevelt College at Chicago, declared:

"The best way to secure human rights is to practice human rights."

He then told about the operation of Roosevelt College, which was founded in 1945 and now has 5000 students and a faculty of nearly 300.

"I happen to know that we have more Negro professors than any other college or university—not because we wanted Negroes but because they were best qualified for the jobs that were open."

Keeps Delegates Right on the Beam

One group of delegates tried unsuccessfully to get the Conference to condemn specific acts—such as the Government's effort to deport Secy. Ferdinand Smith of the National Maritime Union.

"We're not going to turn this into a protest meeting or into a criticism session," said Chairman Willard Townsend.

"We came here to work out techniques for implementing the Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights—and we're going to stick to the subject outlined in the conference call."

THE Political Action Panel, headed by Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC chairman, made six recommendations:

1. CIO should join with church and educational groups, liberal public officials and "other progressive elements" in attempting to secure civil rights legislation.

2. CIO members should urge Senators and Congressmen to support Pres. Truman's civil rights message.

3. Local union delegations should visit Senators and Congressmen and "impress upon them the interest of the community in civil rights."

4. "Every union member should be encouraged to discuss civil rights in his union meetings, in the shop, in the neighborhood and in his daily life."

5. Voting records and committee activities of legislators on civil rights legislation should be widely publicized.

6. Broad "public and private discussion of the Bill of Rights and its significance in civil rights" should be encouraged.

THE panel on "How to Utilize Existing CIO Facilities, headed by George Guernsey, assistant CIO education director, suggests:

1. International unions should create machinery "responsible for the carrying out of the civil rights policies of the CIO."

2. Civil rights work among young people should be increased, with special material, such as film strips and comic books, created for this purpose.

3. Discussion of civil rights should be included in programs of all educational conferences and institutes conducted by CIO groups.

4. A bulletin "which records CIO progress in implementation of President Truman's Civil Rights Committee Report" should be issued periodically.

THE Panel on Publicity and Education, headed by this writer, recommended:

1. Stories dealing with civil liberties should be "dramatized and humanized to obtain the most effective reception and to lessen tedious indigestible editorializing and sermonizing."

2. The CIO should make available to labor papers, cartoons, special features, editorial suggestions and pictures dealing with civil liberties, and should provide research material showing the economic cost of discrimination and segregation.

3. CIO members should "impress upon the daily and weekly papers, the wire services and radio stations their responsibility in dealing effectively with civil rights."

4. Educational groups should "integrate civil rights material into classes, institutes, conferences and summer schools programs which are not devoted specifically to minority group problems."

5. Use of movies and strip films should be given greater consideration.

6. School boards and other educational groups should be urged to set up courses in human relations "which would give full recognition to civil liberties."

7. Greater attention should be given to the preparation of posters, leaflets and pamphlets dealing with civil rights.

The panel on Working With Community Groups, headed by Leo Perlis, head of the CIO Community Services Committee, suggested that the CIO help "organize community action" to publicize the Report of the President's Committee, apply its findings to specific local situations and to rally support for state and national measures recommended in the report.

W. Richard Carter, the man on the cover, was a cook and a Baptist clergyman before he was elected president of Bay City, Mich., local of the CIO Marine Shipbuilding Workers. He was only one of 28 Negroes in a membership of 1800.

Carter has served on his international union's executive board since 1942, receiving the highest number of votes at the recent convention. CIO Pres. Philip Murray appointed him a member of CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination in 1946.

WELCOME: Rev. Francis B. Sayre (standing), an Episcopalian rector and grandson of Woodrow Wilson, and Thomas A. Burke (seated), Catholic mayor of Cleveland, welcomed delegates to the two-day Civil Rights Conference. They pointed to the need for fighting race and religious prejudice.

EVEN GOP, PRESS SCREAM AT STEEL PRICE HIKE

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THIS time even the Republican stalwarts and the usually-friendly press couldn't stomach the steel industry's price hike.

The steel companies had committed the unpardonable sin, they said. At a time when some Republicans were pointing to breaks in the commodity market and small declines in commodity prices to support their case against price controls and wages increases—the steel industry snafued the works by announcing a price increase.

It was a $5 to $7 a ton hike on semi-finished products such as plates, sheets and bars, and it would raise prices on these items by $68 million a year.

Compared with increases the industry had taken between October 1947 and January 1948, the recent boost was fairly small. In those three months price boosts had brought the steelmakers an additional $189 million a year, assuming the production of 63 million tons of steel a year.

THE extra $189 million went virtually unnoticed; but the $68 million announced last week ushered in a small earthquake.

As a result

- The Justice Dept. and FBI are investigating.
- The Commerce Dept. is investigating.
- The President's Council of economic Advisers is investigating.
- The Federal Trade Commission is investigating.
- Sen. Robert A. Taft's Joint Economic Committee is investigating.

Rep. Jesse P. Wolcott (R.-Mich.) thought the price boost would be reflected in immediate hikes in the price of consumer goods.
the price boost would be reflected in immediate hikes in the price of Rep. Claude I. Bakewell—a staunch adherent to the Taft-Hartley Act—feared that the boost had given "the labor unions an unanswerable argument for higher wages."

Pennsylvania's Republican Gov. James H. Duff called both the steel price boost and the steelworkers' desire for wage increases "shocking disregard for the national welfare."

THERE were rumbles about a return of excess profit taxes and government control of the steel industry.

Rep. Norris Poulson (R. Cal.) said the steel companies are "asking for an excess profits tax and price controls, whether they realize it or not."

Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.), longtime foe of monopoly, urged adoption of an excess profits tax and appropriation of funds to permit the Federal Tax Commis to publicize the methods used by big business to drive up prices and "exploit the public." The steel industry, he said, was virtually inviting Congress to declare it a public utility.

The possibility that the price rise would create sentiment for government control of the industry frightened the Scripps-Howard Newspaper chain.

"We frankly fear," it said editorially, "that among the patterns it (the industry) has been creating there may develop one for government operation or control which would jeopardize our free economic system."

In the midst of the hub-bub, Irving S. Olds, chairman of the board of U. S. Steel, made a speech to some Yale alumni about inflation. His suggested cure: Raise prices on a number of commodities without increasing the money supply. Then buyers will have less money to buy other needed goods; consequently the prices of these goods will decline, thus stabilizing the price structure.

Politics and Civil Rights

Expect Senate Units To OK Anti-Poll Tax Bill

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

A LATE-WINTER thaw appears to be developing on the months-long freeze that has halted all action on important civil rights legislation.

- The anti-poll tax bill, passed in the House last July, seemed due for fast committee action in the Senate—with a chance that it may reach the floor in the next two weeks.
- Anti-lynching legislation, long demanded by liberals in North and South alike, received the green light from a House Judiciary subcommittee. There are indications that the GOP will push passage of the measure in the House.

A third civil rights measure (CIO has demanded action on all three) is making slower progress. The anti-discrimination bill, which would establish a national Fair Employment Practices Committee to crack down on bias, has been approved by the Senate Labor Committee, but its future remains uncertain.

The Southern bloc met the growing threat of action to buttress basic civil rights with sound and fury, political threats and new talk about "state rights."

Typical of the fury was a long speech delivered in the House by Rep. Tom Murray (D. Tenn.).

Referring to the widely acclaimed Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights (of which CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey was a leading member), the Tennessee Congressman screamed:

"I only wish that every white Southerner could read the 175-page report of this outrageous attack upon conditions in the South. If they could, it would make their blood boil in indignation and resentment. . . ."

(The Report called for passage of civil rights legislation and warned that racial discrimination is a danger to American democracy and to the country's prestige abroad.)

THE poll tax bloc, however, seems faced with a strange "coalition" of liberal Northern Democrats—who have long called for new civil rights laws—and Northern Republicans, who don't mind slipping an occasional pin into the Democratic donkey.

Effects of the joint action were indicated in the Senate's subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, where a unanimous vote in favor of the anti-poll tax bill was expected as this paper went to press. Members of the subcommittee are liberal Sen. Myers (D. Pa.) and two Republicans not known for their liberalism—Jenner (Ind.) and Bricker (Ohio).

Their report will go to the full Senate Committee on Rules, whose GOP leadership presently plans to act on the bill next week.

Officials of the Natl. Committee to Abolish the Poll Tax hope the bill will come up for Senate debate and vote within the next six weeks, before any large number of Senators leave the city on political junketing. A cloture rule to cut off debate—which requires a two-thirds vote—will probably be needed to cut off a Southerners' filibuster.

The bill now in committee is HR 29, introduced last year by Rep. Bender (R. Ohio) and passed in the House in July. It forbids the collection of poll taxes as a basis for voting in federal elections and primaries in the seven Southern States where poll taxes now keep down the number of voters and bar millions of low-income families from using their ballots.

BENDER, speaking at a dinner of the anti-poll tax committee in Washington last week, pointed out that the tax has been outlawed in every State where that could be done by legislative action.

"In the remaining States," he pointed out, "the poll tax is so embedded in the State constitutions that the disfranchised are powerless to enfranchise themselves."

THE anti-lynching bill's approval in the House Judiciary sub-committee carried by a 4-2 vote. The bill, introduced by Rep. Case (R. N.J.), is reported to have the support of Speaker of the House Joe Martin (R. Mass.).

Washington observers expect that the GOP leadership—on the make to pick up stray votes throughout the country—can easily push the bill through the House—though this bill too will face the opposition of a Southern filibuster when and if it reaches the Senate.

Reacting bitterly to the threat of civil rights legislation and to Pres Truman's recent call for such action, Sen. McClellan (D. Ark.) urged the Democrats to get another Presidential candidate.

And Rep. Clare Hoffmann (R. Mich.), one of the oldest and strongest, if not the smartest, foe of labor and the New Deal, suggested that the GOP make a "deal" with the Southern Democrat poll-taxers. In return for Southern Democrat support of a Republican presidential candidate, Hoffman said perhaps Republicans could be induced to "kill this program of civil rights."

Deals have happened before in Washington.

'Rights' Score

Here's what key civil rights bills provide, and where they stand in Congress:

- Anti-polltax bill (HR 29), to kill voting tax in seven Southern states. Passed by House last year; due soon to get Senate Committee approval.
- Anti-lynch bill (HR 3488), makes lynching a federal crime. Approved by House judiciary sub-committee.
- FEPC anti-bias bill (S. 984), bars discrimination in jobs. Approved by Senate Labor Committee but may be pigeon-holed. No action in House as yet.

Extend Rent Curb 30 Days

TO Sen. Harry P. Cain (R. Wash.) the rent control questions sums up something like this:

There is a severe housing shortage—but there isn't a housing shortage. We need rent controls—but de don't need rent controls, because rent controls are the cause of the housing shortage (which doesn't exist) in the first place, and the sooner controls are dumped, the sooner the illusion of a shortage will disappear.

This was the gist of the Senator's three-hour introduction of the Banking Committee's rent bill to the Senate last week.

The bill Sen. Cain was unhappily presenting was passed by voice vote in the Upper House, succumbing to only one weakening amendment, which eliminated criminal penalties for landlord violators of the Act.

The following day the Senate approved a 30-day extension of the 1947 Rent Law, previously passed by the House. Thus the Senate's long-range bill providing controls until April 30, 1949, traveled on to Republican Rep. Jesse P. Wolcott's House Banking Committee, which now will have ample time to scrutinize it.

STEEL STEALS A MARCH

It reminded us of a three-act play — with the last act missing.

Act No. 1 got under way when the commodity market took a nose-dive and the radio and newspaper "experts" decided to declare a field day.

"This is it," we were told. "The old law of supply and demand has gone to work—just like we said it would. This is the beginning of a downward trend in prices."

Then the expected happened just as expected. The price break, the public was told, meant that the trade unions would no longer have reason to ask for wage increases.

Republican politicos began licking their chops. They had been vindicated, hadn't they? Events were beginning to prove that the NAM was right when it claimed everything would soon be lovely if OPA was killed.

The tempo of Act 1 began slowing down near the end, when some prices started going back up and the public began realizing that the overall cost of living had been affected only slightly.

Act No. 2, which hadn't been billed in advance, opened with a bang.

The steel industry suddenly upped prices again!

Those who thought they'd been running the show were flabbergasted. They started screaming, "You can't do this to us." They—along with President Truman and others—decided it was time to call the steel industry on the carpet and ask, "How come?"

Act 3 hasn't really begun yet—but we'll wager it will be a dandy and that the "experts" will come up with a perfectly simple explanation: "Organized labor was responsible for it all. Didn't it say it was going to ask for substantial wage increases?"

It, of course, will be ham acting at its worst, so don't be surprised if the public, burdened with a new price increase, seems inclined to boo instead of applaud. ★ ★ ★

The New Kind Of Democracy

The new type of "democratic action" that is wiping out "capitalistic imperialism" in Eastern Europe makes us remember a little guy named Adolf who had a silly mustache and a desire for world conquest.

Under this new "democratic action" technique you simply substitute police powers for the ballot and place your political opponents under arrest.

Of course, you never do such a thing without first cooking up some propaganda that your opponents are plotting to overthrow the government.

Oh, no! We're not talking about Communism. We're referring to Russian democracy.

The people in Czechoslovakia know what we mean.

E. & P. Has Our Thanks

Editor and Publisher, often regarded as the "Bible" of the newspaper publishing business, said that "In this job the CIO deserves the support and assistance of individual newspapers and newspaper groups which have as much at stake in the issue as the labor press."

E. & P. was referring to CIO efforts to prove that Congress cannot gag the CIO News and other union publications.

Obviously E. & P. realized that freedom of the press means freedom of the entire press.

Not A North-South Squabble

Civil Liberties Campaign Shouldn't Create A Regional Battle

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE controversy over President Truman's civil rights program for all Americans should not be permitted to degenerate into another struggle between the "damn Yankees" of the North and the "rebels" of the South.

It could become just that unless our politicians and writers start shedding more light and less heat on the subject.

Our contribution, suh, will be an attempt to explain why the folks down in Dixie start squealing like stuck pigs when No'theners try to impose some more "outside interference" on them.

They're just plain opposed to too much "help" from the outside, and not entirely without justification.

MUCH of the industry in the South has been owned or controlled for years by Northern interests, which adopted the Southern policy of paying substandard wages and shipped their profits back to the North and East.

The region has long been burdened by the Southern freight rate differential, which gives the North and East a real advantage in the field of commerce.

It has been criticized often and ridiculed occasionally by Northern newspapers which write reams about bad conditions and bad habits in the South but ignore the filthy slums and protective property covenants of Northern cities.

It can't understand why there should be such a furor for federal laws to handle unorganized mobs which infrequently lynch Negroes without there being a hue and cry for similar laws to handle organized Northern mobs which cut down members of minority groups with sub-machine guns.

Any CIO representative who has attempted to set up unions below the Mason-Dixon Line can give you a good slant on abroagation of civil rights.

He'll tell you that the Northern owner of Southern plants will exploit race and religious prejudice just as quickly and as cleverly as the native Southern industrialist.

He can cite case after case involving Northerners who established plants in the South in an effort to get away from unions which demanded decent pay and equal treatment for all employes.

He can tell you, too, that it hurts no more to be beaten up in Gadsden, Ala., than in Akron, Ohio.

THIS is an effort to explain—not excuse—some of the Southern attitudes regarding civil liberties.

They must be understood and appreciated—not ridiculed—if we are to make nation-wide progress in the civil rights field.

We should regard a race riot as a damnable thing—whether it occurs in Detroit, Mich., or Columbia, Tenn.

We should recognize the evils of segregation wherever they exist—in Birmingham or Chicago, on street cars or in residential districts.

We should not excuse one region because its civil rights violations are of one type and condemn another region because its violations are of another and perhaps more flagrant type. The current furor caused by politicians fighting the President's civil rights program is, of course, inexcusable.

PAYMENT of poll taxes should not be spoken of merely as a device for disfranchizing Negroes. It should be known for what it really is—a device used to control elections.

Political machines such as the one run by "Boss" Ed Crump in Memphis want Negroes to vote as long as they vote "right" and will pay their poll taxes to get them to do so.

All voting restrictions that can be used to manipulate or influence elections should be removed.

The nation's capital should set the example by giving its residents (you can hardly call them citizens) the right to vote.

IT is impossible to legislate prejudice out of existence—but legislation can eliminate bad practices that result from prejudice.

So the job of those who seek to expand our civil liberties and make them secure is not one of merely designing the right kind of laws.

Education—a lot of it, and the right kind—is needed.

Understanding and appreciation of our problem and the other fellow's viewpoint also is needed.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP BY YOMEN

"Let's classify our voting records as top secret so they can't be publicized anywhere."

Knight To Go To CTAL Meet

CIO will be represented when the Latin American Federation of Labor (CTAL) holds its third convention in Mexico City starting March 22.

O. A. Knight, a CIO vice-president and head of the Oil Workers International Union, will address the meeting and bring fraternal greetings from workers in the U. S. to those south of the Rio Grande.

Both Knight and OWIU Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick have been named by their union to attend a pan-American confab of oil unions to be held in Mexico City in connection with the CTAL meeting.

CTAL Pres. Lombardo Toledano said the convention had originally been scheduled for Santiago, Chile, but the "mounting anti-labor campaign" conducted by Chilean President Gonzalez Videla had forced a change in plans.

Toledano announced that Louis Saillant, secretary general of the World Federation of Trade Unions, will also attend. Toledano represents Latin America on the WFTU executive bureau.

CIO's Latin-American Affairs Committee is headed by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Knight has represented the organization at a number of previous meetings in Mexico and Central America.

Use T-H Against Hiring Hall

The CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen will fight "till hell freezes over" to maintain their San Francisco hiring hall.

That was Intl. ILWU Pres. Harry Bridges' answer to the Waterfront Employers Association's recent request for a meeting with the union to discuss possible changes in the 14-year old hiring hall provision.

Bridges said the union may be willing to make some concessions to conform to the Taft-Hartley Act, but none weakening union control of work regulations.

They Tell Editors What They Think

THERE is one irate gentleman out on the West Coast who obviously holds Henry Wallace in high regard but feels quite differently about the editor of the CIO News.

He said so—pointedly and bluntly—in a recent letter to the editor.

It was that "third party" cartoon that we ran recently which had him in a lather.

That diabolical drawing, said he, "left a very unpleasant odor here."

It was so bad, he continued, that "one angry member confiscated" a bundle of CIO Newses "and filed them away next to the commode . . .

In the same mail with several laudatory letters was a scorcher which declared the CIO position on the third party convinced him the "CIO leadership is a fake similar to the AFL."

Then he really got down to business:

"People hold you in such contempt that any move you recommend would surely lose.

"Next election you'll see how much influence you have for the common man."

After more of the same he concluded:

"For my part, I'm sick and tired of hearing you jackasses bray!"

WE must be just plain stupid, because nothing but stupidity could make us behave like we do, said a fellow from out in Ohio.

Declaring that he was pretty fed up with us, he wrote:

"You have been snorting and 'yapping' re 'fat profits' and a 'lousy deal,' but largely because of your own shortcomings.

"And, of course, you want some of that 'gravy' without possessing the mental ability to produce exact blueprints and properly run the business end of a commercial factory enterprise in order to earn some of the fat.

"The loudest noise you made in a recent issue was the fact that you did no 'yapping' about Henry (Henry the Wall.)"

FROM Arkansas came a communication from a farmer who seems a bit fed up with the whole stupid mess, including, of course, our position on matters political.

"We can and we must take over the government," said he. "This is the only way to save it.

"Let our slogan be, 'Scare hell out of them by voting for Wallace.'

"Quit begging crumbs from the rich man's table and take your message to the farmers—and you can win the whole loaf."

SOMEBODY has been giving us some lousy advice—or something, said the letter of a disgruntled Philadelphia reader.

"Labor leaders appear to be guided to too great a degree by a fear of their members who take suggestions from the experience of labor in the USSR and those who take dictation from the Vatican," he said.

An Oklahoman opined that God should have pity on any "sorrowful creature" who dares to ignore the third party movement.

WE'RE inclined to believe no editor could be all of the things he's accused of being because—

Some letters said we were "tools of Wall Street," "damned old reactionaries just like Bilbo," "a Chicago Tribune in sheep's clothing"—

And others said we were "tools of Moscow," Red radicals who ought to go back to Russia," "underminers of the public's faith in constitutional government"—

And still others said we were a pretty nice guy.

CIO Moves Closer To Court Test Of T-H's Anti-Freedom Section

SUIT to establish the unconstitutionality of all the prohibitions on political expenditures by unions imposed by Section 304 of the Taft-Hartley Act has been filed in U. S. District Court by Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey and the CIO Auto Workers.

The UAW complaint seeks a declaratory judgment that Section 304 is unconstitutional and asks an injunction against its enforcement by the Attorney General because of the censorship imposed by its prohibitions on free speech, press, assembly and petition by unions in connection with federal elections. These prohibitions, it is charged, prevent free elections, deprive union members of the equal protection of the laws and constitute a real danger to the democratic institutions of the United States.

THE CIO and Pres. Philip Murray have been indicted by a Federal Grand Jury on charges he violated the T-H law when he ordered the CIO News to carry an indorsement of a Baltimore Congressional candidate and directed that the News, printed in Washington, D. C., be distributed in Baltimore.

A hearing will be held this Friday on a motion to quash the indictment. Murray has pleaded innocent.

The UAW complaint charges that "Section 304 unlawfully attempts to immunize the said Taft-Hartley Act from repeal by a subsequent Congress by restricting the rights of these plaintiffs and other labor organizations and their members freely to exercise their rights to secure the election of a Congress composed of members who would repeal that law."

THE complaint was filed on behalf of Reuther, Mazey and the UAW by Irving J. Levy, UAW general counsel, and Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., both of Washington, D. C.

The Court is asked to issue an injunction to prevent Attorney General Tom C. Clark from enforcing Section 304 against UAW-CIO officers or local unions "because of any expenditure which they may make in the forthcoming elections or conventions."

The complaint charges that Attorney General Clark has threatened to prosecute Reuther and other officers of the UAW-CIO. Reuther indorsed a candidate in a Pennsylvania congressional election.

Reuther stated that this suit will provide an opportunity to secure a decision from the Supreme Court on the constitutionality of Section 304 before it adjourns and in time for the 1948 election campaign.

The case will be first heard by a special three-judge court with a direct appeal by either side to the Supreme Court. Such an appeal has precedence over other cases.

The 'New' Patriotism

My employer, right or wrong: You may think you owe allegiance only to the flag and your country. You're wrong. Detroit's station WJR has added something new.

It's all neatly packaged in "An American's Pledge of Loyalty," which is read regularly over the station. To make sure you don't miss it, WJR has turned it out in a patriotic red, white and blue leaflet.

"I pledge devotion to God and the brotherhood His word proclaims; I offer loyalty to the United Nations and the world order it maintains; I vow to defend America and the opportunities it contains; I promise to give my best to American Industry and the homes it sustains." (From Ford Facts, UAW-CIO Local 600).

'A Sick Man'

Statement by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in Labor Reports:

"The man who nourishes in his heart prejudice against his fellowmen because of differences in race, color or creed, is a really sick man, made so by his own distorted thinking. The man who knowingly harbors such prejudices is an infected man. Either requires treatment administered with varying degrees of the patience that must attend all educational processes.

"The harboring of prejudice never fails to react adversely on the one who indulges in it. At the very least he becomes steadily a more unhappy man. And very often, the outraged principles of his fellowmen overflow into retributive action against him.

"Prejudice must go. There is simply no room for it in a decent world."

The Cincinnati Plan:

AFTER PAC WINS—U. S. WINS

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

Any City Can Do It

Herewith we present an article to show what political action by labor can accomplish for your community.

The City of Cincinnati is chosen as typical of such results—but also because it is the stamping ground of Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.)—and of Jack Kroll, PAC director!

CINCINNATI is the Queen City of the Mid-West.

Cincinnati is the home area of Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.).

Cincinnati is the home of CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll.

And, Cincinnati provides a perfect example of what PAC-indorsed candidates can accomplish for all the people after being elected to office.

For, Cincinnati is the city where a Good Government group—the City Charter Committee—last fall elected a majority of the City Council and has embarked on a broad program for civic improvement.

The new Council majority had the full backing of PAC, of the AFL, of the many civil groups who subscribe to the principles of the Charter. The five men who comprise the majority of the City Council are:

Albert D. Cash, who was chosen Mayor.

Edward N. Waldvogel, Vice-Mayor.

Rollin H. Everett, CIO member, who was named president pro tem of the Council.

Charles P. Taft, brother of Sen. Taft.

Harry D. Proctor, AFL member.

The four other Council members are Republicans.

WHEN you consider the Cincinnati Story, you must study three aspects. They are:

1. What Charter plans for its City.
2. Just what Charter is.
3. How the ticket was elected.

Keystone of Charter's platform is the Master Plan—initiated by Charter when it was a minority in the previous City Council. (Cash, Everett and Waldvogel served then). The platform envisions clearing out slums and rebuilding new industries and moderate-rate housing; effective flood control; modern express ways for truck and auto traffic; complete smoke control (the Charter minority forced a smoke control measure through the council last term); promotion of sound labor relations at City Hall; increased police efficiency; broader representation on public boards; a first-rate airport system; sewage disposal plants; improved recreation facilities; a fair share of state tax funds for Ohio cities.

When you arrive by train in Cincinnati, you are filled with awe by the city's amazing Union Terminal. The murals in that station give you an insight into Cincinnati's history. But, in the areas down by the river, there are still many slums.

THE day this writer visited the office of Mayor Cash, the executive had just finished meeting with a group of civic and business leaders. His eyes lit up as he retold what he had said to the conference. He pleaded with them to help him set up a $500,000 risk corporation, which would make it possible to secure loans and carry out housing developments totalling $5,000,000.

At the conference were men from life insurance outfits, from steel companies, realtors, hotels, labor, stores, etc. Most expressed a determination to see that the money was raised. For instance, one family pledged $50,000.

Cash explained that it would require building 6,000 housing units a year for 20 years to replace the present large number of obsolete, sub-standard homes. He said he had found that what the average family wanted was a small, modest home, not an apartment.

Incidentally, Charter is one of the few Good Government movements (skeptics and scoffers call them "Goo, Goos") that have returned to power after losing control of a city government. It is definitely not called "Goo Goo."

In 1924, Americans were "Keeping Cool With Cal." French troops were evacuating the Ruhr. Nikolai Lenin died. The Dawes Reparation Plan was agreed to by the Allies and Germans. Clarence Darrow won life terms for Loeb and Leopold, murderers of little Bobbie Franks. The Prince of Wales (now the Duke of Windsor) toured the U. S., started a fad for turned-down hat brims. Nellie Taylor Ross of Wyoming, was first woman ever to be elected a U. S. governor; Ma Ferguson of Texas, followed her by a month. This writer was graduated from high school.

And, in 1924, Cincinnati's Charter movement began.

YOU hear a lot about Charter throughout Cincinnati — at the station, in the lobbies of the Gibson or Netherlands Plaza, on street cars. And you really learn a lot about it when you sit down across the desk from Executive Director Forest Frank in Charter's Carew Tower office.

He recalls the history of Charter something like this:

Before 1924, Cincinnati and Hamilton County had 683 precincts and 6,800 jobs to be filled —a rich political plum of 10 jobs to every precinct. That block of votes controlled primary elections for more than 40 years.

In 1923, political conditions had become intolerable.

A feeling of revulsion swept the city and a new cry arose: "Vote for Men and Not Birds!" The cry was raised by the Birdless Ballot League—which wanted to eliminate the political party symbols, eagle and rooster, from municipal ballots.

THE Birdless were ridiculed by the political bosses, but to their cause rallied many a group which previously had all been for civic betterment, but which had failed to coalesce. The coalition drafted a charter amendment which would eliminate the office of elected mayor and the council of 32 members and substitute a council of nine elected by proportional representation and a city manager elected by the council.

The Republican organization fought the proposal. Since it was a national election year, it was feared that the GOP opposition might have a bad effect on the Charter drive, for the area was predominantly Republican.

But, when the ballots were counted it was 95,000 for Calvin Coolidge; 26,000 for Democrat John Davis; 31,000 for Robert M. LaFollete and 92,511 "yes" to 41,105 "no" on the Charter. A victory dinner was organized. At that affair, the City Charter Committee was formally set up.

For five straight elections, Charter-indorsed candidates won a majority; then came the lean years and four Republicans and an independent took over. Last fall reversed the situation.

THREE times, the machine politicians have tried to throw out PR, because the machine, even when it elected a majority, couldn't get the full control it wanted. All three attempts failed—in 1936, in 1939 and last fall, when PR was retained by a vote of 82,017 to 74,415.

Last fall's election showed some interesting statistics.

(Under PR, suppose there are five jobs to be filled. As many candidates as have qualified can run. The voter votes for five—or less—but votes for them in the order of his preference. John Jones is his No. 1 choice; Sam Brown No. 2, etc. The ballots are counted in the order of preference. A quota—some set percentage of the valid ballots cast, such as 16,218 last Fall—is set. As soon as John Jones gets that quota—if he is lucky—then your second choices are handed over to Sam Brown, and so on down the line. Sometimes the last place choices actually elect a candidate.)

Last fall, the Charter candidates received a total of 77,522 first choice votes to 77,527 for the Republican candidates — an amazing difference of only five votes in a normally Republican city!

Highest first choice vote was cast for the then mayor, Carl W. Rich—23,976. Of the Charter victors, Cash had 15,918; Taft, 14,842; Everett, 11,289 Proctor, 10,715, and Waldvogel, 10,651.

There is hardly a chance that the Charter Five, in their two-year term, will have an opportunity of selecting a City Manager, since the incumbent, W. R. Kellogg looks like he's going to stay a long time (a Cincinnati city manager stays in until he dies, resigns or is removed for some specified dereliction of duty.)

OH, yes, Jack Kroll has been a member of the Charter board since 1935.

Rollin Everett, a veteran newspaperman, went into the labor movement and also into politics with his eyes wide open.

Take a typical Wednesday for Everett (the council meets on Wednesday.)

He gets up at about 7 a.m., at 8:30 he reaches the office of the CIO Sun—of which he is editor—at 15th E. 8th St. Maybe he hadn't got home the night before until nearly midnight after attending a number of meetings.

He opens his mail. His phone starts ringing—and keeps it up constantly. Some of the calls are union business, most are civic problems. Somebody wants a traffic sign moved. (Everett and his colleagues are lucky; they couldn't fix a traffic ticket even if they wanted to; it just can't be done except by a judge.)

Some are screwball calls. But many are heartrending: someone is being evicted; someone is accusing a policeman of brutality; some want relief. He must in all cases take down notes and prepare to look into the grievance.

"Whenever any citizen, whatever his social or economic level, whatever his race or religion, complains to me he shall have a hearing."

Between calls, he talks over the Sun's problems with his pretty blonde assistant, Nancy Lay.

AT 12:30, the Charter majority meets for its weekly luncheon session. There, they go over the calendar for the afternoon's lunch meeting; they plan their program, decide what they will support as a bloc (no one is bound by any partisan rule to vote together, only by moral ties.)

On a typical Wednesday recently, the calendar for the day included items from the Mayor, from the city manager, from the clerk of council, from the City Planning Commission, from the city treasurer, from the finance committee, from the highways committee, from the law committee, from the public utilities committee, from the sewers committee (Proctor is its chairman), from the traffic committee, etc.

The council meets for more than two ho longer.

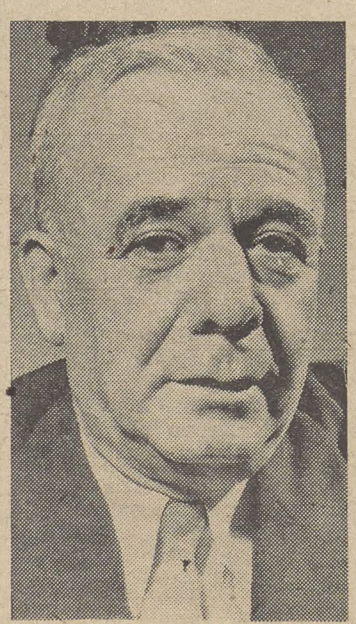
Rollin Everett

When you pay a visit to 3230 Hardisty ave., Cincinnati, you are in for a good time. For that is the home of Rollin, Eleanor, Peggy, Polly, Patty and Mike Everett—and of Rollin's mother, too. Rollin learned politics in as good a laboratory as you could find. That was when he was a reporter on the Kansas City Star and saw Boss Pendergast in full sway. He was disgusted with machine politics and when he moved to Cincinnati in 1934, he began to take an active interest in Charter and PR. He served the Cincinnati Post for 10 years as reporter, City Hall correspondent and assistant city editor before taking over editorship of the CIO Sun. He's one of the founders of the CIO Cincinnati Newspaper Guild, served it twice as president. He has carried on a CIO radio program—"The Other Side of the News." In 1946, though he was in the minority, he argued city Council into passing a resolution calling for continuance of OPA. He's serving his second Council term.



JACK KROLL

Albert D. Cash

Husky Albert D. Cash is serving his sixth term in Cincinnati's council . . . his favorite projects: urban redevelopment, slum clearance, improved employer - employes relationships, fair gas and electrical rates, better transportation facilities, fairer representation for his city in the State Legislature . . . he's a lawyer, member of the firm of Dolle, O'Donnell and Cash . . . his dad, Dennis F. Cash, was close to Cincinnati's famed reform mayor, Henry T. Hunt, served him as safety director . . . the new mayor is a Democrat, but feels national parties should not interfere with administration of purely local affairs . . . has been active in Charter many years . . . His sister, Mrs. Joseph Lambert, managed his last three campaigns . . . while she and Mrs. Cash were campaigning, her five children and the five Cash kids were in the care of another sister, Miss Marty Cash . . . the mayor's first wife, Mrs. Esther Boehlein Cash, died in 1940 . . . early last year, Cash married Mrs. Elizabeth Cassatt Reid, widow of Dr. Mont R. Reid and the only woman ever elected to City Council under PR.

Charles P. Taft

Charles P. Taft is the perfect personification of the phrase "civic leader." He is the first lay president of the Federal Council of Churches —and yet he finds time to serve in Cincinnati's City Council.

Though he was the son of the former Pres. Taft, he entered World War I as a buck private, rose to a first lieutenancy. In World War II, he went to Washington, at Pres. Roosevelt's request, as Council Pres. pro tem Rollin Everett, CIO member. Standing is Charles P. Taft. The Charter group organized the council by a 5-4 vote. The matter being studied is a blueprint of the Cincinnati Master Plan for an express highway system.

Maybe it last two hours. In the afternoon, he has meetings of other committees: Council Planning Committee (he's chairman); traffic, highways, etc. Lots of hearings are held.

As to engagements, a week or so ago, on Tuesday, he attended a Civic Club luncheon; in the evening, he had three meetings, including the Old Ball Players. On Wednesday at noon, a movie on the Expressways project; at night, the State Farm Bureau Co-ops. On Thursday, a PAC luncheon; at night, a PTA meeting at Central Vocational High; Friday night he miraculously was able to spend at home. On Saturday, he had two political dances.

Mrs. Everett goes to many of the meetings with Rollin. She can do that because Everett's well-informed and vivacious mother is only too glad to be the "sitter"—she just can't decide which kid she likes best; "all of them, I guess," she says.

CIO and AFL campaigned hard last fall. They had different organizations, but both urged their members to vote both for Everett and Proctor.

An intensive drive was staged in wards, precincts, blocks, at meetings, by pamphlets, by word of mouth, on the radio, by buttonholing.

One campaigner was 75 years old, a resident of a home for the aged. A campaigner for Everett was legless. A noted pianist became a doorbell ringer.

Since there was also a statewide referendum on a soldiers' bonus, veterans took an active part in both that campaign and for Charter (there are thousands of vets in the city who lack adequate housing.)

The fight by Cash and Everett for an anti-smoke ordinance was remembered by the voters, and that provided more volunteers. Everett spoke before every CIO union local at least once; sometimes he made as high as seven or eight speeches a day.

Many Cincinnatians recalled that years back Cincinnati had been purposely given the reputation of being a low-wage town. Signs had been erected in Kentucky saying "Come to Cincinnati, plenty of jobs.' The heavy influx of labor in those days was designed to drive out unions.

But, in 1887, Cincinnati was one of the forerunners in the formation of the AFL. At that

QUEEN CITY

CINCINNATI has had a colorful history—both in the usual sense and politically.

Its site was the center of the mound-builders' civilization. It has had perhaps the most successful "Good Government" movement in the history of America.

Immigrants from Kentucky and New Jersey arrived early. A town was laid out in 1789 around Fort Washington. The settlers decided to call it Losantville (which is a hybrid word signifying "City Opposite the Mouth of the Licking", or so the Encyclopedia Britannica says).

In 1790, the town was renamed in honor of Gen. St. Clair, governor of the Northwest Territory, who was president of the Pennsylvania Society of Cincinnati.

The Indians didn't like the idea of the settlement and a warpath was beaten often to Cincinnati's door. In 1791, Gen. Anthony Wayne won the Battle of Fallen Timbers at Maumee Rapids. That brought peace with the Indians.

The immortal Harriet Beecher Stowe lived in the Queen City from 1832 to 1850 and there she gathered much of the material for Uncle Tom's Cabin.

The city's history is studded with floods which turn the lovely Ohio into a virago. In 1937, the worst of all was reached.

As to political history, perhaps the first real significant move was in 1884, when the "Cincinnati Riots" occurred. Mobs, infuriated by alleged laxity in law enforcement, stormed the city jail, seeking prisoners they claimed had been held under mild manslaughter charges but who, in actuality, were murderers.

The prisoners had been removed, so the mob burned the jail. The militia was called and 45 persons were killed and 148 wounded before peace was restored. How the city enacted its present type of government is told elsewhere on this page.

The city has a Catholic archbishopric; Protestant Episcopal and Methodist bishoprics; Cincinnati's Hebrew Union College is considered America's most important rabbinical school.

Under the educational system it is possible to go, by city expense, all the way from kindergarten through the graduate schools of the University of Cincinnati (municipally owned).

The City also founded the "cooperative" system of supplementing college education by practical work in shops and manufacturing establishments.

Cincinnati is also home of the Cincinnati Reds of the National Baseball League. The Reds won the N. L. pennant and the World Series in 1919 and 1940 and won the pennant but not the Series in 1939. Last year, the Reds finished fifth.

Railroad City

Cincinnati is the only city in America that owns a railroad. The line is the Cincinnati Southern (336 miles) which runs to Chattanooga, Tenn., carrying passengers and freight. The Cincinnati Southern is leased by the Cincinnati, New Orleans, Texas & Pacific, which is in turn a part of the Southern Railway System.

IT'S IN THE FAMILY: Cincinnati City Councilman Rollin Everett finds a little time off from his duties as a city official and as editor of the CIO Sun to read the news to his attractive family. The children are (left to right): Peggy, 7, who has the same birthday as Dad; Patty, 12; Mike, 9, and Polly, 6, who came within a few days of also having Dad's birthday. Mrs. Eleanor Everett knits a sweater for one of the kids.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

Robert W. Starnes, CIO Director, Mississippi, reports that the CIO Textile Workers won its first cotton mill collective bargaining election in Mississippi at the Stonewall Mills in Stonewall. The results of the NLRB election were 261 for TWUA, 109 for AFL and 16 void or challenged.

United Shoe Workers of America report three victories in NLRB elections as follows: Myrna Shoe Co., Manchester, N. H., USWA 162, no union 145; component parts plant, International Shoe Plant, Bald Knob, Ark., USWA 163, no union 65, AFL 1. Somersworth Shoe Co., Somersworth, N. H., USWA 253, no union 28. Walter Harris, Arkansas CIO director, was in charge at Bald Knob; USWA Director George Ficteau at Somersworth.

Regional Director Robert J. Davidson, Cincinnati, Ohio, advises that the United Paper Workers won an election at the Shellmar plant, Mt. Vernon, Ohio; UPA 71, against 4.

Regional Director Irwin L. DeShetler, Los Angeles, Calif., reports that results in an election held without use of the NLRB, at Western Nipple Mfg. Co., Los Angeles, Calif., were CIO Steelworkers 39, against 18. Balt Yanez, Local 1981 organizer, was in charge and Ben Young are to be credited with signing up most of the workers in the union.

Dir. of Org. George Brown, Portland, Ore., reports the following union shop elections in Springfield, Ore.: E. P. Boyer Lumber & Coal Co., 16 for, 6 against; Don Bar Lumber Co., 58 for, 1 against; Blue River Lumber Co., 27 for, 2 against; J. P. O'Neil Lumber Co., 27 for, 2 against; Van-Deines-Johnson, Inc., 27 for, 4 against; Al Clements Lumber Co., 30 for, 4 against.

Paul E. Miley, Dir. of Region 2A, UAW-CIO, announces that the first election for a Union Shop under the provisions of the T-H Act involving a local union of UAW-CIO in Ohio resulted in an overwhelming victory for the union. Miley stated that 229 workers at the Empire Plow Co. in Cleveland voted for the union shop in an election conducted by the NLRB. Only 12 voted against the union shop. The Empire workers are members of the big Cleveland UAW Amalgamated Local 217.

Loren Houser has been assigned as Regional Director of the Indianapolis area to take the place of Powers Hapgood, who has been assigned to National duties. Brother Houser is one of the early members of the United Auto Workers and served this splendid organization in several capacities, as well as the CIO. Such training well-fitted him for this important assignment.

The announcement of the vote of the United Brotherhood of Telephone Workers in Northern California and Nevada is expected to be made during the first few days in March. Preliminary conferences have been arranged to meet with these telephone groups to prepare for a western conference at a later date.

Lowest Paid U. S. Mill Votes 2 to 1 For CIO

WHAT is said to be the lowest wage mill in America (41c minimum) went CIO when the employes of Stonewall Cotton Mill, Stonewall, Miss., voted more than two to one for the Textile Workers over the AFL in an NLRB-conducted election.

The Stonewall mill was placed high on the agenda for the CIO Southern Drive last year when a group of workers called on R. W. Starnes, Mississippi CIO director, saying they were "highly dissatisfied" with the AFL, which had been the bargaining agent for about 10 years.

The employes said the AFL had adopted a "do-nothing" attitude and, despite the fact that during the war the War Labor Board had approved a seven-cent wage increase, the AFL had settled for a one-cent wage boost in exchange for maintenance of membership and check-off provisions in the contract.

The balloting was a run-off election following an inconclusive election May 16. The run-off was thrice postponed as the result of company protests and Taft-Hartley red-tape. The election was variously set for June 13, 1947, Feb. 5, Feb. 6 and finally held Feb. 12.

Although approximately 725 workers were eligible to vote, only 386 cast ballots with 261 going to CIO, 109 to AFL, 14 challenged and two spoiled ballots. The light vote was contributed to the fact that all roads leading to the schoolhouse polling place were a sea of mud due to two weeks of torrential rains. Bogged-down cars hauling workers to the polls, were pulled out by a Jeep owned by one of the CIO staff members.

"It appears we won by 153 votes and a Jeep," Starnes remarked after the votes were tallied.

Launch Drive In Georgia

AN all-out CIO organizing drive on the non-union textile mills of Georgia was launched at Atlanta, Ga., recently when 300 textile workers in a state-wide meeting pledged themselves to carry out the task.

Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO Organizing Committee, and George Baldanzi, executive vice-president of the Textile Workers, presented the program to the textile workers, who came from both organized and unorganized mills throughout the state.

"You are the real organizers," Bittner said, "All the paid organizers on the CIO staff couldn't bring you the benefits of union organization unless you wanted it and were willing to fight and sacrifice for it."

Baldanzi drove home the fact that, with so many textile mills in Georgia unorganized, the benefits gained by members of TWUA were constantly " in danger."

Mine, Mill Union To Ask 30c, Health Insurance

HOURLY wage boosts of 30c plus employer-paid health and accident insurance will be asked by the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers in negotiations this year.

The contract proposals were formulated by more than 100 rank-and-file leaders at a week-long meeting in Salt Lake City, Utah, recently.

The delegates also voted to seek improved holiday, vacation and shift differential provisions.

Henry Wallace gained the support of the union's intl. executive board, which at the same time delivered a scathing attack on Pres. Truman. The board issued a statement which said:

"Our positions of leadership in this union charge us with the responsibility of making the same fight for our membership that Wallace is making for all Americans. Our Executive Board and our membership find common cause with Wallace in the fight for a people's government."

Following the action of the IEB, the union's District 3 organizing staff located in eight states, supported the board's action on Wallace.

During the rank-and-file session, 30 delegates moved out of the Newhouse hotel after it had discriminated against two Negro delegates. The union cancelled a reservation for a conference room in a letter which concluded:

"We are not impressed by the argument that all major hotels in Salt Lake City discriminate against Negroes. Experience in other cities has proven that a courageous stand by one leading hotel can break a city-wide Jim Crow conspiracy.

"We call upon the Newhouse to take this step as a contribution to democracy in Salt Lake City, the State of Utah and the United States of America."

ACA Sues Two Cable Firms For $1 Million, Charges Wagner Act Violation

A suit against two struck cables companies for $1 million and an injunction to halt the companies' alleged refusal to bargain has been filed in the U. S. District Court in New York City by the CIO Communications Workers.

The union, on strike for two months against four cables company, charged that Mackay Radio and Commercial Cables—both subsidiaries of Intl. Telephone & Telegraph Corp.—violated the Wagner Labor Act in refusing to bargain with it.

Under the Taft-Hartley Act the union, which has not filed non-communist affidavits and financial statements, has no recourse to the NLRB. ACA pointed out, however, that while the NLRB is obliged to protect the public interest, it was appealing to the courts to protect its private rights.

Before the Wagner Act was amended by the T-H Act, the union pointed out, "exclusive" jurisdiction over unfair labor practices rested with the NLRB. The word "exclusive" was stricken out by the T-H Act, ACA said, thus opening the way for court action.

IN a similar case involving CIO Textile workers at the Amazon Cotton Mill, Thomasville, N. C., a federal district court judge in North Carolina recently ordered the company to bargain with the union. The Textile Workers have signed the non-communist affidavit, however.

Judge Johnson J. Hayes slapped at both NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham, who asked dismissal of the case, and at the company, which he found guilty of depriving the workers of their rights.

"If a labor union is unable to protect its membership in the courts," he said, "then its very existence is at stake. Its power is utterly dissipated." The company is now appealing the decision.

While the ACA will prosecute its case "with all the vigor of which it is capable," ACA Pres. Joseph P. Selly said, the union would not depend on it to win the strike. "The strike will be won on the picket line," he emphasized.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week sent an appeal to all CIO international unions for funds to assist the ACA strikers.

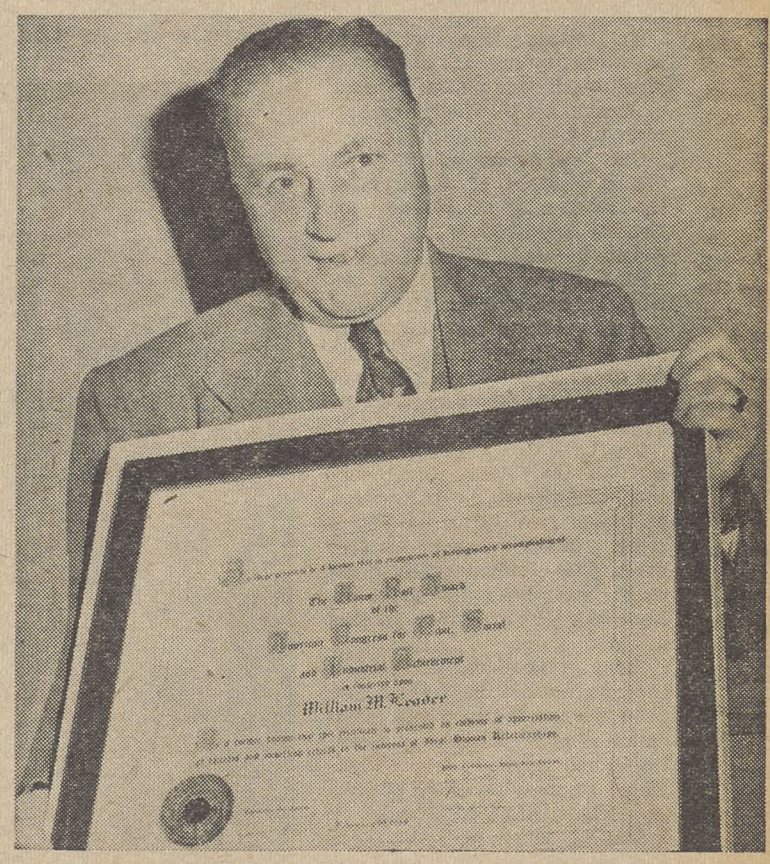
The Steelworkers and Packinghouse have already contributed $500 and $250 respectively, he said. Contributions, Murray said, will be used exclusively for supplying the basic needs of the strikers, rather than for administrative costs.

The letter accused the four struck companies of taking advantage of the T-H Act to break the strike and shatter the workers' morale. "The union," he said, "is striking for well-deserved wage increases and improved working conditions."

Shoe Clerks Win $5.50 in 100 Cities

CIO retail clerks in 100 cities have won a $5.50 a week wage boost, a $50 minimum and an agreement to hire new emplyoes through the union hiring hall.

The settlement ended the possibility of a strike by Local 65, Retail & Wholesale Workers at A. S. Beck and Miles Shoe stores. Settlement with the Lerner dress shops chain followed immediately.



HONORED: William M. Leader, president of Local 1 of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers and vice-president of the Philadelphia CIO Council, is holding the award presented to him by the American Congress of Civic, Social and Industrial Achievement for "faithful and unselfish efforts in the interest of ideal human relationships."

'TIS AN ILL WIND THAT BLOWS NO POLITICS

SPRING was sightseeing around Washington last week.

Whether it was a long stay or a short one, the CIO News was unable to discover as it went to press.

But, one thing was certain, politics — Presidential politics —was certainly in Washington and a lot of other places to stay.

There was politics in the Congress; there was politics in a rebellion—perhaps a windbag rebellion, perhaps not—by professional Southern politicians against Pres. Truman's civil rights program.

There was politics—unfortunate politics—in the Palestine UN situation; there was more unfortunate politics in the startling Czechoslovakian situation; there was politics in Henry Wallace's appearance before House Committee to oppose the Marshall Plan; there was politics in the criticism of Wallace's stand.

There was politics in sudden and surprising attack by the Progressive Citizens of America on Rep. Melvin Price (D., Ill.); there was naturally politics at the Philadelphia convention of the Americans for Democratic Action.

THE ADA convention—its first formal gathering—set up a national organization, adopted a constitution amid thorough debate, came out forthrightly for the Marshall Plan, demanded repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law, condemned the candidacy of Henry A. Wallace, declared it was tied to no political party, sought a just distribution of income taxes, opposed Universal Military Training, took positions on basic civil liberties issues, etc.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, making one of the major addresses to the convention, declared:

"I do not propose that we waste our substance in sterile argument. I do not propose we fight against something, but that we fight harder for something. I propose that we take away their weapons by making democracy work. That's what we mean by the creative alternative, the third force."

ADA chose Leon Henderson, former head of OPA, as chairman, succeeding Wilson Wyatt, former Housing Expediter.

Members of labor unions elected included these from CIO unions: Emil Rieve, Textile, and Detroit City Councilman George Edwards, UAW, who are two of the six vice chairmen; and, to the board: L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber; James B. Carey, John Green, Shipbuilding; Allan Haywood, Steel; Reuther, Samuel Wolchok, Retail.

THE attack by the Progressive Citizens of America (PCA) on Rep. Price came in a statement by the 25th Illinois Congressional District PCA. The statement said of the district's congressman:

"Lately, mainly because of pressure from the Truman Administration, and also possibly because he has been spending too much time in the hysterical-reactionary atmosphere of Congressional committee rooms, and not enough time among the rank and file people of his constituency, Mr. Price has given evidence of a steady retreat from the New Deal policies of Roosevelt."

The PCA said "now is the time for him to declare himself, otherwise, the independent progressive and New Deal forces will have to run an independent New Deal candidate."

The crusading St. Louis Post-Dispatch, published just across the Mississippi from Price's district, declared editorially:

"The fact is that Mr. Price has been an unusually able, alert and progressive member of Congress. He has identified himself with good causes and pursues his objectives tenaciously."

Carey Seeks To Avert Split In WFTU Over Marshall Plan

TWO officials of the CIO went on a new "mission to Moscow" last week in the hope of avoiding a split in the ranks of world labor.

In the Soviet capital were CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross, who earlier had talked with union leaders in London and Paris. At Moscow they were scheduled to confer with Vassili Kuznetsov, secretary of the 26-million-member All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions and a leading figure in Soviet affairs.

The talks with Kuznetsov were sought by Carey in the hope of finding a bridge over basic difficulties in the WFTU executive bureau, where CIO and the British Trades Union Congress have sought to win approval of Marshall Plan recovery proposals.

The WFTU has so far failed to call a meeting of its executive bureau to discuss the CIO proposals. CIO leaders have argued that the recovery program is right up the WFTU alley, since its basic constitution calls for support of economic measures to relieve the world of its wartime injuries.

MEANWHILE, CIO will be represented by Carey and Ross at a special meeting of labor unions in the 16 Marshall Plan countries. The parley, called by the British unions, will be a three-day affair, opening in London on March 8. The AFL, also invited, is sending two representatives—Frank Fenton, its organization director, and Irving Brown, its European representative.

Many of the unions attending the London meeting are also affiliated with the WFTU and have been hopeful of getting the World Federation to sponsor a similar meeting.

Herbert Tracey, prominent British labor writer and a frequent spokesman for British unions, pointed out last week that the WFTU faces "a serious crisis."

PRESSING MARSHALL PLAN: Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey was greeted by Jules Moch, French minister of the Interior, at a Paris meeting of British and French labor officials. Labor's participation in the Marshall Plan was discussed at the meeting. Carey later went to Moscow to discuss with Vassili Kuznetsov, head of the Soviet trade unions, the seriousness of a delay in calling a WFTU executive meeting to discuss the aid program.

WHILE the AFL has refused to join the WFTU since its creation during the war, CIO has been an active charter member of the organization.

CIO leaders have often noted that it offers one of the few meeting places where spokesmen from the labor unions of Communist and non-Communist areas can present their views and seek solutions in the interest of workers everywhere.

Kuznetsov, head of the Soviet trade union organization, has twice visited the U. S. on labor delegations, but has not attended WFTU executive meetings for the last year.

Kuznetsov, an engineer by profession, studied several years ago at Carnegie Tech in Pittsburgh, and is considered an expert in metallurgy.

Prof. Morse To Student Stassen:

Re T-H: 'Oh, Aristotle, What Fallacies Are Spoken In Thy Memory'

SOMETIMES words speak for themselves. Sometimes they don't need any "extra writing" by the editors of this paper. Here, in excerpts from a Senate speech by Wayne Morse (R., Ore.), is an example of words speaking for themselves:

(Referring to a paper he had read at Cornell U.).

In the course of this paper I discuss the position taken by certain aspirants for the Presidency in regard to the Taft-Hartley law.

During the past few days my very good friend, Harold Stassen, has been campaigning in Oregon.

I am exceedingly fond of Harold Stassen. The friendship goes much deeper than any difference of opinion I may have with him on any political issue.

I know Harold Stassen, as a former student, to be the one who always seeks to be guided by the facts of issues. He has a brilliant mind. I am satisfied that there is ground for great hope that in respect to T-H he will reach some conclusions contrary to the conclusions which he has been expressing in Oregon.

As a former teacher of Stassen in a class of argumentation, I take the liberty of recommending this paper (the Cornell paper) to the distinguished Minnesotan, because I know he will at least seek to find the answers to some of the premises I lay down. But I wish to say most respectfully that I think Stassen is attempting to sell a non sequitur to the American people with regard to T-H, because I am informed he is contending that T-H is a great success because there are fewer strikes today.

If Harold were in my old argumentation class, I am sure I would say "Oh, Aristotle, what fallacies are spoken in thy memory." I am sure this Republican knows that just because two phenomena occur in the same time period, it does not necessarily follow that there is any cause and effect relationship.

First, there is a group of many hundreds of employers who have entered in contracts with unions since passage of T-H whereby they have attempted to contract themselves out from under the law. They have granted the major economic demands of unions. They have entered into what I have in the past referred to as "bootleg" contracts—subterfuges, evasions, subrosa agreements. Of course, there have been no strikes in those instances.

"Time is going to show very clearly that these employers seek only to postpone a contest, hoping for a more favorable time or hoping that Congress will amend the law.

So when Stassen argues that today there are fewer strikes than there were before T-H, let him weigh the fact that there are a great many employers who have attempted to contract out from under the terms of the law.

I suggest to him that he take into account some other related time statistics since passage of T-H, namely statistics based on the fact that the cost of living has kept rising since passage of that law. I am not arguing that the T-H law is responsible for that; but I am simply pointing out that the increase in cost of living is another phenomenon which has occurred during the same period of time covered by Stassen's statistics on strikes.

Then there is a third group of employers, which I am certain is in the minority, but there are too many. They comprise the union-busting employers, the groups which have never recognized the fact that freemen always from now on are going to organize themselves in an attempt to better their economic status.

They (these employers) follow the advice of great employer organizations. What is the word going down the line? This: "Now is not the time, boys. Just let things sleep for a while. Oh, have a test here or there, but don't rock the boat right now. Give us a chance to spend a few more millions by way of propaganda opiates with which we hope to becloud public opinion."

I say it is easy for the politicians to tell the people that T-H is working because there have been fewer strikes. But these politicians cannot support their case, be it Harold Stassen or anyone else.

So I recommend to my party that the leadership of Congress give closest consideration to the legislative needs of the country in the field of social legislation, such as sorely needed amendments to the T-H law and such as the passage of civil rights legislation which will protect the dignity of individual citizens.

Union's Walking Blood Bank Saves The Lives Of Two Members

OUT in Janesville, Wis., a town of some 25,000 persons, are two CIO members who probably owe their lives to their union.

One of them is Ben G. Hess, chairman of CIO Auto Workers Chevrolet Local 121, who was given a transfusion from the walking blood bank which he was instrumental in forming as chairman of the local's welfare committee.

BEN HESS

Hess was given the transfusion during a serious stomach operation. Had the blood not been readily available—as it was not before the bank was set up—it is doubtful whether blood could have been obtained in time to have helped Hess.

Elmer Knox also doubtless owes his life to the bank. During a serious operation he was given 10 transfusions, six of them with blood supplied by members of his UAW local.

BACK of these dramatic incidents is the more prosaic story of how the bank came into existence. One Sunday afternoon a year or more ago, Hess met Dr. H. C. Danforth by chance in a Janesville restaurant.

Almost before the two men knew it, they conceived an idea that solved the problems of both men.

The idea was the walking blood bank—a list of union men who had been given the required tests, typed for blood, and were willing to donate blood whenever they were needed.

Hess took up the blood bank plan with the local's executive committee where it was approved and presented at a regular union meeting. The members liked the idea and Hess was authorized to proceed with the necessary arrangements.

Dr. Danforth, assisted by Dr. Herbert Snodgrass, went to work three different nights they typed blood of 104 men and gave them Wassermann tests.

Later, 68 more names were added, bringing the total to 172. Come spring, the union plans to bring the number of members on the list to 250.

THE list of volunteer potential blood donors, giving names, addresses, phone numbers, blood type and other information, was presented to Dr. W. T. Clark, chief of the Mercy Hospital staff. Lists were also given to each doctor on the staff, and copies kept on hand for Local 121 Pres. John Steward and Welfare Chairman Hess to be readily available for all emergencies.

Mercy Hospital was deeply grateful to the union. A doctor's staff meeting planning the blood bank. On adopted a resolution thanking the union for "making available to the citizens of this community a service which is most useful and may very well prove lifesaving in times of emergency."

The doctors praised the union for "the unselfishness and desire to be of use to the citizens of the surrounding territory so powerfully exemplified by the act."

Dr. Danforth was also commended for his initiative and perseverance in carrying through the work necessary to obtain complete data for the project, and Dr. Snodgrass was thanked for his assistance in the work.

The 67 men who have donated blood to date on day and night calls have helped some of Janesville's citizens on a quicker road to recovery.

AMONG other similar CIO-sponsored projects already in existence is the free blood bank sponsored by the Black Hawk CIO Council in Waterloo, Iowa. (An account of this appeared in The CIO News, Dec. 8, 1947.)

Here more than 2,000 CIO members have given blood to the free blood bank organized by a joint committee from Packinghouse Local 46 and UAW Local 838.

In the line are Harry E. Berger (seated) Howard Dominy, Harold Schwanke, Leonard J. Prueher, Elmer Edwardson, Donald Kellogg, John M. Stewart, Sylvester Sndyer and Harry V. Johnson. Other CIO groups are doing similar work.

time, and for many years afterwards, there was also a strong Socialist movement. But, now Cincinnati is only 27% industrialized compared to Cleveland's more than 50%.

Charter—with the solid backing of labor—goes ahead, pushing for the future. It is demanding better Cincinnati representation in the State Legislature—under Ohio law, each county gets at least one representative. Vinton County—population 11,000—has one representative. Hamilton County (home of Cincinnati) is about 60 times larger, but has only nine representatives.

THE Natl. Municipal League, in a pamphlet, "Citizen Organization for Political Activity—the Cincinnati Plan," says:

"For those interested only in 'cleaning things up,' this report on the purposes and organization of the Cincinnati City Charter Committee will have no value.

"On the other hand, if the purpose is to re-establish democracy permanently, to organize the citizens so as to create continuing interest in public affairs and to make that interest effective, then this report of the successful operation of a system of citizen organization in one of our great cities should be useful. In smaller communities, the degree of organization will, of course, be less, but the form of organization set forth here is applicable to a community of any size."

Says Everett:

"The hope for our American system of demorcacy lies in settling our industrial problems over the collective bargaining table. Otherwise, in some future depression we will come to complete government dictation of economic life.

"There must be men of ideals attracted to both sides of the bargaining table, if this is to be accomplished. And we must recognize that differences of opinion are inherent in democracy. As long as they may be honestly expressed, democracy will be safe."

Lithographers Union Wins $5 To $8 Raises in New York

SOME 7,000 CIO Lithographers in New York City have won raises of from $5 to $8 weekly following three months of negotiations.

The new contract also provides a 36¼ hour work week and employer-paid hospitalization, accident and health insurance for employes and their families.

To combat unemployment, the lithography firms have agreed to share available work among employes and to distribute layoffs evenly. No lithographer is to be laid off more than once in three month until all employes in the same department have shared equally.

Several clauses protecting the union from the Taft-Hartley law are included. Immediate termination of the contract is provided if an employer asks the lithographers to handle material coming from a non-union or struck shop.

Red Cross Campaign Backed By Murray

Pres. Philip Murray has pledged CIO support to the 1948 American Red Cross.

Murray emphasized the importance of the new national blood program and asked that the public give its "wholehearted support" to the campaign. "There must be no let-up in the disaster relief and rehabilitation work of the Red Cross," he said. "Aid must be extended to victims of explosions, floods, fires and tornadoes."

He added that other important services of the Red Cross, such as first aid and accident prevention program, must continue.

Buckmaster Added To NPA's Board

L. S. Buckmaster, president of the Rubber Workers and a CIO vice-president, is one of the newly-elected members of Natl. Planning Association's board of trustees. He had been a member of the NPA Labor committee since December 1946.

STRIKING LITHOGRAPHERS: Now in their fourth week on the picket line, these CIO Lithographers are holding firm for wage increases and reduction of the work week. The three Washington, D. C., companies—Guthrie Lithograph, Sauls Lithograph and Webb & Bucorselski—have taken advantage of the T-H Act to demand an open shop. The strikers receive $40 weekly benefits from the union.

MURRAY DEMANDS PALESTINE ACTION

THE U.S. should not go back on the United Nations decision to partition Palestine—and it should immediately lift the embargo on shipment of arms to the Jewish People of the Holy Land.

Those demands were placed before Pres. Truman last week by CIO Pres. Murray, after announcement by the American representative at UN that the government does not favor trying to enforce the partition proposal.

Decision of the UN General Assembly, Murray wrote, "received world-wide approval" and our representatives in the UN "should most certainly abide by the decisions which they originally urged in UN Councils."

Murray's letter voiced severe criticism of the action of the Arab League—representing leaders of several Arab countries in the Mid-East—in threatening to counter the partition program with armed force.

The Arab League's action, Murray said, has been a "serious challenge to the United Nations. The whole principle on a question of world peace is thus jeopardized by a dissident group that has coupled its defiance with open and official threats of armed violence."

THE U. S. position, as voiced by Warren Austin at UN headquarters in New York, showed a marked turn-away from earlier stands in the Palestine debate. His speech relied heavily on technical points to explain the government's decision that the General Assembly's recommendation could not be enforced in Palestine.

The partition plan would divide Palestine into sections, one governed by Arabs, the other by Jews. Official Jewish groups accepted the UN plan, but leaders of Arab groups in the feudal Middle East reacted against it.

Involved in the situation are the big Middle Eastern oil supplies, some of them controlled by American corporations. Part of the Arab poker game against the UN decision has involved control of these supplies and of rights covering their distribution.

MURRAY, in his letter to the White House, took note of recent Arab-Jewish violence in Palestine and warned that "mere words will not be enough to meet the growing tension in Palestine.

"The high-sounding decision of UN must be implemented," he said. "The nations must prevent bloodshed, if need be by the interposition of police agencies that will prevent the rash result of flaring tempers."

Recalling that threats against the Jews have been "openly and officially made," the CIO president declared:

"A defenseless people invites open aggression. On the other hand, a people prepared to defend itself has a much stronger guarantee of continued quiet.

"In our judgment, the American embargo on necessary arms and equipment for the Jewish people in Palestine should be lifted at once.

"It is unthinkable that virtually the whole world should submit to the intimidation and threats of the Arab League. The only consideration to be given any weight is that of world peace."

THE AMERICAN government's statement disputed the right of the UN Security Council to enforce a "political decision" such as that recommended by the Assembly on Palestine.

Seriousness of the challenge to UN's future activity was indicated by UN Sec.-Gen. Trygve Lie, one-time Norwegian labor official.

Asked what the effect of failure to enforce the Palestine decision might be, Lie replied:

"It would have a bad effect. If nothing happens, if chaos results, then it is quite clear that it will reduce the prestige of the United Nations, and world confidence in the UN will be worse than now."

Housing Director Named By Reuther

Walter Reuther, auto union president and chairman of the CIO's Committee on Housing, has announced appointment of Leo Goodman of Washington as director of the committee.

The 15-man Housing Committee, appointed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, will meet March 9 at its offices, 1129 Vermont Ave. N. W. Washington.

Goodman, a former research director of the Shoe Union and a Washington representative for the Retail & Wholesale Workers, filled labor posts in the Treasury Dept. and OPA during the war. Later he was director of the Natl. Fair Rent Committee.

UAW Wins $16,650 For Blind Man

FIEDOR SAHARCHUK has been working for the Ford Motor Co. since 1913.

In 1936, he was operated on for a cataract in his right eye. Subsequently, he lost sight of that eye.

In 1937, he was able to return to work.

On July 15, 1947, on instructions of his foreman in the Motor Bldg. he attempted to lift from the floor a stock box which weighed 200 pounds. While trying to place the box on the under shelf of a bench, his foot slipped.

The accident caused a "detached retina" in the left eye. He remained two months in Ford Hospital. Upon discharge, he had merely "light perception" in the left eye. That condition is described as "industrial blindness of the left eye."

On Oct. 23, 1947, officers of Local 600 asked that he be placed on a job according to his senority and ability. This was done. Then, the local started steps to win compensation for Saharchuk. The local's Compensation Dept. engaged Atty. David Bernstein to handle the case.

Bernstein processed the case. After the award, he made the following analysis for the local:

"Sarachuk is now entitled to Workmen's Compensation for the specific loss of his left eye, viz, 150 weeks at $21.00 per week or an aggregate sum of $3,150.

"However, . . . under the second injury fund (so called) of the Workmen's Compensation Law, Saharchuk will be entitled to an additional recovery of 600 weeks, or an additional sum of $12,600 from the State, he being under said law, deemed totally and permanently disabled.

"In other words . . . an aggregate sum of $15,750, in addition all of his hospital bills approximately $900. Eventually, Saharchuk will receive the sum of approximately $16,650."

Saharchuk is now working at the "blind man's bench" in the Motor Building handling bolts. The award in the case is not affected by the fact that Fiedor is working.

Saharchuk, after receiving the news of victory, expressed his gratitude by saying, "I am sure that the Union is mainly responsible for this."

AID TO BLIND: Katherine Saharchuk watches as her father, Fiedor Saharchuk (right), and William McKie discuss a compensation case involving the father, who is blind. A State Workmen's Compensation referee ruled that Saharchuk, a member of CIO Auto Workers' Ford Local 600, should receive $16,650 compensation.

In PAC:

N.Y. State, Ohio Hit 3rd Party

SEN. Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.) was playing hard to get with Nebraska Republicans . . .

Another paradox hit the political scene: Harry S. Truman, opposed by Henry Wallace as being too rightish, incurred the wrath of former Gov. Joe Ely (D., Mass.), who called him too New Dealish (Ely was a bitter foe of F. D. R.). Mayor Curley of Boston, sore because the Government made him serve a sentence for mail fraud, joined Ely in a paean for Gen. MacArthur.

In Atlanta, Ku Klux Klan Grand Dragon Samuel Green gleefully cried that Truman is a "gone goslin" over the civil rights program.

And, in Louisville, Ky., newspapers quoted Michael Quill, president of the CIO Transport Workers, as also predicting that Truman couldn't be reelected. He conceded that this "leaves the very good possibility" that Sen. Taft will be the next President. Quill said the Wallace candidacy would "make both Reps and Dems toe the line."

There were plenty of rumors that Ike Eisenhower, now that, among other things, he's settled the question of whether or not Lou Little will stay on as Columbia U.'s football coach, might be induced to run as a Democratic candidate. (Don't bet too much money yet, though.)

(The Republicans must be getting mighty sore. First, they tried to get Eisenhower to say he was a Republican—now Democrats are wooing him! A considerable branch of the GOP has been plumping for Gen. MacArthur; now Curley and Ely want MacA. to run as a Democrat.)

ON the CIO-PAC scene, actions by the New York State and Ohio State CIOs highlighted the news.

The New York State CIO, by a vote of about 2 to 1, decided to set up a state-wide Political Action Committee to oppose the Wallace third party, promote the Marshall Plan and secure the election of liberal candidates to Congress and the Legislature.

The Ohio State CIO, by a vote of 14 to 5, also indorsed CIO policy against a third party. PAC Director Jack Kroll is president of the Ohio CIO.

Other typical actions in CIO circles (not complete):

1. The CIO Auto Workers' board threw its weight back of the national CIO policy, but stated that it hoped for the start toward a real progressive third party after this fall's election.

2. The North Carolina State CIO-PAC voted overwhelmingly against a third party and for the Marshall Plan.

3. The Greater Boston Industrial Union Council voted 115 to 8 against a third party. James Malvey was re-elected president.

4. The Indianapolis CIO Council went on record overwhelmingly for the statement "we should not support a third-party movement in 1948."

5. The Memphis Council, with only three dissents, backed ERP and nixed Wallace.

6. The Allen County (Ind.) PAC "pledges itself to follow CIO policy all the way," says a release from Viola Pascoe (Electrical), just elected recording secretary. Other officers: Pres. James E. Kelly (Amalgamated); Vice Pres. Glenn Miller (Steel); Fin. Secy. Wallace Clayton (UE); trustees: Carl Kramer (Hosiery); Marvin Walters (Auto), Harold MaBeth (Brewery). Fort Wayne is in Allen County.

7. Harry Boyer, Pennsylvania State PAC chairman: "Labor is not for the third party because the third party is not for labor."

8. The executive board of the Mine, Mill Union indorsed the Wallace candidacy.

9. The convention of the Office & Professional Union voted 687 to 131 "expressing the delegates' personal conviction that support for the Wallace candidacy was the most effective means to secure higher living standards, security and peace."

FROM the Greater New York City CIO Council — through secretary Saul Mills—came a letter to the CIO News stating:

"We must take issue with the story in the Feb. 23 CIO News on the election of Leo Isacson to Congress from the 24th District, Bronx; wherein:

"1. The impression is given that that CIO did not indorse Isacson and had no participation in the campaign whatsoever.

"2. By implication the CIO lines itself up with Democratic Natl. Chm. McGrath in reading the Isacson election as a defeat, and attempting to explain it by criticising the 'failure of the Democrats to get their people to the polls.'

"Isacson was endorsed by the G. N. Y. CIO Council first through executive board action and secondly through a formal resolution by the council delegates' assembly . . . we proudly share in its victory for labor throughout the country."

Last week, Isacson, who was backed by Henry Wallace, announced that he had engaged John T. McManus as his secretary. McManus is a vice president of the CIO Newspaper Guild and a member of the executive Board of the G. N. Y. CIO Council. When the Guild's national board recently backed the CIO's policy against a third party, McManus was the only dissenter. He has taken a leave from his job on PM.

New Orleans Elects CIO Man To State Legislature

By JACQUELINE McCULLOUGH

ORGANIZED labor in Louisiana is guaranteed one direct representative in the state legislature when it convenes in Baton Rouge in May.

He is Thomas A. Russell, CIO staff representative, who was elected state representative from New Orleans' First Ward in the recent second Democratic primary in which Earl K. Long defeated Sam Jones for governor.

Backed by the Orleans Parish Political Action Committee, Russell was second man in the first primary, but picked up enough votes to defeat the Sam Jones-backed candidate by a vote of 1773 to 1386.

A native of New Orleans, Russell has been on the CIO staff for approximately eight years. Two days after his election as representative, he was re-elected president of Local 167, Chemical Workers.

In addition to his pledge to support labor and to fight its battles on the floor of the House, Russell also promises to fight for better housing, improved teachers' salaries and a better and more extensive old-age pension and state welfare and medical program.

Russell was one of 17 victorious candidates out of a slate of 20 recommended by Orleans PAC.

Kroll's Stand

CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll says that PAC repudiation of the Wallace third party movement does not mean support for Pres. Truman.

CIO-PAC "has no pets," Kroll told a press conference after a board meeting of the Ohio CIO, of which he is president.

A. J. Goldberg CIO Counsel

ARTHUR J. Goldberg, of Chicago, has been appointed general counsel of the CIO and the Steelworkers, succeeding Lee Pressman, resigned.

Pres. Philip Murray said Mr. Goldberg would assume his new post March 18.

Goldberg is a native of Chicago, a graduate of Northwestern University School of Law and a senior member of the firm of Goldberg, Devoe and Brussell. He will retain his connection with the law firm.

During the war, Goldberg served as a special assistant to Maj.-Gen. Wm. J. Donovan, director of the Office of Strategic Services, with the rank of major in the Army.

He is a member of the board of directors of the Amalgamated Bank of Chicago and of the Amalgamated Life Insurance Co., which are operated by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Associated with Goldberg in the operation of the CIO and Steelworkers' legal departments will be Frank Donner, who has been on the legal staff of both organizations for several years.

Tenn. Upholds Ban

The Tennessee Supreme Court has unanimously upheld the constitutionality of a state law barring the closed shop. The law, passed in 1947, also outlaws the union shop.

Rent Is Issue

Rep. Charles K. Fletcher (R., Calif.) is president of a savings and loan association. He also is the freshman member of Congress who authored the 15% rent increase lease arrangement in the first session of the 80th Congress.

At least one of his 23 district constituents — and there must be a lot more — doesn't like Fletcher's stand on rent and other things. Seeking Democratic nomination to oppose Fletcher is Clinton D. McKinnon, founder of the San Diego Daily Journal, a liberal paper founded during the war. McKinnon declares: "I am concerned about the deadlocks which block any effective action on housing, with the result that 2,600,000 young married couples are living doubled-up and veterans are denied decent homes they risked their lives to insure." Fletcher defeated Rep. Ed Izac (D.) in 1946.

Curran Denounces Arbiter's Decision

An arbitrator's decision giving a 6.3 per cent cost-of-living increase to 30,000 CIO Maritime Union members has been termed inadequate by Pres. Joseph Curran.

He added, however, that the union would have to accept the award because of a prior agreement by all parties to abide by the ruling. All 90,000 NMU members will get the increases, Treas. Hedley Stone said, as other shippers not directly involved in the decision follow suit.

Retroactive to Dec. 15, 1947, the boost represents the rise in living costs between June 15 and Dec. 15, the date of wage reopening talks, arbitrator Frederick R. Livingston said.

In Texas:

Politicians Find It's No Soap

By HARVEY O'CONNOR

WHILE political demagogs in Texas are waving the bloody shirt over the civil rights issue, the people of Fort Worth have their eyes on issues such as wages, taxes, housing and price control.

The Tarrant County PAC discovered this after a city-wide sampling poll by its neighborhood workers. Upward revision of the federal minimum wage law from 40c an hour to 75c was found to be the most popular issue. The vote on that was 603 for and 20 against.

A proposal that the Fort Worth Housing Authority build low-cost rental housing, with preference for veterans' families, drew a vote of 572 to 25.

Closest vote was on universal military training, with 272 favoring and 347 opposing.

The Tarrant County PAC had a double purpose in taking the vote. "We wanted to know how people felt on these controversial issues," officers said, "Even more, we wanted to stimulate discussion on the real issues facing the voters, rather than the fictitious issues being exploited. We find the people are a lot more interested in bread and butter questions than they are in phony ones."

The poll ballots were distributed by a corps of 80 block workers.

FORT WORTH daily newspapers kept inquiring day after day for the results, and gave prominent publicity to the returns.

It was the first indication in the commercial press that there were any current issues in the city, state or nation except race-hatred propaganda being stirred by professional politicians on the civil rights issue, and the propaganda campaign for giving the tidal oil rights cheap to the oil corporations through state's rights.

OTHER questions in the Fort Worth poll:

Should poll tax be eliminated? Yes, 468; No, 160.

Should Legislature enact sales tax? Yes, 23;

OR should Legislature tax gas, oil and sulphur corporations? Yes, 430.

Should Congress enact price control on staple commodities, and better rent control? Yes, 415; No, 76.

Should Congress lower the Social Security retirement age? Yes, 572; No, 35.

Should Congress enact Truman proposal cutting income tax by $40 a person? Yes, 472;

OR should Congress enact the Republican tax cut proposal favoring the wealthy? Yes, 15.

UAW Asks Michigan To End Guard Bias

The CIO Auto Workers have asked Michigan Gov. Kim Sigler for immediate action to end segregation in the State National Guard.

William Oliver, co-director with Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the UAW Fair Practices and Anti-Discrimination Department, asked Sigler to follow the precedent set by the state of New Jersey.

PAC-STERS: PAC Dir. Jack Kroll addresses the Ohio State CIO board. He's president of Ohio CIO. Next to him are Lillien Foster, office secretary and Secy.-Treas. William Lavelle of the State CIO. The board voted to back CIO policy on the third party and also indorsed several state candidates.

H. Bridges Out as CIO Director

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week announced he had relieved Harry Bridges, president of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, as CIO regional director in Northern California, effective today.

At the same time, Murray announced that he had named Tim Flynn as Bridges' successor as regional director for the district, with offices in San Francisco. Flynn, a former board member of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, is presently on the CIO organizing staff. In recent months he has been assigned to West Allis, Wisconsin, to assist the United Automobile Workers in an organizing campaign at the Allis-Chalmers Co. plant there.

Murray made public a letter sent by Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization, who is now in Los Angeles, to Bridges, it said:

"YOUR letter of Feb. 26 in reply to mine of Feb. 18 has been forwarded to me here in Los Angeles. After reading same, and after the conferences I had with you last night in San Francisco, it is obvious that you, as president of the ILWU, find yourself in an untenable position as CIO regional director relative to effectuating the policies laid down by the CIO Executive Board meeting held in Washington, D. C., Jan. 22-23.

"The CIO, as you are aware, has as its political arm the PAC. Both the CIO Executive Board and the PAC declared unmistakably against the formation of the third party in 1948.

"The CIO position is that the launching of a third party by individuals without the labor movement as its base can only result in creating division and confusion amongst members of organized labor, and can only result in the election of reactionary candidates to public office and in the defeat of the progressive candidates. This will hereby endanger organized labor and thwart any efforts to bring about the repeal of such vicious legislation as the Taft-Hartley Act.

"I pointed out to you in my letter of Feb. 18 that the duties of the selected representatives of both International Unions and CIO are mainly to carry out policies of their respective bodies.

"THE position you have taken . . . does not give encouragement to those in our movement who desire to carry out CIO policies and declarations. On the contrary this gives encouragement to those who, by their failure to carry out these policies, divide our forces and jeopardize the accomplishment of our objectives.

"In conference I suggested that you resign so that there will be no embarrassment to you and less injury to our organization. This you said you would not do.

"Your position leaves me no other alternative but to take necessary action so that those who are selected to carry out CIO policies as CIO regional directors, are supporters of such policies. Therefore, I am officially notifying you that effective Monday, March 8, 1948, you are relieved of the position of CIO regional director for Northern California."

Steel's 'Extortion Driving U. S. To Economic Fear'—Murray

By VINCENT SWEENEY

EFFORTS of the steel industry to pass off recent price increases as insignificant brought a complete expose by CIO and Steelworkers' Pres. Philip Murray which shows a steel price boost of one billion dollars in a little over a year.

Answering a statement by Pres. Benjamin Fairless, of United States Steel, before a Congressional committee, which depreciated a recent $5-a-ton increase in semi-finished steel products, Murray told a meeting of the Catholic Conference on Industrial Problems, in Boston:

"It's foolhardy for the steel industry to argue that they (price increases) don't amount to much. Their impact will be felt by all—in the price of refrigerators, in washing machines, in automobiles, in farm machinery, and finally in food and other essential items."

HE cited this "graphic portrayal of the extent to which the steel industry has gone in increasing prices":

From November, 1946 to March, 1947 steel increased prices $5.37 a ton.

In August, 1947, another increase averaged $5.59 a ton.

From October, 1947, and including recent increases of 1948, steel increased prices an average of $5.73 a ton.

This is a total of $16.69 a ton and based on U. S. Steel's production of 20 million tons annually amounts to $333,800,000. For the industry the increase amounts to one billion dollars annually.

"Unfortunately," he said, "United States Steel in a very implied way stated that responsibility for high prices in steel is attributable to labor.

"This cannot be supported by facts. The last wage increase was in April, 1947, but most of these price increases came in later 1947 and 1948. It is hard to understand the intricacies of price increases in steel, but they show the extent to which the industry is going to gouge the American people."

MURRAY recalled the fight CIO carried on to retain price control and how industry had fought for its elimination with the argument that free competition would take care of prices and inflation.

"But what happened?" he asked. "The net profit for 1947 amounted to over 17 billion dollars for all industry, an increase of 59% over 1946.

"The net result is that labor finds itself forced to petition industry to make more concessions. But Mr. Fairless says there will be no relief; that wages must be left alone or they will affect the inflationary spiral.

"But what industry does in raising prices goes under the head of free enterprise.

"I am going to state that we do not have free enterprise. We have legitimate, licensed extortion and it is driving the people of the United States into economic fear; and apparently industry does not care!"

IT is the position of CIO, he said, that the "only effective means to protect the people from being gouged is for price control to be returned and for prices to be rolled back."

"Never in the history of this country has there been such an orgy of extortion," he continued. "It must be stopped and we are going to need the help of the American people to stop it or we are headed for the most devastating economic depression in the history of our nation.

"It isn't enough for Senator Taft to say to Mr. Fairless: You shouldn't do those things.

"The people want action. They want representatives in Congress who will defend the people against the rapacity and greed and selfishness of industry."

Steel Hikes 'Help' Public —Fairless

U. S. Steel Corp., which cleared 127 million dollars in net profits last year, is looking for your sympathy.

The company raised prices about $5 a ton on many of its products, following a series of other price boosts during recent months.

The action—apparently to the corporation's surprise—got everybody mad.

CIO Pres. Murray, speaking in Boston, called it "licensed extortion."

Senate Republican leader Taft—who had hoped the break in commodity prices would make the public forget about GOP's share of responsibility for the cost of living—screamed like a man hit in the middle of his campaign.

Sen. Flanders (R., Vt.)—who has shown more anger at rising prices than most of his Republican colleagues — accused the company of printing only half-truths in a series of full page newspaper advertisements.

But Ben Fairless, head of U. S. Steel, blithely told a Congressional hearing that the new price increases are "in the public interest."

Indeed, said Fairless, even though Big Steel has increased its prices, unions should not ask for wage increases. That would be inflationary, he told the Congressional joint committee on economics.

TAFT, however, thought U. S. Steel's action would naturally encourage unions to ask for higher wages—on the basis that Big Steel's action is a hint of further price increases to come all along the line.

Fairless—who had admitted the price boost will give an extra zip to the company's profit record for '48—thought no wage demands would be justified, price increase or no price increase.

What would really be inflationary, the U. S. Steel president predicted with an air of certainty, would be a third-round of wage increases for industrial workers whose pay now averages about $50 a week.

Fairless said he didn't believe a wage raise was "necessary," and that it would bring "distress" for many people.

CIO SEEKING END OF INDICTMENT

SECTION 304 of the Taft-Hartley Law, "on its face and as applied to defendants, is unconstitutional," and therefore an indictment of the CIO and Pres. Philip Murray should be dismissed.

Thus argued attorneys for Murray and the CIO in a brief filed last week with the U. S. District Court in Washington, D. C.

The indictment had come as a result of a test of the T-H Law by Murray. The CIO president last summer ordered the CIO News to carry an indorsement by him of a Congressional candidate and to distribute the issue of the paper in Baltimore, scene of the election.

The district court brief, filed by Attorneys Charles Margiotti, Lee Pressman and Frank Donner, lists five major arguments against the constitutionality of Section 304:

(1) It abridges freedom of speech and of press in violation of the 1st and 5th Amendments;

(2) It abridges freedom of speech and press as well as the right to peaceful assembly and petitioning of government for redress of grievances;

(3) It is based upon arbitrary classification and discrimination against labor organizations, as differentiated from all other forms of associations;

(4) The operative words of section 304 are so "extremely vague and indefinable" as to make impossible the setting of standards of guidance for labor union activity;

(5) The section curtails the right to political activity—the protection of which is outlined in detail throughout the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

THE brief pointed out that the issue involved in the case is "of transcendent importance," since it would limit freedom of the press, would bar access to the "political process" by organized workers, and would cause "profound" injuries.

It urged the necessity of prompt action so that defendants may have the "opportunity to exercise their political rights in a meaningful and effective way, namely, in connection with the momentous election which is now pending."

The brief stated that the case at issue is not one "in which a civil liberty has incidentally fallen to a broad regulatory statute directed at other ends" but "the precise purpose of the enactment was to interfere with defendant's freedom of press. It was the design and aim of Section 304 . . . to silence the press of labor organizations . . . It is accurate to state that there has never been a case before the Supreme Court involving the freedom of the press in which the motive to restrain has been so clear and unadorned."

The fact that Section 304 places the prohibition on expenditures rather than upon the exercise of political activities does not affect the case, the CIO brief declared since the proscription on expenditures "merely emphasizes the Congressional purpose to bar defendants from access to the most vital areas in which political liberty may be exercised, and to bar that access completely and without modification."

This prohibition, the brief continued "constitutes a blackout of freedom of expression."

SECTION 304, the brief declared does not mean the three "basic requirements" indicated by the Supreme Court in past decisions on legislation involving the invasion of civil rights:

(1) That the statute be "narrowly drawn" to deal with the "precise evil" under consideration;

(2) That the conduct which is sought to be regulated must be so "specifically defined" as to leave the individual free to engage in legal activities "free of the fear of discrimination in enforcement which a loosely drawn statute invites";

(3) The affected conduct must present a "clear and present danger" to substantial interests of the state.

Appeals To U. S. In Deportations

EVERY "constitutional guarantee of protection" should be provided to trade union officers now being held at Ellis Island for possible deportation, CIO Pres. Murray wrote last week to Atty. Gen. Tom Clark.

Murray's letter was written in connection with the cases of Sec. Ferdinand Smith of the Natl Martime Union; Charles Doyle, a board member of the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers; and Irving Potash, vice-president of the Intl. Fur & Leather Workers.

Together with two leading Communist officials, they were held without bail on charges of being aliens advocating overthrow of the government. About the time Murray wrote his letter, Potash—represented in court by Lee Pressman, former CIO counsel—was freed on $5,000 bail. All five men had been on a hunger strike to dramatize demands for release on bail.

Murray wrote that the three union officials "have long been residents in this country" and "undue stress is now being laid on the point that they are aliens."

To magnify that fact, the CIO president said, is to "totally ignore" protections guaranteed to all people by the Constitution. "We deplore this attitude on the part of Immigration officials as inimical to the cause of civil rights."

He said that they should be assumed to be innocent until proven guilty and that every doubt should be resolved in their favor "under our accepted legal procedures, both in the matter of admission to bail and to a prompt, open and speedy trial."

THAT NOISY LITTLE DECREASE

Once upon a time there was a greedy big guy who loved to pick on a little fellow who lived around the corner.

One day he caught the little fellow in an alley, bopped him on the head a couple of times and took from him a quarter that he had been saving for a rainy day.

The spunky little guy began squawking. "I've been robbed!" he shouted. He said it again and again and again.

The big guy just smiled, shrugged his shoulders and went his way.

Later the little guy's squawking began to annoy, then worry him. He got one of his big pals—to serve as a witness, you understand—and went to the little fellow's home.

"Here's that money I took from you a short time ago," said the big lug, shoving a coin into the little fellow's pocket. "I brought my publicity man, Joe, along so he can tell all the newspapers that I'm all square with you again."

The little fellow felt pretty good about the whole thing, especially after he read all of the stories about what a fine thing the big guy had done.

Then he took the coin from his pocket and examined it closely. "Well, I'll be d . . . . . !" he declared.

The big lug had given him back a penny—not a quarter!

Now, this may sound like fiction, which, of course, it is.

It's just like the fiction you've been reading in other newspapers lately about the "big" decrease in commodity prices.

The boys down in the Research Dept. have just informed us that reduced commodity prices lowered the average person's cost of living by approximately 1%. ★ ★ ★

52 Paychecks Every Year

This business of being on the payroll one week and off the next makes a man old before his time and causes him to miss all of the enjoyment that comes from reasonable job security.

Many of our business leaders say that periodic layoffs—without pay, of course—are a necessary part of our industrial system.

We can't go along with that kind of thinking—and neither can the folks out in Austin, Minn.—and they ought to know something about the situation.

Austin is the home of the Hormel packing company, which has a smooth working Guaranteed Annual Wage plan and a good contract with the CIO Packinghouse union.

The best thing about the Hormel scheme is that it works—to the advantage of the employer, the employes and the entire community. Results of the plan are shown pictorially on Pages 6 and 7 of this issue. ★ ★ ★

This Might Be Illegal

Not being attorneys, we're in no position to advise ourselves regarding the legality of what we've got on our minds and, anyhow, our lawyers are busy with that "press freedom" indictment against the CIO and its president.

Maybe we're violating the Taft-Hartley Act but we feel duty bound to mention that the CIO has a committee usually referred to by its initials, the middle one of which is "A."

This committee engages in the kind of action which the T-H Act seeks to curb.

It needs plenty of you-know-what to do an effective job.

Bill Finally Drafted After Months of Argument Over ERP

By ALLAN L. SWIM

BACK in the "good old days" a fellow learned the real value of having good neighbors when his house burned down.

The folks who lived nearby provided him and his family with temporary shelter—and then they pitched in and helped him build a new home.

That old custom has largely fallen by the wayside, but the spirit of neighborliness is still a potent force in America.

This is demonstrated by the way aid is given to an area that has been devastated by a flood or tornado.

It is demonstrated, too, by those supporting the idea that the United States should help war-torn European countries get back on their feet.

IF the average American is badly confused—and even a bit bored—by all of the conflicting talk about the Marshall Plan he can't be blamed much.

It's been called practically everything under the sun. People who knew almost nothing about it have made long speeches praising or condemning its provisions.

This was because there actually was nothing that could rightfully be called the Marshall Plan until recently. Previously there was little more than an idea expressed by Secretary Marshall—an idea that the United States should help rehabilitate European countries that were badly in need of aid.

But now we've got S. 2202.

THE Senate has begun debate on S. 2202, which also is known as the Connally-Vandenberg Bill and the ERP Bill.

CIO legislative representatives who have examined this measure carefully say that it comes close to meeting all of the 10 points considered by the CIO to be necessary to a successful European recovery program.

These representatives are seeking an amendment to that part of the bill permitting transfer of U. S. merchant ships to foreign registry, a provision to which the CIO objects.

But in the main the measure "measures up" to CIO policy.

A lot of people seem to have the cockeyed notion that the ERP proposal can be understood only by those well versed in international affairs and that it is of real concern only to the top-flight "policy-makers."

What will happen if the measure is—or isn't—passed will affect the future of the average "Joe" as much as it will those of wealth and power.

The difference between future peace and war, prosperity and depression, democracy and totalitarianism could easily hinge on the fate of S. 2202.

And that's not stretching it.

THE CIO at its Boston convention last year adopted a resolution favoring a program of aid and rehabilitation for war-torn nations.

The CIO Executive Board at its last session voted in favor of the Marshall Plan.

There's still a big job to be done—and quickly.

Every CIO member should use his influence to get Congress to pass S. 2202 in a hurry—without a lot of crippling amendments.

Washington Post Lauds Labor Education Bill

Unstinted praise for the Labor Extension Service Bill (S. 1390; H.R. 4078) was given in a recent editorial in the Washington Post:

An education extension program for industrial workers on something like the pattern of the Agricultural Extension Service, which makes educational assistance available to the farm population, is so sensible an idea that it is a wonder it wasn't put into effect by Congress long ago. A Senate Education and Labor Subcommittee has just completed hearings on a bill to establish such a program—a bill introduced in the last session of Congress by Senators Morse and Thomas of Utah. The AFL, the CIO and the Railway Brotherhoods joined in supporting the proposal, and such progressive industrialists as Charles Luckman and Cyrus Eaton gave it their indorsement.

It is hoped that the House Labor Committee will find time to consider the measure soon.

The bill has been carefully drafted in such a way as to make Federal funds available as grants-in-aid for a labor extension service while retaining effective control of the program in the hands of the participating universities and the industrial workers desiring its benefits. That great numbers of workers need and want such a service has been abundantly demonstrated. In point of fact, some 79 colleges and universities are now carrying on some sort of labor education program—Wisconsin, Michigan, Bryn Mawr, Harvard and Yale among them. But these cannot, of course, begin to meet the demands of 42 million wage-earners. Under the Morse-Thomas bill, Federal funds would be made available only when a local labor group, having worked out with a local institution of learning a program approved by a State labor extension council, requested aid and when 25 per cent of the funds required were made available locally.

This program is not aimed in any sense at vocational training. Neither is it supposed to take the place of high school or regular college education. Its concern is with labor problems and industrial relations—with the responsibilities of workers as union members and citizens. It would equip labor to carry out its share of the collective bargaining process more effectively in its own interest and in the public interest. In doing this, it could serve greatly to promote more stable and peaceful relations between unions and managements.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP By Yomen

"And now—figure out a way of showing how higher steel prices help labor."

Senators O.K. Reorganization

Acceptance of the President's reorganization plan—which would place two important government agencies in the Department of Labor—has been recommended by the Senate Labor Committee.

Meanwhile, CIO Legislative Dir. Nathan Cowan, in a letter to Senators, urged they vote to approve the plan. It would place the U. S. Employment Service and the unemployment compensation agency in the Department.

The House has already voted to turn down the President's proposal. Under Congressional procedure, the plan will be put into effect unless both Senate and House vote its rejection.

Cowan's letter charged that killing of the reorganization plan is "first step in a program planned by big business groups to wreck government aid to labor."

The committee vote to approve transfer of the two agencies to the Labor Dept. was 8-4. It was an all Republican opposition: Sens. Taft (O.), Donnell (Mo.), Ives (N. Y.) and Jenner (Ind.). Five Democrats and three Republicans voted in favor.

Face Is Red But He Doesn't Care

ED STONE probably would crawl into a hole and pull the hole in after him if he could quit laughing long enough to promote a good disappearing act.

He's guilty of the "unpardonable sin" of the public relations business—gross understatement.

He didn't give his client the proper build-up. He sold his organization short.

He added some figures together and then came up with what looked like the right answer, but he was wrong. And he's got official government figures to prove his mistake!

STONE, caught in the trap of his own bookkeeping system, confessed his "sin" in a letter to the CIO News. He said:

"My face is red. And it's not from sunburn. I am blushing from abject mortification.

"Every profession has its code of ethics. A doctor has his Hippocratic oath. A lawyer swears never to violate the trust of a client. As a former newspaper man, I know that any reporter who reveals a source is banished to Coventry.

"And I also know that for a publicity man to fail to extol the virtues of his product as colossal, stupendous or anything short of the best is guilty of misfeasance, malfeasance or downright mugatory.

"And now I find myself, as public relations chief for the CIO's Southern organizing drive, guilty of understatement."

IT WAS at this point that Stone started building up what looked suspiciously like the usual alibi.

After all, no man—much less a publicist—likes to be caught with his statistics down.

And, then, it's a well known fact that most public relations men depend on researchers for the information on which they build their cases.

It would have been logical to assume that Stone would have tossed the blame right in the lap of the bookkeeping department or at least would have said something about a faulty adding machine.

But he stood right up and took it like a man.

WITHOUT looking for the customary loophole through which one can crawl to vindication, Stone stated his case:

"You will recall that my year-end (end of 1947) report proudly stated that we had won 604 elections as a result of the Southern Drive.

"I felt pretty good about the whole thing until the NLRB came out with its yearly report and revealed that we had won 692 elections as of that date."

Egad, said Stone. Where were those 88 elections which he hadn't listed?

Yep, it appeared that he sold his client short.

STONE, with gleeful frankness, said, "Of course I immediately started looking for an out—for an alibi.

"The best I can come up with is the fact that when we win an election in a firm with five or six branches, we list it as one victory while the NLRB credits us with five or six wins.

"This revelation vindicated the bookkeeping detail, but let us face it—I am still guilty of understatement.

"I repeat, my face is scarlet!"

Stone also mentioned, more or less casually, that the score is now 752 election victories for CIO and that a large number of unions were established at plants where NLRB elections were not held.

Broun Would Have a Word For Steel

ON THE staid financial pages of the New York Times, Edward H. Collins last week gave a nod to the late president of the CIO American Newspaper Guild, Heywood Broun.

Wrote Collins: It was the late Heywood Broun, if memory serves, who, after watching Harvard's immortal Charlie Brickley toss away a baseball game by his ineptness at the bat, turned in one of the classic sports-story "leads" of all time.

"When Charlie Brickley was born," wrote Broun, "a little fairy flew in the window and hovered over his crib. It waved a tiny wand and said: 'Charlie, you are going to grow up to be a fine football player.'

"THEN a second little fairy flew in, repeated the ceremony, and said: 'Charlie, you are going to be the greatest drop-kicker that ever lived.' But a third little fairy flew in, paused, waved its wand and said: 'Charlie, you're going to be a sucker for a curve ball!' "

This is not as irreverent or as irrelevant as it might perhaps seem at first glance. Were Broun writing today, instead of when he was, and were he writing on finance, instead of sports, it is easy to imagine him starting a column along these lines:

"When the American steel industry was born, a little fairy flew in the window and said: 'You are going to grow up to be the number one industry of the country.'

"THEN a second little fairy flew in, and it said: 'You are going to revolutionize the business of steel making. You are going to change the face of the nation and shift the balance of industrial power from the Old World to the New. And you are going to represent the difference between defeat and victory in two world-wide wars against the forces of totalitarianism.'

"BUT a third little fairy flew in the window, and it said: 'You are going to be a stumblebum when it comes to public relations!' "

Ole Miss Redeems Self

Mississippi's secret police force, set up in 1947 to smash an AFL bus strike, has been disbanded.

Gov. Fielding Wright (D.) secured repeal of the MBI law, claiming the emergency had passed. However, observers credited an article by A. J. Liebling, in the New Yorker Magazine, which had chided the nation's press for generally failing to note passage of the law.

Songs For Unions

A collection of 100 labor, folk and work songs complete with music that should be in every union hall and home where there is a piano or guitar has just been published under the title "The People's Song Book."

Old union favorites such as "Hold the Fort," "Solidarity," "We Shall Not Be Moved," and "Union Train" are in the volume together with many less widely known tunes and lyrics.

Any union audience would love "The Union Way" sung to the tune of "Little Brown Jug." The first verse and chorus goes:

My wife and I, we live alone
In a broken down shack that we call home.
But since my plant got organized,
We're living much more civilized.

CHORUS: Oh Ho Ho, you and me,
Union button, how I love thee;
Shorter hours and higher pay,
A better life the union way.

Or the one about Joe Hill:

I dreamed I saw Joe Hill last night,
Alive as you and me,
Says I, "But Joe, you're ten years dead,"
"I never died," says he.

"The copper bosses killed you, Joe,
"They shot you, Joe," says I.
"Takes more than guns to kill a man,"
Says Joe, "I didn't die."

And standing there as big as life,
And smiling with his eyes,
Joe says, "What they forgot to kill
Went on to organize."

The collection which combines for the first time, folk, labor and community songs in one volume, was edited and arranged by Marc Blitzstein, Earl Robinson, Harold Rome and other distinguished composers and musicologists. H. R.

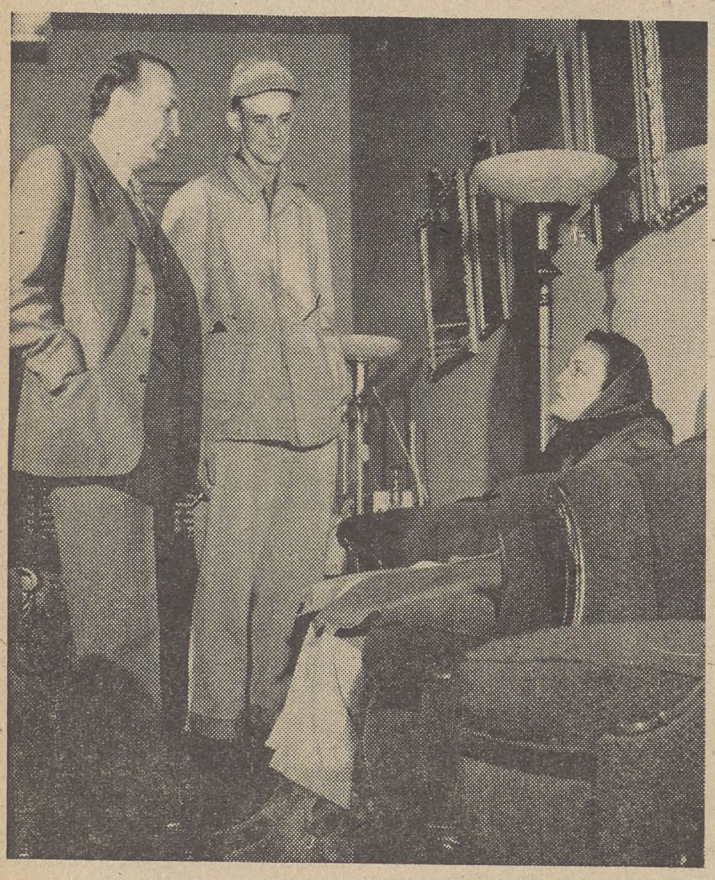
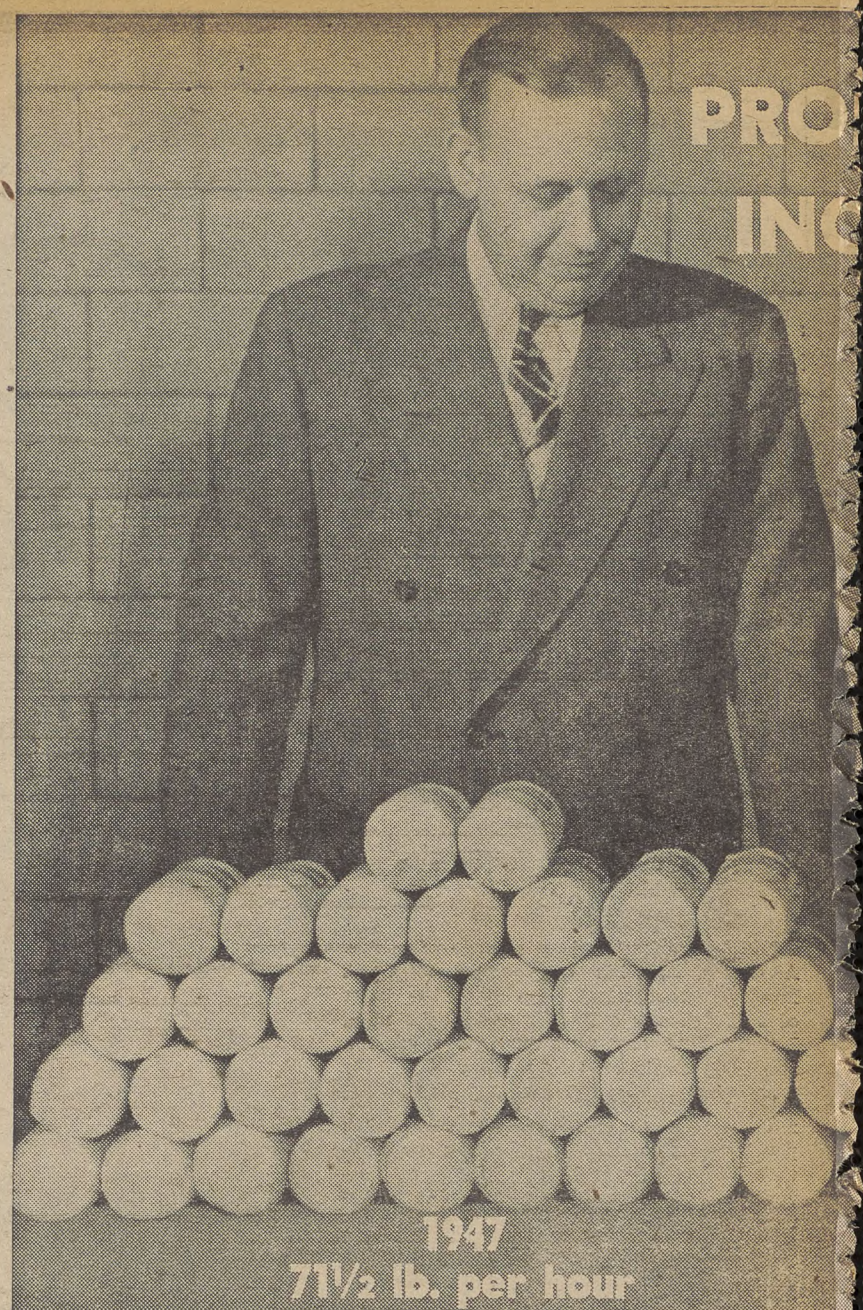
LABOR-MANAGEMENT: A meeting of union officials and management representatives is held at the Hormel plant. The subject is a grievance of an individual employe. This meeting, provided for in the contract, is the last court of resort on grievances. Agreements have always been reached. Frank W. Schutz (left), president of the local, heads the executive committee, members of which are in the picture. Robert F. Gray (right at head of table) is company executive vice president, in charge of Labor Relations.

EARLY IN, EARLY OUT: At the left is parking lot of the Hormel plant, crowded with workers' cars. More than 90% of the autos were bought after start of the wage plan. Purchase of other durable goods also has risen. At right, workers leave plant at end of day's stint. Under the Hormel-CIO plan, workers go home when work scheduled for day is completed—because 52 full pay checks a year are guaranteed.



AIDS BUSINESS: William Stephens (center) and his wife, who were married in January, are both Hormel employes. Since the annual wage permits long-term budgeting, they invested $1200 in household furnishings. William Wolf (left), owner of this furniture and clothing store, says plan has aided sale of better-grade goods.

FINERY: Ronna Clund, bacon packager, lives in one-room apartment, has fine wardrobe. She was able to buy fur coat, much needed in chilly Austin.



More Sausage: The Hormel guaranteed annual wage plan has incr production, as this cut plainly shows. Hormel Vice. Gray, left, shows the production average of pork sausage for 1947, in two-pound

GUARANTEED ANNU

THE CIO, at its convention last fall, indorsed the guaranteed annual wage as a goal which would ensure full employment.

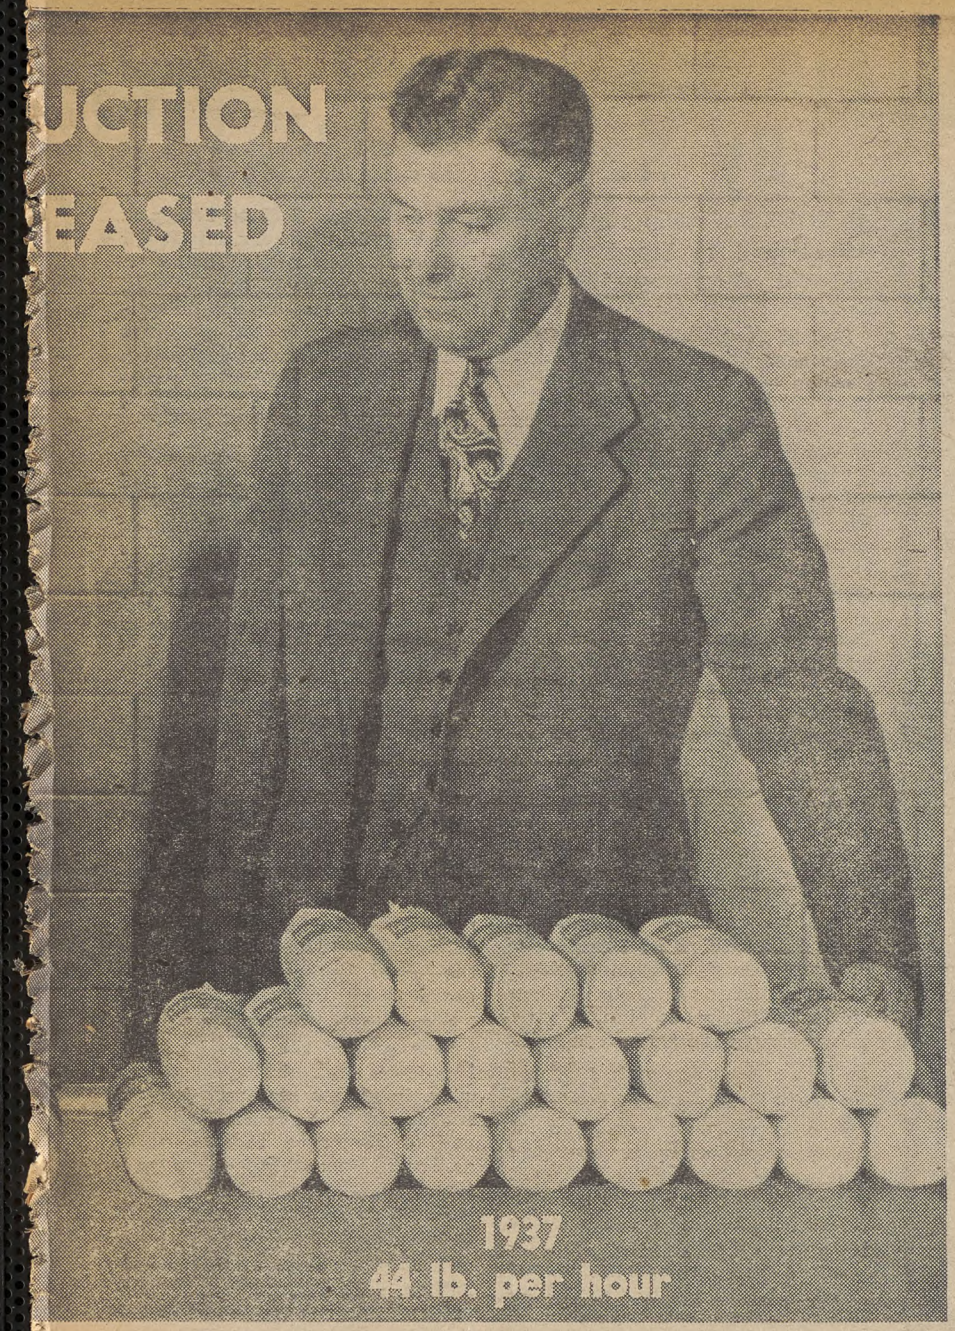
The plans in existence vary somewhat in their terms, but here is how the one at the Hormel packing firm at Austin, Minn., works:

Workers receive 52 pay checks a year. Each is based on a full number of hours per week at the standard rate for the employe's type of work, regardless of the number of hours worked.

Different departments have different numbers of hours per work week, ranging from 36 to 40. The hour-week is determined by dividing by 52 the estimated hours required for a given number of workers to do the depa entire ye

During stock rec work up hours in straight he gets tra hours annual slack se labor as week. W

GOOD HOUSING: There is no distinct "working class district" in A Hormel packinghouse workers have homes in pl residential sections. Here is a perfect example. At the left is the home own



To the right is packing division vice president C. A. Nockleby, who indicates what the production rate per man per hour was in 1937. Exactly the same production methods were used in the two years, Hormel says.

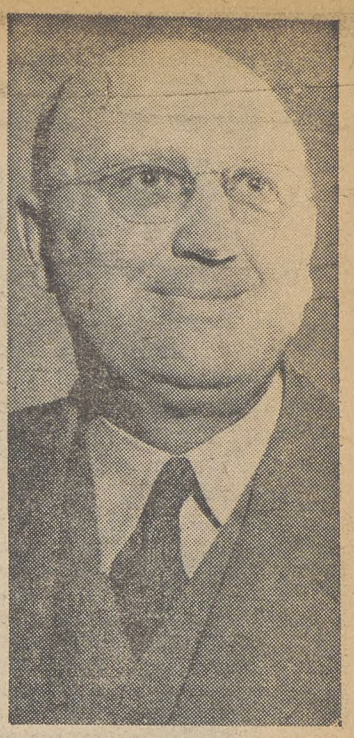
In the contract, the CIO Packinghouse Workers "agrees to maintain itself" as a collective bargaining agency "since the annual wage plan requires that the union be the bona fide agent of the workers. It is Jay Hormel's belief that unionization puts the plan on a much sounder basis.

There is an amazingly low rate of turnover among the employes of Hormel. And, the whole community benefits, as is evidenced by the fact that only 681 persons out of a population of 40,000 are unemployed in the Austin area.

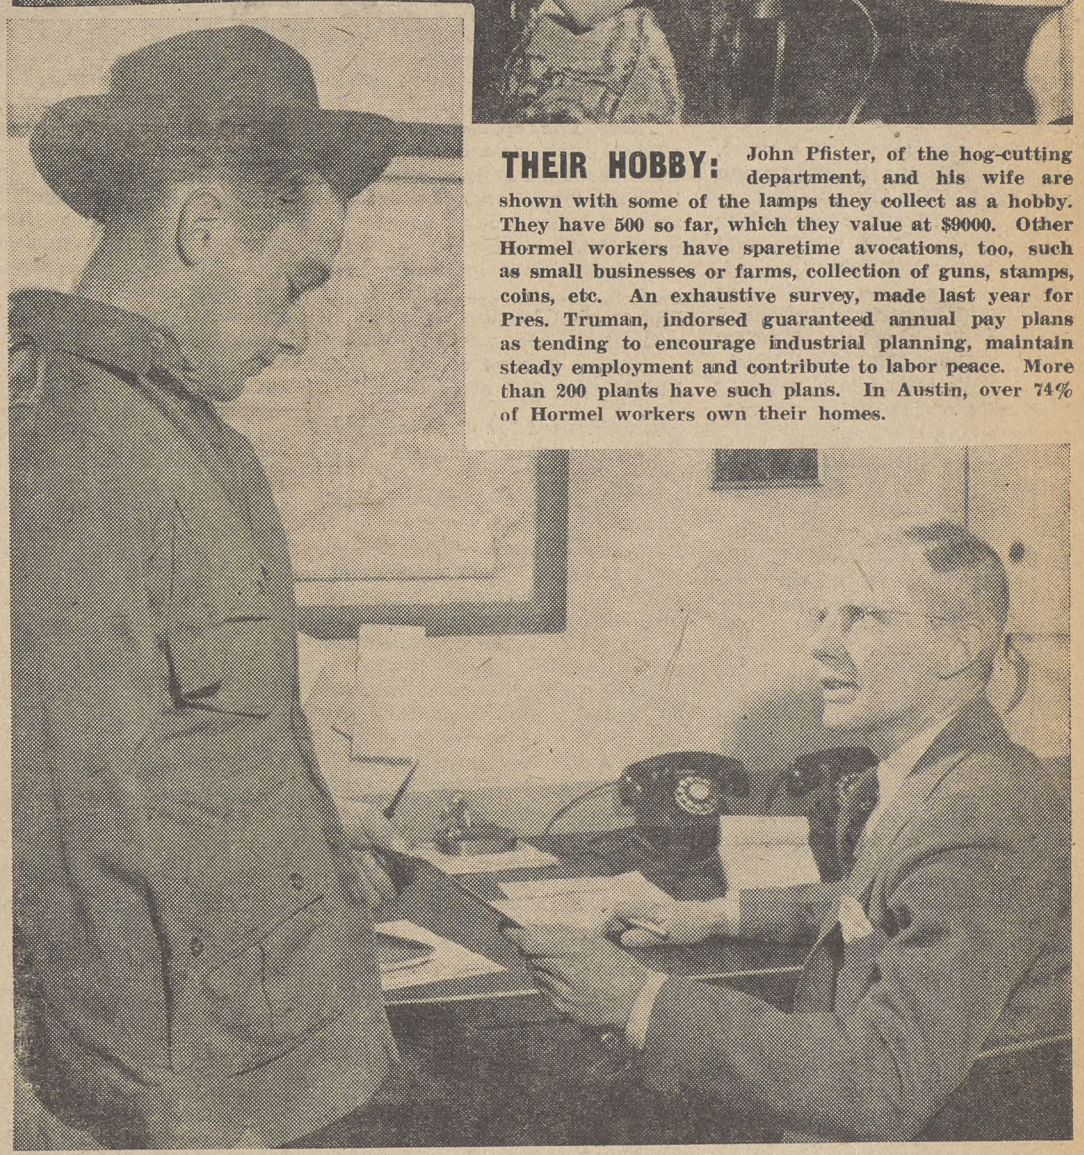
Hormel has more than 15 packinghouses in various parts of the country, all under wage plan. Another packing industry wage plan is in effect at Tobin Co., Fort Dodge, Iowa.

Archie Thorsheim of the Hormel beef-boning department. At right is the residence of Arthur Stevens, executive of the packing division. This is pretty much the picture throughout Austin.

UNION'S GHQ: Here is the office of Local 478. Though working conditions are good, local keeps a close eye on enforcement, plans ever for even better conditions. There have been no home foreclosures in Mower County (Austin) for 12 years—and tax delinquency is almost non-existent.



HAPPY: This smiling gent is Charles Wilkins, president of Austin's 1st Natl. Bank. Plan has been a boon to his institution.



THEIR HOBBY: John Pfister, of the hog-cutting department, and his wife are shown with some of the lamps they collect as a hobby. They have 500 so far, which they value at $9000. Other Hormel workers have sparetime avocations, too, such as small businesses or farms, collection of guns, stamps, coins, etc. An exhaustive survey, made last year for Pres. Truman, indorsed guaranteed annual pay plans as tending to encourage industrial planning, maintain steady employment and contribute to labor peace. More than 200 plants have such plans. In Austin, over 74% of Hormel workers own their homes.

THE 'EXTRA GANG': This is part of the basic wage plan operation. "Gang" members substitute for absentees and vacationists, serve as auxiliaries in specialized departments at peak seasons. They do not participate in the incentive pay plan. Instead, they get $6 weekly hour-bonus work on yearly basis as do the others. Here, a "gang" member receives his day's assignment from the employment manager. Hormel's annual report says: "Quality of workmanship is very good." Firm says its customers are in agreement on this.

UOPWA ADMINISTRATION AND CRITICS CLASH

By GLORIA CAPLAN

BOTH administration and anti-administration delegates shouted "We want Wallace" at the CIO Office & Professional Workers' 7th national convention in New York City last week.

The cheers were directed at two Wallaces, however.

DURKIN

Biggest ovation went to third party presidential candidate Henry Wallace, whose appearance as principal speaker at the four-day meeting forecast the delegates' personal endorsement of his candidacy on its last day.

It was Leo Wallace, delegate from Lynn, Mass., leader of a small opposition group, who elicited the cheers of the anti-administration delegates.

The third party head appeared in response to an invitation sent by the union to five presidential aspirants — Pres. Truman, Gov. Dewey, Sen. Taft, Harold Stassen and Gov. Warren. Wallace alone accepted the invitation, UOPWA Pres. James Durkin said, and only two others acknowledged the invitation.

THE appearance of an opposition group for the first time in the union's 10-year existence forced roll call votes on four issues: signing of T-H affidavits, support of the third party, the Marshall Plan and constitutional changes.

Preliminary to the test votes, all of which the administration won handily, the opposition group issued a press release announcing its existence. The release said the union was following the leadership "of such organizations as the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, the Furriers and the Farm Equipment Workers . . . We intend to change the leadership of our union no matter how long it takes."

Issuance of the statement, widely used by the press, prompted vehement attacks by both officers and delegates, who accused the dissidents of "consorting with the enemy." Subsequently the convention approved a proposal submitted by the Committee on the Officers' Report limiting contact with the press to regular union channels.

First roll call defeat suffered by the opposition occurred on the issue of filing non-Communist affidavits and financial statements. By a 10 to 1 vote, delegates decided not to fulfill these requirements for utilizing the NLRB.

OPPOSITION leaders stressed, however, that there was no variance of attitude toward the T-H Act itself. They subscribed to the resolution's description of the law as a "weapon handed to employers by the NAM and its representatives in Congress to lower the living standards of the American people; to destroy trade unions, the bulwark of democracy; to take away the civil rights first of trade unionists and then of all the American people."

Minority leader Leo Wallace said, "Refusal to sign affidavits will give insurance companies the opportunity they've been looking for to break the union when contracts expire this fall."

Those who opposed filing the affidavits felt, as a delegate from the Hazelton, Pa., local expressed it, that "you can only fight a measure when you're completely against it."

A resolution recommending support by the membership of Henry Wallace, but leaving the decision with the locals, was adopted by a roll call vote of 687.4 to 131.4. There were 21.5 abstentions.

ON the need for wage increases there was complete unanimity.

UOPWA is a "white collar" union. Its members are the traditionally underpaid clerical workers, social workers, mailing company employes, insurance agents, as well as the relatively better paid engineers, scientists and draftsmen.

Accompanying a 56% gain in its membership since the last convention two years ago were union-won salary increases totaling $25 million, the officers reported.

This year the goal will be increases of 25% or $15 a week, whichever is greater, plus a $1 hourly minimum wage law.

FOUR delegates, representing four of the union's divisions, aired their special problems to the CIO News.:

Edward J. Knoska, a Metropolitan insurance agent, Chicago, Ill.: Insurance agents are going to shoot for a $65 weekly minimum base pay plus a $15 increase when contracts expire in December. "Management used to say 'It's not the bum debit, but the bum on the debit,'" he said, and the union will be battling that attitude in its negotiations next December.

("Debit," in insurance language, means the agent's territory.)

Mary Kaem, accounting employe at 20th Century Fox, New York City: Mary's chief gripe is MGM, which she says has the worst salary schedule in the industry and usually sets the pattern. The union has been fighting practices by several movie companies which laid off many employes, then hired outside replacements. The Screen Guild has contracts with seven major companies in addition to a number of smaller firms.

Irene Hobbs, social worker, Los Angeles, Cal.: Chief obstacle to increases for social agency employes in Los Angeles, Irene says, is the "Community Chest wage freeze." A pattern of salary scales drawn up by the Community Chest and affecting all agencies except the Federated Jewish Charities has hampered wage rises, she says. The union will seek a $45 minimum for clerical employes and a $65 minimum for professionals.

Helen Bochenek, clerical employe, Federal Telephone & Radio Corp., Clifton, N. J.: Helen accuses the company, now in negotiations with the union, of stalling since it is allotting only one day a week over a two-month period to wage talks. The union is seeking a $15 weekly increase for its 1150 members there.

WHITE COLLAR BLUES: Harriet Singerman, clerical employe in a New York City social agency, contemplates the CIO Office & Professional workers economic brief between convention sessions. The report reminds that prices have gone up faster than wages, and Harriet can testify to that. In the past two years, her salary has increased 20%, while prices in the period rose 25%.

Durkin Re-elected; 11 Added To Board

Pres. James H. Durkin was reelected international president of the CIO Office & Professional workers. He was first named to that post in June 1947 by the Executive Board to replace Lewis Merrill, who resigned.

John J. Stanley was re-elected secretary-treasurer and Leon W. Berney, Lewis Alan Berne and Joseph H. Levy were returned as vice presidents. The executive board was increased from 31 to 42 members.

CIO Hits Editorial Airing By Radio Stations

SHOULD a radio station be allowed to broadcast its editorial views over the airwaves?

Should it be allowed to urge enactment of anti-labor legislation or of good housing legislation; to call for the election of a bad Republican as President or of a good Democrat for Congress?

The CIO last week said "no" to questions like these. At hearings before the Federal Communications Commission, Asst. Publicity Director Henry C. Fleisher testified that there's a fundamental difference between newspapers and radio broadcasters. He said radio stations should present facts and ideas but not express an opinion.

Heads of three big networks—CBS, NBC and ABC—together with spokesmen for some independent stations, argued for the right to editorialize. Taking the opposite position were a number of labor groups, liberal organizations and civil rights associations.

The hearings were called by the FCC to review its "Mayflower decision," handed down in 1941. That decision has helped keep station editorial opinion off the air—although it hasn't been 100% effective.

ABOUT two years ago, the powerful Natl. Association of Broadcasters began to beat the drums for a reversal of FCC policy. Supporters of the non-editorial position have charged the broadcasters with being less interested in presenting editorial broadcasts than in shaking off all possible government regulation of their highly profitable industry (you can buy an hour program over ABC from 8:00 to 9:00 p.m. each Sunday night for a year for just under two million dollars).

Fleisher, representing the CIO, told the commission that if it reversed its stand, "the country would be deluged constantly with radio editorials expressing essentially a single viewpoint—that of large corporations.

"We fear that the opportunity available to other community groups for replying to this type of editorial expression would be neither effective nor at all times possible.

"We fear that because of the large holdings of radio stations by newspapers, many communities in the country would find their channels of communication of thought controlled even more tightly than at present by a single publisher-radio broadcaster, or by a small group of people associated with such a corporation."

RECITING a long series of difficulties encountered by unions when they have sought to get radio time, the CIO official said unions have "become skeptical of the good intentions of many broadcasters in connection with public service programs."

Demand for the repeal of the Mayflower decision, he added, has come in all too many cases from stations which have not made full use of programs to give their audience "something more profound to chew upon than chewing-gum commercials, soap operas or whodunits."

"The proprietors of this multi-million dollar industry have developed, quite naturally, the thought patterns of other big businessmen," Fleisher said. "Radio stations have demonstrated that they are in business to make money. Their editorial positions cannot be expected to stray far from that principal interest."

Because the number of stations which can be licensed is fixed by the width of the broadcast band, not everybody who wants to own a station — or who can afford to start one—is able to do so.

If radio must "be limited to the expression of certain viewpoints," Fleisher said, "it is clearly preferable that no viewpoints be presented at all—but merely the basis for people to establish their own ideas after full consideration of all the facts."

THE radio network heads argued that there is no longer any "scarcity of stations"—about 2,000 regular broadcasters have been licensed, plus FM and television stations. They pleaded "freedom of speech" and promised up and down that they'd allow "both sides" to air their thoughts.

But a major portion of their testimony was criticism of government regulation of the airwaves, which they claimed was censorship.

"The American public today has precious little control over broadcasting policies," Fleisher told the FCC. "To sacrifice even the modest powers at hand appears to us to be shortsighted and unwise."

"OF course, to me the all-together supremely important thing in this campaign is peace," Henry Wallace told the convention.

He named several domestic steps which he considers necessary to peace:

- Freedom of speech without fear of losing jobs.
- Stoppage of inflation.
- Freedom of labor to engage in collective bargaining without fear of injunctions.

IN support of his contention that "We are in serious danger of becoming a police state if this kind of thing continues," he cited several instances of professional friends of his whose jobs or citizenship were jeopardized by knowing or supporting Wallace.

The game, he warned, "is to create fear in all of you . . . So that you don't dare speak out . . . so we will willingly serve without asking questions of our betters."

Wallace said he had been asked many times his price for returning to the Democratic party. He would do so, he said, as soon as the party opposes Universal Military Training, lends money to needy countries through the UN on the basis of Nazi devastation and need, repudiates the "Truman Doctrine," and fires about seven-eighths of the "Wall Street men and military men."

Rename U. S. Transport For Nisei GI Hero

The renaming ceremony for the U. S. Army transport, Wilson Victory, in honor of Pfc. Sadao S. Munemori, lone Japanese American holder of the Congressional Medal of Honor, was held at the Brooklyn Army Base last week. The ship was redesignated the Pvt. Sadao S. Munemori.

Vets Put GOP Over Barrel On Housing

By FRED ROSS

REP. Jesse P. Wolcott (R., Mich.) had a headache one afternoon last week.

Two big delegations from the 1500-man National Veterans Housing Conference had been in his office to ask why the House Banking Committee which he heads has been sitting on the Taft-Wagner-Ellender Housing Bill for two years.

Wolcott's secretary, Isabel H. Niehaus, told both delegations that Wolcott was not in.

Later arrangements were made for Wolcott to see several leaders of the conference, but not until they had called on Brazilla Carroll Reece, national chairman of the Republican National Committee.

"My boss needs an aspirin," Wolcott's secretary said to the waiting veterans as she took a glass of water and the tablets into his inner office.

The committee reported in the conference later that Wolcott's headache did not prevent him from saying:

"I told Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. (one of the conference sponsors), to keep his shirt on because some housing legislation would be enacted. When the T-E-W bill passes the Senate, we'll begin holding hearings."

(Roosevelt later replied he had "worn lots of shirts off his back fighting for the T-E-W bill," but he will continue to fight for the measure.)

"I'm not definitely for, not definitely against the bill," Wolcott was reported as saying. "If Taft (Sen. Robert A. Taft, R., O.) will take action and push it through the Senate, the House Committee will hold hearings within a reasonable time. I'm not making any commitments on the bill.

"Have you talked to Taft? I understood that he was going to separate the public housing feature from the rest of the bill . . ." (The bill has been approved by the Senate Banking Committee.)

IF Taft had any such intention, he did not tell the conference when he addressed it several hours earlier. Both Taft and Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D., La.) told the conference that if the bill of Sen. McCarthy (R., Wis.) gets to the floor instead of theirs they will try to amend it and include public housing.

Before the conference opened, McCarthy was urged by 28 national organizations including the AVC, CIO and AFL to include public housing in his bill.

It is because of the accumulated housing headaches of veterans that 1500 of them came to Washington. They represented more than half dozen veterans organizations, the American Veterans Committee, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled American Veterans, the Catholic War Veterans, the Jewish War Veterans and other smaller groups.

The American Legion was not represented officially. Nor was the American Veterans of World War II. The Legion had voted against supporting the T-E-W bill, and AMVETS had taken no stand on the legislation.

REP. JESSE P. WOLCOTT
Indifferent to T-E-W

The idea of the conference was born at the AVC convention last year when it was resolved that such a meeting should be held. The sponsors, in addition to Roosevelt, who represented AVC, were: Rep. Jacob K. Javits (R., N.Y.), JWV; Rep. John F. Kennedy (D., Mass.), VFW; William E. Greener, Jr., AMVETS; Paul R. McCauley, American Legion; Audie Murphy, DAV; Robert F. Wagner, Jr., CWV, son of Sen. Wagner (D.- N. Y.), one of the sponsors of the T-E-W bill.

DELEGATES to the conference did three big things:

- They obtained promises from 65 representatives that they would sign Discharge Petition No. 6. Fifty-two names were on the petition when the conference met. One hundred and one more signatures are needed to get the necessary 218 which would require the House Banking & Currency Committee to let the House act on the T-E-W bill.
- They served notice on the politicians that they are not going to be fooled by a lot of double talk about wanting to do all they can for veterans, but not being for the T-E-W bill.
- They established a permanent organization to carry on the fight for the bill.

A COMMITTEE of top leaders reported that Reece said:

"I am not disturbed by the public housing features of the T-E-W bill. The bill does not interfere with private enterprise.

"I have not made sufficient study of the details of the bill and cannot urge Congressmen one way or another to sign the discharge petition . . ."

Sen. J. Howard McGrath, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, was reported by the committee as saying: ". . . You know where I stand."

NOBODY kidded the veterans about some other housing bill being just as good as the T-E-W bill. They put McCarthy through a sharp inquisition after he said that the T-E-W bill was a 1946 measure and what they needed was a 1948 model bill such as his.

After he was forced to admit in so many words that he was opposed to the public housing section of the T-E-W bill, he said that if his bill gets to the floor instead of the T-E-W bill he would try to amend it to include public housing, but he would nonetheless fight public housing.

Senators and Congressmen friendly to the T-E-W bill were roundly applauded, particularly Sen. Tobey (R., N. H.), chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, which has approved the T-E-W bill. They rose to their feet and applauded as he said:

"Don't be misled by men in public life down here with substitute legislation. There is more to this question than getting the vote at election time. The little people can't be helped by lobbies."

Tobey was apparently referring to McCarthy, who through a parliamentary maneuver in committee had kept Tobey from being chairman of the Joint Housing Committee, which brought out the report on which the McCarthy bill will be based.

Sen. Wagner, a member of the committee, who conducted a survey on slum clearance by sending questionnaires to 500 persons including the governors of all states, the mayors of all cities of 50,000 population or more, and prominent citizens, reported:

"Sixty-nine per cent of those who replied felt that the formula under the T-E-W bill, under which the Federal government would supply two-thirds of the write-down costs, with the balance assumed by the locality was adequate and equitable. A majority of those who disagreed felt that federal participation should be even higher. The lack of results achieved so far under redevelopment laws enacted in several states has been due to the fact that State funds are unavailable or insufficient."

Walter P. Reuther, president of the Auto Workers and chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, replied to the questionnaire:

"Our experience demonstrates that the need of this type of the broad housing legislation (the T-E-W bill) is more urgent and evident now than when the bill was first introduced."

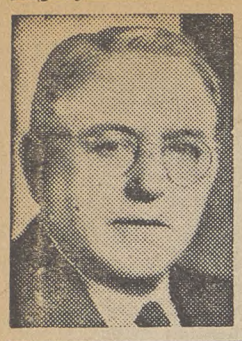
Our Cities' Shame

U. S. Mayors, in reply to a questionnaire from Sen. Wagner, estimated the number of families living in slums or substandard housing as follows:

Los Angeles, 58,400; San Francisco, 38,678; Waterbury, Conn., 4,000; Jacksonville, Fla., 17,000; Atlanta, 40,000; Chicago, 100,000; Peoria, Ill., 4,500; Louisville, 25,000; New Orleans, 50,000; Baltimore, 50,000; Boston, 45,000; Fall River, Mass., 6,200; Detroit, 68,000; Saginaw, Mich., 9,000; Minneapolis, 11,000; Kansas City, 42,000; Omaha, 10,000; Camden, N. J., 11,864 (of which 3,919 are unfit for habitation); Newark, 38,423; New York, 450,000; Utica, N. Y., 2,500; Fargo, N. D., 200; Cincinnati, 75,000; Cleveland, 25,000; Bethlehem, Pa., 4,400; Philadelphia, 83,703; Providence, R. I., 12,000; Charleston, S. C., 6,200; Memphis, Tenn., 45,000; Dallas, Texas, 33,369; Fort Worth, Texas, 22,583; Charleston, W. Va., 8,000; Madison, Wis., 600.

VET DELEGATES: These delegates to the National Veterans Housing Conference were on their way to call on Rep. Wolcott, chairman of the House Banking Committee, which has been sitting on the T-E-W housing bill two years and has not even scheduled hearings. Wolcott was not in, but he told conference leaders later that he "was neither for, not against the bill." The committee is the bottleneck halting House action on the measure. The Senate Banking Committee has given it the green light. Delegates pictured here are not only from Wolcott's home state of Michigan, but also from Illinois, Missouri and New York. All delegates resolved to continue the fight on their return home by telling their Congressmen the merits of T-E-W.

WOMEN INTERESTED: These women delegates to the National Veterans Housing Conference were waiting in front of the Capitol to join their state delegations when they called on Congressmen. They are, l. to r., Miss Shirley Barnett, Miami Beach, Fla., AVC, and former WAVE; Miss Rosalyn Gutman, Chicago, AVC, former WAVE; Miss Nellie Kaminsky, New York City, AVC Auxiliary; Mrs. Anne Phillips, New York City, AVC Auxiliary; Mrs. Shirley Plaat, New York City, AVC Auxiliary; Susan Braver and her mother, Mrs. Ruth C. Braver, Chicago, AVC Auxiliary.



ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

The Telephone Workers Organizing Committee-CIO came through again. Members of the United Telephone Employes of Oregon have voted in a referendum for CIO affiliation. Credit must be given Stanley Earl, chairman of the Ore. TWOC; Ruth Wiencek and June McDonald of TWOC national staff; Dan Harris and E. W. Nitcher of ACEW; Len Loring on loan from CIO Textile Workers, and others.

In Northern California and Nevada, the United Brotherhood of Telephone Workers led by Frank Murphy and associates recently came through with a smashing victory for affiliation with TWOC.

Brother Charles L. Cowl has been named CIO Regional Director for the State of Florida. He is a member of the United Steelworkers, and has served the movement with credit. For the past months he has been engaged in the Southern Organizing Campaign in that State.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone, New Haven, Conn., advises that the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union won a State Labor Board election in the Drug Store Division, Apothecaries Hall Co., in New Haven, the vote being CIO 20, no union 1. He also advises that the CIO Textile Workers, Local 109, won a union shop election, 83 voting yes, none against, out of 88 eligible to vote.

Reg. Dir. James J. Leary, Kansas City, Mo., reports that the UAW-CIO won an election at the Federal Cash Register Co. John E. Rinkenbaugh was in charge. The results were UAW-CIO 67, no union 11, challenged ballots 5.

Acting Reg. Dir. Gilbert E. Lewis, Wilmington, Del., advises that the NLRB conducted an election among the employes of the Wilmington Paper Box Co. With 14 voters eligible, the result was 12 for the United Paperworkers and 2 against. Lewis was assisted by Gene Derrickson, Field Representative.

Reg. Dir. Frank Carmichael, Boston, Mass., reports an election at Roxbury, Mass., among the employes of New England Tea Packing Co. Of the 25 employes in the unit, 16 voted for UPA-CIO, 3 against. Rep. Lewis Hartford conducted the election.

Dir. of Org. Thomas Andert, Optical & Instrument Workers, St. Louis, Mo., reports that in a union shop election among the employes of Bay State Optical Co., Attleboro, Mass., the union shop received 207 votes. Twenty votes were cast against the union shop and six votes were challenged. Organizer Joseph Duggan was in charge.

Dir. of Org. George Brown, Portland, Ore., reports 15 voted for a union shop and none against at the Rose Lumber Co., Springfield, Mass.

Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler, Los Angeles, Calif., sent word of victories in the following union shop elections: Worth Brothers, CIO Textile Workers 103, against 5; Sani-Mode Mfg. Co., CIO Textile Workers 30, against 3; challenged 2. Intl. Rep. Harry Stillman of TWUA-CIO was in charge.

Thomas G. Evans, Ohio Representative, Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers Union, CIO, reports the signing of an agreement covering the 75 production and maintenance employes of the Max Wocher & Son Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

The agreement includes provisions for maintenance of membership if and when the union applies for and wins a Union Security election, one week's vacation for one year's service, two weeks' vacation for two years' service, and wage increases of from 20c to 30c per hour. The contract was negotiated by Local 258's Negotiating Committee consisting of August Schroeder, Cliff Rinehart, Dempsey Britton and Carl Labermier, assisted by Evans.

CIO State Director William Smith, Charlotte, N. C., announces that the CIO Organizing Committee of North Carolina won 80 elections and signed 35,000 new members since the organizing drive started in that state 20 months ago.

Tobacco manufacturing and processing plants head the list of companies where the CIO is bargaining representative for the workers. Important gains have been made recently in lumber and woodworking mills and wholesale and retail establishments. The Safie textile manufacturing company in Rockingham, with 1005 eligible voters, was the largest mill in which the CIO won an election. In two elections, the CIO received a 100% vote.

Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst, St. Louis, Mo., reports that the Shoeworkers won a NLRB election at International Shoe Plant, St. Louis, 53 to 29. Reps. Long and Darmann were in charge, assisted by Dave Wilson.

Latin Labor To Hear ERP Aims

CIO's support of the Marshall Plan will be explained to the convention of the Latin-American Federation of Labor (CTAL) at Mexico City March 22.

The CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee — headed by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of Amalgamated Clothing—said the committee had instructed its observer at the CTAL meeting to emphasize ERP. CIO will be represented by Pres. O. A. Knight, Oil Workers.

Potofsky said, after a meeting in New York, that the CIO Latin-American group is anxious to prove to Latin American union representatives attending the Mexico City confab that ERP is "not a creature of Wall St."

The committee also announced it had sent David McDonald, secretary-treasurer of Steelworkers, to "study the much confused labor situation in Cuba."

The committee condemned the murder last December of Jesus Menendez, head of the Cuban Sugar Workers Union. The statement said that his murder at the hands of Cuban army officers has had "the most profound repercussions in the hearts of laboring men and women everywhere."

UAW Gives GM Opening Note

The CIO Auto Workers have formally notified General Motors that the union wants to change its agreement with GM, due to expire April 28. The move was approved by the National UAW GM conference.

The conference also approved a series of non-economic demands for contract changes, including the union shop, check-off, improved grievance machinery and other general subjects.

Wage demands, outlined and approved at an earlier conference held in January, call for a 25c an hour increase of which up to 10c an hour may be allocated for establishment of an old age retirement plan; 5c an hour for a comprehensive insurance coverage; equalization of rates by job classification on a corporation-wide basis, a guaranteed 40-hour work week and other provisions.

The union's letter to GM, signed by UAW Vice-Pres. John W. Livingston, and T. A. Johnstone, asst. director of the GM Dept. asked that negotiations be arranged immediately. Under the terms of the agreement they must start within 10 days after notice is served.

Moon Takes Post On NAACP Staff

The Natl. Association for the Advancement of the Colored People has announced the appointment of Henry Lee Moon as director of public relations.

Moon, author of the forthcoming book, "Balance of Power, the Negro Vote," was for four years assistant to the director of PAC, serving both under Sidney Hillman and Jack Kroll. Before that he was regional racial relations adviser with the Federal Public Housing Authority.

Moon is a graduate of Howard and Ohio State universities. He has 20 years of newspaper and public relations experience. Papers for which he worked included the Cleveland Call, the Cleveland Herald, the Amsterdam News and the Chicago Defender. He has contributed to the New York Times and Post, the Crisis, the New Republic, Opportunity, Phylon, the Nation, Survey Graphic and the London Tribune.

CIO Asks Changes In Rent Curb Bill

The CIO legislative committee has recommended some changes in the rent control bill passed by the Senate and now before the House Banking Committee's subcommittee on rents.

The amendments would:

Empower the Justice Dept. to bring criminal prosecution against willful violators named by the Housing Expediter.

Empower the Expediter to bring damage actions where overcharged tenants fail to initiate such action or settle their claims within thirty days.

Recontrol non-transient rooms in hotels predominantly occupied by non-transient tenants.

Continue control over furnished rooms in private homes.

Strengthen eviction controls.

Seek To Avert Meat Strike

Federal Conciliators are busy trying to settle a threatened strike of 100,000 workers in the meat packing industry. The CIO Packinghouse Workers has scheduled a walkout for Mar. 16 to back up demands for a wage increase.

The union's initial demand was for a 29-cent hourly increase to bring wages in the packing industry up to the standard set by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, which maintains that a wage of $1.39 an hour is the minimum needed for a family of three.

An offer of nine cents an hour made by the major packers was turned down as "unrealistic."

Ralph Helstein, union president, pointed out that two-thirds of packinghouse workers earn less than $1.10 an hour. Present minimum rate in the industry, he said, is $1.02 an hour in large cities, with lower rates paid in the South and smaller communities.

Packing concerns involved are the "big four"—Armour, Swift, Cudahy and Wilson—Morrell & Co., and a number of "independent" firms.

Labor Fights Canadian T-H

CANADIAN labor is trying to avoid anything like a Taft-Hartley law in the labor bill expected to come before the current session of Parliament.

Under the terms of a draft National Labor Code proposed by the Canadian Congress of Labor, a union which can show a majority would be certified automatically by the Labor Board without a vote.

The draft code outlaws company unions, provides explicitly for the check-off and union security, and protects unions against court actions of any kind, except as specifically provided in the bill itself.

It forbids use of labor spies and threats to shut down or move a plant during a strike, and forbids interference in the choice of a bargaining agent, failure or refusal to bargain collectively in good faith.

A government bargaining bill introduced at the 1947 session but not passed when the session ended, was called inadequate by the CLC at that time. A similar government bill is scheduled to come before the present session but so far only preliminary steps have been taken, although Parliament has been in session since December.

The CLC's proposed labor code have been sent to all members of Congress and will be placed formally before the government later in the current session.

House Again Hits At News Carriers

It takes more than a Presidential veto to stop the 80th Congress.

By unanimous voice vote, the House last week passed a bill of Rep. Gearhart (R., Cal.) to rob newspaper and magazine carriers of social security coverage. The bill has been strongly supported by big publishers.

A similar bill passed by both branches of Congress was killed last year by Pres. Truman's "pocket veto."

HOUSE UNIT APPROVES ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

THE score was 2-1 in favor of civil rights on Capitol Hill last week.

● The House Judiciary Committee approved federal anti-lynching legislation by an 18-8 vote. Prospects are that the bill may come up for a vote in the next few weeks.

● The Senate Labor Committee, following up action taken last year, called for passage of anti-bias legislation. The committee pointed out that the U. S., by accepting the United Nations Charter, had pledged itself to respect human freedoms regardless of race, sex, language or religion.

The opposition scored when Rep. J. Parnell Thomas's House Un-American Activities Committee launched a bitter attack on a leading government scientist. The charges, against Director Condon of the Natl. Bureau of Standards, rested heavily on quotations from a letter signed by J. Edgar Hoover of the FBI.

Thomas neglected to quote another sentence from the letter clearing Condon of any charges of disloyalty.

THE scientist was backed up by Sec. of Commerce W. Averill Harriman, who refused to turn over confidential personnel files to the Thomas Committee. Dr. Condon called for the Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy to intervene, and said "the whole scientific life of the nation is involved" in the Thomas Committee's headline-hunting expedition.

The Un-American Committee's technique of making sensational charges without much supporting evidence was denounced by editorial writers, columnists, scientists and government officials.

Favorable action on anti-lynching in the House Committee and the call for a vote on FEPC legislation gave new strength to predictions that the Republican leadership would push through some civil rights action before Congress adjourns.

The anti-lynching bill — introduced by Rep. Clifford Case (R. N.J.)—provides for fines up to $10,000 and jail sentences to 20 years for persons convicted of organizing, inciting, participating in or helping a lynch mob. Case said he expected the powerful House Rules Committee to give the bill a favorable spot on the House calendar.

"Equality of economic opportunity" was cited by Senate Labor Committee majority members as the purpose of the FEPC bill, which was approved 7-5 by the group about a month ago.

It said the bill was designed to "close the gap between our professions and practices of democracy."

Possibility of action on the anti-lynching bill, the anti-bias bill and the anti-polltax bill had stirred up a high degree of sound and fury among Southern Democrats in Congress.

WHILE the southern Senators and Congressmen—most of them from poll-tax states—talked angrily of bolting the Democratic party, Washington observers looked for a political spot into which they could jump and could find none.

Newsy News About Newsdom: A Non-Professional Profession

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE guy who's writing this story is happy to find that the Natl. Labor Relations Board thinks newspapermen aren't professionals.

For years, it's been a racket with newspaper publishers—those staunch defenders of the free press—to declare newspapermen are professionals. Not in the paycheck, natch, but in the work they do. Journalists, you know. Because of the CIO Newspaper Guild, the wishful thinking never got anywhere.

Well, along came the Taft-Hartley Law. That law, in Section 2 (12), says:

The term professional employe means:
"(a) Any employe in work (1) predominantly intellectual and varied in character as opposed to routine mental, manual, mechanical or physical work; (2) involving the consistent exercise of discretion and judgment in its performance; (3) of such a character that the output produced or the result accomplished cannot be standardized in relation to a given period of time; (4) requiring knowledge of an advanced type in a field of science or learning customarily acquired by a prolonged course of specialized intellectual instruction and study in an institution of higher learning or a hospital, as distinguished from a general academic education or from an apprenticeship or from training in the performance of routine mental, manual or physical processes; or

"(b) Any employe, who (1) has completed the course of specialized intellectual instruction and study described in clause (4) of paragraph (a) and (2) is performing related work under the supervision of a professional person to qualify himself to become a professional employe as defined in paragraph (a)."

Why does T-H go so far to define a "professional?" Well Section 9 (b) (1) of the act saith:

"That the board shall not . . . decide that any unit is appropriate for such purposes (collective bargaining) if such unit includes both professional employes and employes who are not professional employes unless a majority of such professional employes vote for inclusion in such unit."

UP IN Hoboken, N. J., there's a daily rag (that's journalese; an affectionate name for a newspaper) called the Jersey Observer. It is presidented by a character named F. A. Seide.

Last year, his ungrateful employes committed the heinous sin of joining the Guild and asking that he bargain for a contract. In an attempt to delay that bargaining and to louse up the Guild, Seide and his labor advisers looked around for a straw to grasp. The "professional" sections of T-H looked just like that straw.

So, the Observer (daily circulation about 48,000) grabbed.

When the Guild asked for recognition; Mr. Observer said, "Oh, no, we haveta have an NLRB election." When the Guild tried to expedite that, Mr. Observer said, "We have a lot of professionals, they gotta be handled under Section 2 and 9." When asked which employes he meant, the company listed these:

Advisory editor, telegraph editor, North Hudson-Hoboken-Bergen county editor, Jersey City editor, night editor, sports editor, Jersey City City Hall reporter, courthouse reporter, Union City editor, Chancery Court editor, Hoboken City Hall reporter, Secaucus reporter, Cliffside Park-Edgewater - Fairview reporter, assistant sports editor, legislative correspondent and columnist, North Bergen reporter, Weehawken reporter, Hackensack Courthouse reporter, West Newark reporter, Union City night reporter, Lyndhurst-Rutherfod-East Rutherford - Carlstadt reporter, and two rewrite men.

(We can imagine the Secaucus reporter describing a "raucus Secaucus caucus" and the Weehawken reporter writing about a "Weehawken walkie talkie."

(None of those jobs—nor any the Observer claimed—has any hiring or firing authority; the title is just for identification purposes. But when you see the title editor—just plain editor—that's the guy who can speak with authority. He's it.)

On a paper the size of the Observer, those "professionals" would probably constitute a majority of the staff. (Comparable jobs are invariably covered by the Guild.)

THE NLRB held a hearing last summer. Time dragged on and on and on. Finally, last week, came down a ruling from the NLRB (unanimously approved by Chm. Herzog and members Reynolds, Murdock and Gray with Houston absent). The ruling said:

"The evidence indicates that all the reporters in the editorial department perform substantially the same type of work and are subject to the same overall departmental supervision.

"All receive weekly salaries; all regular employes work a 40-hour week. Although judgment and discretion are involved to a greater or lesser degree, much of the employer's coverage consists of routine news items and, in other stories, the individual reporter governs himself according to the known policies of the employer. None of the employes are required to have a license or to undergo specialized training in a school of higher learning.

"We are of the opinion that the employes asserted by the employer to be professional employes are not professional employes."

So.

(Nothing in the ruling or in this article is to be taken to mean that newspapermen are not "predominantly intellectual." Quite the contrary, all newspapermen are predominantly intellectual. Quite.)

STRIKERS AID PAC: Members of the AFL Typographical Union, on strike since November 24 against all Chicago newspapers, know that the picket line must be backed up by political action. Here, Elmer Pierce, (left), ITU striker, beams after handing $251, contributed voluntarily by fellow strikers, to Michael Mann (right), CIO Regional Director. In between them is Walter P. Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers. The scene was taken at a Chicago rally. Among contributors were ITU Intl. Pres. Woodruff Randolph and Pres. John Pilch, Chicago ITU Local 16. More news about this presentation and rally on Page 2. The Chicago Council has already enrolled 1054 block workers, has a minimum goal of 8000.

Chicago Block Workers:

INSPIRED BY STRIKING PRINTERS' DONATION

IT'S the talk of the Loop.

It's a senation back of the yards.

It has the Gold Coast worried.

It's taken the wind out of Windy City.

What is it? It's the Chicago PAC's block worker drive.

On a recent evening, more than 700 block workers jam-packed a meeting whose purpose was the first city-wide mass mobilization of CIO men and women who will work the precincts between now and election day.

The meeting was a prelude to other meetings of a similar nature. The workers came from all international unions and live in all sections of the city.

The chairman of the meeting was CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann, who is also director of the Chicago PAC, an arm of the Chicago Industrial Union Council. The featured speaker was CIO Auto Workers' Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who is also a member of the National PAC Board.

The council has already enlisted 1054 block workers. A minimum goal of 800 workers was announced by Mann at the meeting. "We'll cover every block and precinct in this town not with one worker, but with two or more," Mann asserted.

The most dramatic highlight of the rally was the entrance of a delegation of AFL printers, members of the Chicago Typographical Local 16, on strike against the Chicago newspapers.

The CIO Regional Office has been made available to the AFL strikers since they hit the sidewalks in their fight against the Taft-Hartley Law.

As soon as the typos entered the door, every man and woman in the room sprang to their feet, applauding and cheering the strikers, who had come directly from the picket lines with their strike signs on their backs.

When the ovation had died down and the strikers were seated in their places of honor in front of the platform, one of their spokesmen, Elmer Pierce, a striker from the Chicago Sun-Times asked if he might speak. As he stood before the microphone, a hushed silence fell over the audience. In simple words packed with human emotion, he stated:

"We strikers know that you, like us, are fighting against the vicious T-H Law which aims to destroy our unions. What you are doing in political action we are now doing on the sidewalks. We felt that we must do everything possible to win this fight against the law and we are now donating to the CIO the sum of $251 to be used by your PAC—every dollar of which came out of the pockets of the striking AFL printers."

He then presented Mann a long list of the names of the strikers and their donations, along with the wad of bills they had collected.

Again the meeting broke into pandemonium with delegates cheering and applauding.

In the long list of donors were the names of ITU Intl. Pres. Woodruff Randolph and John Pilch, president of the striking local.

Reuther, touched by what he termed "this practical demonstration of real unity," declared that if such unity and cooperation between the AFL and CIO could be demonstrated throughout the country, the powerful forces of reaction and their puppets in the Congress would "shake in their BVD's."

Reuther, in outlining the necessity for a strong block workers organization, recounted the "astronomical profits grasped by monopoly industries in their exploitation of the people." He appealed to the block workers to stand "shoulder to shoulder" and urged that they bring to the people the realization that a full icebox at home requires the right kind of votes in the ballot boxes on election day.

Mann ripped into the 80th Congress and "its failure to pass progressive legislation." Denouncing T-H he stated that "in addition to depriving us of many of the gains we have achieved through bitter sacrifice, the most dangerous aspect of T-H is that if it is permitted to remain on the books, it will destroy the American labor movement, one of the strongest bulwarks of democracy."

Mann then declared, "We have the answer if we but want to use it—the answer is political action."

Willoughby Abner, assistant director of Chicago PAC, explained the organizational structure for block workers. He outlined how the breakdown of membership should be accomplished in the locals and checked against the master list in the Chicago Council Office to ferret out the unregistered voters. He said block workers would be called together on a Congressional and ward level.

Other speakers included Secy.-Treas. Frank Annunzio of Illinois State PAC, UAW Region IV Director Pat Greathouse, Maurice McElligott, representing Pres. Joseph Germano, who was ill and Pres. Albert Towers of the Chicago CIO Council.

GRATITUDE

The Typograpical Union pays a pension of $14 a week to all retired members who are 60 years of age or over and who have been with union 25 years. Locals often supplement the pension (Local 16, Chicago, adds $11 weekly.)

The Local 16 strike Committee received this letter from a pensioner:

"I regard it as an honor and privilege to pay something out of my pension as an 'assessment', even though my union has been swell enough to exempt me. I'm selfish, of course; I know that if the strike were lost my pension would be lost, too. God bless the strikers. We'll win."

How They Voted

Here's how Chicago's 10 Congressmen voted on the motion to override Pres. Truman's veto of the Taft-Hartley Law:

Right: Dawson, Gorski, Sabath, O'Brien, Gordon (All D.).

Wrong: Vail, Busbey, Owens, Twyman, Church (All R.).

CIO Aids ITU

The CIO is aiding the AFL Intl. Typographical Union in its fight to beat an injunction sought under the Taft-Hartley Law by the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

The ITU has been on strike against all Chicago papers since Nov. 24. Two weeks ago, ITU job printers in Philadelphia also struck.

IN A BLOCK: A crowded audience hears speakers at Chicago's PAC blockworkers' rally. A number of PACsters had to stand through the meeting, so intense was the interest. All unions in the area were represented.

TYPO STRIKERS: Here is a delegation of striking AFL printers, who were guests of honor at the Chicago PAC rally. The Typos collected $251 from picketers and contributed it to PAC.

Brophy Warns CIO Councils

STATE and local industrial union councils have been told by CIO Director of Councils John Brophy that they have an "obligation to take a forthright stand in support of national CIO policies" against a third party in 1948 and in support of the Marshall Plan.

Brophy made public a circular letter addressed to CIO's 397 councils in which he said "the official national policy of the CIO is one of express opposition to any third party in 1948 and one of positive support for the Marshall Plan."

". . . The CIO does not evade these basic issues," Brophy said, "and does not take a compromise position upon them."

Brophy, commenting on the letter, pointed out that "the CIO in no way is seeking to dictate the voting choice of its individual members, who are, of course, free to support any candidate they choose. But the CIO does have the right and the power, under rules adopted by its convention, to secure compliance with its national policies by its chartered councils."

Local and state CIO councils must back up the CIO position, he added.

"No evasion or compromise on this score is permissible," the CIO letter said.

"Rejecting, tabling or ignoring communications and statements from or by CIO officers, CIO-PAC or the CIO Executive Board on these matters or the CIO communications and statements, is action in conflict with CIO policy. Action in conflict with CIO policy is expressly forbidden by Rule 8 of the CIO rules governing councils."

(Rule 8 provides that local and state councils shall confine their activities and statements to issues of local or state concern and to matters of general policy approved by the national CIO. It provides that "councils shall take no action or issue statements in conflict with CIO policy.")

'Don't Be Too Late With Too Little'

"DON'T BE too late now with too little!" That appeal, in behalf of the Marshall plan, has gone to members of Congress from the executive board of the Louisiana Political and Legislative Action Committee, CIO.

The board also commended CIO Vice-Pres. Allan Haywood for relieving Harry Bridges of his duties as CIO regional director; set up a committee for a study of the civil rights program; and renewed appeals to Congress for legislation boosting minimum wage to 75 cents an hour.

The board's statement on the Marshall plan declared that "freedom of speech, of thought, of religion and of trade unionism has been severely restricted or has vanished altogether wherever Communists rule."

The PLAC board declared the "third party move can result only in division and confusion" and thereby "help in the election of reactionaries."

The board commended Haywood's "forthright action" and added that it would "applaud similar steps wherever they might be needed to scotch action of any who, by their failure to support national CIO policies, might cause division within CIO forces, or who might give the appearance of causing such division."

The board observed that where "large segments of the population" are disfranchised "there exists 'cheap labor,' with its attendant evils: Poverty, ignorance and disease."

The board added that "the urgent need, regardless of legislation, is to help the whole people to see clearly that poverty, ignorance and disease hurt not only the minority, but the majority as well."

MURRAY DEMANDS ERP BY APRIL 1

Urges Locals Give It No. 1 Priority

CIO affiliates were urged today by Pres. Philip Murray to act with "utmost speed" in making known to members of Congress their support of the European Recovery Program.

"The ERP Bill (S. 2202) should be passed by both houses of Congress and signed by the President not later than April 1," Murray said in a letter sent to CIO groups throughout the country.

"The CIO's position on the ERP was clearly outlined by action of our 1947 convention and by the last meeting of the CIO Executive Board. In accordance with this position, I am requesting that all affiliates of the CIO give No. 1 priority to the task of making our support of S. 2202 fully known to our Senators and Congressmen.

"I believe it advisable for the CIO to give full support to those who are pushing S. 2202 toward enactment. Whatever action is taken by your particular CIO group should be taken immediately.

"I feel that the CIO within the next 10 days must roll up a nationwide demand for ACTION NOW—action that will help defeat attempts to delay passage of S. 2202 or to tack on crippling amendments."

ACCOMPANYING Murray's letter was a "warning sheet" listing charges made against ERP and the CIO's replies.

The reply to the accusation that it is a "Wall St. Plot," states:

"It isn't. Secretary of State Marshall, who proposed the idea last June, isn't a Wall St. man. He is a former soldier who thinks it possible to establish a peace among free peoples in a civilian, peaceful way; he prefers it to another war which no one might win.

"The Bill is based on the Harriman Report. The Report was written by a committee including representatives of the CIO and AF of L. Its chairman was former Sen. Robert M. LaFollette, who has spent his life fighting Wall St. and all forms of monopoly and special interests. ERP is a genuine American idea and plan.

"With labor representatives on the Public Advisory Board and other committees, we have ourselves to blame if the Economic Co-operation Administration (which would administer ERP) gets off the track."

THE "warning sheet" warns that "if the ERP idea should collapse tomorrow, a recession would follow immediately because (a) outlets for goods would be cut off and (b) we would be closer to chaos and totalitarianism in Europe and (c) would be close to a regimented economy in which half of our manpower and material would be devoted to military preparation for war."

"The CIO holds that a nation which poured out industrial production that won World War II, at a maximum rate of $7 billions a month and a total cost of $340 billions, can do a production job for peace costing only $5.3 billions the first year and a four-year total of $17 billions . . .".

SHARP issue is taken in the "warning sheet" with statements that ERP will rebuild a militaristic Germany. It states:

"Nowhere does the bill provide for or promote such rebuilding. What is provided for is inclusion of Germany in a European economy, and, of course, the ECA administrator and the Public Advisory Board will not devote their energies to rebuilding a war machine that has twice thrown the world into devastating armed conflict.

"Unless the entire German people are to be abolished and the rest of Europe is to struggle to survive without some of the continent's most basic necessary resources, they must be allowed the opportunity to return to the society of civilized nations, but with adequate safeguards against building up the war potential that was developed before."

The "sheet" says S. 2202 does not provide military aid "because this is a civilian economic rehabilitation job."

Replying to statements that ERP "doesn't do the job through the United Nations," the "sheet" states:

"How could it? It's 22 vetoes too late for that. But the bill does call for maximum use of agencies of the UN and other international agencies."

ACT NOW

Wire or write your Congressmen and Senators IMMEDIATELY, urging them to pass S. 2202—the European Recovery Program bill—without delay.

That was the request made today by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and the CIO Legislative Committee.

"Determined action carried out with utmost speed is needed" to assure passage of S. 2202 without "undue delay," Murray said.

"I suggest that mobilization of support for S. 2202 be made the top order of business at all CIO meetings within the next few days and that special meetings be called when needed to obtain quick action on this matter."

'Significant'

"S. 2202 is a significant victory for the CIO position on European recovery," Murray said.

"It meets substantially all of the 10 basic tests outlined by the CIO in my letter of last Nov. 16 to Pres. Truman and later in statements to the Senate and House."

European Labor Meets on ERP

LABOR spokesmen from the U. S. and countries on the receiving end of the Marshall Plan aid program met in London last week and voiced confidence that American help will benefit the workers of Europe and the world.

CIO was represented by Sec.-Treas. James Carey and Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross. Also attending the meeting, called by the British Trades Union Congress, were representatives of the AFL and the railway brotherhoods.

(Next issue of The CIO News will carry more detailed news of the meeting based on reports from the CIO spokesmen).

The conference urged full support of the European Recovery Program, according to press reports, adding that without ERP "almost insurmountable difficulties" stand in the way of economic recovery.

Refuting hostile propaganda, the unions said they were satisfied that "no unacceptable conditions are attached to the offer of American aid and that there shall be no interference in the internal affairs of any participating country."

U.S. Shocked By Suicide Of Masaryk

THE coup in Czechoslovakia startled official Washington, but was received in general with cynicism.

However, the suicide of Jan Masaryk—son of a father whose very name was a symbol for democracy—shocked the Capital out of its lethargy. Finally, the mills of Congressional action began to move fast on the European Recovery Plan.

As the CIO News went to press, the Senate was about to vote finally on the measure, with approval virtually certain.

These were the other developments:

- Labor scored a victory when the Senate, on a voice vote, knocked out a provision which would have authorized the chartering of 300 U. S. ships to European countries.
- The chamber soundly defeated a move to substitute the "Wallace Plan" for the Marshall Plan. The move was made by Sen. Glen H. Taylor (D., Idaho.), who will be Wallace's running-mate on the third party ticket. The vote was 74-3, with only Sens. Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) and William Langer (R., N. D.) with Taylor. (Langer two years ago voted against ratifying UN. Pepper favors ERP principles, wants UN to run it.)

Taylor's motion was acted on with the greatest dispatch of the session. Sen. Arthur Vandenberg (R., Mich.) took the rarely-used procedure of suspending the rules for an immediate roll call.

Before his motion, Taylor delivered a 35,000-word attack on ERP. Among other things, he called ERP a Wall St. plot.

- The New York Chamber of Commerce refused to indorse the Marshall Plan at a stormy session. One ERP opponent, Capt. John B. Trevor, retired industrialist, said the U. S. would spend "497,000,000 to save Ireland from Communism" and accused the British Labor Government of advocating principles "indistinguishable from those that have finally reduced the Russian people to virtual slavery."
- The Senate was moving fast, but the House gave too many indications of intending to proceed at snail's pace.

Republican leaders decided to wrap all foreign aid bills into one package.

Russ 'Wants Way' in WFTU-Carey

THE World Federation of Trade Unions—in which a dispute over the Marshall Plan has existed for several months—has called meetings of its two top executive groups.

The nine-man bureau and the 22-man executive committee will meet in Rome, Italy, for about 10 days starting April 30.

CIO and the British Trades Union Congress have been pressing for discussion and support of the European aid program in the WFTU. Sec.-Treas. James Carey visited Moscow recently for talks with Vassili Kuznetsov, head of the Soviet trade unions, in an effort to get the matter on the agenda and to seek possible agreement.

Intl. News Service, in an interview from Berlin, quoted Carey as saying that "we talked bluntly across the table" and that "the Russians are very sensitive to labor opinions in the United States."

The INS story added that Carey said: "The Russians . . . want badly to prevent a breakup of the WFTU, but the honeymoon is over. The Russians want their own way in the WFTU—and they're not going to get it."

Carey, according to the INS interview, told the Russian union leaders that the Marshall Plan was not political, and that "they didn't consider lend-lease political. They took ten billion dollars of the American taxpayers' money, with plenty of strings attached.

"Now they don't want European workers to let American taxpayers help them feed their families, with no strings attached."

'Poverty and Hunger Aiding Communism In Europe,' Says ACW Vice-Pres. Levin

STARVATION and chaos can be averted in France and Italy only by quick shipment of machinery and raw materials from the United States under the Marshall Plan.

That warning was brought back from Europe last week by Vice-Pres. Sam Levin of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers after a nine-week visit to the Continent.

"Poverty and hunger, the lack of real purchasing power, are making for communism in western Europe," he said upon his arrival in New York.

"Unless reconstruction is aided at once, and these countries are permitted to produce for export, as well as for home consumption, the results will be disastrous," Levin warned.

The Amalgamated official, who lives in Chicago, went abroad to serve on a World Federation of Trade Unions mission to Palestine, but the trip was called off when the British refused to assure safe conduct for the group.

He said that Europeans "of all classes and groups" were strong supporters of the United Nations plan to partition Palestine but were perturbed by the apparent reversal of the American position.

"Palestine is the last hope of the thousands of displaced Jews in Europe," Levin declared. "Since no other country is taking them in any appreciable numbers, unless they get to Palestine they will die.

"The Jews are being sacrificed to the machinations of power politics, in which our own State Dept. is playing a most dubious role," Levin added.

The CIO union official visited numerous union-supported institutions in both France and Italy. Together with ACW Vice-Pres. August Bellanca, he spent some time in Massacarrarra, Italy, where the Amalgamated plans to start a cooperative clothing factory for Italian clothing workers. The union has raised half a million dollars in the U. S. to build and equip the plant.

"Conditions in Italy are even worse than in France," Levin said. ". . . I found the extremes of great poverty and wealth in Italy.

"Here also the need for raw materials and machinery was clear, and it is imperative that we send them as soon as possible, if we do not wish Italy to go under."

THOSE WONDERFUL PROMISES

Remember those speeches the Republican Congressional candidates were making back in the summer of 1946?

What the country needed, they said, was a complete shake-up in House and Senate. The GOP, they claimed, would straighten out all of the nasty messes created by the war and the Democrats.

Republicans gained control of Congress in November 1946 and those elected took office in January of last year.

Fourteen months have passed since then, so let's take a look at the record and see what Congress has actually done.

It enacted the Taft-Hartley Act, which gave management a great advantage over labor and placed strong political curbs on labor unions.

It weakened rent control, although extending it.

It twice passed the Knutson "aid for the wealthy" tax bill, which President Truman twice vetoed.

It passed the Gearhart bill, which would have taken Social Security benefits from about a half million persons had it not been killed by a pocket veto.

It adopted Wage-Hour amendments, outlawing portal-to-portal pay and weakened the basis for enforcement of the act.

It cut appropriations of agencies which were in a position to aid labor and gave additional funds to the National Labor Relations Board after it became a T-H agency.

Now a rump revolt within the GOP threatens the fate of the vitally important European Recovery Plan.

Senator Wherry of Nebraska is leading the drive to sabotage or at least delay passage of ERP legislation. Senators Jenner of Indiana and Kem of Missouri have been making bitter attacks on the program.

Attempts are being made to link military aid provisions to ERP, which would delay passage for months if not bring about its defeat.

Yes, the Republicans made some wonderful promises—but their record is most unimpressive. ★ ★ ★

It Doesn't Make Sense

Our booby prizes this week go to the House Un-American Activities Committee and to the State Department in recognition of undistinguished service performed under the guise of national security, or something.

We can't find a better term than "disgraceful smearing" to characterize the Committee's activities in the case of Dr. Edward U. Condon, director of the Bureau of Standards.

The word "stupid" seems to fit the action of those in the State Department who opposed sending Newspaper Guild President Harry Martin to Geneva for the UN Freedom of Information Conference.

We don't know whether Dr. Condon is guilty or innocent of the charge that he's a "weak link" in our atomic security chain. Our complaint is that the Committee attempted to try the "case" in the headlines without providing the full and impartial hearing requested by Dr. Condon.

Martin received "thumbs down" from the State Department because the old Dies Committee listed him as a founder of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare. Martin has never attended a meeting of the Conference, although many of the country's distinguished citizens have.

And we doff our hats to the White House because it overruled the State Dept. in the Martin case.

The Stakes In This Game Are High

Elimination of Abuses Now Would Provide Ace-In-Hole Later

By ALLAN L. SWIM

SOUTHERN politicians are now blowing their collective tops because President Truman "dared" to recommend legislation that would enforce basic civil rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

The CIO is smarting under an indictment resulting from the publication in the CIO News of an indorsement of a political candidate.

Textile workers in Georgia who express too much interest in unionism are learning again the meaning of the blacklist.

State police in Tennessee, armed with tear gas and sub-machine guns, are serving as strike-breakers at the Nashville Corp.

UNCLE SAM is investigating the latest price increase of the steel industry, hoping to determine, among other things, whether the public was the victim of monopoly action.

There is a campaign under way to weaken seriously or destroy the Federal law which establishes 40 hours as the standard work week and provides a pitifully inadequate minimum wage of 40 cents an hour.

The housing mess is still a mess—and the real estate lobby seems determined to keep it that way.

The trade union movement is hamstrung by the Taft-Hartley Act, which seeks to perpetuate its backers by placing strong political curbs on organized labor.

And the NAM is still beating the drums for its own peculiar brand of "free enterprise."

WE COULD go right on down the line, mentioning such things as the terribly high cost of living, the campaign to kill rent control, the serious power shortage, inadequate medical facilities. . . .

Somewhere near the end of the list we'd have to mention a profit structure that could make big business blush with shame. It doesn't—but it should.

And we'd have to top the whole thing off by pointing out that the average consumer is having a devil of a time making ends meet—right in the midst of an inflationary boom.

When you add it all together you get a good idea of the great struggle that is going on inside the United States.

CALL it "human rights vs. property rights" or call it anything you like—but don't underestimate the importance of the struggle or its possible consequences.

Don't forget for a minute that domestic Fascists are hoping for an opportunity to move in from the right and that the Communists are pushing with all their might from the left.

The stakes are high—mighty high. After all, the United States is the only powerful nation in the world which has a good opportunity to demonstrate that capitalism, democracy and real freedom for the little guys can exist within the same framework.

We either demonstrate that or we try something new. If you doubt that, just look at what is happening throughout the rest of the world.

YES, we should take a good look at what's happening in Europe and the Orient and we shouldn't put on our rose-colored glasses before doing so.

Even a quick glance will show the United States is the only big nation left which thinks it can afford the luxury of abusing democracy and the competitive enterprise system and still retain them.

Maybe we can afford the abuse now—even if we abhor it. But if another depression comes we're likely to learn that our people will destroy an entire system just to make sure they get rid of the abuses.

It would be better—much better—to clear the junk out of our backyards now!

Moore-Rizley Gas Bill Has 'Bad Odor'

POWERFUL support to the opponents of the Moore-Rizley Bill came from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. The CIO also is urging defeat of the bill.

Here's what the Post-Dispatch says:

If the industry-sponsored Moore-Rizley bill squeezes through Congress, users of natural gas may as well get set for higher rates.

Under present law, the Federal Power Commission fixes prices in the natural gas fields on the basis of cost of production plus a reasonable profit. The proposed amendments would substitute a vague formula called the "prevailing field price" or "commodity value."

Sponsors of the Moore-Rizley bill say it would permit a price increase of only 5 or 10%. But there is great danger that it would turn out to mean "what the traffic will bear."

That is the hope, presumably, of its congressional sponsors, Sen. Moore, the Oklahoma oil man, and Rep. Rizley, also of Oklahoma. Rizley's legal clientele, as he admits, includes some of the natural gas companies which want the raise.

The potent natural gas lobby in Washington is not content with merely trying to weaken the law governing regulation of natural gas. It also wants a Federal Power Commission amenable to its will.

The commission now has four members with one vacancy. The members are divided evenly regarding changes of the type sought in the Moore-Rizley bill. Leland Olds, who has a fine record as a public official, is against the changes, and so is Claude Draper, a holdover from the Hoover Administration. Until a year ago Chairman Nelson Lee Smith took the same stand, but now he has switched. He is joined by a new member, Harrison Wimberly, who, like Moore and Rizley, is an Oklahoman.

A great deal depends on who fills the vacancy. President Truman has nominated Burton N. Behling of Illinois, who is reportedly favored by Commissioner Wimberly, Edwin Pauley, the California politician and gas-and-oil lobbyist and former Gov. Kerr of Oklahoma, who also has extensive oil holdings. Behling has indicated he would, if confirmed, go along with Commissioner Smith and Wimberly.

Whatever happens to Behling, the Moore-Rizley bill should be pigeon-holed. The natural gas companies are making handsome profits already. Yet it is estimated that even a 5% increase in the price of natural gas would give the companies operating in the Texas Panhandle alone additional profits of more than a billion and a half dollars over the expected life of these reserves.

The bill would also defeat the ends of conservation and hasten the depletion of a great natural resource. The Moore-Rizley bill carries the same disagreeable odor that the tidelands oil bill carried. Its fate will be another index of whether this Congress is serving special interests or the people.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP By YOMEN

"—and then he was dumb enough to ask the union delegation what they thought of his record."

Harry Martin Is 'Temporarily Unfit'

HARRY MARTIN, Newspaper Guild president, was saved on the count of nine by the White House after the State Dept. had counted him out.

Involved in the somewhat fantastic story are the old Dies Committee, a college official and the United Nations Freedom of Information Conference which opens soon in Geneva.

Martin almost became the victim and not the hero of the story because of an "awful indiscretion."

MARTIN, amusement editor of the Memphis Commercial Appeal, served on the UN sub-commission which discussed freedom of the press at Lake Success, N. Y.

He did a good job, according to those who saw him in action, and somebody in the State Department got the idea that he should be one of the U. S. delegates to the meeting in Switzerland.

Martin was asked, unofficially, of course, to drop in at the State Department and discuss the matter—off the record, of course.

Then he was given what looked like the nod by those most directly concerned with the case.

TIME passed and Martin began wondering why he hadn't been notified of his appointment. Finally he got word to come to Washington.

At the State Department he received the firm but polite word that he wasn't going to Geneva. Somebody "high up" in the department had turned thumbs down on him.

He was told that he had been investigated thoroughly and that somebody had found an old Dies Committee report which said Martin was one of the founders of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

The Conference, he was reminded, was considered by some folks to be left-wingish.

FIGURATIVELY speaking, Martin hit the ceiling—and so did a lot of other Newspaper Guildsmen.

They said they didn't know whether the the Southern Conference was leftish, rightish or middlish but they knew about Martin.

For 10 years he had been one of the top leaders of the right-wing element of the Newspaper Guild. He had been elected Guild president on an anti-Communist platform.

There was nothing in his record—absolutely nothing—to show he was in sympathy with any form of government other than American democracy.

MARTIN, contacted early last week in Memphis, told the CIO News:

"I didn't know there was such a thing as a Dies Committee report regarding me until the State Dept. told me about it the other day.

"BACK in 1937 or 1938 I got a letter from the president of one of the South's leading universities. He asked me to serve as a sponsor for a meeting at which the organization now known as the Southern Conference for Human Welfare was to be established.

"It sounded like a good idea to me, so I told him I'd help sponsor the meeting. I didn't show up for the session, however, because Guild business took me elsewhere.

"The fact of the matter is that I've never attended a meeting of the Southern Conference. No, sir, not a single meeting!"

SEVERAL newspaper reporters and radio commentators got hold of the story—and what they wrote and said about the State Dept. wasn't too complimentary.

Somebody over at the White House, who was quoted by a newspaper friend as saying he was "getting d---- tired of conviction by association," intervened.

Last Friday night the UN delegation was announced—and among those selected was Harry Martin. A. L. S.

Tie Roosevelts With Communists Radio Boss' Order

SOME of the news you read in the papers or hear on the radio is "slanted." Sometimes it's the way facts are assembled in a story, or the inflection in a radio announcer's voice.

Any union member who's been in a strike, or whose union has been under fire from employers or politicians, has seen the "slanting" process in operation.

Usually the "slanting" of a story is a subtle job. It's hard to spot, hard to analyze, hard to prove.

Now two radio newsmen who formerly worked for big, 50,000-watt radio Station KMPC in Los Angeles have come up with evidence of direct orders to "slant" the station's news presentation. They've produced a series of photostated memoranda and letters alleged to have been written by the station owner on how the news should be "slanted" for the public ear.

The story, printed exclusively by "The Billboard"—a show business trade paper—has caused a sensation in radio circles. Two former employes of the KMPC news room—Clete Roberts and George E. Lewin—say the documents show that its policy was ordered by G. A. Richards, boss of KMPC, of WJR, Detroit, and of WGAR, Cleveland.

LEWIN'S statement said in part:

"Mr. Richards told me many times to seek news items derogatory to the New Deal, as he always referred to the Truman administration. He told me to plug always for General MacArthur and Tom Dewey, and to keep hammering at the Jews, who are, he said, all Communists.

"Specifically, Mr. Richards told me always to follow any story about Communists with a story (derogatory) about any member of the Roosevelt family. He ordered me to use the same treatment of news stories tying in the names of David Lilienthal, Henry Wallace, Howard Hughes, Henry Kaiser and others whom he considered to be dangerous men.

"During the Senate hearings on Lilienthal's confirmation as head of the Atomic Energy Commission, Mr. Richards ordered me to give extra long treatment to charges against Lilienthal and to suppress anything favorable to Lilienthal. Lilienthal, he said, was a Communist."

Another memorandum signed by Richards and written on the letterhead of the three stations, said in part: "I believe in making a chump of this adm. (Administration) at every turn, as Roosevelt did for 15 years—give 'em hell where it hurts."

REFERRING to the children of former Pres. Roosevelt, the memo said: "They are the rum pots, dead end kids of the royal family that all but wrecked the world. If these facts are nailed down we can win in 1948—if not, no."

The memorandum on the station's letterhead said the issue in the 1948 elections is "Marxism vs. Christianity. Our form of gov. (government) or socialism leading to communism. . . .

"The Catholics are good subjects to work on as they think more of their church duties than Protestants as a rule and they have for most part voted dem. (Democratic). They can be changed over by hard work and that's what is cut out for us all in 1948. (So let's go all out.)"

A third letter bearing Richard's name said General MacArthur would be one of our greatest presidents and added: "Get this over. Again and again and again."

"The Billboard" story said that stories about the practices at KMPC have been the subject of local radio gossip in Hollywood for a long time but the letters produced as evidence by Roberts and Lewin were the first "tangible" evidence of the station's policies.

They Make Charges

Charges of "slanting" the news by Station KMPC, Hollywood, were made by two veteran radio news men. Clete Roberts is a former ABC network war correspondent, while Lewin was newsroom manager for KMPC. Both men have several ties with the station.

Lewin indicated the "slanting" was nothing new to him.

"The treatment of news stories ordered by Mr. Richards was identical with that which I had encountered while working for Hearst, Cissie Patterson (publisher of the Washington Times Herald), Capt. Joe Patterson (until his death publisher of the New York News), and Scripps-Howard."

'The U.S.A. Vs. CIO and Philip Murray'

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE press sat in the jury box . . . the courtroom was fairly well filled with a variety of spectators . . . the judge spoke with the drawl of the West Virginia area where he is stationed . . .

The court reporter had the unusual name of Chloe S. MacReynolds . . . the central figure in the case sat in the front row among the spectators . . .

It was proceedings in the District Court for the District of Columbia, sitting for some reason or other in the local D. C. court.

Subject matter was a motion to quash the indictment in the case of the "United States of America vs. Congress of Industrial Organizations, Philip Murray, officer thereof."

Murray's case was handled by:

Charles J. Margiotti, former Attorney General of Pennsylvania.

Lee Pressman, former CIO general counsel.

Frank Donner, associate CIO counsel.

The Government was represented by:

Turner Smith and

Jesse Climenko, assistant attorneys general.

Each side presented lengthy briefs, but the real drama was in the oral presentations.

(Murray and the CIO were indicted on charges that Murray, in violation of Section 304 of the Taft-Hartley law, had ordered the CIO News to carry an article indorsing a Congressional candidate and further directed that copies of the issue be distributed in Baltimore, scene of the election.)

Margiotti, opening the presentation, didn't waste any time in stating the issue — he stated it time and again to be sure there was no mistake. Sometimes he stated it as it is reprinted in the box at right. Sometimes like this:

"And the issue is a very simple one, Your Honor. The question is whether Congress may constitutionally make it a crime for a labor organization, and for an officer of a labor organization, to consent thereto, to publish a newspaper endorsing a candidate for public office.

"That is the simple issue that is before this Court, and nothing else, and that is what has been done here."

When Climenko went on for the Government, he put the issue like this:

". . . the violation is charged against an aggregation called the CIO for having deliberately expended its money for the purpose of—the phrase is 'in connection with' but it means for the purpose of—affecting the outcome of a federal election and that is Count 1 of that indictment.

"Count 2 says that Philip Murray, who is the president of that organization, violated it because he consented to the expenditure . . .

"The Government contends that the statute is constitutional, and it is the Government's position before Your Honor that the motions to dismiss, however considered; whether as phrased by the defendants alternatively on behalf of the defendant CIO or on behalf of its president, or as they purport to do, in terms of at least one set of their motions, on behalf of their members, the Government contends that, on all counts, and on consideration of the only question before Your Honor—the competence of the Congress who has enacted this measure, the Government contends the measure is Constitutional, and if the Court agrees with the Government, we shall attempt to show why this is a constitutional enactment — then the Government will urge that these motions be dismissed.

With those two definitions, Margiotti and Climenko had joined the issue.

MARGIOTTI has had a long career in court cases. Perhaps this is the first time he ever defended a man whose test was lauded in the New York Herald-Tribune as showing Murray's "true Americanism."

Margiotti started out by saying that though all elections are important, this year's is crucial. "These injuries (to civil liberties) are very serious and particularly because of the approaching election when it becomes necessary for the people to consider many important phases of economic and social legislation that involves peace or war; legislation that involves prosperity or depression and legislation that may involve security and want."

Margiotti noted that the preamble to the CIO constitution says "we are dedicated to the responsibility for furthering political participation."

"This act," he declared, "affects about 60,000,000 persons who are engaged in and belong to organized labor. These persons and their families and their friends will be required to exercise a right of franchise at the coming election, at this important election. It is important that they know whether organized labor may be permitted through the press, through its publication, through pamphlets, through word-of-mouth, through assemblage, through meetings, hired halls, sending post cards . . . or whether they are going to be gagged and silenced."

THE COURT: "Let me see, do you challenge the constitutionality on the ground of unions being selected as the target of the prohibition?"

MR. MARGIOTTI: "That is one of our arguments. First we take the position that the statute is aimed solely at labor organizations and at no other type of unincorporated associations . . . For instance, there are organizations that are unincorporated that are against unions, they do not come within the prohibition of the act."

THE COURT: "It (T-H) does not purport to extend the prohibition to all corporations but only to those organized under authority of the U. S.?"

MR. MARGIOTTI: "No. First it does that, Your Honor. It takes national banks that are organized under authority of the U. S., and corporations that come under the U. S., and then later on takes any corporation whatsoever — covers them all, whether they are for profit or non-profit, commercial or eleemosynary, no matter what they are, it just covers everything.

("Eleemosynary—1. a. Or, pertaining to, or dependent upon charity of alms; charitable. 2. n. A recipient of charity." — Frank & Wagnalls Dictionary.)

THE COURT: "In other words, it prevents any comment at all about elections."

MR. MARGIOTTI: "That is right."

THE COURT: "By the press."

MR. MARGIOTTI. "That is right, but it doesn't say the press. It says an expenditure for that purpose."

And, elaborating on expenditures, Margiotti said:

"Of course, in order to exercise them (civil liberties) it costs money. It can't be done without the cost of money, no matter whether it is little or much . . . They can't hire a hall. Even if they own their own building, if they go in to have a political meeting in their own building, the turning on of the lights would be a violation and that is prohibited by this act, it is that broad."

(After his presentation, one of the reporters present said to Margiotti: ("Aren't you, Pressman and Donner also violating the act in that you are expending CIO money in this test of the act—this political test?" (Margiotti laughed and said: "Say, you've got something there. I think we are.")

HE took several cracks at Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), co-father of the law.

"Taft said in the debate, and he has said publicly time and time again, that he was trying to protect the union men who are not in sympathy with the will of the leaders of the union in support of a candidate, or policy, or a party, that is the use of his funds for that purpose when he takes the opposite position . . . but, when a person joins the union, he knows he is poining for that purpose, among other purposes, and when he pays his dues he knows he is paying them for that purpose; and he is not complaining.

"You take a labor man by himself, as a general proposition his income is not such that he could contribute much to a political campaign, but when you take them all and band them together, a little here and a little there makes a sum that is necessary for their very existence.

"This unfair act is aimed at silencing, gagging and muzzling the press of labor unions."

THE COURT: "Has the contribution feature of this act, as distinguished from the expenditures feature, been passed on? I mean a similar act, or the preceding act?

MR. MARGIOTTI: "If your honor please, it has not been passed on by the U. S. Supreme Court or by any Circuit Court of Appeals. It was passed on in a case in Pittsburgh . . . Is that correct?

MR. SMITH: "That is right.

MR. PRESSMAN: That is right.

MR. CLIMENKO: "That is right."

AS to the Fifth and Sixth Amendment, Margiotti further said:

"We raise the question that the act fails to provide an ascertainable standard of guilt. . . . You notice the act prohibits the expenditure of money in connection with any election or any primary.

"Well, the question arises, when does an election begin? When does a primary begin? Does it begin the moment a candidate gets to thinking about being a candidate?

"There is no full definition of the word 'expenditures' in this act as to what is included in expenditures. You may have one thing called an expenditure and something else not an expenditure."

He concluded:

"It is a serious matter for our people; it is a serious matter for this country and particularly for labor because it is an act, as I say, aimed directly at them, and certainly is unconstitutional under our laws."

PRESSMAN began: "I must confess at the outset that I am rather disturbed by two points that were raised by the Government.

"First, with respect to an interpretation of the statute, and particularly with the indictment. Then the second point is the cavalier fashion with which the constitutional issue cases of the Supreme Court protecting the exercise of free speech, free press and assembly, were dismissed by Mr. Climenko with a statement that that was just a notion that the counsel for the defendants may have in defending their case."

He tore into Climenko's definition of the case. "Mr. Climenko pointed out that 'in connection with' really means 'for the purpose of influencing an election.' And added that that of course was the essence of the indictment.

"I have read the indictment with great care. I find not a single reference to any expression that the expenditure was made for the purpose of influencing the election."

He criticized Climenko's heavy emphasis on what Taft and others said during debate on the bill. "After all, a clear statute does not have attached to it as an exhibit either Sen. Taft or the Dept. of Justice the statute stands on its own."

Referring to Smith's analysis of the history of Government controls on contributions to political campaigns, Pressman said:

"Contribution is something distinct from an expenditure, when made in connection with the exercise of freedom of speech, of press, of assembly."

He chided Smith for quoting from the minority report of a Senatorial committee in 1945, where it was proposed that expenditures by unions in elections be banned. "I don't think minority reports have much more standing when a case is to be cited than the minority decision of a Supreme Court case."

HE remarked to Judge Moore: "I think your Honor put it excellently when you asked Mr. Climenko: If anybody else, any individual, had printed precisely the same statement that Mr. Murray did, in a private leaflet, and distributed that leaflet in Baltimore, would that be an offense against any law or could it be made one, and the answer was obviously no.

"In other words, this statute prohibits a speech, a meeting, a leaflet, or a pamphlet, which cannot be said to be unlawful because Congress said: 'We have another evil to attend to'."

THE COURT: "You insist that your client has violated the statute if it is valid, and not just tried to do it?"

MR. PRESSMAN: "I hope your Honor will agree we have violated the statute."

He referred to the seriousness of this situation. "In the Thornhill

Hornbook Law

"It is not necessary for me to cite any cases showing that labor has a right to organize. I am not going to refer to them because I think it is fundamental and Hornbook law."—Charles J. Margiotti to Judge Ben Moore.

("Hornbook Law" is lawyers' lingo for basic, every day law.)

'T-H Silences, Gags, Muzzles Labor'

"A Blackout on Labor"

"The meat of this Act as it applies to us involves this: The prohibition against any labor organization to make a contribution or an expenditure—and in this case an expenditure, because a contribution is not involved—in connection with any Federal election or any primary

". . . If this were to be let stand it would amount to a blackout on labor organizations in the free expression in Federal elections. This is what it would amount to."—Charles J. Margiotti, council for CIO, in "United States of America vs. CIO, Philip Murray, officer thereof."

SECTION 304 OF T-H

Sec. 304. Section 313 of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, 1925 (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 2, sec. 251; Supp. V, title 50, App., sec. 1509), as amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 313. It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to Congress are to be voted for, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any of the foregoing offices, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section.

"Every corporation or labor organization which makes any contribution or expenditure in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000; and every officer or director of any corporation, or officer of any labor organization, who consents to any contribution or expenditure by the corporation or labor organization, as the case may be, in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"For the purposes of this section 'labor organization' means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employe representation committee or plan, in which employes participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work."

Organizing 6,000 In Virginia

THE CIO Organizing Committee in Virginia, with a successful 1947 behind it, is in high gear for an even better 1948. Present organizing work in the state is concentrated on eight companies and involves nearly 6,000 employes.

New members are signing up rapidly and in six of the plants the CIO already has a majority, State Director Ernest B. Pugh reports.

Largest of the units involved at present is the Craddock-Terry Shoe Corporation. Craddock-Terry has seven plants in the state.

At Bristol, a large majority of the employes of the Universal Moulded Products Corporation have signed application cards for CIO membership.

Also at Bristol, the United Electrical Workers have been organizing the Monroe Calculating Machine Company plant and now have a majority of the employes signed up.

At Scottsville, a rayon thread plant of the U. S. Rubber Company has been well organized.

Other plants where majorities are already established or are rapidly being built up are:

Aberfoyle, Inc., Norfolk.

Altite Bearing Company, Fredericksburg.

Jobbers Pants Company, Martinsville.

American Pigment Corporation, Hiwassee, where United Chemical Workers have filed a petition with NLRB.

Optical Workers Hit 3d Party; o.k. ERP

The national executive Board of the CIO Optical & Instrument Workers Organizing Committee, meeting in Buffalo, has voted unanimously to support CIO policy against a third party in 1948 and in favor of enactment of the Marshall Plan.

The board also formulated an intensive organizational program. The officers also praised the program of CIO, as adopted at the convention, Chm. Thomas E. Andert reports.

Block Work

"The block worker is the foundation stone upon which the success of the campaign depends. It is his or her duty to know every voter in the block, to know as far as possible every voter's political faith, to get every voter and every indifferent voter to register and vote ... calling on every voter, urging registration where necessary, and compiling a report for the precinct captain that shows the population of eligible voters of the block or apartment building, the number registered, the number of opposition voters, the number of uncertain voters, and the number of and names of those who will be out of town on election day."—From "Citizen Organization for Political Activity," published by the Natl. Municipal League.

'Unions Practise Golden Rule,' Says Minister Turned Organizer

IF a worker really wants to be a good Christian, he'll be a good union member, for the two go together, Dave Burgess believes.

Burgess is a national representative for the CIO Textile Workers Union in the South. He is also an ordained minister of the Congregational-Christian Churches. Burgess and his wife worked for more than three years among migrant farm workers and tenant farmers in New Jersey, Arkansas, Mississippi and southeast Missouri under the Board of Home Missions of his church.

BURGESS

Their experiences caused him to enter the labor movement.

Troubled by the opposition to the CIO he runs across now and then among working-class church members, Mr. Burgess did a little private prying to find out why these people object to belonging to the union. He related some of the things he discovered in a recent speech over the radio in Rock Hill, S. C.

One friend told him: "My Bible tells me not to be equally yoked with unbelievers. You see I can't join the union because some sinners are members."

"Like any public organization," Burgess answered, "the union must be open to all workers in a mill—the saved and the unsaved, the sweeper and the loom-fixer—everyone! The union cannot refuse membership to any worker if it is to remain democratic. For we can no more exclude any worker from membership than we could arbitrarily exclude brunettes, Anglo-Saxons, spinners or Baptists.

"In fact a labor union is so democratic and non-exclusive that in the organized mills of this town, the union benefits all workers—both members and non-members. An elected shop steward in a department handles all grievances both for members and non-members.

"The union not only helps the members who actually pay the dues and shoulder the responsibilities, but it helps all workers without discrimination. The union is merely putting into practice the church's golden rule—'do unto others as you would have them to do unto you.'"

THE friend was not yet won over.

"OK," he said, "granted that the union is democratic and fair. But if the membership is open to all workers in the mill, isn't it always possible that some person of inferior personal character might be elected a steward or shop committee member?"

"Now let's admit that's always possible in a democratic organization," Burgess replied, "especially if Christians like you refuse to lift a finger and take responsibility. All of us church members should be concerned about who is elected to positions of leadership in a union . . . for a true Christian does not sit on the sidelines carping, criticizing and finding fault with every sincere effort of working people to better themselves.

"A genuine Christian is one who joins a worthy organization, devotes his time to it, and if the occasion arises, accepts an elected office in the union as a sacred trust. . . . Do you refuse membership in the American Legion, the State Legislature, the City Council, the Ladies Aid Society or the Board of Deacons because some of your fellow members do not live up to your standard?

"Now apply this principle to the labor movement, and I think we will all agree that the mark of a responsible Christian is one who joins and does his part."

Fundamentally, Burgess said, support of the labor movement or opposition to it is determined by faith or lack of faith in the working people of the South.

Those who believe that workers do not have "enough common sense, integrity, and courage to form their own organization for their mutual protection and advancement," put their faith "solely in the employers—the rich, the privileged few; but they have no faith in working people like you and me."

CIO IN COURT

Supreme Court case, the court said: 'If the exercise of your civil rights is to have any meaning it necessarily must be exercised at a time when it takes on real meaning.'

"Now, to say to a labor organization 'You may discuss issues, you may discuss candidates, but don't you dare do that when the question is up to whether your message has any meaning or not, you can't do it then'—well, I would say that would be reducing the First Amendment to sheer mockery."

CLIMENKO, in his rebuttal, began: "I should like to use these five minutes as though I were thinking, as I sometimes like to believe that I was thinking, the way a court would have to in appraising and approaching this problem, and so I will lay aside some things that I think were said in a snide way by Mr. Pressman."

Judge Moore had several sharp words over the length of presentations. He broke in on Climenko to say: "I think you ought to close soon, Mr. Climenko, because it is now 12 minutes of four."

He broke in on Pressman to say: "I call your attention to the fact that the court can't stay in session much longer." Pressman replied: "I am just about to finish." Climenko then said: "May I have five minutes, Your Honor, at the end?" Moore replied: "It depends on how long Mr. Pressman takes." Pressman said: "I shall try to adjust myself to Mr. Climenko's needs."

Exactly five minutes after Climenko started, Moore broke in: "Your time is up."

Climenko: "I thank your honor."

AVC Says Stop Aggression

Chat Paterson, national chairman of the American Veterans Committee, has announced that the AVC national executive board approved a statement urging the U. S. government to take "immediate, definite, and forthright action to obtain agreement among peace-loving nations on measures to stop the pattern of aggression exhibited in Czechoslovakia."

"We do not believe that peace can be maintained by appeasement," Paterson said. "Appeasement was ineffective in 1938; it will be equally ineffective in 1948.

"We are deeply concerned and distressed by the Munich of the East, the demise of democracy in Czechoslovakia. It is all too reminiscent of the Munich of the West, the demise of democracy in Czechoslovakia under pressure of Hitler in 1938."

"We are profoundly concerned about the pressure now being exerted against Finland, and with the increased Soviet pressure on Scandinavia, Italy, France, and the rest of Europe. Therefore AVC urges that the government of the U. S. take immediate, definite and forthright action to obtain agreement among peace-loving nations on measures to stop this pattern of aggression."

Paterson said that the statement had been approved by the 24-member AVC National Planning Committee.

'Screwy' Law Fails To Halt Textile

THE CIO Textile Workers recently won union shop elections conducted under the Willey law in all 27 of its New Hampshire mills in spite of handicaps imposed by "the screwiest set-up" ever devised, reports J. Harold Daoust, the union's New Hampshire-Vermont director.

The state law goes the Taft-Hartley Act one better by requiring that a union must not only get the votes of a majority of the eligible workers, but also two-thirds of those who go to the polls.

But this is only half the problem, says Daoust, because the administrative details "are even worse." First, state officials refused to agree to joint elections which would cover requirements of both laws. This meant two separate elections for every mill.

Then the Willey law election notices and sample ballots were posted. "TWUA officials nearly swooned," the union says, for nowhere did either document simply ask workers if they wanted a union shop.

The election notice said the balloting would determine "whether or not the renewal contract shall contain provisions that would otherwise be prohibited by Section 21 of this chapter." Underneath in two foot-long columns of small type, the Willey law was printed in full.

The question as it appeared on the ballot read:

"Do you desire to have this local enter a contract which would otherwise be prohibited by Section 21 of Chapter 212, Revised Laws, as amended by Chapter 195, Laws of 1947?

Another twist was the use of sample ballots bearing the name of a different union from that in the mill.

When voting actually started, union officials discovered that no time was specified for the polls to close.

At the big Nashua Manufacturing Co., state officials were more than an hour late in opening up the polls. At least 1,000 workers grew tired of waiting and left.

Despite all this, the TWUA won every election.

Sugar Strikers Win Raise, Holidays

By JACQUELINE McCULLOUGH

FATTER paychecks are rolling in again for the more than 300 employes of the Henderson Sugar Refinery at New Orleans, La.

The paychecks are fatter because Local 1095, the Sugar and Allied Products divisions of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, stood fast for 13 weeks in the first strike ever called against a Louisiana sugar refinery.

Highlights of the new contract, which carries an expiration date of July 31, 1949, and a reopening clause as of July 31, 1948, are an immediate 9c hourly wage increase; five paid holidays; an improved vacation plan and a job evaluation program.

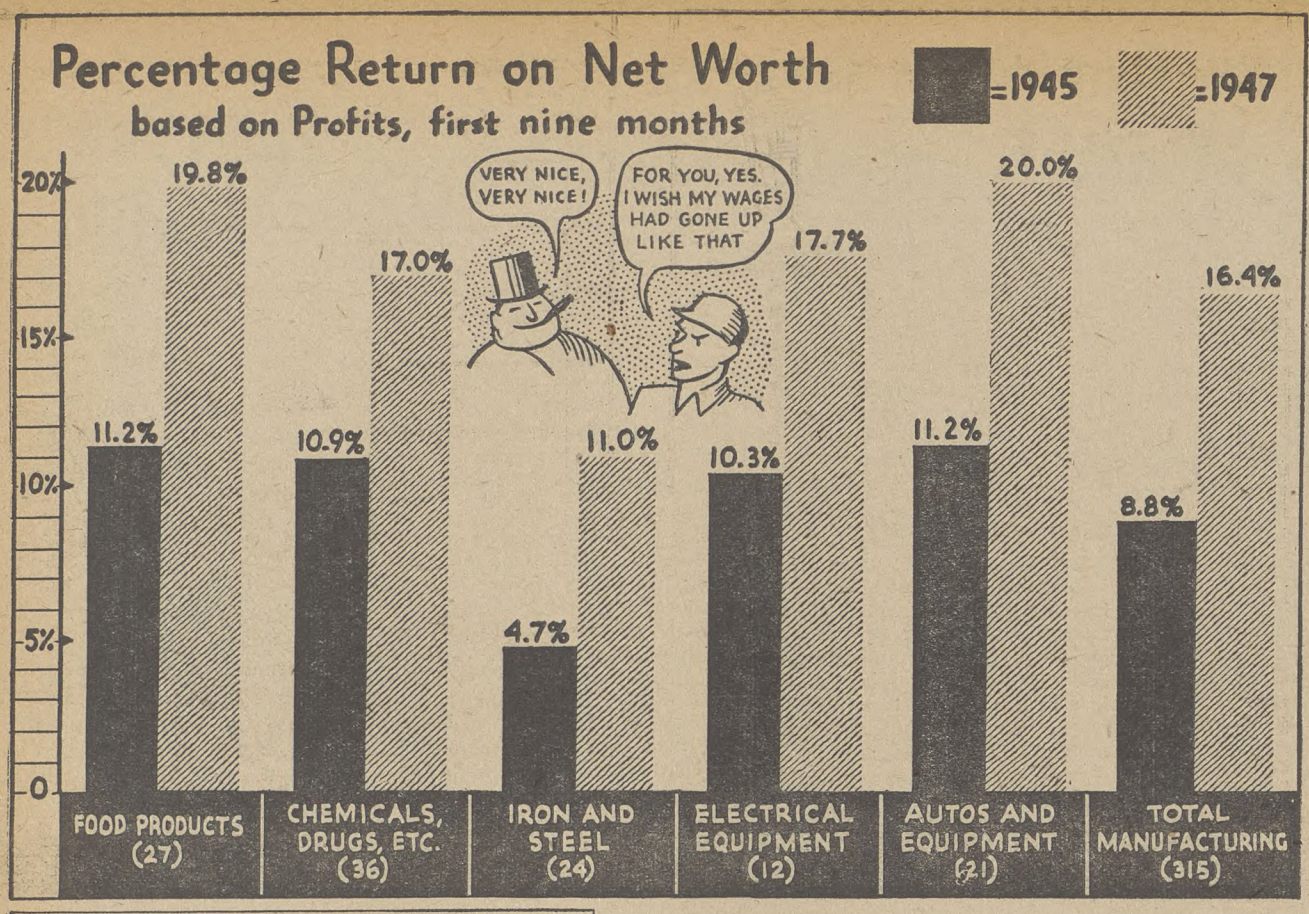
Henderson workers will receive an additional two cents an hour increase on July 31, upon completion of the job evaluation program, retroactive to Nov. 1, 1947.

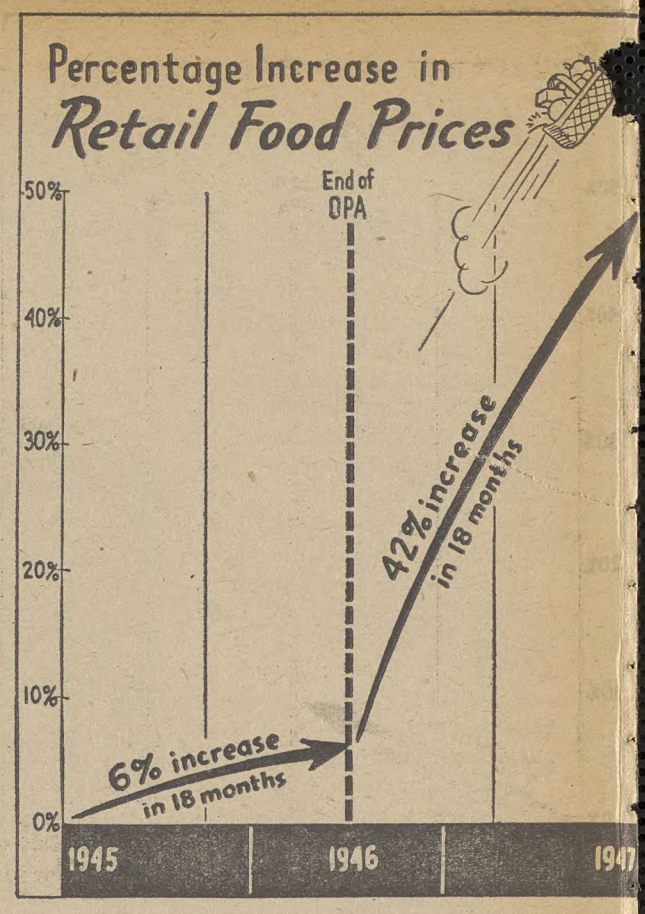
The holiday provision gained is the first ever received in the plant. The contract also provides for maintenance of membership through a voluntary check-off of dues.

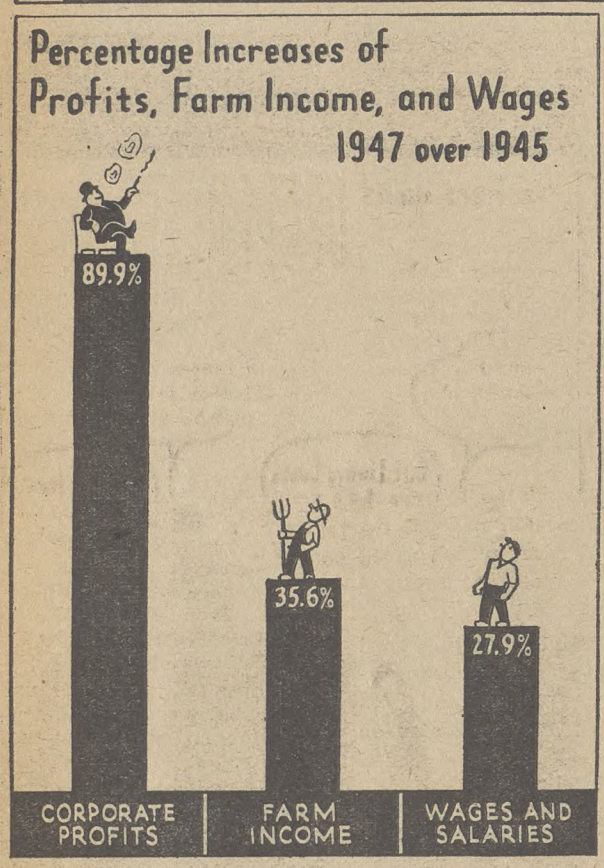
Vacation provisions range upwards from six days with 48 hours pay after one year to 16 days with 128 hours pay after 12 years. Since at least 40% of the employes have worked for Henderson for more than 12 years, they will be especially benefitted by this clause.

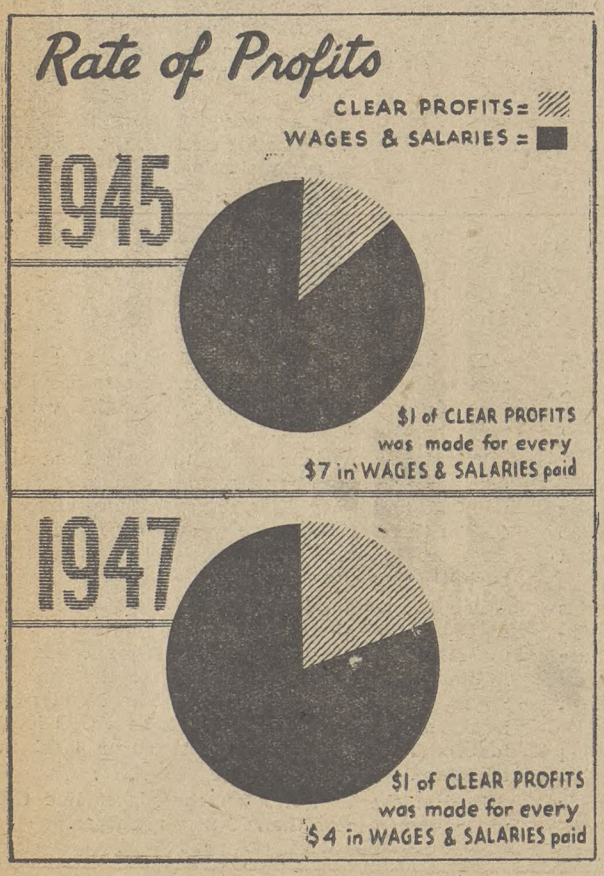
The expiration date of July 31, 1949, is the first step toward a uniformity in expiration date for all Packinghouse Workers' sugar contracts in the southern area, according to the union's Sugar Director Alex Summers. The Henderson local, chartered in January, 1941, as a CIO local industrial union, is the oldest sugar local in the state.

During the 13 weeks on the picket line the union gained more than 25 new members.









Economics Prove Good Boosts Possible

DO YOU deserve a substantial wage increase?

Can American industry afford to give you a substantial wage increase?

Will industry keep sufficient profits if you get a substantial wage increase?

The CIO comes up with an emphatic "YES" to all three questions.

The answers—contained in a special issue of CIO Research Education Department's Economic Outlook—are presented as the "CIO's 1948 Wage Case." The Outlook is a fact-studded argument that labor and the nation will be helped by wage increases in the next few months.

"Families have had to spend their hard-earned savings, go into debt, and reduce purchases of basic necessities," the Outlook says. "As the result of soaring prices, profits have reached extortionate levels. These profits permit substantial wage increases without further increases in prices."

THE CIO's wage case is a point-by-point examination of what makes the American economic system tick—and of what's wrong with the situation today.

Profits—as you probably know—have shown "tremendous increases" over and above the high wartime levels.

In 1947, corporation profits were $17 billion after taxes. In 1945, profits were about $8.9 billion. At the previous wartime peak, in 1943, they were $10.4 billion. Back in prewar 1939, profits were only $5 billion.

Tremendous profits of the past two years, the Outlook says, "coincided with the price inflation" and resulted from it.

Profits were high not only in themselves, but as a return on invested capital. In 315 manufacturing firms, profits represented 16.4 cents for every dollar of investment. In 1945, the same companies made only 8.8 cents on each dollar invested.

(Corporation advertisements in the press have sought to make record-breaking profits look small by comparing them to sales. The Treasury Department and businessmen themselves don't put much stock in profits per dollar of sales—and there's no reason why you should, either.)

THE big "take" in profits during the past few years has made American corporations richer than ever in history.

In 1939, the undistributed surplus of all corporations amounted to $46 billion. At the end of 1947, the figure had exactly doubled—to $92 billion.

Instead of passing out these surplus profits to the stockholders in the form of dividends, corporations more and more are keeping the money in their own treasuries and reinvesting it.

So the comparatively few people on the Boards of Directors of American corporations now "exercise power over huge amounts of savings." Only 16% of the new investment in plants and equipment comes from loans or sales of stock. "This in effect means that the consumer, by pay exorbitant prices, is largely financing the tremendous p war expansion in plant and equipment.

Profits have not only jumped up—they've jumped farther and faster than either wages or farmers' income

From 1945 to 1947, for instance, profits rose 89.9. Farm income and wages were pikers by comparison; th went up 35.6% and 27.9% respectively.

"Increases in profits at the expense of farm inco and wages and salaries make our economy more and m unstable," says the Outlook.

When people have enough income to buy all the g on the market, the economy gets some stability. Inste "inflation has rapidly pushed us back." Now prosperi depends on "artificial props" like big corporation inve ments, the spending of savings and spending by gove ment. If those are stopped, "our economy may collaps

American workers have had to dip down far into t sock to keep themselves going in this era of rising prices.

Since the GOP and some of the polltax Democra killed OPA in June, '46, prices have risen—need we remi you? Retail foods are 42% more costly, clothing is up 22 and rents—still somewhat controlled—have gone up 6 in 18 months.

The results can be seen in Treasury figures on U. savings bonds.

● Back in 1945, the Treasury sold 100 $25 bonds f every 53 that were cashed in.

● In the first half of 1947, the Treasury sold 100 $ bonds for every 193 that were cashed in.

(The Treasury is still selling far more $1000 bonds than being cashed in. Times aren't too tough for big income earners

If American corporations as a whole were to grant 10% wage increase, they'd still have $12.5 million profits equal to their 1946 earnings. If they gave an 18% increas they'd still be making their 1945 profits of $8.9 billion. they gave 20% wage boosts, they'd clear $8.4 billion— much as they made in the boom year of 1929.

Are profits profitable?

With a straight face, we present to you some gleanings from one day's bag of profits' statements from the New York Times' financial pages:

Westinghouse: Net income (profit) of $48,806,41 in 1947, compared with $8,823,846 in 1946 (four-month strike that year). This is an increase of about 500%

Natl. Lead: New high of $12,180,132 in 1947; f was $9,677,084 in 1946.

—But Industry Uses Ads To Woo Public

AMID a flood of industrial tears dripping from nationwide newspaper ads, CIO unions proceeded to push for wage boosts to plug the holes inflation ate into pay checks.

CIO Packinghouse Workers, numbering over 100,000, were girding for a strike on March 16. A month of negotiations with the industry's "Big Four," the union claimed, had produced a blunt "no" on the union's wage demands, scaled down from 29c to 19c an hour.

The companies' offer to pay CIO workers the same 9c previously granted some 11,000 AFL employes was termed by the CIO union "an attempt to make the tail wag the dog."

In quarter-page ads, Swift & Co. last week bid for the public's support. They omitted reference to union charges that the packers had raised prices by $33.3 billions to offset wage increases of $5.7 millions. Nor was there any mention of profits, which in Swift's case jumped 107% from 1946 to 1947, according to the union. The ad did point proudly to the AFL's docile acceptance of 9c, however, which, from CIO's point of view, would be insufficient to maintain a standard of decency.

ELECTRICAL: With the CIO Electrical Workers charging that General Electric was "doing most of its negotiating in the newspapers," the union stuck to the bargaining table in an effort to regain lost purchasing power.

GE's announced determination not to offer a red cent stems from its concern for the public welfare, it says in the ads.

Less conscious of the "public welfare" before mention of wage increases, electrical industrial equipment manufacturers raised prices 47% after OPA. Between June 1946 and June 1947 prices of radios jumped 70%, on washing machines 44%, on refrigerators 31%. At the same time production of these items, according to the Dept. of Commerce, increased respectively 12%, 67% and 39%.

Ignoring its own price hikes and increases in production, GE's ads called for more production, urged "each businessman . . . to try to accomplish voluntary price reductions," urged "each of us" to put away the "savings gained from lower prices" (sic), and to undergo "some temporary self-denial" to lick this inflation.

UE's immediate reaction to the suggestions was that GE itself had not practiced either of the latter two recommendations.

Oh, yes—GE did reduce some prices by 3 to 10%.

The very day GE's ad in defense of the public appeared in the newspapers the U. S. Supreme Court found it guilty along with Westinghouse and 10 other electrical manufacturers of price fixing.

AUTO: Negotiations with General Motors on the CIO Auto Workers' proposals for a 15c hourly boost, plus 10c an hour for a pension fund and 5c for hospital and medical insurance, began last week.

Chrysler negotiations, begun earlier, were resumed at the same time.

In a statement of objectives the union's Intl. Executive Board in January claimed that rising prices would leave a gap of 18.8% by May between wages and living costs. Restoration of June, 1946, buying power would therefore require a 25.1c hourly increase, it said.

STEEL: As some 850,000 CIO Steelworkers in the U. S. were looking toward the beginning of negotiations in April, some of their fellow unionists were winning increases in Canada.

Following a five-week strike at two Dominion Bridge plants in Vancouver, B. C., CIO Steelworkers won wage hikes of 10c a hour and improved vacations.

At Hamilton, Ont., 2,000 employes of Intl. Harvester won 13c an hour, while 1,200 Steelworkers at the Natl. Steel Car Co. gained increases of 13½c.

The gains at Natl. Steel were in addition to a 6½c raise granted as a "down payment" last November when wage talks began, bringing the total to 20c.

CAFETERIA Workers: In the nation's capital, meanwhile, Rep. Clare E. Hoffman and his House Labor subcommittee, were accused of twice breaking up a "sure settlement" of the 10-weeks strike of Negro cafeteria workers.

The accusation was leveled by George E. Strong, government-appointed conciliator in the dispute between the CIO Public Workers and Government Services, Inc., private corporation which operates cafeterias in 42 government buildings.

In a letter to Federal Works Administrator Philip B. Fleming, Strong, an attorney and former Army colonel, said:

"Just when I thought I had the strike settled, the subcommittee would get in contact with GSI, or issue subpoenas, or hold a hearing at which GSI's representatives would make commitments under oath which they could not modify to effect a settlement."—Gloria Caplan

IT CERTAINLY PAYS TO ADVERTISE AGAINST DISCRIMINATION

THE slogan, "It pays to advertise," is paying off in the anti-discrimination campaign.

Nationwide publicity, both in publications and on the radio, has been given the Advertising Council's "United America" program. United America has this keynote:

"1. Accept—or reject—people on their individual worth.

"2. Don't listen to, or spread, rumors against a race or religion.

"3. Speak up, wherever we are, at home, in business, in our school, labor, church, or social groups, against prejudice, for understanding."

Typical newspaper stories included these:

New York Times: The objective of the drive is "making racial prejudice as unpopular as B. O."

New York Herald Tribune: Quoted Lee Bristol, council coordinator, as saying: "Every means of advertising which could possibly be useful will be mobilized in this fight against prejudice."

Christian Science Monitor: A council spokesman says: "Our wartime accomplishments show that advertising can get results in social fields."

Radio Daily: "Far over three-quarters of a billion listener-impressions were circulated by radio in 1947 in strong support of the council's campaign, aimed at fighting intolerance. Exact figure was 811,120,000 listener-impressions."

THE council's drive is utilizing every shade of the industry's talent to push across its drive. Highly-paid copywriters, artists and idea men are on the job. Last year, for instance, United America announcements were on network shows that had a combined Hooper rating of 1600, which was 55 times the radio coverage chalked up by Fibber McGee & Molly in mid-December, during which time Fibber had the top Hooper.

Radio shows which cooperated included It Pays to Be Ignorant, Jack Benny, Vox Pop, Bob Hope, Ellery Queen, Dennis Day, Bob Burns, Vaughn Monroe, Red Skelton, Mr. District Attorney, One Man's Family, Natl. Farm & Home Hour, Dick Haynes, Louella Parsons, Bill Stern.

Special messages were aired by Eddie Cantor, "A Date With Judy," Breakfast in Hollywood, Charlie McCarthy, Winner Take All, Kraft Music Hall.

The council has prepared ads (a sample on this page) for insertion in newspapers. The promotion article with the ads starts off with this quotation from "To Secure These Rights"—report of Pres. Truman's Civil Rights Committee:

"In the time it takes to read this report, 1000 Americans will be born. These new Americans will come into families whose religious faiths are a roster of all those which men hold sacred. Their names will be strange and varied, echoes from every corner of the world. Their skins will range in color from black to white. A few will be born to riches, more to average comfort, and too many to poverty. All of them will be Americans.

"These new Americans, drawn from all the races of mankind, provide a challenge to our American democracy. We have a great heritage of freedom and equality for all men, sometimes called the 'American way.' Yet, we cannot avoid the knowledge that the American ideal still awaits complete realization."

In an appeal to newspaper publishers, editors and advertising managers, the council asks:

"Here is a campaign, one unique in that it is sure to receive overwhelming local support. The Mayor's friendly relations committees public-spirited individuals, public officials, the clergy, labor, interested groups, all are awaiting such a campaign."

THE ad which appears on this page speaks for itself. Other ads include one which shows a picture of a football team—the usual lineup shot, with linemen kneeling and backfielders standing—captioned "The best team State ever had." The lineup is printed just below the picture and includes:

Zabishensky and Adams, ends; Tersinni and Minoupilis, tackles; Christiansen and Garcia, guards; Goldstein, center; O'Grady and Johnson, halfbacks; MacGregor, quarterback, and Schmidt, fullback.

The ad continues: "'All-America.' people said . . . and it was. For State played as a team . . . always . . . with perfect cordination between line and backfield. MacGregor never refused to pass the ball to Johnson because of the color of his skin, or to O'Grady because he went to a different church on Sunday. Nor did Goldstein fail to take out a man because it meant that Schmidt would score a touchdown."

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey served on Pres. Truman's Civil Rights Committee. Allan L. Swim, CIO Publicity Director and editor of the CIO News, is a member of the Public Policy committee of the Advertising Council.

Copies of the ads can be obtained at the Council, Dept. T-25, 11 W. 42d st., New York City 18, N. Y.

OTHER news from the civil rights front:

Bowling: The CIO Auto Workers has urged the official Hawaiian bowling team to refuse to play in the American Bowling Congress tournament "even if you are ruled eligible." The UAW pointed out that ABC bars all non-Caucasians and that Detroit bowling officials have ordered alleys there to bar match play by the Hawaiians.

The AB tourney is scheduled for Detroit.

The Natl. Committee for Fair Play in Bowling and the UAW are sponsoring a genuine Intl. bowling tournament, also in Detroit, from April 3 to May 2. It will be open to all. The Hawaiians have been invited to participate.

Hoffman: Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.)—that man who appears often in these columns, but who is definitely no friend of ours or yours is at it again.

He's reiterated his pleas to his Rep. colleagues to make a "deal" with Southern Dems. who are raging at Truman's civil rights program.

Hoffman reminded Reps. that they had received the support of "many a Southern Congressman" since the "honeymoon days of the New Deal."

School: The Supreme Court, with Justices Black, Vinson, Murphy, Douglas, Frankfurter, Rutledge and Burton voting for and Justice Reed against in an 8-1 decision, ruled that a system of voluntary religious instruction in a Champaign, Ill., public school is unconstitutional..

The order affects only that school, but is expected to open the way for similar suits to that filed by Mrs. Vashti McCollum. Mrs. McCollum, an avowed atheist, did not want her 10-year-old son taught religion.

Static: Noisy protestors of the status quo in Southern civil rights asserted that they had the constitutional right to be given time on the air—to attack the civil rights program!

The South: All the newspapers were jam-packed with stories about the revolt of Southern politicians. But we didn't see any which carried a significant item from Atlanta.

There, the Southern Regional Council held a meeting with the CIO, AFL, Georgia Workers' Education Service, United & Georgia Councils of Church Women, the American Veterans Committee, the Southeastern Urban League, the Anti-Defamation League, the Natl. Board of YWCA and the Southern Regional Association for Adult Education.

More than 400 Southerners—white and Negroes—urged the enactment of federal FEPC legislation, a realistic federal minimum wage law and the inclusion of job security provisions in labor contracts..

Resolutions declared: "We stand for equal opportunity to be employed, with opportunity for advancement according to ability and skill . . . greater economic justice would contribute mightily to safety and security of the person." Discrimination in Government employment was criticized and the President was urged to set up a fair employment agency for federal employes.

The "revolt": Pres. Truman and the Natl. Democratic Chairman, Sen. Harold McGrath (D., R. I.) stood pat last week on the President's civil rights program. Truman told Congress to write its own laws within the framework of his recommendations. McGrath refused to be swayed by protests.

The two Senators from Alabama sought peace in the party and were reportedly making headway. Big shots of the organization met at the White House (eating a lunch of smelts presented to Truman by two GOP politicians) and reportedly discussed the entire political picture, including civil rights. In general, Northern and Western Democratic leaders are for the liberties program.

"To Secure": Meanwhile, the report of the President's Civil Rights Committee, "To Secure These Rights," was a best-seller. Hundreds of thousands of copies had been sold by the Government Printing Office, by a commercial publisher and by the Newspaper PM. The latter, incidentally, did the unusual, took advertising space in the New York Times to promote sales of the report.

Los Angeles: The CIO and other groups sought an end to that city's Jim Crow hospitals.

Philadelphia: Four years after the notorious anti-Negro traction strike (which was opposed by the CIO), Negroes were a common sight at the controls of trolleys and not a single act had occurred of the violence predicted by the fomenters of the strike.

"Freedom" of Press: Newspapers also ignored four recent instances of brutality against Negroes in Mississippi.

They were:

1. A Negro vet in Jackson was arrested in a cafe for drunkenness . . . He was pushed into the street, where a cop shot him in the hip on the pretext he was trying to escape . . . A large crowd gathered and many testify that the cop and other officers beat the Negro unmercifully . . . He was thrown into a police car, wounded and bloody . . . The cops then turned on the crowd with drawn revolvers, ordered only Negroes to leave the scene.

2. Also at Jackson, a one-armed Negro Navy vet ran when spoken to by a cop . . . The officer chased him, caught him, began to beat him . . . Soon, 16 cops were beating the one-armed man . . . He lay unconscious in a pool of blood . . . One cop stood on his only arm while a white civilian turned him over to see if he were dead..

6. In Kosciusko, a cop shot a Negro vet to death claiming the man had tried to strike him while being taken to jail . . . The Negro had been seized while fleeing a mob.

4.. At Edwards another vet was shot dead while being taken to jail . . . the officer said he shot in self-defense . . . marks on the vet's clothing showed he had been shot in the back.

SUSAN HAYWARD . . . Protestant

SPENCER TRACY . . . Catholic

EDDIE CANTOR . . . Jew

FRANK SINATRA . . . Immigrant's Son

MARIAN ANDERSON . . . Negro

SONNY TUFTS . . . Mayflower Descendant

BUT WHO CARES?

DID it ever occur to you to rate a great performer by his race, creed, or where his parents came from?

Of course not. You don't care. You judge him on his performance, on his merits. You think of him as an individual—not as a member of some particular group.

Why judge your neighbor or fellow worker any differently? Yet—think a minute—how often do you pin a group label on someone before he has a chance to prove his own personal qualities?

All that any member of any racial or religious group in America asks is the right to be considered on his individual merits. Like him or dislike him as you choose—but do it because he's the kind of a person he is—not because of his race or religion.

There are people in this country who would have us do otherwise—who would breed disunity and trouble by damning whole groups just because they are of a different creed, color, or national origin.

Don't play their game! It's dangerous.

For our own sake—for America's sake, we can all do these three things to help the cause of unity:

1. Accept—or reject—people on their individual worth.
2. Don't listen to, or spread, rumors against a race, or a religion.
3. Speak up, wherever we are, at home, in business, in our school, labor, church, or social groups, against prejudice, for understanding.

Remember—that's being an American.

ANTI-BIAS: This is one of the ads being distributed by the Advertising Council as part of that organization's battle against discrimination.

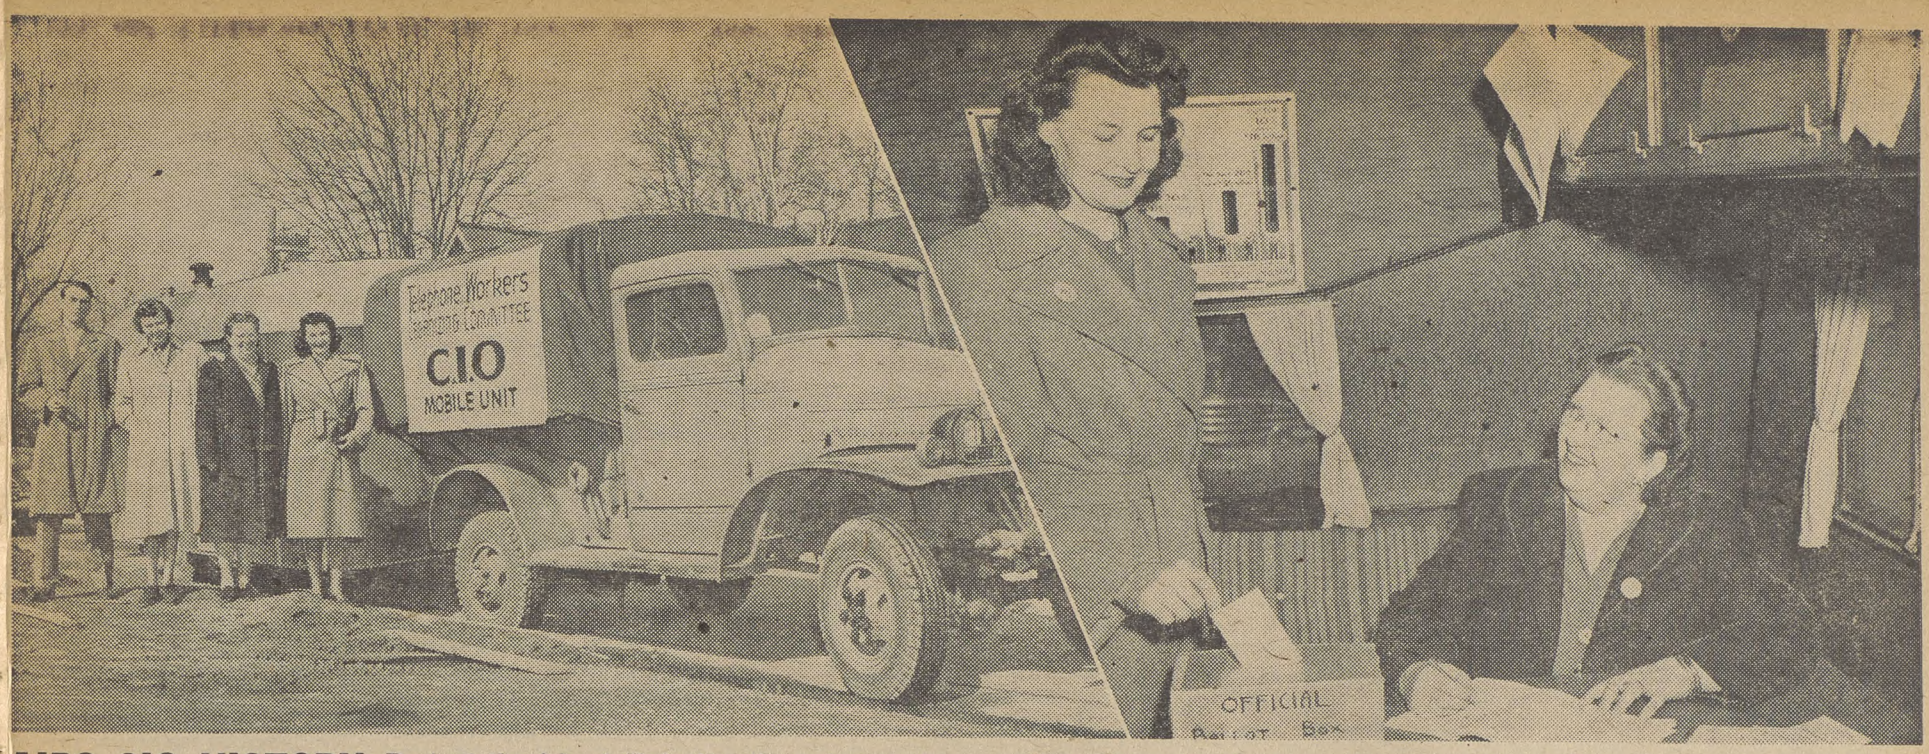
The Council also sponsors radio spot announcements which have a wide distribution on some of the major and most popular programs.

Beats Bias

Manhattan College, New York institution run by the Catholic Christian Brothers, has won its fight against discrimination. Manhattan had refused to play in the Natl. Intercollegiate Association basketball tournament at Kansas City because of a ban on Negro players. The ban was lifted. (P. S. Manhattan has no Negro players.)

It All Ads Up

The Advertising Council reports that in peacetime over 1100 magazines have donated at least a page a week to advertising public causes; innumerable newspaper space is given; the outdoor ad industry furnishes 3000 panels a month; the transportation ad industry allows 100,000 car cards a month; others are aiding.



AIDS CIO VICTORY: Part of the job of "bringing the union to the workers" was this travelling election booth, which telephone employes of Oregon took to telephone officers during balloting. The workers chose affiliation with the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee. Shown beside the mobile unit in Grants Pass, Oregon, are TWOC Field Reps. E. W. Nitcher and J. McDonald, UTEO traffic Rep. Adelaide Murphy and UTEO member Erna C. Bjorge. At right, Erna C. Bjorge casts her ballot for TWOC inside the trailer as Adelaide Murphy checks the list..

Representation Polls Fall Off 84% Under Taft-Hartley

AFTER a six months dose of Taft-Hartley, the law's supporters were saying "See, it's not as bitter as you expected." But union officials pointed out that a careful analysis of the NLRB's activity under the law won't bear that out.

According to the Board's own records, the number of representation elections it conducted fell sharply after T-H, as did the number of unfair labor practice charges filed against employers. But the unfair charges filed by employers, which get priority under the law, rose, as did company and independent unionism, encouraged by the law.

Busy processing such innovations as union shop elections, decertification elections and employer requests for injunctions, the Board found time to conduct only 507 representation elections out of 1395 requested during the first four months of T-H. In a similar period in 1946 the pre-T-H board conducted an average of 3500 elections. This is a decrease of 84% in elections held.

AT an estimated cost of 50c a ballot the NLRB conducted 689 union shop polls, only four of which resulted in no authorization for the union shop. The total cost to the government of these elections was $50,000.

The law's narrow interpretation of employer "coercion"—all in the interest of "free speech" for the bosses—resulted in an upswing in "no union" votes from 22% under the Wagner Act to 29% under T-H.

Another example of how the law is stacked against the union is seen in results of decertification elections. Although less than half the ballots cast were against the union. 14 of the 24 elections resulted in decertification. The discrepancy in these cases is due to the law's requirement that the union win a majority of all eligible workers, instead of a majority of those voting. Thus an absentee counts as a vote against the union.

Kroll Warns T-H May Trap Radio

RADIO stations currently demanding the right to editorialize in their broadcasts may find themselves "trapped" by the political provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Jack Kroll, CIO Political Action Committee director, told the Federal Communications Commission that the present ban on station-editorializing should be upheld. The FCC has been holding hearings to determine whether it should repeal the current ban on station expressions of viewpoints.

"If the Mayflower decision were changed, as the industry has requested," Kroll wrote to the FCC, "it is possible that radio facilities would be used in connection with a federal election, which . . . is directly contrary to the language of the Taft-Hartley act and the intent of Congress."

The T-H ban on political expenditures by union and corporations is now the subject of a constitutional test started by the CIO.

Kroll backed up earlier CIO claims to the FCC that radio broadcasting is a "big business and as such is bound to represent that viewpoint." A free rein on station editorializing, as sought by the industry, might well lead to "the silencing of controversial opinion and seriously impair radio's value" to the public, Kroll wrote.

The PAC official said that he had no intention of defending the T-H act—in fact, was helping get it repealed. But PAC wanted to point out the "pitfalls" that may be met if the act's constitutionality is upheld, Kroll told the government agency.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Regional Dir. James J. Leary, Kansas City, Mo., advises that the International Woodworkers of America-CIO won an NLRB election at the Schwarz Basket and Box Co., Topeka, Kans., IWA 14, no union 9. CIO Field Rep. William E. Lewis was in charge.

In Birmingham, Ala., with the sprawling Avondale chain of textile mills as the prime target, plans to step up the CIO Southern Drive were made when more than 300 textile workers and union representatives met in the Jefferson County courthouse.

Principal speakers were Van A. Bittner, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, and George Baldanzi, executive vice-president of the Textile Workers Union-CIO. Other speakers included Carey E. Haigler, CIO state director; Edward F. Ryan, Jr., TWUA state director, and R. E. Farr, United Steelworkers-CIO district director.

In Greensboro, N. C. another victory was chalked up for the CIO Southern Drive when the employes of Swift & Co. selected a CIO union as their bargaining agent in an NLRB-conducted election. The official tally showed 41 votes for the union to six against. There were five spoiled ballots and three challenged.

Regional Dir. Joseph M. Walsh, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., reports the first union shop election in that area under NLRB. Members of Local 998, Textile Workers, voted 250 to 18 for union shop at the Hess-Goldsmith plant. This plant was recently organized under the direction of Charles Sobol, TWUA Regional Director.

The writer just returned from California where he met in San Francisco with representatives of the United Telephone Employes of Oregon, the United Brotherhood of Telephone Workers, and Telephone Traffic Employes Organization. At this two-day conference, plans were laid to consolidate these organizations, who have just voted for TWOC-CIO affiliation, and in bargaining rights represent some 25,000 workers.

Plans were also laid for joint negotiations with the company and consideration given to organization expansion. UBTW Pres. Frank Murphy presided over the conference. In addition to these groups, representatives of ACEW, who rendered valuable assistance in this drive were present, Dan Harris of Oregon of ACEW and the toll board operators. Those present were enthusiastic over CIO affiliation and intend to make it a real living force.

After dealing with CIO matters, including the question of Regional Director in Northern California, the writer moved on to Los Angeles and had conferences with telephone groups there, and again the ACEW boys—who have been affiliated for some time—were present.

It is planned to consolidate what we have and then engage in an intensified program. I met with a lot of CIO people there who told of the division created by the political situation. In failing to move together as a united force, permitting other than the labor movement to set a political action program for labor can only bring about these kind of results.

The grave danger is that the reactionaries will ride high, wide and handsome. The result may be the election of a Congress more reactionary than the present one, impairment of our efforts to bring about the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law and other vicious legislation.

Next week the Long Lines AUTW-CIO will be in convention in Jacksonville, Fla. The Executive Board of telephone workers will meet upon the adjournment of that convention. Later the executive board of the American Communication Equipment Workers will meet in Miami, Fla.

PotofskyHits UN Actions On Palestine

"APPEASEMENT at Lake Success" threatens the life of UN, Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers warned in a demand that both the UN and the U. S. support immediately the decision to partition Palestine.

He insisted that May 15—when the British give up the mandate they received from the old League of Nations—must be set as an official date for creating a Jewish state. The UN must see that it is given adequate safeguards, Potofsky declared.

The CIO official spoke at a dinner honoring Louis Hollander, New York State CIO head and an Amalgamated vice-president. Attended by union officials and clothing employers, the affair raised $50,000 for Palestine aid. The union has collected a total of $275,000 this year for the same cause.

Potofsky predicted that final action by UN on the Palestine issue "will determine whether there is sufficient police power in the world to prevent acts of aggression against a small state by its neighbors, who are themselves members of the United Nations and bound by its charter . . ."

THE British, he said, have fulfilled their mandate in Palestine "wretchedly and ignominiously."

"Will May 15 mean one more tragic and bloody chapter in the history of modern Jewry or their emancipation from persecution, death and annihilation?" he asked.

American policy on the matter, Potofsky added, "does not appear in the most attractive light. Having given the strongest possible impetus to partition on Nov. 29 in the UN General Assembly, it is now pursuing a vacillating role that is seriously affecting the decisions of the Security Council in implementing the General Assembly Action.

"Reversal of the American position has given aid and comfort to the Arabs," Potofsky charged, and made a "farce" of the UN decision.

"IT smacks of appeasement. Appeasement at Lake Success can have no better outcome than appeasement at Munich. It will spell the death warrant of the UN as the march of Japan into Manchuria meant the death of the League of Nations.

"If the charge that America has reversed her position on Palestine because of private oil interests is true, then the case is even more reprehensible."

Plans Organization For Plant Guards

CIO Org. Dir. Allan S. Haywood has announced formation of the CIO Plant Guard Organizing Committee.

The new Committee, formed because the Taft-Hartley Law bars plant guards from regular plant unions, will organize guards in all industries. It will work closely with the CIO unions in those industries. Frank McGahey, Detroit, is Chairman of the PGOC, whose offices will be in the Hoffman Building, Detroit.

FRANK N. HOFFMAN

Hoffman Appointed Legislative Aid

The appointment of Frank N. Hoffman as CIO Steelworkers Legislative Director has been announced by Pres. Philip Murray. He succeeds Robert Lamb, who resigned last July.

Hoffman was previously a PAC representative for his union in the Southwest and has served as the union's acting director of the Monongahela Valley and Philadelphia districts.

Prior to working for the Steelworkers, Hoffman was president of the union's Curtis-Wright Propeller Division in Pittsburgh.

He received his law degree at Notre Dame, where he was a guard and tackle on Knute Rockne's football teams. He served as a Navy officer in World War II.

USES Says Jobless Up, Placements Down

More unemployed workers applied to the U.S. Employment Service for jobs in January than in any other month since June 1947, USES Director Robert C. Goodwin said, and placements fell far behind applications.

Murray Asks Ball To Veto FTA Report

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has called on Sen. Joseph H. Ball (R., Minn.), chairman of the Joint Committee on Labor-Management Relations, to "repudiate" a report by two committee investigators on the Reynolds Tobacco Co. local, CIO Food, Tobacco Workers, at Winston-Salem.

Murray told Ball, "I have examined this so-called Plant Study Report and I am shocked by it.

"This report is one-sided in its approach and wholly biased in its conclusions. The report suppresses fundamental facts with respect to the relationship between the company and the union.

"It uncritically gives voice to unproved rumors and innuendoes, which slur the union, its members and its leaders.

"The report gives the false impression that the appearance of the union at the R. J. Reynolds plant brought to a close an idyllic relationship between the workers and the company, and that the union has in no way contributed to the welfare of the employes."

MURRAY charged that at no time during the investigation was the union questioned on its relationship with the company.

Among the investigators' charges against the union were:

- "Excessive political activity, which has nothing to do with employe interests or with collective bargaining."
- "Preparing and presenting petitions and 'demands' of a political nature to the mayor of Winston-Salem."
- "Resisting and opposing the Taft-Hartley law."
- "Soliciting and collecting contributions for the CIO, PAC and for other organizations and movements known as communist or subversive in their natures."
- "Promoting the political fortunes of a Negro alderman."

Of the Negro workers, who comprise most of the working force, the investigators said they lack the "higher skill that was deemed requisite to machine production of cigarettes" and that therefore more skilled jobs cannot be filled by them.

THE union, which has twice been forced to strike to make the company bargain collectively, was accused of setting up "a virtual reign of terror, even though, according to FTA, Police Chief Gold publicly praised the union for its orderliness and peaceful behavior during the walkout last year.

In a letter of protest to Ball, FTA Pres. Donald Henderson said the report "made clear in frequent admiring quotation . . . the authors sought only the views of Reynolds executives of the police and of their agents among the so-called Reynolds Employes Association."

Approval of the report, Henderson said, would be proof that the T-H Act and agencies created by it "are openly anti-union and openly pro-employer in situations where the workers attempt to organize and bargain collectively for their own protection."

Murray's letter listed seven instances of unfairness in the report, which he noted appeared coincidentally with preparations by the company to renew "its historic anti-union policies."

He charged that the report:

- Justified discrimination against Negroes practiced by the company.
- "Deliberately seeks to convey the impression that the union does not represent a majority."
- Suppressed the fact that the company had repeatedly sought to prevent holding of an election by injunctions and "other obstructive methods."
- Was "shallow beyond belief" in its condemnation of the union's organizing activities.
- Had "irresponsibly" tried to convey the impression that the 1947 strike was not a labor dispute, but a disguised form of racial outbreak.
- "Spurned" such achievements by the local as considerable wage gains.
- Incorrectly charges that the union's grievances are "ill-considered and frivolous."

IRVING ABRAMSON

Abramson To Head Eastern Section

Irving Abramson has been selected as the National CIO's eastern representative.

Abramson, recently appointed to the CIO staff after previous service with a number of CIO unions, said his headquarters would probably be in New York. He will act as a representative of Org. Dir. Allan S. Haywood in coordinating organizational and related activities of CIO in his section.

Abramson succeeds Tim Flynn in the position. Flynn was designated last week as CIO regional director for northern California. Adolph Germer carries out similar functions under Haywood's direction in the western section.

Millennium Still Far Off, BLS Shows

The price drops, much heralded in the press as a sure follower of the commodity market break starting Feb. 4, nearly petered out in two short weeks, Bureau of Labor Statistics reports on wholesale prices show. BLS said that average wholesale prices edged downward three-tenths of 1%, after an average drop of 2½% the week before.

Something Fishy

Paralysis of the Alaska salmon canning industry loomed as an employers' stall caused a breakdown in negotiations with seven AFL, CIO and unaffiliated unions.

Senate Can Restore Cuts InLaborDept.

UNLESS the Senate counteracts two recent votes in the House, the Labor Dept. will soon become even more the government's "sad sack" agency.

Now in Senate hands are two bills which could weaken the already feeble Department, which is supposed to protect American workers:

1. The Appropriations Bill for the next fiscal year. The House indorsed a hatchet-job started by its Appropriations Committee and knocked sizeable chunks out of the Department's already slender budget.

2. Resolution 131, whose passage would prevent the U. S. Employment Service and the government's unemployment compensation agency—both dealing with labor problems — from being placed permanently in the Labor Dept.

Permanent shifting of these two agencies to the Department has already been opposed by the House. If the Senate does likewise by approving Res. 131, the Reorganization Plan—proposed by Pres. Truman—will be killed.

IF the Senate votes down Res. 131 or fails to act by Mar. 19, the agencies will be joined to the Labor Dept. As the CIO News went to press, it appeared a vote would be taken before the deadline date.

The slicing of Labor Dept. funds was directed by Rep. John Taber (R., N. Y.) who heads the Appropriations Committee, and it was approved unanimously by the House on a voice vote.

The House-approved fund cuts would cut out the field offices of the Women's Bureau, all but wreck the efficient Bureau of Labor Statistics, wipe out completely the small Veterans Re-Employment section and weaken still further the Wage-Hour Division.

On the other hand, the bill as approved in the House gives the Labor Board, administering the Taft-Hartley Act, funds to hire an additional 350 persons.

CIO Legislative Dir. Nathan Cowan described the House cuts as "outrageous," said they would be regarded by wage-earners as a "direct slap," and called the House action "legislation by bankruptcy."

Labor Sec. Schwellenbach, voicing hope that the Senate would repair the damage caused in the House, said the fund cut was "another blow at efficient government."

Passage, he said, would deprive the Department of "functions and services widely used by both labor and management in peaceful collective bargaining."

Vets Fill 31% Of Ohio Jobs

Thirty-one percent of the men employed in Ohio manufacturing industries in November, 1947, were World War II veterans and 20% of all manufacturing workers were women, Frank J. Collopy, Bureau of Unemployment Compensation administrator, reports.

Collopy based his figures upon reports received from 1,300 Ohio manufacturers employing about four-fifths of all factory workers in the state.

END ALL OLEO TAXES, CIO TELLS CONGRESS

CIO, fighting on all fronts for lower living costs, has jumped into the Battle of the Oleomargarine Tax.

Along with spokesman for consumer groups, grocers, soybean producers and others, a CIO representative asked the House Agriculture Committee to knock out the whole kit and kaboodle of taxes on margarine.

Don Montgomery, Washington representative of the CIO Auto Union and a former consumers counsel in the Agriculture Dept., told the Committee:

"Get rid of all of it. Knocking off the 10c tax (levied by the U. S. on each pound of colored margarine) is not enough.

"Knock off also the bothersome, meaningless fees imposed upon manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers, hospitals, boarding houses and restaurants.

"People want to be able to buy oleomargarine wherever they buy other groceries. Only half the country's retail stores now handle oleomargarine. Open it up.

"GIVE every small guy that wants to set himself up to manufacture oleomargarine a chance to find an outlet to the consumer . . . We know the big margarine manufacturers will find outlets. We want the little ones to find outlets, too.

"Don't do half a job. Take the butter lobby off our backs, but don't replace it with a small group of big margarine manufacturers who know how to make the most of a good thing."

Under present laws, each pound of colored margarine is taxed a dime, each pound of uncolored margarine is taxed a half-cent. Grocers who sell uncolored margarine must pay a fee to the federal government, and a much larger fee if they sell colored margarine. Other state and federal taxes have been placed on manufacturers and wholesalers.

Montgomery presented figures to show that dairy farmers and butter producers won't be hurt by removing the taxes, originally imposed at the behest of the dairy-butter lobby.

BUTTER consumption, he said, has dropped from 17.9 pounds a person in 1925-29 to an estimated 11 pounds this year. Oleo consumption, rising from a 2.4 pounds per person 20 years ago, has risen only to 5 pounds in '47.

"Consumption of butter and oleo combined was 20.1 pounds per capita in the 10 years 1925-34," Montgomery said. "In 1947, the total was 16.2 pounds, a drop of 20%."

There are two reasons for the drop in butter production, the CIO official said.

- Farmers have found it more profitable to sell milk for other purposes than butter.
- Consumers prefer to buy milk in other "whole-milk" products rather than butterfat.

"These reasons are good because they reflect better incomes for farmers, better incomes among consumers, and above all a very great improvement in the diet of the American people."

THANKS to a revolution in food habits, butter is "much less important" to dairy farmers than before the war—with big increases in the amounts of milk going into canned milk, cheese, ice cream and fluid milk and cream.

In Wisconsin—the country's biggest dairy state—taxes have "virtually banned" the use of oleo for years, Montgomery said. In 1936, milk sold for butterfat and farm butter accounted for over 20% of the dairy farmers' income. Today, that same milk for butter is only 1.36% of their income.

The margarine manufacturers, while wanting to see some of the taxes repealed, are doing pretty well for themselves, Montgomery charged.

"Today the materials that go into oleomargarine sell at about one-third the price of butterfat. But in retail stores, oleo sells for one-half the price of butter . . . We want to see the beginning of some active competition among margarine manufacturers."

Equal Rights Proposal Hit

THE welfare of millions of working women would be jeopardized by the so-called "equal rights amendment" to the Constitution, the CIO declared in a statement presented last week at hearings before the House Judiciary Committee.

The CIO urges passage of the Women's Status Bill (HR 2007) instead of the Equal Rights amendment which is opposed by all labor groups but has the backing of the leisure-class National Women's Party and employers seeking to get rid of protective legislation for women workers.

The Women's Status Bill, on the other hand, the CIO statement pointed out, would prohibit sex discrimination in Federal law while at the same time safeguarding the welfare of working women.

It proposes legislation to give women equality in economic, civil, social and political fields based on prior study of the facts made by a commission set up to study the status of women.

Weak DP Bill Up in Senate

A proposal to bring into the U. S. 400,000 war-uprooted displaced persons during the next four years received rough handling from the Senate Judiciary Committee.

In place of the labor-supported Stratton bill, the Senate group approved a measure to admit only 100,000 refugees in two years. The committe's bill carries a number of limitations which will add difficulties to speeding immigration of the displaced persons from temporary camps in Europe.

The Citizens Committee for Displaced Persons—of which CIO Pres. Murray is a board member—rapped the new proposal as "hypocritical."

ACA Arbitration Upheld By Court

An arbitrator's order to reinstate 62 Western Union domestic employes who refused to handle struck copy has been upheld by New York State Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora.

The suspended CIO Communications workers had refused to process copy originating in four struck cable companies—Western Union's cables division, All-America Cables, Mackay Radio and Commercial Cables.

In another development eight cables strikers were arrested for conducting a third "filibuster" at the offices of All-America Cables in New York City.

The strikers blocked off access to the counter for 40 minutes as they copied "cables" out of the newspapers.

Strike in Cambridge

Some 134 CIO office and technical employes of the Eastern Co., Cambridge, Mass., struck last week for pay boosts and job security.

Robert Goodman, CIO Office & Professional regional director, said that "the company, in employing an attorney who claimed in his opening remarks that he had broken the Allis-Chalmers strike, made it very clear that they were unwilling to work on peaceful and friendly terms with the union."

New Technique: Strike Breaking By Congressional Committe

By FRANK DONNER of CIO Legal Department

INJUNCTIONS have always been the most effective employer strike-breaking technique. Under the Taft-Hartley Act, government-by-injunction continues to be a repressive device for smashing strikes.

But a new anti-labor technique is appearing which is fully as effective as government-by-injunction. This new process may well be called government-by-committee.

Here's how this new employer weapon is used. At a strategic point in a labor dispute a Committee of Congress, dominated by anti-labor legislators, intervenes on the side of the employer.

A "hearing" is held or an "investigation" is conducted to smear the union, its members and its leaders or to discredit a strike for the purpose of demoralizing the workers.

Of course, all Congressional Committees are supposed to deal with legislative matters and to conduct their activities with a view to recommending legislation. The new technique ignores this responsibility. Its object is definitely not legislation but smearing strike-breaking.

THE House Un-American Activities Committee has often used this smear technique for strike-breaking purposes.

During the past year, both before and after the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act, other legislative committees have begun to meddle in current labor disputes.

Sometimes they have not hesitated to use this technique even while a dispute was before the Labor Board or in the courts.

On the eve of the telephone strike last April, Rep. Hartley threatened that unless the strike was called off, he would push through a law to smash it.

Hearings of the House Labor Committee have also been used as a form to publicize the employers' side in labor disputes. Often only after they see stories in the papers do the unions involved learn that the Committee has permitted itself to be used by the employers. These unions find great difficulty in getting a hearing from the Committee to answer the smear charges.

Since pasage of the Taft-Hartley Act the House Labor Committee has become even bolder in intervening in labor disputes.

Like an amoeba, the Labor Committee divides itself into convenient subcommittees to deal with important disputes.

Thus, while the Labor Board hearings involving the Typographical Union were being conducted in Chicago, a House Labor subcommittee conducted its own sideshow on the same issue. The same thing happened in connection with the Hollywood movie strike. There is a serious question about the fairness of requiring a union to defend itself in two places at the same time. But there is a more serious question as to whether a subcommittee of Congress should inject itself into a controversy which is at the same time being considered by a U. S. government agency.

MEMBERS of the House Labor subcommittee headed by Congressman Hoffman (R. Mich.) have fallen all over themselves in their zeal to intervene in labor disputes on the employer's side. Last fall, Hoffman's subcommittee "investiagted" strikes in Michigan, Indiana, and Ohio. In some case, when the strikes were ended, Hoffman and his cohorts tried to smear the Michigan State Police for not using violence against the strikers!

Michigan Police Commissioner Donald S. Leonard had this to say:

"Evidently, what Mr. Hoffman wanted was a lot of battered heads and bloodshed, with neighbor fighting neighbor. I have never found out how that settles a strike.

"The socalled hearings conducted by the congressman were not an unbiased effort on his part to learn what actually occurred, but an inquisition in which he would listen to only such testimony as he wanted to hear and which he could manipulate to serve his own purposes."

But Hoffman is really at his best in preventing settlement of a strike. He demonstrated the new technique in a strike at the Joy Manufacturing Co., Michigan City, Ind., where CIO's United Automobile Workers were on strike. The Regional Director of the Councilation Service had scheduled a meeting to settle the strike. Who should appear at this crucial meeting but "investigator" Hoffman?

The settlement meeting was converted into a forum for Hoffman's abuse of the union and U. S. Conciliator. What happened? The union left the meeting since it obviously could not settle a strike and be "investigated" at the same time. When this happened Hoffman left—his devilish mission having been accomplished. At a UAW strike in Gallion, O., Hoffman himself used the hearings as a basis for a back-to-work movement.

THE most revealing performance of a Hoffman subcommittee occurred in a current strike of the CIO Public Workers at Washington against Government Services, Inc. (GSI), a firm operating cafeterias in government buildings. The strike was caused solely by the corporation's refusal to deal with the union on the ground that it had declined to submit affidavits and financial statements under the T-H Act.

Within 24 hours after Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach indicated a desire and intention to settle the strike promptly, Hoffman convened a session of his subcommittee. Sec. Schwellenbach was bluntly informed by Hoffman that he considered Schwellenbach's efforts an attempt to get around T-H Act. He claimed, falsely—that the law bars an employer from dealing with a union which had not complied with these T-H requirements. Schwellenbach answered that over 80% of the local unions in the U. S. have not complied with the filing requirements. He said it wasn't necessary for bargaining.

Later, Schwellenbach produced a memorandum by the Solicitor of the Labor Dept. which plainly supported his position. Even NLRB General Counsel Denham, when called before the Committee, refused to endorse Hoffman's position on this matter. But Rep. Hoffman claimed conclusive authority for his position.

What was that authority? The testimony of the corporation lawyer!

Somebody pointed out to Hoffman that another employer, also operating Government cafeterias, had signed a pact with the same union. The result? The second employer found himself on the Committee griddle and heckled for entering into an agreement with the union.

HOFFMAN also castigated Schwellenbach because he refused to permit the struck cafeteria in the Labor Department to remain open during the strike.

Hoffman told the Acting Secretary of the Interior that he had broken the law by his request that the Interior Department cafeteria be closed. After this tongue-lashing the U. S. Interior Department dropped its request (and bowed to the struck employer.)

When the Secretary of Labor actually brought the two parties together, Hoffman's subcommittee rushed in to "investigate." Subpoenas were issued one weekend for about 10 of the local union officials, at a time when most of them were out of town. The following Monday, representatives of the Committee and U. S. Marshals appeared at the union's International Offices with blank subpoenas providing for surrender of all union records to the committee.

The only persons in the office at the time—the union's counsel and a secretary—were ordered to appear before the Committee in 20 minutes with all the records!

Later, when a negotiator was appointed by Federal Works Administrator Fleming to effect a settlement, Hoffman's Committee again sprang into action. When the negotiator was about to act, officials of the corporation conferred with Hoffman. Two days later, the subcomittee held a closed session at which Hoffman denounced the negotiator and claimed his appointment was a violation of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The negotiator, resisting this pressure, submitted to both union and corporation his formula for a settlement. When the union was told the employer would accept the formula, the union also accepted. But the company's faith in the Hoffman Committee proved too strong a temptation; it secretly turned down the offer, and ran to Hoffman's subcommittee. Within 18 hours a new "hearing" was held. There, Hoffman again rebuked the negotiator who had almost succeeded in ending the strike!

ONLY last week, the negotiator reported that the maneuvers of the Hoffman subcommittee had created a complete impasse.

"The activities of this committee have made settlements of the strike almost impossible," the negotiator said. "Just when I thought I had the strike settled, the subcommittee would get in touch with GSI, or issue subpoenas, or hold a hearing at which GSI's representatives would make commitments under oath which they could not modify to effect a settlement.

"In addition, the subcommittee, seemingly wishing to make my efforts as fruitless as possible, accused me of everything from attempting to by-pass an Act of Congress to being an associate of Communists."

Clearly, the Congressmen who now dominate the House Labor Committee are no friends of labor. Now they have become self-appointed "experts" in labor relations, no strike or any other controversy between an employer and a union is safe from their hostile interference.

This new technique has not been confined to the House Labor Committee. The Taft-Hartley Act provides for the establishment of a Joint Committee on Labor-Management Relations. Last year, this Committee held a private session with the Labor Board to tell it how to enforce the law. The majority of this Joint Committee has now issued its first report, together with a series of so-called studies of labor relations in particular plants.

ONE of the studies deals with relations between CIO's Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers and the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco firms. This report was so unfair and one-sided that Pres. Murray has sent Sen. Ball, chairman of the committee, a letter of protest.

Pres. Murray wrote:

"This Report cannot be viewed in isolation. Of late, we have seen the emergence of a new repressive technique in labor relations. "Government - by - injunctions" is rapidly being supplemented by a much more powerful and effective anti-union weapon, "government-by-committee."

"In one major labor dispute after another I have seen Congressional Committees strategically intervene on the side of an employer to break a strike; to blight a collective bargaining relationship; to destroy a union.

"I know you will agree that it was not the purpose of that section of the law which created the Joint Committee to bring into being a new technique of industrial oppression.

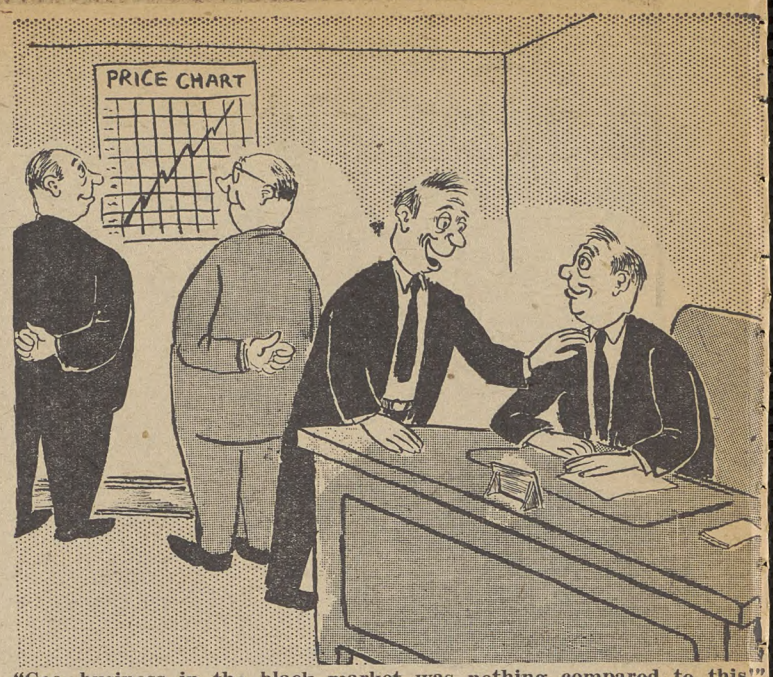
"I, therefore, call upon you to repudiate the plant study in question and to restore the work of your Committee to a truly objective level of investigation.

"Reports of this type are not new to me. A decade or more ago when labor organizations in this country were the victims of an unrestrained attack by labor-hating corporations, such reports were quite fashionable.

"The officers and managers of powerful anti-union corporations frequently engaged slick 'labor consultants' and paid huge fees for such reports to be presented to their stockholders in order to justify a vicious course of anti-unionism. This Report has not been bought and paid for. It is a product of a Congressional Committee.

"The observation has been made by the Chairman of the Joint Committee that labor has not seen fit to use the Joint Committee as a forum in which to voice its objections to the Taft-Hartley Act. In the light of this Report, can there be any question why this is so?"

How long will the American people permit their elected representatives to use their power for anti-labor purposes?



"Gee, business in the black market was nothing compared to this!"

Congressman Gives Answers

HOW do you address a Congressman when you write him a letter?

Could the Secretary of Labor become President under the Succession Act?

How many times has Congress declared war?

Who was the first Negro to serve in the Senate?

(See answers below.)

This is a sampling of some of the 1001 questions of all kinds answered in a new book, "Our American Government," written by Rep. Wright Patman (D., Texas). Between the bright red, white and blue paper covers of this book are 143 large-sized pages containing brief answers to almost any query the average person might ask about how our government works.

Much up-to-date and background information useful in CIO political and legislative activity will be found in the book. For instance, delegations coming to Washington to interview their Congressmen, or individuals wishing to write to them will find it a practical and helpful guide.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray is quoted on the back cover as calling the book "a lasting and highly important contribution to current literature on government."

Two earlier series of questions and answers Patman prepared were reprinted from the Congressional Record in 1940, and expanded in 1946. More than a million copies were sold.

(The present volume is printed by Ziff-Davis, Chicago, and sells for $1.50.)

Answers to the questions above are in the order printed:

Address a Congressman or Senator—Hon. John Jones, M. C., House (or Senate) Office Bldg., Washington, D. C.

A Secretary of Labor could not become President, under the Succession Act, as this was passed in 1886, and the Departments of Commerce, Agriculture and Labor were not set up until later.

Regular declarations of war have been passed as acts of Congress 11 times, beginning with the war of 1812 and ending with six separate declarations against our Axis enemies in 1941 and 42.

First Negro to sit in the Senate was Himar A. Revels of Mississippi in 1870.

Tax Bill Hit As A Steal For Rich

THE Knutson Tax Bill "is only slightly better than last year's bill, which the CIO described in Pres. Roosevelt's terms as 'tax relief for the greedy and not the needy.' "

With these words, Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO assistant director of research, last week expressed the CIO's opposition to the Knutson Bill (H. R. 4790). He testified before the Senate Finance Committee.

The CIO, he told the committee, still maintains that "low income" individuals are not prepared to accept what little tax relief is granted under this bill as long as such relief is granted at the expense of very substantial relief to the high income individuals."

"Clearly and unequivocally," Ruttenberg declared, "H. R. 4790 is a tax steal for the wealthy and a stab in the back for the poor."

In discussion of other tax problems, Ruttenberg declared:

"Now is the time for proper and adequate tax relief to low income individuals.

"Now is the time also to maintain federal revenue at a high enough level to cover the necessary expenditures of the federal government.

"Now is the time to shift some of the burden of taxation from the shoulders of low income individuals to the excessively high profits of American corporations.

"Tax relief now to low income individuals is not inflationary."

HE SAID a major provision of the bill permits married couples to split their income. This provision was not contained in last year's bill. The Treasury has, since 1921, been recommending to the Congress that the community property privilege maintained by the community property states be eliminated.

"This splitting of income provision benefits mainly the middle and high income individuals. Less than 3% of the total tax relief derived from this one provision would go to individuals with incomes of less than $5,000, while more than 97% would go to individuals with incomes of over $5,000 and 89% would go to those with incomes of over $10,000 a year.

"The CIO strongly urges this committee to recommend that families be required to file mandatory joint returns where the income is earned solely by the head of the family instead of proposing income splitting."

(The Senate Finance Committee late last week approved, 10-1, a tax reduction bill. The bill provides a $4,772,600,000 cut for taxpayers, scaled down from the House's $6,500,000,000 measure, passed recently. The House version of the community property tax was retained.)

Is Your Second Cousin A Red?

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

The sub-committee questioned Robinson at length on his connection with an alleged left-wing second cousin.—Item on a Washington news ticker.

That item—referring to sessions of the House Committee on Executive Expenditures — set the tone last week for developments on civil liberties, both in Washington and throughout the nation.

● The House UnAmerican Activities Committee — despite widespread criticism in the press—was voted another $200,000 to continue its work. Now up to its neck in difficulties over its smear of Dr. Edward U. Condon, leading government scientist, the J. Parnell Thomas Committee nevertheless got all but 37 House votes for the additional money.

● The Executive Expenditures Committee, bent on discovering "reds" in the State Department, started acting out the popular song about "who investigates the guy who investigates me?"

Hamilton Robinson, State Dept. executive and former New York corporation lawyer, was questioned at length about his "alleged left-wing second cousin" whose job at the State Dept. ended before Robinson came to work there.

● The State Dept. knocked out the name of Harry Martin—president of the American Newspaper Guild who was elected on an anti-Communist platform—from a list of U. S. delegates to a United Nations free press meeting in Switzerland.

Only after publicity in several newspapers did the White House finally over-rule the State Dept. and name the Guild president to the delegation.

Martin's case was reported to have gone "up to the top" three times. The complaint: nine or ten years ago, Martin had contributed some money to the Southern Conference on Human Welfare, to which numerous prominent figures in both North and South have belonged.

● Nat Finney, correspondent for Cowles papers in Minneapolis and Des Moines and winner of a recent newspaper writing award, was hauled up before a House Committee to tell about government proposals for "voluntary" censorship.

Finney had exposed a government plan to slap "secret" tabs on all sorts of stories, thereby clamping down a heavy curtain on all government activities.

More recently the State, Army, Air Forces and Navy Departments have been toying with ideas for a security advisory board to provide the nation with its first program of peacetime "voluntary" censorship. Heads of the press, radio and movie industry showed little enthusiasm.

Finney said proposals for a security advisory board is a "mistaken attempt to substitute a book of rules for the proven patriotism of the American people." He charged that the plan to classify certain information—believed to have Pres. Truman's support and sponsored by Defense Sec. Forrestal—has the "universal disapproval of the American press."

MEANWHILE, proposed civil rights legislation before the Congress made haste very slowly.

The Senate Rules Committee, bowing to the demands of southern Senators and governors, agreed to hold hearings on the anti-polltax bill (HR 29). The hearings will be held over four days before March 20.

Supporters of the bill feel that delay may lead to chances of a more successful filibuster by southern polltaxers in the Senate. They argued that the proposals had been so fully aired during the past few years that all sides had presented their viewpoints completely.

Apparently spurred on by the threat of federal action, the Virginia legislature passed by a thumping majority a resolution ordering a state-wide referendum on the tax. Virginia is one of the six states where the tax is still in effect.

The anti-lynching bill may be brought before the House this month or early in April—depending in part on the progress made by ERP in both chambers.

Mere threat of action has kept southern politicians stirred to fever heat with talk of "revolt" from the Democratic party and castigation of Pres. Truman for backing up the report of his President's Committee on Civil Rights—of which CIO Sec.-Treas. Carey was a leading member.

DEBATE on the House Un-American Committee's request for funds—which CIO has opposed by convention action—drew lots of effective arguments but only 37 votes from Congressmen.

Rep. Sabbath (D. Ill.), 80-year-old House liberal, charged that each time the Thomas committee wants more money it raises a new headline scare—in this case, the charges against scientist Condon.

Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.) said that the million dollars given to the committee over the past 10 years has brought "certainly no genuine service to the nation—only disservice."

Rep. Leo Isacson, new American Labor Party member from the Bronx, said the attack on Condon is an effort to get "atomic-energy control out of the hands of scientists and back into the hands of the military." He charged it was ironic that the committee gets funds while important government agencies are being slashed to the bone.

Rep. Sadowski (D. Mich.), once a member of the Dies Committee, said "we should appropriate no more money for character assassination."

Several other Congressmen argued along the same lines, but the final vote was 337-37 to allot Thomas his requested $200,000.

Penna. Labor Acts

Pennsylvania heads of the CIO and AFL have announced they would cooperate gladly in a joint labor - management program against inflation as proposed by Gov. James H. Duff.

Harry Boyer, president of the State CIO Council, strongly indorsed Duff's recommendations, made at a Pennsylvania Manufacturers Association dinner in Philadelphia. Boyer pointed out that CIO Pres. Philip Murray had called for a similar move some time ago.

"If we pass the Marshall Plan, we'll show the Italian people that the U. S. is behind them 100%." That message was brought to Congress last week by leaders of Local 1630, United Steelworkers of America, Buffalo, N. Y. (above).

In Washington they presented the petition to white-haired Rep. Charles Eaton (R., N. J.), head of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Shown with Eaton (in center) are Edward Janiak, USA-CIO staff official; Local 1630 Pres. Stanley Kowalewski, native of Poland; Joseph Natalzia, whose father came from Italy; and Joseph Mottle, native of Czechoslovakia. (For the story of their trip see Page 12.)

Need Help

Courage, determination and the will to raise her child have kept this Hungarian woman (left) alive despite abject poverty, cold and fear of starvation. She is typical of millions of mothers throughout the war-desolated world who have given their last food to keep their children alive.

The National CIO Community Service Committee is dedicated to helping relieve the misery of victims of the war.

CIO unions and members can help by contributing through the CIO-CSC to the Crusade for Children of American Overseas Aid-United Nations Appeal for Children, and by purchasing CARE packages. (See story on page 8.)

PACKERS' STAND FORCES STRIKE

JUST as Sen. Joseph Ball's Congressional "Watchdog" Committee pronounced the Taft-Hartley Act a smashing success at inducing good labor-management relations, two nation-wide industries were shut down by walkouts.

After two months of fruitless negotiations and a last-minute arbitration offer was snubbed by the companies, 100,000 CIO Packinghouse workers struck.

The day before the nation's soft coal miners walked out in a dispute over a pension plan.

The meat packers' strike began shortly after the union's strike strategy committee rejected a proposal by Pres. Truman to keep the "status quo and to continue bargaining collectively until April 1."

In turning down the request, UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein noted that the maintenance of the status quo "suggests sacrifice by one party and only one party to these negotiations, namely the Packinghouse Workers. Such a request urges in effect that these employes agree to do exactly what the packing companies are demanding, namely, continue production at present low wage rates."

IN accordance with the T-H Act, Pres. Truman immediately appointed a fact-finding board which would report to him by April 1. He can then seek an injunction to halt the strike for eight weeks as negotiations continue.

On the fact-finding board are Nathan P. Feinsinger, Univ. of Wisconsin Law professor; Pearce Davis, professor, Illinois Institute of Technology, and Walter V. Schaefer, professor, Northwestern University.

They have been holding daily joint conferences with the union and representatives of the "Big Five" companies—Armour, Cudahy, Morrell, Swift and Wilson.

Other packers under CIO contract—among them Tobin, Hormell, Hy-Grade and Kingan—are not affected by the strike and negotiations are continuing. Hy-Grade and Kingan have given indication that they will go above the 9c offer made by the "Big Five."

THE union, which before the walkout, scaled down its demands from 29c an hour to 19c said it was unable to budge the packers from the 9c "quick deal" settlement previously made with the AFL meat cutters.

The 29c demand is based on the increase required to bring the packinghouse workers' income up to the $1.39 an hour said by the Bureau of Labor Statistics to be a minimum for a modest standard.

Retail meat prices, in what many charged was a simple case of profiteering, immediately leaped up. This occurred before the shutdowns had time to effect either wholesale or retail supplies.

The mine situation arose after eight months of deliberation by the owners and the union failed to produce a pension plan, promised last July. Chief bone of contention was the union's desire to cover miners who retired before the plan went into effect.

Such payments would be outlawed by the T-H Act, which says a trust fund shall be for the "sole and exclusive benefit of the employes of such employer and their families and dependents."

BREAK PICKET LINE: Police usher office workers through CIO Packinghouse Workers picket lines at the Swift Packing Company's plant at Sommerville, Mass. Some 100,000 employes of the country's major packing companies struck a week ago as the packers rejected a union arbitration proposal. Also struck are Armour, Cudahy, Morrell, Wilson.

Seek Transport Rise

The CIO Transport Workers voted to press for 30c hourly increases for New York City's subway, bus and trolley employes.

16-NATION UNIONS PLEDGE ERP AID

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

LABOR unions in 16 Marshall Plan countries have voiced workers' endorsement of the European aid program and pledged to work closely with their governments in speeding recovery.

They met in London at the call of the British Trades Union Congress.

CIO was represented by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who has returned to Washington; Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross and Elmer Cope, steel union official now serving as CIO representative to the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Spokesmen for the AFL and the railway brotherhood also attended the London meeting. It was called after WFTU delayed bringing its executive group together for similar talks—presumably because of opposition by Russian, French and Italian groups.

The London meeting said that "without American aid, the conference foresees almost insurmountable difficulties in the way of a reconstruction of the European economic system on a self-supporting basis."

Nor did the labor groups see any danger to European democracy in the aid program.

"The conference has satisfied itself by an examination of the principles underlying the present American proposals that no unacceptable conditions are attached to the offer of American aid, and that in particular there shall be no interference in the internal affairs of any participating country," the resolution declared.

Four Arrested In Beating Of Organizer

By TOM NOWELL

FOUR workers of the American Thread Company in Tallapoosa, Ga., were released under bail of $500 each last Monday following their arrests on charges growing out of the abduction of Edna Martin, part-time organizer for the CIO Textile Workers Union last Nov. 17.

Charged with mobbing, breaking and entering, and assault with firearms, the four arrested were Willie Denman Crocker, Elzie Teal, Mrs. Elzie Teal and Robert Bell. In addition to the $500 bail, a $100 peace bond was set upon Elzie Teal, whom Mrs. Martin declared had threatened her life.

The warrants were issued by Justice of the Peace Asa Stalworth, of Breman, Ga., and were served on the accused quartet by Will Mann, a deputy of Sheriff G. L. Newman, of Haralson County, Ga.

Regarding the arrests, Kenneth Douty, Georgia state director of the Textile Workers, said:

"We waited this long before swearing out the warrants in order that the state and federal authorities would have time to investigate."

The National Labor Relations Board also made an independent investigation of the Tallapoosa abduction.

Mrs. Martin, a resident of Athens, Ga., and the mother of six children, one of whom is a University of Georgia student under the GI bill of Rights, was kidnaped from her room in Tallapoosa on the night of Nov. 17, 1947. She had been organizing employes of the American Thread plant in that city.

'SCUSE PLEASE

The CIO News last week erred in stating that "the packers had raised prices by $33.3 billions to offset wage increases of $5.7 millions." The statement should have read: "The packers raised prices $33.3 billions when wage increases could have been offset by a rise of $5.7 billions."

Now That You've Paid Your Income Taxes, It's Safe To Tell You This One

IN some places they throw Taft-Hartley at you, but in Roanoke Rapids, N. C., it's the "revenooers."

For two years the CIO Textile Workers staff in this company-dominated mill town helped residents—both mill employes and the general public—file their income tax returns.

In the past it had been an uneventful goodwill gesture on the part of the union. But this year—with an NLRB representation election at one plant only a few months away—the companies answered with a campaign to terrorize workers who had used the union's assistance.

Shortly after the union announced its readiness to help the taxpayers the management of the three mills—Patterson, Roanoke and Rosemary (all subsidiaries of the Simmons (mattress) Co.)—replied last January with a circular to all employes attached to tax withholding slips. If workers went to the union for assistance, the companies hinted darkly, they would "get into trouble."

In time an attempt was made to make good the threat, the union reported.

SHORTLY after some 2000 persons filed tax returns with the union's assistance, the "revenooers" mysteriously starting "investigating."

Ralph A. Pope, head of the local tax collector's office, began asking waitresses in a cafe, where most of the CIO staff ate, for the names and addresses of all CIO organizers. He hinted that something "irregular" was afoot in the CIO office.

Two weeks later two workers were warned by the cashier of the local bank not to cash their tax refund checks because "the FBI was in town and somebody was going to jail."

But on Feb. 23 the game started getting rough.

Two men representing themselves as agents of the Internal Revenue Bureau apprehended two employes of the Roanoke Mills during working hours, ushered them off to the post office, and questioned them at length about their tax blanks.

The same grilling was accorded additional workers on following days. No charges were made against them, the union said.

WHEN TWUA staff members called on "Revenooer" Pope to learn what was up," he rushed out of the office in a state of perturbation," according to John Edelman, TWUA's Washington legislative representative, who wrote Paul Hankins, deputy Revenue commissioner:

"During the past 25 years I have been familiar with pretty much every trick, device and tactic used by employing interests in Southern mill towns to discourage unionism. But this business of using a deputy collector of the Internal Revenue and his staff as 'finger men' for an employer is something new. It is also something that has to stop—but fast and permanently."

Hankins has ordered the Greensboro office to investigate.

Meanwhile, the ineffectiveness of the intimidation campaign was demonstrated last week.

TWUA won its NLRB election at the Roanoke Mills handily and had gained sufficient strength at the Patterson Mills to petition for an election there.

U. S. LABOR DEPT. REBUFFED AGAIN

BY a 2-1 vote, the GOP-controlled Senate has turned thumbs down on a plan to build up important services in the Department of Labor.

The test came on Pres. Truman's Reorganization Plan No. 1, which would have placed the important U. S. Employment Service and the equally important Bureau of Unemployment Compensation in the Labor Dept. The Senate turned down the proposition—which had strong union support—by a 58-25 vote.

(Your Senator's vote is listed on Pages 6 and 7.)

The vote was the second rebuff sustained by the Labor Dept. in a week. Earlier, the House had sliced about 20% off the Department's budget for the coming year.

The cuts wiped out the Veterans Employment Service, trimmed the funds of the vital Bureau of Labor Statistics by 40%, eliminated field offices of the Women's Division, and cut still further the thin budget of the Wage-Hour Division. These cuts are on top of a 40% cut in the Department's budget a year ago.

CIO spokesmen will go before the Senate Appropriations Sub-committee this week to plead for more funds for the Department's vital functions. But the sub-committee is composed largely of anti-labor Republicans and anti-labor poll tax Democrats, whose record gives little hope for success.

CIO officials said that these two steps—refusal to transfer the bureaus and voting of cuts in the Department funds—will be followed by legislation to weaken the entire unemployment compensation program.

Senate debate on the reorganization plan gave a clear clue to this type of employer thinking.

Sen. Thomas (D., Utah), a strong supporter of the reorganization plan, said he had been "surprised and shocked . . ." at the "flood of propaganda that has been put" out against the plan.

The plan has nothing to do with the unemployment tax or the state merit-rating system—under which employers with good records of job stability are permitted to pay a smaller tax.

SEN. MURRAY (D., Mont.), another supporter of the plan to build the Labor Dept., said claims had been made that employers would lose faith in the Department if the Employment Service is transferred permanently to it.

"Witnesses expressing such fears had a very difficult time explaining their position," he commented wryly.

Sen. Morse (R., Ore.)—One of five GOP members to support the plan—warned that workers realize the "class discrimination this Congress has practised against the Labor Dept. and against labor, not merely against organized labor but against all wage earners."

EVICTED: It's easy for some Congressmen to insist there's no housing shortage, but Mr. and Mrs. George Sachs of Washington, D. C., could tell them "different." They are shown above in the chickenhouse "home" they were forced to improvise after they were evicted. Mrs. Sachs found the chickenhouse bad for her breathing, neuralgia and rheumatism.

GOP-Led House Passes 'Soak Tenant' Rent Bill

AFTER 7½ hours of bitter debate, Republicans rammed through the House a "soak the tenant" rent measure which many Washington observers predicted would mean increased rents for millions of tenants.

Before shoving the bill through to a final vote, the GOP leadership in the House succeeded in killing 19 amendments proposed to give the tenant a break and snowed under Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas' (D., Cal.) substitute bill which was heartily endorsed by CIO.

The House also uncompromisingly rejected the stronger Senate verson by a vote of 251 to 132.

Technically the House bill extends rent control to March 31, 1949. Actually, its opponents charge and CIO is among them—it is a move to increase and decontrol rents. In a hotly contested "home rule" provision, the bill places all responsibility for raising or decontrolling rents with the local boards, appointed by the state governors.

Democratic minority leader Sam Rayburn assailed it as "the most reckless abdication of authority I have even seen."

SEN. MIKE MONRONEY (D., Okla.) predicted that it would mean a 50% rent increase in many areas. "It could lead to evictions for hundreds of thousands of tenants and raise rents of millions," he charged.

Rep. Adolph Sabath (D., Ill.) called the bill one "to permit tenants to be gouged and held up."

Rep. John McCormack (D., Mass.) said the "local boards can do anything they want to do under this bill without supervision by any federal officer or any state officials."

Even House Banking Committee Chairman Jesse P. Wolcott (R., Wis.), author of the "home rule" idea, admitted that many of the local rent boards were "stacked."

A survey of the local boards made last November and cited during the debate left no doubt about that. Of 521 boards appointed by the governors, 334 were landlord or business-dominated.

THE Senate version would keep administration of controls in the hands of the Housing Expediter and would expire May 1, 1949, one month later than the House bill.

The fate of rent control is now in the hands of 12 Senate-House conferees. These include: Senators Charles Tobey (R., N. H.), Harry Cain (R., Wash.), Ralph Flanders (R., Vt.), John Sparkman (D., Ala.) and Glen Taylor (D., Idaho); Rep. Wolcott. Ralph Gamble (R., N. Y.), Frederick C. Smith (R., Ohio), John C. Kunkel (R., Pa.), Brent Spence (D., Ky.), Paul Brown (D., Ga.) and Wright Patman (D., Texas).

Hara—Kiri!

The night before the House vote on rent control, House Republicans held a policy meeting during which support of Rep. Wolcott's (R., Mich.) "home rule" control was made a GOP "must."

One Republican — Donald L. Jackson (Calif.)—admitted that he was flouting the wishes of his constituents by voting with his party.

"I have received ample warning that in voting against a continuation of Federal rent control I shall be wielding the weapon of my own political assassination . . . Be that as it may, the vote will so be cast."

The Pros And Cons Of 6 Months Of T-H

IT almost seemed if they all were talking about two different laws. The occasion was the half-year anniversary of the Taft-Hartley Law. Here are the pros and cons:

JOINT CONGRESS COMMITTEE ON LABOR RELATIONS

(Majority Report)

Favorable strike picture:

"Each month since passage of the act there has been a decrease both in the number of strikes and in man-days lost through strikes."

Union Gains:

"While the above tables (showing increase in average hourly earnings) show that wages have steadily advanced, the average worker has gained more by virtue of the fact that he has participated in fewer strikes."

Administration of act:

"On the whole, the committee believes the announced policies, and the action taken, demonstrate that the act is being well administered."

Attitude of employers:

"Statistics demonstrate that there has been neither a wholesale filing of lawsuits by employers against unions in courts, nor a great volumne of charges filed by them with the NLRB alleging union unfair labor practices."

Need for amendments:

"Criticism of the act has continued to fill periodicals. We have examined such criticism and found it to be of a general nature with no constructive criticism of any specific provision."

HERE ARE 3 CRITICISMS OF MAJORITY REPORT

(Selected from many)

The minority report:

"This report is political in its approach and misleading in its findings.

"The sweeping character of the claims made, unsupported by the limited experience under T-H, can only result in misleading the public.

"The committee's finding about a reduction of strikes is not supported by the evidence.

"The report intrudes dangerously on the executive and judicial power. This abuse is nowhere more marked than in discussion of the cases involving the Intl.

". . . we will issue a detailed statement later."

Philip Murray:

"The report is eloquently silent about an important fact in connection with unfair labor practice charges. Despite the fact unions have filed five times as many charges as employers, the board's general counsel issued 24 complaints against unions and only 18 against employers . . ."

New York Times:

"It would be claiming too much to attribute this result (decline in strikes) to the presence of the T-H Act on the statute books."

Oleo Tax Cut Killed, Butter Rises 5c

CAUSE and effect?

On Tuesday a House Committee killed any chance of removing the tax on oleomargarine.

On Wednesday, the wholesale price of butter jumped up another five cents a pound—making a dime rise in less than a week. Food stores announced immediate increases in the retail price.

Action in the House Agriculture Committee was to table more than a dozen proposals to remove the tax on both colored and uncolored oleo, as well as to cut or remove high license fees for manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers.

Consumer and labor organizations had been calling for wholesale elimination of the taxes and fees. Spokesmen for soy bean and cotton seed oil associations urged trimming of the taxes. Their products go into margarine.

But the vote in the House Agriculture Committee — which had held hearings on the subject—was 16-10 to table the plans for the balance of the session.

VOTING to table the tax cut proposals were: GOP Reps. Andresen (Minn.), Johnson (Ill.), Murray (Wis.), Gillie (Ind.), Hill (Colo.), Hoeven (Ia.), Simpson (Ill.), Gross (Pa.), Fuller (N. Y.), Bramblett (Calif.), Dague (Pa.), Goff (Ida.), Cotton (N. H.), Arnold (Mo.), Hope (Kans.) and Democratic Rep. Granger (Utah).

Voting against the stop-action move were 10 Democrats: Flannagan (Va.), Cooley (N. C.), Zimmerman (Mo.), Pace (Ga.), Poage (Tex.), Grant (Ala.), Gathings (Ark.), McMillan (S. C.), Worley (Tex.), Abernathy (Miss.).

Rep. Abernathy (D., Miss.) labeled as "pure bunk" an alternate proposal that an Agriculture subcommittee be named to seek a compromise between the dairy margarine interests.

NO, NO, NO, NO, NO

It was bound to happen—sooner or later.

OPA was tossed into the ashcan, and prices—and profits—started climbing. They kept right on going up and up, month after month.

The purchasing power of workers dropped each time prices rose.

Officials of the United Packinghouse Workers knew their members were having tough sledding, so they decided recently to conduct a survey to find out just how bad the situation was. They found:

1. A major portion of members of the union had been forced to spend their wartime savings.

2. A large portion had been forced to go into debt to meet current needs.

They learned, too, that profits of the big packers had increased well over 300% since 1939.

The union decided to ask for a pay increase of 29c an hour so members could live decently. The packers said, "No."

The union scaled its request down to 19c. The packers still said, "No."

The packers tried to get the CIO union to accept the inadequate 9c increase that it had granted an AFL union which represents a small portion of the packinghouse workers. The CIO union said, "No."

Finally, the union said it would accept the 9 cents, retroactive to Jan. 12, if the industry would arbitrate the difference between that figure and 29 cents. The packers said, "No."

A short time later some 100,000 CIO unionists "hit the bricks."

Well, that's the story. We're not going to use a lot of words to condemn the packers. They stand soundly condemned by their own actions.

This editorial, however, would not be complete without our using the word "greedy." So we'll use it where it belongs—to refer to the attitude of the packers. ★ ★ ★

Judge Says We Did Ok

We're going to do the expected and say we feel pretty darn good about the decision Federal Judge Ben Moore handed down, because—after all—he vindicated the CIO's position and gave the framers of the Taft-Hartley Act a legal kick in the pants.

Moore, in effect, said Congress exercised unconstitutional power when it wrote into the T-H Act a provision banning union expenditures in connection with political elections.

His decision meant he felt Philip Murray had done no wrong when he used the CIO News to indorse a candidate in a Maryland Congressional election.

Final decision will be made by the U.S. Supreme Court, but we feel Judge Moore struck a strong blow for continued freedom of press, speech and assembly. ★ ★ ★

The Public Be Damned

Millions of Americans are using oleomargarine, despite the inconveniences of having to color it at home. There are other millions who would like to buy oleo but can't afford to do so regularly although it's much cheaper than butter.

Despite these facts, the House Agriculture Committee shelved all bills which would have removed the punitive oleo taxes which have been in effect for years—in effect because of pressure from the powerful dairy interests.

We've got nothing against butter except its outrageously high price. But we've got plenty against the "dairy interests be blessed, public be damned" attitude of the Agriculture Committee.

It's A High Price That We Pay

We Waste So Much, Build So Little And Fight Over So Many Things

By ALLAN L. SWIM

BACK in the days when I still had hair atop my head I got into a fight with my brother over a piece of cherry pie.

He outweighed me by 60 pounds, so I tried to make up for the difference by heaving Mother's favorite pitcher at his head.

He ducked, moved in close and smeared by nose over a large portion of my face.

I retaliated by cracking him over the ear with a broom handle.

Finally the melee ended with the younger brother—meaning me—in a heap on the floor.

During the fray we expended a lot of useless energy, broke an expensive pitcher, ruined a broom, inflicted a lot of physical punishment on each other and gained absolutely nothing.

One of us knocked the pie on the floor and the other stuck his foot in it!

NATIONS and adult individuals, unfortunately, have been behaving in similar manner for entirely too long.

The world could have created something closely resembling Utopia with the energy and resources expended on its last two disastrous wars.

A prosperous, respected Germany could have been built with the material and human resources that Hitler tossed down the drainpipe.

And the lads in the Secret Service will tell you that many counterfeiters put $12 worth of energy into the creation of a phony $10 bill.

RUSSIA provides a good example of the nonsensical ideas and ideals that keep men and nations in turmoil.

The No. 1 need of the Russian people is the development of a standard of living that would provide freedom from want—and Russia has within her own borders virtually all of the resources needed for the job.

Those things which she needs to secure from the outside can be purchased.

Russia, however, has embarked on an expansionist program that may lead into another blood bath.

She seems more determined to foster an ideology abroad than to wipe out poverty and illiteracy at home.

ONE doesn't have to go clear across Europe, however, to find classic examples of the same kind of nonsense.

We permit rivers like the Missouri to run rampant at flood time, causing millions in damage, while we fight ideological battles over whether dams should be built by private interests, the U. S. Engineers or an agency like TVA.

In industry there are men who would let their employes and the public go hang just to try to prove that they have the power to withhold wage increases that workers need badly and companies can afford to give.

In the labor movement there are men who would destroy unions merely for the sake of political ideology.

SURE, ideas and ideals are wonderful. They're the life-blood of progress. They generate the conflict that keeps the world from stagnating.

But they're too costly when they destroy the goal they seek to achieve. A plan for everlasting prosperity is no good if it creates perpetual depression. A plan for improved democracy is no good if it creates dictatorship.

We human beings waste so much, build so little and fight over so many things that any real progress seems to be a miracle.

It's a high price we pay for the privilege of dropping pie on the floor and putting our big feet into it.

Third Party Issue as Seen by 'Minnesota Labor'

MINNESOTA LABOR, publication of the Minnesota CIO Council, makes the point that inasmuch as it was Congress which passed the Taft-Hartley bill, CIO should concentrate its energies on electing better Representatives and Senators. Excerpts from the editorial by Secy.-Treas. Rodney C. Jacobson of the Minnesota CIO Council follow:

Let's look at this third party business objectively.

Let's forget about Wallace and Communists, Truman and reactionaries. Let's turn off the heat and turn on the light.

"We believe it politically unwise," said the CIO Executive Board, "to inject a third party into the political scene in 1948."

The promoters of the third party that has been launched on the 1948 political scene plunged their frail craft into the storm-tossed seas without even consulting organized labor—CIO, AFL, the railroad brotherhoods.

This is not to say that the bulk of organized labor is opposed to a third party because its leaders were not consulted.

They would have pointed out that organized labor is not yet politically alert enough to assume the responsibility of sponsoring a third party. The CIO is far more politically conscious than the AFL. We have had our Political Action Committee and predecessors for years. Many of us have worked hard.

We haven't even been able yet to organize ourselves soundly on a block, precinct and ward basis. Everybody who has anything to do with political action knows how tough it is to get PAC workers now. A lot of people in both the CIO and the American Federation of Labor will have to have a lot more enthusiasm for political action before a third party movement stands a reasonable chance of success. . . .

It's all very nice to have a President in the White House who's friendly to the workers, the small business men and the farmers. But it's a darn sight more important to have Congressmen and Senators in the Capitol who know what we're up against and who will go to bat for us when their reactionary colleagues dance to music piped in by the NAM.

It was Congressmen-Senators, not President Truman, who put the Taft-Hartley act on the statute books. It will be Congressmen and Senators, not Truman or his successor, who will wipe it off. It is Congressmen and Senators who will pass or vote down similar legislation, and it is with Congressmen and Senators that any genuine third party movement must start.

The CIO has never endorsed any political party. It has endorsed candidates as individuals, on the basis of their records and of promises deemed genuine by virtue of past performances. It has not yet endorsed any candidate for President in 1948, and it may or may not do so. But it will endorse a lot of candidates for Congress. Those are the men we have to concentrate on.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP By YOMEN

"He's been posing that way ever since MacArthur said he'd run for President."

Paul Tells About His Teaching 'Missus'

PAUL'S wife, whom he refers to as "my Missus," learned at school that her husband had the right idea from the very beginning.

It took her two years to learn her "lesson," but Paul says she learned it well and was happy when she returned to her old job.

Paul tells the story this way:

"MY Missus is a reactivated school teacher—one of those who married and retired after a dozen years in the school room and then returned to the classes during the war scarcity of teachers.

"She had always taught in rural and small-town schools until an oilfield district offered her a lucrative salary to whale some knowledge into the seats of their offspring."

PAUL'S "Missus" taught a group of 10-year-olds "who were interested and active in both school and church work.

"She thought they were about the finest children God ever created—neat, polite, studious, and plentifully supplied with paper, pencils, handkerchiefs and anything else needed.

"The Missus has always dreamed of such a school and when she had found it she couldn't understand why it was that way. She hasn't figured out yet why the mothers insisted on making formals for eighth grade girls.

"I've tried to tell her that those people were union folks, members of the Oil Workers-CIO, and accustomed to good wages and the better things of life."

THE principalship of a school in a larger town was offered to Mrs. Paul McGuire, whose husband is field representative of the CIO Railroad Workers at Fairfax, Okla.

"She chose a school where her church had established a mission, so she could handle the church music and work with the children at the same time," Paul said.

"The patrons of the church and school were employed at an unorganized tent factory—and they supported the church in the same manner as they did the school.

"Now, the Missus could never see any difference in the two groups of children—except for their attitude toward the school and church. The factory group simply wasn't interested in any part of it."

YES, things were quite different, said Paul, but Mrs. McGuire couldn't blame the youngsters too much. Paul explained it this way:

"The parents set the example for their children in their quarrelsomeness and indifference—and they refused to come near the school unless to argue about favoritism. The children didn't attend church or school regularly.

"Slowly the Missus learned that she could win the children by furnishing a decent dress to one and books to another. Some needed only kind words and others new shoes. All needed discipline.

"Some of the mothers were working at the factory and their children were doing without noon-day lunches, while others lacked clothes to keep them warm. Gradually she supplied what most of them lacked."

MRS. McGuire, Paul said in a letter to the CIO News, visited the homes of the children and learned that "the breadwinners were barely making enough to feed their families.

"Over and over she repeated, 'I just can't see how a few cents extra on the hourly wage can make such a difference in the lives of so many people.'

"Well, the Missus stayed two years and fought an up-hill battle every day for every child. She finally wearied and returned to the oilfield district.

"'Honestly, it's just like a new world with all new people,' she told me the first day. 'What a difference a few cents on the hour can make in the lives of working people!'

"I agreed."

I'M NOT CARRYING THOSE

'Partners' Wants To Be Partners Except With Labor

(From the Guild Reporter)

A NEW, slick-paper magazine, called "Partners," is being published by the "National Labor-Management Foundation," incorporated in Illinois as a non-profit organization.

Its alleged purpose is the "task of promoting a better and clearer understanding between the workers, their employers, and the general public."

In checking on some of the people behind the foundation, it appears that for them this is strictly a business venture, seeking to achieve financial gain by misrepresenting its purposes and status to the public.

The new magazine does not carry the union label.

Chief financial sponsor is one Maurice R. Franks, national business agent and editor of the "Railroad Yardmasters of North America, Inc."

Yardbirds

In labor circles, there are Yardmasters and Yardmasters.

Labor members know the difference, but for the sake of the public, here it is:

The Railroad Yardmasters of America is a bona-fide union, affiliated with the AFL. The Railroad Yardmasters of North America, Inc., poses as a "labor organization," but actually is a bitter opponent of all that labor stands for.

SEVERAL years ago he bobbed up on the American Action Committee, whose apparent purpose was to campaign against labor and progressive legislation. Other figures in this movement were Sewell Avery of Montgomery-Ward, and Samuel Pettengill, former Indiana congressman.

During labor's fight against passage of the Taft-Hartley act, Franks' views as a "labor leader" were published in big newspaper ads.

Labor, weekly paper of the Standard Railroad Labor Organizations, says Franks' outfit hasn't more than 1,500 members with contracts with only a few roads. The paper added that Franks has a contract with his yardmasters group to be the business agent and to run the paper, splitting the income with the organization.

We located George Peck in New York City and got an interview. Peck is billed in the new magazine as a "columnist and publisher." He also is secretary of the new corporation.

He said his column (labeled The American Way) has no connection with the National Association of Manufacturers. "I have been slightly critical of the NAM," he said. When asked how slightly, and how critical, Peck replied that the NAM had done a poor job in trying to put across its ideas and program.

WHILE the editors of both Franks' magazines are the same, there are other similarities. Some writers appear in both, as is the case with some big advertisers.

His November issue for the yardmasters had page ads from Piper Cub planes and Eastern Air Lines—in a publication ostensibly for railroad workers.

Along with the ad for Eastern Air Lines, Eddie Rickenbacker, president, was a story taking four of the 24 pages filled with blurbs for Rickenbacker. Eastern also had a page ad in Partners.

Here's a sample from Franks' yardmasters' corporation magazine. One Larston D. Farrar writes under the heading "Are executives' salaries too high?"

His conclusion is they are not. "The fellow who collects $50,000-a-year salary can't live in luxury on it. . . . As things stand today, that fellow making $50,000 probably isn't any happier than you on your $300 a month."

On the back cover is a full page ad from Association of American Railroads.

Of significance is the content of "Partners."

On the board of advisers are George E. Sokolsky, ultra conservative columnist; Alfred P. Haake, former economist for the American Liberty League which spearheaded the fight against the Wagner act in the 1930's; Rev. Norman Vincent Peale, who until recently was tied up with the Committee for Constitutional Government, an active anti-labor outfit; Harold Brandt, who, says the Labor Herald, was expelled from the United Farm and Equipment Workers (CIO). Brandt authored a pamphlet, "Evils of the Closed Shop" recently.

Councils: 'CIO's Way Is Our Way' On Third Party and ERP; 2 State Units Balk

IN the brief period since CIO Dir. of Councils John Brophy notified councils of their "obligation to take a forthright stand in support of national CIO policies," more than a third of the State Councils had voted against a third party in 1946 and for the Marshall Plan.

As the CIO News went to press, only two State councils had taken stands considered unfavorable by national officers.

Among the city and council actions, that taken by Cleveland, backing CIO policy, caused most comment, since the Cleveland Council has been split by a factional fight for more than a year.

First states to report that they had lined up with CIO policy were Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, District of Columbia, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Utah and Wisconsin.

The two unfavorable reports came from California and Iowa.

HERE are some pertinent quotations from letters received by Brophy:

MICHIGAN: From Pres. August Scholle—"State PAC, which includes entire executive board of State CIO, unanimously approved your letter in advance of action by the State CIO."

DELAWARE: From Pres. Gilbert E. Lewis—"The council secretary, a third party backer, has been deliberately ignoring communications that dealt with CIO policy on the third party and Marshall Plan. At our meeting Mar. 15, the council delegates condemned this action of the secretary and adopted full support to CIO policy. This was opposed by a small faction of Wallace supporters but passed by overwhelming majority."

MISSOURI: From Secy-Treas. James A. Davis—"Our council has always followed CIO policy and stands ready to do everything in its power to support the National CIO, without reservations of any kind."

NEW JERSEY: From Pres. Carl Holderman—"I am very happy to report that our convention voted overwhelmingly to support."

MARYLAND-D. C.: From Reg. Dir. Frank J. Bender—"The entire matter together with all the ramifications that are incidental with arguments against national action were discussed all day. The vote was 418 for the policy, 59 abstaining and 44 absent. I objected to Henry Beitscher, Md.-D. C. board member from the Public Workers, being seated because he is on the pay roll of the third party. He withdrew from the meeting."

KANSAS: From Secy-Treas. S. J. Yount—"I attended a farm leadership conference at Lindsborg sponsored by the Kansas Farmers' Union and the local cooperatives. Many informed me they would be glad to work in their localities on a political program in line with ours."

PENNSYLVANIA: From Pres. Harry Boyer—"We refuse to let our political strength be split by any third party."

WISCONSIN: From Secy.-Treas. John M. Sorenson—"One local has gone so far as to cancel membership subscriptions to the Wisconsin CIO News because our paper's editorial policy is in accord with national policy."

KENTUCKY: From PAC Chm. Al Whitehouse—"We commend the CIO executive board on its position against a third party."

NEBRASKA: From Secy-Treas. John H. O'Connor—"The publicity received was reasonably good."

MONTANA: From Sub Reg. Dir. Sylvester Graham—"All CIO unions in Montana, with the exception of two or three affiliated with Mine, Mill, are strongly in favor of following national policy."

Rescinded

The Washington, D. C., committee of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, after a number of threatened resignations, has reversed itself on the Wallace third party.

First, a meeting attended by a small fraction of the membership voted in favor of the third party. Then another meeting was held, which voted 10-1 to rescind the indorsement.

THE New York State Council last week established a State-wide PAC, with headquarters in Buffalo, Syracuse and New York City.

CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, who attended the organization meeting, called on State CIO unions to check registrations for the November elections.

Representatives of State CIO unions presented included those from Auto, Brewery, Amalgamated Clothing, Lithographers, Newspaper Guild, Playthings, Wholesale-Retail, Rubber, Steel, Telephone, Textile, Utility, Gas-Coke.

IN Cleveland, an oftimes stormy Council meeting indorsed CIO policy by a standing vote. The margin, according to the Cleveland Plain Dealer, was 2 to 1.

The action followed a plea from State CIO Sec. William Lavelle, who spoke after Council Secy. A. E. Stevenson declared "there is a deal of confusion over the Marshall Plan and I don't think even Henry Wallace can do anything if the present Congress is reelected."

Lavelle said: "I've heard some amazing statements here tonight. But the most amazing is the one by Stevenson that he has not yet been able to find anywhere that the executive board of the national CIO did support the Marshall Plan, but that it supported a program for aid to Europe."

Speakers for the CIO policy included Jacob Reibel, Library Workers; John Hollingsworth, Steel; Pat O'Malley, Auto; John Major, Auto; James Hart and Francis Stark, Steel, who made the motion.

Opposition speakers included Marie Reed and Fred Keller, Electrical; Leroy Feagler, Longshore; Leo Fenster and John Moses, Auto.

Last week, the Cleveland Newspaper Guild and locals from Textile, Steel, Auto and other internationals announced they were reaffiliating with the Council.

In New York City, however, the Greater New York City CIO Council after hearing Brophy's letter read, adopted a resolution terming it a "betrayal" and a "dastardly attack on labor" (Brophy has been an active labor leader for at least 40 years). The two delegates from the Newspaper Guild local, Victor Leo and Arthur Rosenstock, were the only dissenters. A number of locals have split from the New York Council.

Notes from other city and county councils:

BALTIMORE: From Caulder F. Haak, public relations chairman—"Council voted 67 to 4 for policy; indicates a thoroughly positive course of action has been taken."

LOUISVILLE, KY.: From Reg. Dir. W. B. Taylor—"Unanimous vote reaffirmed full support of CIO policy. Walkout was staged by delegations of Transport Workers and Farm Equipment, who constitute minority of council."

ASHTABULA COUNTY, O.: From Rec. Secy. Robert Pyle—"Ashtabula PAC, with one opposition vote, and council, with unanimous vote, backed policy."

GREATER KANSAS CITY, MO.: From Rec. Secy. Joseph M. Welsh—"Policy approved; you can rest assured that as long as I am an officer of the Council, I will support the policy of the CIO and PAC."

DEKALB COUNTY, IND.: From Pres. Howard Hampton—"Here in Auburn, both in the council and in local meetings, it has been stressed and insisted upon that the policy of CIO be followed. Cooperation has been splendid. The job you fellows have done has been swell. It is what it takes to win a fight for all the things the people are entitled to."

ST. JOSEPH, MO.: From Rec. Secy. F. R. Smith—"This council will work wholeheartedly with National PAC and CIO in all their policies."

LASALLE COUNTY, ILL.: From Secy.-Treas. Harmon Tiggeman—"This council does not approve of the third party and favors ERP."

WOOD COUNTY, W. VA.: From Rec. Secy. Louis C. Full—"Gives me great pleasure to report our council unanimously backed policy."

LAKE COUNTY, IND.: From Sec. Russell S. Graves—"This council and PAC have consistently followed CIO policy."

AKRON, O.: From Ex. Sec. Paul M. Fessenden—"Officers in entirety support the National program."

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.: From Sec. N. C. Fulmer—"Unanimous standing vote of 52 delegates definitely opposed to any third party in 1948 and in full and unlimited support of ERP."

EVANSVILLE, IND.: From Rec. Secy. Walter V. Hayden—"Although most of the discussion was in regard to the third party, the motion to follow CIO policy was made inclusive to cover ALL policy matters. Only opposition from Local 813, UE. At PAC meeting, after strenuous objections, UE delegates abstained, with the rest supporting policy."

Other third party-ERP news:

OIL WORKERS, DISTRICT 1, N. BAKERSFIELD, CALIF.: From Secy. C. E. Robinson—"Rejects policy statement adopted by the California State CIO executive board (which refused to indorse national policy) and concurs in the OWIU-PAC policy and national CIO policy."

AMERICAN UNION OF TELEPHONE WORKERS: "Unqualifiedly opposes Henry Wallace and his policy of appeasement to Soviet totalitarianism."

LOS ANGELES NEWSPAPER GUILD: From Ernest Brashear—"Rank and file voted support to national CIO policy by an overwhelming 3 to 1. Vote was especially significant because only four of the 10 executive board members rallied to the Philip Murray-indorsed program."

TRANSPORT WORKERS, LOCALS 223 AND 228, NEB., IA: "Asked international union to withdraw Intl. Rep. John Cassidy from his post because he is the Nebraska chairman for Wallace."

RETAIL, WHOLESALE UNION: From Pres. Wolchok—"Board adopted resolution o.k.'ing policy."

Wallace Note: Albert J. Fitzgerald, president of the CIO Electrical Workers and UE Secy.-Treas. Julius Emspak resigned as directors of CIO-PAC declaring "PAC has become an appendage of the Democratic machine and has departed from its non-partisan policy." Last week Fitzgerald became a co-chairman of the Natl. Wallace for President Committee of the still unnamed Wallace third party.

"DEAR VOTER": State Rep. Thomas A. Russell is penning his thanks to the friends and neighbors of New Orleans' 1st Ward who elected him to Louisiana's Legislature. His family is helping Russell, CIO leader and native of the ward. Mrs. Willie Russell stuffs envelopes, William Michael, 5, licks the stamps and Tommy, Jr., 8, checks addresses. Looks like a plug for the radio show "It's In The Family."

By JACQUELINE McCULLOUGH

THOMAS ANDREW RUSSELL is an organizer.

He has just organized himself into a job for the people of New Orleans' 1st Ward as their representative in the Louisiana Legislature.

When he announced his candidacy, there were doubts of his eventual success. After all, he was a CIO representative, a doubtful political distinction in New Orleans, even today. And he did have his regular work to do in the CIO Southern drive.

But, as political enemies sent campaigners into his ward, to spread the word that "Russell works for the CIO —Russell is a Communist—Russell is a radical—etc., etc. . . ." the ward scoffed.

The people knew better. They'd known Tommy Russell since he was a little freckle-faced kid. After all, he'd only lived in two houses in his life, both of them in the first ward. And they knew his four brothers, two of whom are cops, and his five sisters.

And they knew his father, Thomas A. Russell, Sr., who had been a member of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks and a ward leader for years.

They knew Tommy when he went to parochial school and when he went to Jesuit High School. And they knew his pretty wife, the former Willie B. Glass.

And the neighbors' kids play almost every day with young Tommy, eight years old, and William Michael, five.

AS for his connections with CIO, that didn't scare them either. Because a lot of people in the first ward belong to one or another CIO union.

Tommy's labor connections date back to September 15, 1937. On that date, he joined District 50, United Mine Workers, then CIO, at the Glidden Plant. Five days later he was discharged for "incompetence." Other employes were fired at the same time for the same reason.

The union took the case to the Natl. Labor Relations Board, charging that they had been discharged for union activities. The board upheld the union's position. The company went to the U. S. District Court; again the union was upheld.

The company appealed the ruling, but before the scheduled hearing in the Supreme Court, the company agreed to compromise.

After several months in the plant, "just to show them I wasn't incompetent," Russell says, he went to work as an organizer for District 50, under the direction of State CIO Director Fred C. Pieper.

From that time until he resigned in February, 1942, and joined the CIO staff, he was instrumental in organizing the big Celotex plant in Marrero, the Johns-Manville plant nearby, and a number of other mills and plants.

IN September, 1942, he was named a delegate by his local union to the constitutional convention of the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers and helped establish the new international union. (Incidentally, he was just re-elected president of Local 167.)

Named CIO representative on the Regional War Labor Board, he served until March 20, 1944, when "Uncle Sam sent me 'Greetings' and I went tearing off to begin winning the war."

His duty with the navy, as a radarman, took him to Guadalcanal, Midway, Guam, Okinawa, Japan, and "two or three other unpronounceable places where they needed mines swept," until his discharge late in 1946.

16-Nation Union Conference Backs Marshall Plan

"The conference is unanimous in the view that the trade union movement in each participating county shall seek to establish close contact with its government in the administration of their national production programs," the statement set forth, it added.

"Further, the conference considers it essential that the trade union movement should be associated with the work of the conferences of the participating governments."

The meeting called on members of each union organization to "give their wholehearted support to the necessary measures that each country must take to fulfill the requirements of each national production program of economic renovation and modernization."

Such steps, it said, will aid development of economic cooperation "across national frontiers."

A KEY development of the two-day conference was formation of a 10-member ERP Trade Union Advisory Committee. To it was given the task of gathering and circulating information about ERP developments, calling further meetings of the labor groups, and working closely with the 16-nation Committee for European Economic Cooperation.

Carey and Frank Fenton of the AFL are represented on the new committee.

Scores of millions of European workers were represented at the London get-together. Delegates came from Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Eire, France, Germany (British, French and American zones), Luxembourg, The Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, and Great Britain. Visitors and observers came from Trieste and Spanish unions in exile.

The French delegates represented the Workers Strength group, which broke away from the Confederation of Labor (CGT) some time ago. The French Christian unions were also represented.

A group of observers from the minority in the Italian Federation of Labor (CGIL) were present. After the meetings, G. Di Vittorio, head of the CGIL, which has opposed the Marshall Plan, held conversations with Carey in London.

"New and formidable tasks" face workers' organizations throughout the world, the conference pointed out—tasks which are "in conformity with the principles embodied in the charter of the United Nations.

"The conference declares that it is only through sincere and loyal collaboration of all the peoples that the world's economic health can be restored. It affirms that without the establishment of this economic health there can be no political stability nor a durable peace."

OPENING the meeting was Miss Florence Hancock, a veteran leader of British labor and head of the Trades Union Congress general council. She said that development of the Marshall Plan idea made it important for labor in the affected countries to come to grips with these new problems.

There are no grounds for "pessimism" or a "hopeless and despairing state of mind," Miss Hancock said. Despite war damage, Europe has a highly-developed economy, big industrial and farm facilities and a tremendous reservoir of skills, experience and energy among its working people.

Carey said the American people are delighted to help Europe, since the U. S. had developed in large part through "importing" the human resources of millions of European immigrants during past decades.

Leon Jouhaux, who resigned a top post in the CGT to cast his lot with Workers Strength, called for "all speed" in placing the ERP into effect. He said there is no intent to line up the west against the east, and he reminded the U. S. that it should not only send goods to Europe but also buy European products in exchange.

THEY Look To America

SCHOOL DAYS ARE LISTLESS: Underfed European children have difficulty learning fundamentals that will help preserve peace. Mindful of the need of these children, the CIO Community Services Committee is appealing for support for the relief efforts of CARE and the American Overseas Aid-United Nations Appeal for Children. Money should be sent to the local committee of the Crusade for Children or to the AOA-UNAC National Headquarters, 39 Broadway, New York, N. Y. The CIO has sent over $500,000 worth of CARE packages abroad.

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

MOST Americans are pretty steamed up about high prices and rightly so. We have plenty of food and there's no legitimate reason why it should not be sold at a price working people can afford to pay. Nobody should have to go hungry in prosperous America.

But it is different overseas. Hunger is the common lot among millions in Europe and Asia. Countless children are dying of starvation daily, or dragging out a listless existence, cold, ragged and miserable.

Think how horrified you would be if you saw a crowd of children in the street wrestling and squabbling over a pile of garbage cans. Yet this is a common sight in foreign countries devastated by the war.

The CIO is deeply concerned about the misery in the postwar world, particularly the suffering among the children. That's why the CIO's Community Services Committee, directed by Leo Perlis, is taking an active part in the world relief efforts of both CARE (Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe) and the American Overseas Aid - United Nations Appeal for Children.

SINCE its formation in 1945, the CIO has been represented on the Board of Directors and Executive Committee of CARE, and has been the largest single purchaser of CARE packages, sending more than $500,000 in food and clothing to needy people abroad. It plans to continue these shipments as long as the need exists.

Through the Community Services Committee, the CIO is now taking part in the nation-wide drive of the American Overseas Aid-United Nations Appeal for Children to raise $60,000,000. The CIO's foreign relief and rehabilitation program will receive a share of the proceeds of the campaign which it will devote primarily to helping youth and war-orphaned children of trade unionists.

The campaign is part of a world-wide drive to which citizens of all countries are asked to contribute one day's pay or its equivalent to help save children from starvation. The money raised will supplement the inadequate governmental appropriations to the UN International Children's Emergency Fund.

THE CIO is represented on the AOA-UNAC board of directors by Pres. Philip Murray, Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and CSC Chairman Irving Abramson. John Brophy, director of CIO industrial union councils, is a member of the allocation committee.

"The CIO recognizes that only through a continuing program of international cooperation and aid can the future peace of the world be insured," Murray declared in endorsing CIO participation in the Appeal for Children.

"That is why CIO men and women everywhere have participated actively in developing and promoting the program of overseas relief and rehabilitation of our National CIO Community Services Committee."

During the past four years more than $11,000,000 raised jointly by the CSC-CIO and other labor groups, has been spent for food, clothes, shoes, hospital equipment, medicines and other emergency supplies to aid needy war victims overseas.

THE CIO's relief program for 1948 is focused particularly toward giving aid to trade unionists and their families through CARE packages and funds contributed for special health, housing and youth rehabilitation projects.

Messages of thanks from trade unions abroad who have been aided by the CIO's program have poured into CSC headquarters in all languages.

Contributions for CARE packages and/or the AOA-UNAC campaign will help the Community Services Committee carry on its foreign relief work. Contact your local campaign committee, or write the National CIO-CSC, Overseas Relief & Rehabilitation Fund, 39 Broadway, New York 6, N. Y.

Sawyer and George Weaver; seated, C. D. Arthur, Rudy Mobley and George Guernsey, Assistant Director of the CIO's Department of Research and Education, of which Kermit Eby is head. (See story below.)

'Lead 'Em, Don't Make 'Em Mad'

"SOME folks are political minded and some aren't. You got to start with people where you find 'em. You can lead 'em, but you can't drive 'em . . . Don't make 'em mad."

C. D. Arthur, member of the Education Committee of the CIO Textile Workers in Roanoke, Va., and an employe of the Roanoke Viscose rayon plant for 23 years, was telling how to get union members to register and vote for the "right political candidates." He said that it was hard to be sure that labor-backed candidates were sincere, and that sometimes the workers got "snake-bit."

Occasion of Arthur's sage remarks was the meeting of a group of CIO members from Virginia and North Carolina who came to Washington last week to learn at first hand how their Government works and what U. S. officials are doing for or against the interest of the people they represent.

The trip was a repeat performance of the "school of government" initiated last year by the Southern School for Workers under the directorship of Brownie Lee Jones. This year's group included members of the Textile Workers, Federation of Hosiery Workers, Woodworkers and Auto Workers.

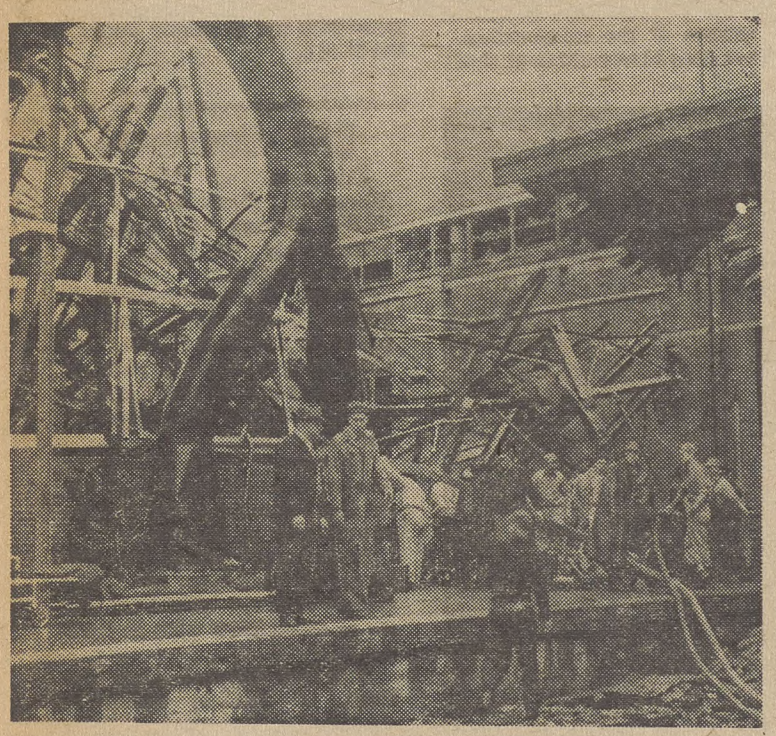
Agreement among members of the group was pretty general that a stiff political fight lay ahead and that labor's big job was to get as many workers out to vote as possible, and to find suitable candidates to indorse.

"We get plenty of lip service—all kinds of promise," commended Dave Harris of Spray, N. C., member of the Textile Workers bi-county joint board, in telling about interviewing candidates on their stand on labor. He said that all branches of organized labor were represented in a united labor political action committee in his state.

"We help put the man in office we don't want when we stay home from the polls," declared Rudy Mobley, education chairman of the TWUA joint board in Danville, Va.

MRS. BERNICE JONES, president of the Waynesboro, Va., TWUA local; Rosella Sessoms, International Woodworkers Local 289 in Portsmouth, Va., and Harry E. Sawyer, secretary of United Auto Workers Local 919 in Norfolk, Va., also told of the difficulty of getting workers to register and vote.

Pres. Clarence Pollard, of the Durham, N. C., CIO Council and vice-president of Hosiery Workers Local 31, was hopeful for good results from the intensive political activities of labor in the hosiery center.



LOUISVILLE TRAGEDY: Members of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers search for their fellow workers in the ruins of the engine testing plant of the International Harvester factory, while firemen pour water on the smouldering ruins.

Ky. Plant Blast Kills Four

By HARRY CONN

EARLY last Monday the Kentucky morning was dark, gloomy. An overcast sky seemed to hover closely around the trees bent low by the shrill, howling March winds.

At the International Harvester plant in Louisville the graveyard shift workers were changing their clothes and preparing to depart for home while the day shift was settling down to its eight-hour stretch. These men were members of Local 236, CIO-Farm Equipment Workers.

At 7:25 a. m. the winds died to an ominous silence. Then the building lights went out. Almost immediately there was a terrific explosion. Flying steel girders seemed to turn sturdy brick walls into paper. Frantic screams were heard and people ran wildly, crazily about. The engine-test building adjoining the main plant was a shambles.

Hours later the count revealed this toll:

Four men were dead, two of them FE members. Approximately 46 were injured with 11 hospitalized. Five of these hospitalized are listed as critically burned. Several are given slight chance to recover. All but a few of the injured are FE members.

Intl. FE Rep. Neal Eastland asked George C. Burton, Kentucky Commissioner of Industrial Relations, to conduct an investigation into the explosion.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler, Los Angeles, Calif., advises CIO Auto Workers won an election at Ryan Aeronautical Plant, San Diego; UAW 505, IAM 81. UAW Reg. Dir. Cy O'Halloran was in charge.

Tom Andert, Chairman, Optical & Instrument Workers Organizing Committee, St. Louis, Mo., reports a victory in a NLRB election at the Arkansas Optical & Instrument Co., Little Rock, Ark.; OIWOC 10, no union 1. Organizer Alberstein was in charge.

George Brown, Dir. of Org., Intl. Woodworkers, reports the following favorable votes in union shop elections: Oregon American Lumber Co. Mill, Vernonia, Ore.; 320 yes, 5 no. Keystone Frame Mfg. Co., Spokane, Wash.; 23 yes, 3 no. Booth Kelly Lumber Co., Eugene, Ore.; 127 yes, 37 no.

Reg. Dir. Ben Henry, Des Moines, Iowa, advises UAW-CIO won an election at the John Deere & Co. new plant in Des Moines; UAW-CIO 201, IAM 80, no union 3. The small number of employees voting does not indicate the importance of this election. When the plant gets in full production it will employ approximately 3,500, and will be one of the largest plants in the state. Rep. Mike Dergo was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Chester C. Dusten, Portland, Ore., reports the Auto Workers won a NLRB election at the Willard Battery Plant, Portland; UAW 46, IAM 6, no union 2. The organization work was headed by Harry Whiteside, NAW-CIO Representative.

Reg. Dir. Joseph M. Walsh reports recognition granted to Local 125, UE, by owners of Presto Light Co., new industry, in Scranton, Pa. After a check by the Scranton Chamber of Commerce Good Will Committee showed that UE had 100% membership in the plant. UE Reps. Frank Kazik and Joseph Stensky organized the plant. Scranton Chamber of Commerce Good Will Committee checked 100% of membership to gain recognition. Walsh also reports a NLRB victory in the Textile Workers Union in O'Pal Sportswear Company Plant, Honesdale, Pa., 53 to 28. TWUA Rep. Elwood Taub handled the campaign.

WEAVER ASSAILS BILL

THE CIO has strongly denounced a Congressional attempt "to evade the mandate of the U. S. Supreme Court".

George Weaver, director, CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, testifying before the Senate Judiciary sub-committee, assailed the proposed SJ 191, which would authorize interstate compacts allowing establishment of segregated regional universities.

Weaver pointed out that the Supreme Court, in the Gaines case, had "ruled that a state furnish, within the state substantially equal advantages to Negro students."

The Natl. Association for Advancement of Colored People, through its board of directors, also assailed the "dishonesty" of SJ 191.

The Supreme Court was again in the civil liberties limelight last week. It ruled that the constitutional rights of nine Negroes had been violated in Winston-Salem, N. C. The court said that there was discrimination in selection of the juries which had convicted them of disturbances in a picket line.

The Canadian Congress of Labour reports that a Vancouver, B. C., jury had convicted a Thomas P. Graham on grounds of seditious libel involving anti-semitism.

CIO'S ONE UP IN FREE PRESS CRUSADE

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE case of the "United States of America, Plaintiff, v. Congress of Industrial Organizations, Philip Murray, Officer thereof, Defendants," is now up to the Supreme Court.

In an easy-to-read decision, Judge Ben Wheeler Moore last week ruled unconstitutional the "questioned portion" of Article 304 of the Taft-Hartley Law. A federal Grand Jury had indicted the CIO and Pres. Murray on charges of violating that "questioned portion."

(Specifically, Murray was accused of having ordered, in the name of CIO News to carry a statement indorsing a Congressional candidate and of having directed the paper to be distributed in the Congressional District. The district was the 3d (Baltimore) Maryland. The candidate backed by CIO won, though that had nothing to do with the case.)

Judge Moore

Judge Moore used strong words in denunciation of Section 304, which bars contributions and expenditures by unions and other specified groups in federal voting. "At no time are those rights (press, speech, assembly) so vital as when they are exercised during, preceding or following an election," he wrote.

"If they were permitted only at times when they could have no effect in influencing public opinion, and denied at the very time and in relation to the very matters that are calculated to give the rights value, they would lose that precious character with which they have been clothed from the beginning of our national life."

(Here, Moore was paraphrasing a CIO contention, as he did several other times. This time, he followed the reasoning of Lee Pressman, former CIO counsel, who aided special counsel Charles J. Margiotti in the presentation of the CIO case. Frank Donner also aided. Pressman, in an oral showing, had said: "To say to a labor union, 'you may discuss issues but don't you dare do that when the question is up to whether your message has any meaning or not'—reduces the 1st Amendment to sheer mockery".)

Near the end of his decision, Moore declares:

"In no other statute except the one we are considering here have I found that Congress has prohibited absolutely all activities of any person or group at elections. The prohibition in this statute against expenditures by labor organizations in effect would prevent such organizations from doing and acting in connection with an election, since they are composite entities and not individuals, and by their very nature can make no move which does not involve some expenditure."

(Margiotti had asserted: "Of course in order to exercise them (civil rights) it costs money. It can't be done without the cost of money, no matter whether it is little or much. . . . They can't hire a hall. Even if they own their own building if they go in to have a political meeting in their own building, the turning on of the lights would be a violation . . . it is that broad".)

So Judge Moore found Section 304 wanting—so wanting that "judged by its plain terms, the statute on its face fails to survive the Constitutional test.

"I am of the opinion that the questioned portion of Section 304 of the act is an unconstitutional abridgment of freedom of speech, freedom of the press and freedom of assembly".

Moore began his opinion—"Criminal No. 48, On Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Indictment"—with this statement:

"The Labor Management Relations Act (T-H) imposed many conditions, restrictions, limitations and prohibitions upon labor organizations in the economic arena wherein battles between labor and management are fought. With these features of the act we are not concerned. However, by one section of the act Congress broadened its scope to include activities of labor organizations in the political field." With that—Section 304 of the T-H—he was concerned.

He then gave a brief history of the CIO-Murray case, written in capsule form that was a delight to the working press.

Moore recounted the indictment and then the defendants' move to quash the indictment (which was on two counts: one against CIO, one against Murray).

As to the rights of Congress, he stated: "I am sensible of the deference which courts must accord to the considered will of the legislative branch as expressed in a statute. If a reasonable construction of the statute can logically be made under which it is free from imputation of unconstitutionality, the statute must so be interpreted. If, however, the words of the statute are plain and can have only one meaning, a court cannot escape the obligation of deciding whether it falls within the limits of legislative power."

He then rattled off a few examples, like Gemsco Inc., et al, v. Walling 324 U. S. 244, 260; U. S. v. Rice, District Judge, 327 U. S. 742, 753.

(Ed. Note: Wonder why courts don't say 'vs.' instead of 'v.'?)

THOMAS JEFFERSON

"The only security for all is a free press. The force of public opinion cannot be resisted when permitted freely to be expressed."

And what does this act do? Judge Moore said. "Expenditures of a labor organizations in connection with any Federal election are made unlawful. Regardless of whether this does not fix an ascertainable standard of guilt it is clear that the acts of CIO in publishing and circulating and editorial and of Murray in consenting thereto, come within its scope".

He noted that "the statute contains no exemption or exclusion eliminating from its prohibitions those activities which the Bill of Rights protects".

"It is plain that Congress by this statutory provision denounced as unlawful acts which would otherwise be entirely innocent in nature, and in the exercise of which a labor organization is concededly protected under the Bill of Rights'.

He traced the legislative history of the act and noted the undeniable fact: It "clearly shows that the legislation was aimed at the very type of political activity which is charged as an offense in this indictment, namely the publication and distribution of newspaper containing editorials favoring or opposing candidates for Federal office."

He commented on the fact that the Government had argued that Congress could legislate an abridgment of the guarantees of the 1st Amendment "because of its constitutional control over the manner of holding elections, and its consequent power to prevent corruption"

Moore remarked that this might be persuasive if specific acts were prohibited, "but, the untrammeled right of free expression of views as to candidates for office, far from being a conceivable means of corrupting free elections, is in fact one of the most valuable means of promoting purity and freedom in the electoral process.

"It must be remembered that it is not only the right of the publisher which is protected by the 1st Amendment; but, also, and perhaps over and above that right, there is the right of the people to be informed of the views represented by conflicting interests and opinions".

He devoted a fair proportion of his words to a contention of Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. Ohio), one of the act's authors and others. That contention can be summed up briefly in our words: that bad, nasty old labor leaders expend funds for political activity against the wishes of the membership.

What does Moore think of that? "It is doubtful, whether such a contention would avail, even though the statute had been framed to cover only such cases. Inherent in the idea of collective activity is the principle that it shall be exercised on behalf of the organization pursuant to the will of the majority of the membership".

But, he pointed out, the T-H ban on political expenditures doesn't apply only where a minority of the membership is opposed to such an outlay of money.

No, "it covers all such expenditures in connection with Federal elections".

And, there are many shades of political thought in unions. But that "is not to say that all these may not be unitedly in favor of or opposed to candidates who respectively favor or oppose the type of legislation which laboring men and women in general believe to be in their interests".

(Again, Moore was paraphrasing the CIO argument—this time from our brief.)

"From what has been said it is plain that no clear and present danger to the public interest can be found in the circumstances surrounding the enactment of this legislation. The Supreme Court has said, and reiterated in many cases, that such a situation must exist if any abridgment of the freedoms of the 1st Amendment is to be justified".

So, wound up the Judge: "For the reason given, the motion of defendants to dismiss the indictment will be sustained".

Aftermaths:

1. Sen. Taft didn't like it, natch, and muttered that Moore shouldn't have gone so far. Having recovered his breath, he spoke up for his old pals, corporations. He declared he thought the ruling ought to apply to them, too.

2. William Green, head of the AFL, said: "All organized labor hails it". An AFL union was indicted similarly in Connecticut.

3. The Government issued an obvious warning, saying unions ought to be careful in their political actions, since the Supreme Court would be the final arbiter.

How long will it take for the Supreme Court to decide? Your guess is as good as ours. However, Washington observers freely predict it'll be before the June recess of Scotus (which is journalese for Supreme Court of the U. S.).

The CIO

"The question is whether Congress may constitutionally make it a crime for a labor organization, and for an officer of a labor organization to consent thereto, to publish a newspaper endorsing a candidate for public office"—Charles J. Margiotti, for CIO.

Government

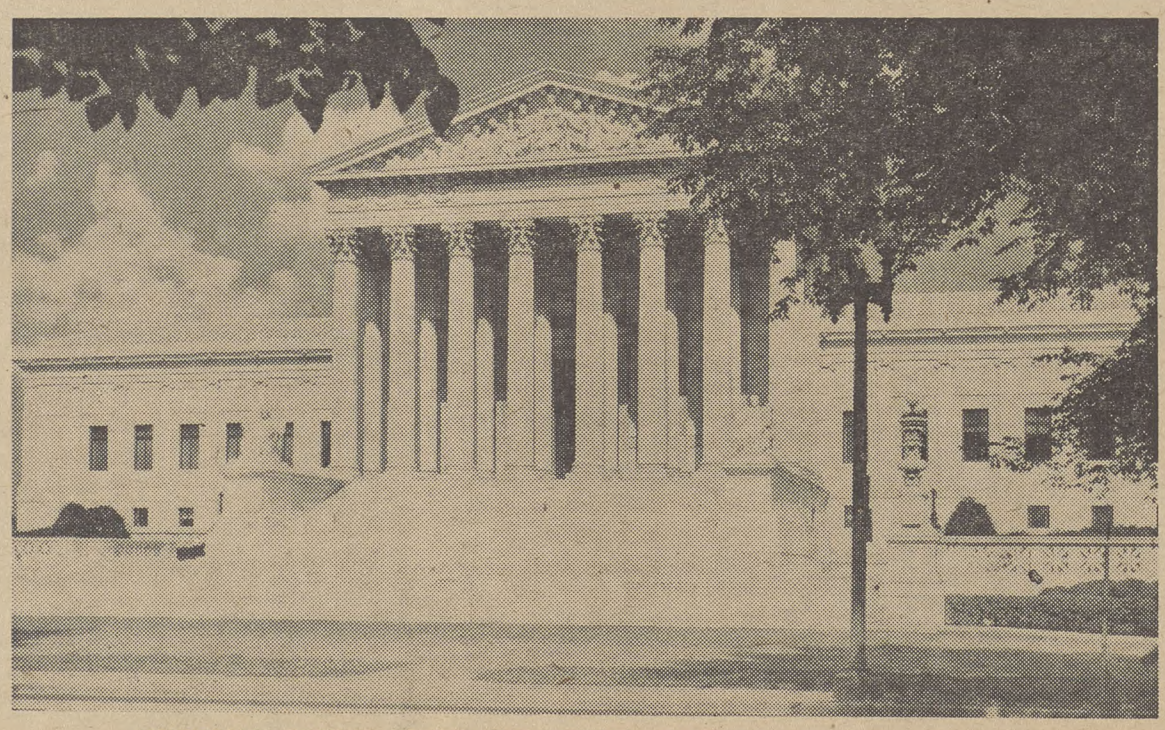
"The violation is charged an aggregation called the CIO for having deliberately expended its money for the purpose of—the phrase is 'in connection with' but it means for the purpose of—affecting the outcome of a federal election."—Jesse Climenko, for the Government.

The Judge

"I am of the opinion that the questioned portion of Section 304 of the (Taft-Hartley) Act is an unconstitutional abridgement of freedom of speech, freedom of the press and freedom of assembly"—U. S. District Court Judge Ben Moore in his opinion.

1st Amendment

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.



SUPREME COURT—HERE THE FINAL DECISION WILL BE MADE.

CIO Comment

Statement of Charles J. Margiotti, chief counsel for Philip Murray and the CIO, commenting on Judge Ben Moore's decision:

"Judge Moore's decision is sound. It removes the gag imposed by the Taft-Hartley Act restricting labor in its right to enjoy freedom of press, speech and assembly, as guaranteed by the Constitution.

"However, Moore's decision cannot be considered final until the Supreme Court has an opportunity to pass on it.

"It is most vital to the millions of members of Labor unions to know what they can do in connection with Federal elections.

"We are pleased that the Dept. of Justice, which is prosecuting this case, has decided to appeal promptly to the Supreme Court so that a final decision can be reached quickly."

Hope ERP Will Pass By Apr. 1

WITH one eye squarely focused on the calendar, Congress is rushing to passage of the European Recovery Program by Apr. 1.

Crucial national elections take place in Italy April 18, with a Communist-left Socialist coalition making a grim bid for power. If ERP is voted well before the election day Italy's anti-Communist parties are hopeful of success. So are most Congressmen.

A CIO steelworker from Buffalo—Joseph Natalzia, whose father was born in Rome—stated the case as clearly as anybody in official Washington. Visiting the Capital to present a union-sponsored petition in support of ERP to Congressional leaders, Natalzia said:

"I feel that by passing the Marshall Plan we will have some effect on the election by showing the Italian people that the U.S. is behind them 100%."

Since the Communists took power in Czechoslovakia, support for ERP has gained support at tremendous pace.

THE note of urgency was stressed by Pres. Truman in his speech to Congress. The President went further than at any time before to indicate the possibility that today's uneasy peace may break out into armed conflict.

That theme ran through his demand for unprecedented peacetime military constription—which labor and liberal organizations have consistently opposed — and the drafting of men for the armed services.

Washington seethed with speculation about the course that Congress will follow.

Here's the legislative situation:

● ERP. Senate has passed a bill (S. 2202) which CIO considers as meeting its principles for a democratic aid program. House Foreign Affairs Committee's report is due soon.

Debate on ERP will be given precedence in the House, with a vote due by the end of this week. The House and Senate bills will then go to conference committee for ironing out of differences.

But the legislators will have to hurry to meet the April 1 deadline.

● UMT. Bill is in the hands of the GOP-controlled House Rules Committee.

● Draft. Defense Sec. Forrestal—whom some Washington critics say has been influencing the President towards acceptance of the military's armed-to-the-teeth position—said an increase in the authorized strength of the services would be recommended.

Reaction to the President's call ranged from enthusiastic to cautious to the caustically critical.

Administration leaders hailed the speech as a necessary sounding of the alarm. Neither CIO nor AFL had any comment. Henry Wallace called it "shameful."

BEATEN BY KKK: These three Columbus, Ga., Ledger staff members—Joe Talbot, left; Jim Bellows, center, and Carlton Johnson, right—were threatened, drugged, manhandled and left at the side of a mountain road by members of the Ku Klux Klan. They had trailed Klansmen to an initiation atop Pine Mt. They were spotted and a group of hooded and unhooded Klansmen surrounded them. They were forced to drink whisky. Bellows was beaten unconscious. Talbot and Johnson had hypodermic needles stuck into them. The three said they identified KKK Grand Dragon Samuel Green, E. C. (Parson Jack) Johnston, editor of the anti-union Trumpet, and Fred New, editor of the white supremacy Georgia Tribune. Rep. Herman P. Eberharter (D., Pa.) demanded in the House that the Unamerican Affairs Committee investigate the newspapermen's charges. The committee had not replied as the CIO News went to press.

CIO Steps Up Wage Hike Campaign

By GLORIA CAPLAN

AS the cost-of-living remained too high for comfort, CIO workers were pushing for wage boosts. Some were forced to strike, others succeeded in negotiations.

On the national bargaining level there was strike talk among the CIO Auto, Oil, and Woodworkers. But in the meat packing industry there was a full-fledged nationwide strike. (See story, page 2.)

Auto: Just a formality under the T-H Act, but the Chrysler Division of the CIO Auto Workers filed strike notice with the U. S. Conciliation Service and instructed its locals to proceed with a strike vote.

Oil: Strike ballots have been sent to 10,000 CIO employes of the Sinclair Refining Co. The contract expires July 1.

Woodworkers: Strike sentiment among the CIO Woodworkers was reported by the international union's newspaper to be growing as negotiations continued with the assistance of Commissioner George Walker of the U. S. Conciliation Service. The union has sent out strike ballots to its 40,000 members in the Pacific Northwest lumber industry.

Rubber: In the Rubber union the possibility of an immediate strike at six of the Firestone Rubber Company's seven plants was overcome as the company agreed to bargain centrally for all its plants. Firestone is the only member of the "Big Four" rubber companies which, up to this agreement, was bargaining with the CIO on a plant level.

Elsewhere there were victories for CIO workers.

Clothing: An agreement between the CIO Clothing Workers and the industry resulted in increased surgical, hospital and sickness benefits for 150,000 employes.

Workers requiring operations will receive benefits up to $150. Sick, accident and hospitalization benefits also were upped. The Amalgamated Insurance Fund, jointly administered by the union and employers, is financed by employer contributions of 5% of the weekly payrolls.

Gas, Coke: "Passing along to consumers the benefits of increased productivity and lower raw material costs, and passing on to the employes the benefits of wage increases, is the sound way of checking inflation while, at the same time, improving the national standard of living."

That terse statement — almost identical with CIO's economic policy—came from Lever Bros. Pres. Charles Luckman last week after his 3,000 employes won wage hikes, adjustments and other benefits totaling 14½c.

Some 1000 CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers at the Hammond, Ind., plant, as well as members of two other unions, were affected.

Electrical: While CIO Electrical Workers continued negotiations on a national scale with General Electric and Westinghouse, the union announced a 24% gain in membership during the three months after T-H took effect last August.

The 46 new companies organized by UE recognized the union after card checks, or independently-conducted elections. (UE does not use the NLRB.)

Helping their daddies: These children's signs tell why they are helping their fathers on the CIO Packinghouse Workers' picket line at Fort Worth, Texas. They are Frances Langford, 3½, and Larry Bunch, same age. Their signs also tell the basic reason why members of the union are on a nation-wide strike against the Big Five packers for a 29c hourly wage increase. (See story on page 2)

NEW WRINKLE: Oscar Wilson is doing his duty by walking through the cars in the Chicago elevated lines' stockyard spur to let the riders know that the striking members of the CIO Packinghouse Workers need their support in their struggle with the Big Five packers for a 29c hourly wage increase. (Incidentally the Chicago CIO is in the campaign to get the city better "El" cars to replace old ones like the one shown in this photograph.)

ALL OUT: Leon Beverly carries his 15-month-old son, Leon, Jr., as he walks on the picket line of the Packinghouse Workers at the Chicago Union stockyards. His wife, Alice, makes it a family affair as she accompanies him on the line.

NICE TRY: Pickets (r.) stayed on the right of way until the engine was almost upon them. The engine was being used to shunt cars to loading chutes at the Armour plant at Kansas City, Mo., where supervisory personnel were loading lambs to be taken to feeding points. A minute before this picture was snapped the policeman in the foreground grabbed a picket from in front of the locomotive. UPWA pickets are busy in many cities, telling their story.

HEAR BOTH SIDES: Pres. Truman's fact-finding board meets with John E. Swift (l.), general superintendent of Swift & Co., and the Packing House Workers' Pres. Ralph Helstein (r.). Members of the board are (l. to r.) Pearce Davis, Nathan P. Feisinger, board chairman, and Walter V. Schaefer. The board will report to the President by April 1.

PACKING STRIKE 100 % EFFECTIVE

As their nationwide strike neared the end of its second week, CIO Packinghouse Workers pronounced the walkout "100% effective."

The 100,000 strikers had scarcely hit the sidewalks when Taft-Hartley and police in great numbers entered the scene.

Pres. Truman's fact-finding board, appointed in accordance with T-H, wound up its week of hearings. Under the law, the President may seek an injunction against the strikers, based on the fact-finding board's report to be submitted by April 1.

During the hearings Intl. UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein placed a minimum of statistical arguments before the Board, stressing instead the everyday hardships of the workers.

Referring to the industry attorney's arguments based on the "average worker," Helstein said: "The union must undertake the responsibility of meeting the problems represented not by any mythical average man, but by the majority of the people employed in the industry."

Accordingly, he pictured the shabby housing and poor sanitation facilities of most of the strikers. Their wartime savings, he said, were almost exhausted, and wages—50% of which is being spent for food—were sufficient to supply meat only once a week for packinghouse workers' tables.

The union is striking against the meat trust, not the public, Union Counsel Eugene Cotton emphasized. Wherever possible, he said, the union has kept independent packers in operation.

About 100 plants operated by around 55 companies are shut down by the walkout. Among those not affected are Hy-Grade, which operates 10 plants, and Hormel.

While the fact-finders conducted the hearing, 250 strikers at the Superior Packing Co., St. Paul, Minn., returned to work after the company granted a 12c hourly increase.

The big companies, however, have not budged from their original offer of 9c an hour, rejected by the union as inadequate.

Swift's 2 Brands —Of Figures

Swift & Co., meat packers, have one brand of arithmetic for the public and another for their CIO union, now on strike.

In nation-wide ads the public was told that Packinghouse Workers were averaging $1.37 an hour—and still weren't satisfied.

Truth of the matter is, according to UPWA, the workers average $1.15. Swift just forgot to "weigh" the average hourly rate figures. That is, they neglected to take into account the number of employes working at a given rate.

Example: Assume there are two average pay rates in an imaginary plant; one at $1 an hour, the other at $1.50. Seventy-five workers earn the lower rate; twenty-five the higher. The average rate would be $1.12½ an hour. But by ignoring the number working in each category, Swift would simply add the two rates together, divide by two and come up with $1.25.

Incidentally, it's not that Swift "don't know no better." They used the correct figure in negotiations.

Congress Continues Rent Curb

PERHAPS it was the spring weather, perhaps the spectre of Election Day—but American voters last week received their first big break from the GOP-controlled 80th Congress.

A rent control measure—by far more effective than the 1947 law—emerged from a joint House-Senate conference committee, unscathed by House Republican efforts at emasculation.

The conference committee's report was approved by the House, 220 to 95, and sailed through the Senate on a unanimous voice vote. It awaits only Pres. Truman's assured signature before becoming law April 1.

Described as a "compromise" bill between the fairly strong Senate measure and the lame House measure, the proposed legislation in many instances actually improves on the Senate's proposals.

To resolve differences over placement of final authority over ceilings, the bill provides that in cases where the Housing Expediter overrules a local rent board's recommendation, the issue will automatically be referred to the Emergency Court of Appeals. The court's decision would be conclusive.

The 15% "voluntary" rent hike provision of the expiring bill—bitterly opposed by CIO—is retained in the new legislation, however.

Other provisions are:

- Rent control is extended until March 31, 1949.
- The Housing Expediter's powers are increased to permit him to seek an injunction against landlord violators.
- Landlords are forbidden to accept more than two months' advance rent in a provision which outlaws "security deposits."
- Tenants who signed 15% voluntary boost leases under the 1947 Act cannot be charged another under the new act.
- Landlords are required to give 60 days notice of eviction except in "nuisance" or non-payment-of-rent cases.
- Ceilings are permanently discontinued from dwellings decontrolled between Jan. 1 and date of the law's enactment, from transient rooms and from non-housekeeping rooms in private homes where there are no more than two paying guests. Controls on hotel rooms are retained.
- Tenants in public housing cannot be evicted even though their income may exceed the limits permitted under housing laws.

CONCRETE action to eliminate the housing shortage, root of the rent problem, also appeared likely this session. Sens. Ralph Flanders (R., Vt.) and Charles Tobey (R., N. H.), scoring a significant victory over Sen. Joseph McCarthy (R., Wis.), succeeded in obtaining approval of the Joint Congressional Committee on Housing for a comprehensive housing bill which includes a public housing program.

Flanders, in amendments to the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill, would provide for the construction of 15 million homes in the next 10 years. A big portion would be for low-income families.

Communists Misrepresent CIO's Position On Aid To Italy

ITALIAN Communists have attempted to grossly misrepresent the CIO's position on American aid to Italy, Secty.-Treas. James B. Carey charges.

Carey said the CIO's position, as expressed to Giuseppe Di Vittorio, secretary of the Italian Trade Union Confederation, at London on March 12, was similar to the position taken by Secretary of State George C. Marshall in an address at the University of California March 20.

"Italian Communist leaders and the Communist press," Carey said, "are telling the Italian workers that they should not hesitate to vote for the Communists, since American labor will support aid to Italy irrespective of the outcome of the Italian elections on April 18. This is a gross misrepresentation of the CIO position that was stated to Giuseppe Di Vittorio by me in London on March 12.

"I wish to make clear the position of the CIO and its officers. We endeavored to discuss American aid through the facilities of the World Federation of Trade Unions in November but were balked by tactics of delay initiated by Di Vittorio. The Italian Trade Union Confederation was invited to attend the International Trade Union Conference held in London on March 9 and 10 which unanimously welcomed and endorsed ERP.

"The Communist-controlled elements of the Italian Confederation of Labor refused to participate in that conference and have berated ERP as a plan to interfere in the internal affairs of Italy, and enslave the Italian people to Wall Street imperialism. This charge is of course ridiculous.

"The CIO is certain that the majority of Italian workers favor American aid, and that the non-Communist representatives of the Italian workers who attended the London conference and endorsed ERP are serving the true interests of Italian workers.

"The Communists, in opposing the Marshall Plan for purely political motives, are completely disregarding the needs of the Italian people. The CIO therefore welcomes and supports Secretary Marshall's statement that those who refuse to associate themselves with the Marshall Plan for political reasons can hardly expect to share in the benefits of the ERP."

Shoe Union Elects Franceschini

Rocco Franceschini, executive director of the CIO Shoe Workers Territory 2, New York City, has been elected president of the international union in a membership referendum. By a vote of 20,806 to 14,073, he defeated the incumbent, Raymond Swansen, who held the office for the past year.

Franceschini

Also elected were 15 Intl. Executive Board members. These are: Margaret M. DeLacy, Boston; Angelo G. Georgian, Haverhill, Mass.; John Giderian, Nashau, N. H.; Rosaire J. White, Sanford, Me.; Fredor Casso, New York City; Joseph Van Brunt, Newark, N. J.; Carl McCauley, Wilkes-Barre, Pa; Fred A. Young, Rochester, N. Will Probe Owner Of 3 Radio Stations

A probe of charges that G. A. Richards, owner of three 50,000-watt radio stations, had a policy of slanting news broadcasts along racial, religious or political lines, has been ordered by the Federal Communications Commission.

Richards owns WJR, Detroit; WGAR, Cleveland, and KMPC, Los Angeles. The charges were aired in "Billboard," an amusement trade paper, by several former news department employes of KMPC.

Maurie Starrels, former KMPC employe, told the FCC he had been ordered to slant the news unfavorably against Pres. Truman, Henry Wallace, David Lilienthal (head of the Atomic Energy Commission), airplane manufacturer Howard Hughes and the Jewish people generally.

CIO joined the demands for an FCC investigation in a letter from Allan L. Swim, publicity director. Swim said that if the charges are proved true, "the owners of KMPC have clearly demonstrated lack of responsibility in using the public's airwaves.

"Devious appeals to racial and religious prejudice, editorialization and obvious efforts to distort the facts of the news should certainly not be tolerated."

Do These Profits 'Alarm' You?

The Wall St. Journal has made a survey of 332 companies in 22 industries and found that profits in 1947 were 48% above those of 1946.

Here are some key industries:

Automobiles and parts	up 223.3%
Electrical equipment	up 154.0
Mining and metals	up 123.7
Sugar	up 117.5
Pulp and paper	up 99.2
Coal	up 61.5
Petroleum products	up 56.2

Only one industry—aircraft—showed a deficit. Four industries—distillers, drugs, motion picture, rubber—reported lower profits, but still pretty high.

Is all of this rosy? Maybe it looks that way to you and us, but the Wall St. Journal sees it differently. It reports:

"And still the men who hold the reins of industry can't shake off anxieties. The paradox stems from several developments.

"Many industrialists are disturbed by the fact profit margins began to slip for more and more companies in the closing months of last year. Executives found bigger and bigger sales gains were needed to hold the profit line. Like the housewife, corporations are alarmed over the way the purchasing power of the dollar is shrinking."

"Huh," snapped one housewife we know. "I'd take a chance on being 'alarmed' with those profits."

Predict House To Pass ERP

BY the time you read this, the Marshall Plan in all probability will have passed the House of Representatives by a thumping majority.

The bill is expected to go to conference committee to iron out differences between it and the Senate version. But, the conference, according to Washington observers, should come to an agreement quickly.

Last week, the House cut debate to 15 hours. Most of the speeches were for the record. Tempers flared occasionally, as when Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.) denounced ERP as a "Wall St. defense" and assailed the three-power proposal to return Trieste to Italy as "a Pendergast election deal."

Rep. Eugene Cox (D., Ga.) in reply delivered a Ciceronian oration: "How long, I wonder, must members hear assaulted from day to day the Government we love, and by people who would rip from the wall that symbol of liberty that hangs above the speaker's rostrum, and who would run down the flag of the Stars and Stripes that proudly floats above the Capitol and run up in its stead the flag of the hammer and sickle!"

Marcantonio was fast on his feet demanding that the remark be expunged from the record, but Speaker Martin ruled no.

HOWEVER, there were few such fireworks and the debate droned to its end with the now ever-familiar argument. Congress was for once going to give the American people something they overwhelmingly demand.

Last week, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey sent a letter to all Congressmen, urging quick passage of ERP, but recommending certain changes designed to improve the effectiveness of the plan. His recommendations:

Deletion from the bill of (a) "rigid and humiliating" requirements on raw material deliveries to the U. S. and the ban on use of U. S. materials in goods which might be exchanged in trade between eastern and western European countries; (b) military aid for Greece, Turkey and China, which "should be treated separately"; (c) provisions for the chartering of 200 vessels; (d) reduction of ERP appropriations by $1 billion through the sale of Treasury notes; (e) "mischief-making" provisions concerning displaced persons and dismantling agreements; (f) provisions that 25% of wheat shipped under the program should be in the form of flour.

The U. S. Maritime Commission also opposed the ship transfer deal.

2 Million Children Are Working Now

Twice as many children under 18 are employed now as before the war, according to James Myers of the Natl. Child Labor Committee. Nearly 2 million youngsters work in industry and industrialized agriculture.

Nevertheless, said Myers, "it is a shameful fact that the 80th Congress cut appropriations by more than 50% for the federal child labor program."

THEY'RE TOO PAT FOR US

Junior ate like a little pig, shoveling in the food with both hands and asking—always—for a second and third helping of dessert.

His mother would admonish him at every meal. "Junior," she would say, "you're eating entirely too much. You're going to make yourself sick."

But Junior went right on making like a hog—and Mama went right on admonishing.

One day Junior was talking with a friend. Said he, "My mother must be crazy. Why, you know, she's against my eating food."

And that's what started the story that Junior's Mama was a mean old dame—a nasty old radical—who wanted little boys to starve.

It was in a somewhat similar manner that the story that we're opposed to profits started making the rounds.

Let us say—here and now, without quibbling—that we're in favor of business and industry making profits. In the first place, we think profits are desirable. In the second place, we recall what happened to the country some 18 years ago when there were no profits.

Nevertheless, we feel like Junior's Mama. We're tired of seeing business and industry eat up consumer purchasing power like little pigs.

We think they're going to make our whole economy sick.

See-Saw Goes Up And Down

Junior once had a lot of fun playing on the see-saw with his little neighbor, Bill. They spent hours going up and down, up and down. The see-saw has been idle for some time now, and here's why:

Junior became so fat that his end of the board was always close to the ground. Poor Bill was always up in the air.

Junior grunted and sweated and raved and ranted, and Bill did the best he could—but they were too much of balance.

One day Bill declared, "It just won't work. I've got to get fatter or you've got to get skinnier!"

Bill, we maintain, knew what he was talking about—and his remark aptly applies to the U. S. economy.

The CIO realized months ago that prices and purchasing power were getting badly out of balance. We said then that wages would have to get fatter or prices would have to become skinnier. We said we preferred the latter.

We feel now, as we felt then, that the country would be better off if prices were reduced. But they increased.

Now, through wage negotiations, we're trying to make the consumers fatter.

'Corporations Are Alarmed'

We have some good figures of our own, but we'll use those of the Wall St. Journal to illustrate that we have sufficient cause to express concern and to advocate substantial wage increases.

A Journal survey shows that 332 companies in 22 industries made profits in 1947 that were 48% larger than those of 1946.

Auto and parts profits were up 223.8%, electrical equipment profits up 154%, mining and metals profits up 123.7%, etc.

And don't forget that 1946 was a good profit year.

But, says the Journal, "The men who hold the reins of industry can't shake off anxieties . . . Like the housewife, corporations are alarmed over the way the purchasing power of the dollar is shrinking."

Tch! Tch! Well, why don't they do something about it? They can, you know. And they know it, too.

Don't Sell Our System Short

It May Be A Bit Cockeyed and In Need of Overhauling, But It's the Best

By ALLAN L. SWIM

ONE of the darndest revolutions in history occurred in this country back in '76.

A small group of idealistic ill-fed, ill-equipped men kicked out the Old World concepts of domination of the individual by the state.

What they wanted was freedom—and plenty of it. They wanted to try out the idea that people were smart enough to rule themselves and boss their own economic affairs.

They were a bunch of real radicals—plain crackpots, some folks said.

But they won—and they established the richest, most powerful nation in the world.

UNDER the system which evolved as the United States was growing to adulthood any individual citizen could call the President a lousy bum without being heaved into jail.

He could take to the soapbox and condemn Congressmen and Senators for every speech they made, for every vote they cast.

He could start a political party of his own—and even work for radical changes in the system.

Yes, he had freedom and plenty of it.

And freedom led to many abuses. And abuses led to restrictive legislation. And restrictive legislation curbed freedom.

Those who sought hardest to overthrow the system took full advantage of the freedoms—and those who posed as the leading defenders of the system often abused it most.

THERE is an ideological struggle going on inside the United States today—and nothing can be gained by trying to ignore it or by brushing it aside with the remark that "our system will always endure."

It will endure if all groups spend more time taking advantage of the system and less time taking advantage of each other.

It will endure if we divide the benefits of the system more evenly among all of the people and make an honest effort to eliminate its faults.

It will endure unless the people are offered something which they consider better than what they have.

It will endure if kept in tune with changing times.

SURE, the system has many faults, many weaknesses, many things that need to be changed, many things that need to be eliminated.

One of the things most needed is a more even balance between human rights and property rights.

Civil liberties must be made secure.

Curbs on political freedom—be they imposed by the Taft-Hartley Act, by too stringent registration provisions or by poll tax requirements—must be eliminated.

The trend toward monopoly control of our important resources must be reversed.

The theory that business exists merely to make profits must be substituted by the theory that business has a dual role—to make profits and to serve the public and its employes to the best of its ability.

LET'S never make the mistake of focusing our entire attention on the hole in the doughnut. Our virtues are greater than our faults.

Let's never duplicate the role of the stupid veterinarian who shot a horse merely because it had the stomach ache.

That crazy, cockeyed revolution-born system of ours, with all its shortcomings, has provided the highest standard of living the world has ever known.

It has provided more freedom, more opportunity, more advancement and less domination than any other system.

And one of the best things about it is that it can be altered greatly without being destroyed.

THE extreme leftists are boring in from one side, the extreme rightists from the other.

Neither has the right answer.

One would provide us with a totalitarian state modeled after Russia. The other would give us a totalitarian state modeled after Hitler's Germany.

And the poor sucker who got caught in the middle would be the fellow we loosely refer to as "the average American."

The Story of How a Union Widow Became A Union Wife

THE story of how a union widow became a union wife is told in the following excerpts from a story in Union Voice, issued by Local 626, CIO Auto Workers:

When I was first married I wanted a nice home where we could entertain any of our friends. I wanted my husband to be in a job with money and leisure enough to enjoy our home.

Then he became interested in the labor movement. It took him more and more away from home evenings. Many is the time I have thought, "Does he have to go out tonight? Why can't he stay home and work on that new kitchen cupboard I need so badly?"

Then one day I was talking to some friends in Moral Re-Armament. They gave me a new idea of what labor with inspired, sound leadership could do for the country and the whole world.

THAT night we sat down and talked things over. For the first time I really wanted to hear about his work. He told me of his hopes and dreams for labor. I told him my hopes and dreams for our home, and he really listened. I saw that if I took time to understand what he was doing I could think with him for this work. My first job was to create the kind of home atmosphere where he could relax and be happy, and find inspiration to do his best at work. It was up to me to send him off to work with:

A tasty meal in his lunch-box, a plan in his head, and inspiration in his heart.

It was fun to feel I had a part in my husband's work and he began to take much more interest in our home. He said, "It is no use trying to fight for good working conditions for labor outside unless I first improve the working conditions right at home."

THE labor movement took on the same dignity after my husband told me about the early labor pioneers who made great sacrifices to improve life for the workers. I felt ashamed of the way so many of us women had been enjoying all the benefits and protection of organized labor but taking no responsibility for it ourselves.

When I saw the importance of every man being responsible for his union, I wanted my husband to go to the union meetings. Then if he said he was tired and wondered if he should bother to go that night, I did everything I could to see he got there. I fixed a meal he really liked and plenty early so he could relax before going out.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP By YOMEN

"Uncle, why is it Congress almost always votes for what Labor's against?"

CIO Wins Gigantic Battle of Noses

THE boys down in North Carolina grabbed racial prejudice by the beak and gave it a mighty twist.

They waged one of the screwiest organizing campaign on record—a campaign they laughingly referred to as the Battle of the Noses.

They turned a possible tragedy into a comedy. They poked fun at themselves. They wisecracked when they felt like fighting.

They referred to themselves as "durn furriners" and they kidded each other publicly about their facial characteristics. And the "customers" loved it.

THE whole thing started one day when two CIO representatives with big snoots posed for a picture. A profile shot was taken. Two noses predominated.

A union-fighting management group obtained a copy of the picture and used it as the basis for a leaflet which played strongly on race prejudice.

The leaflets, while not actually anti-semitic, anti-Italian or anti- anything-specific, intimated strongly that the two men pictured might be a couple of radical aliens bent upon overthrow of the government.

The leaflets proved effective in several strongly Anglo-Saxon towns.

ANOTHER campaign was opened in another textile town—and before long the mill management was working the radical line for all it was worth.

"To he . . . with this business," said State Director William (Profile) Smith, one of the men pictured on the leaflets. He gave his organizers the cue and they began playing the game for all it was worth.

They started kidding each other and mill employes about their noses. It soon became obvious that the scheme might work.

Then Smith called a mass meeting at the local school and "imported" some special talent.

Workers who had already joined the union brought along prospective members. They filled the auditorium.

ONE of the "imported" speakers stepped to the front of the stage and, in a most serious manner, began speaking:

"Somebody has been spreading the vicious rumor that the CIO selects organizers on the basis of their ability. That is absolutely false.

"They're picked on the basis of their noses. The guy with the biggest and longest noses get the jobs."

The audience roared. The speaker continued, without smiling:

"I never make such a serious statement without bringing along proof. So it gives me great pleasure to allow you to look at the profile of . . ."

An organizer who had been "imported" for the occasion stepped to the footlights and turned his head from side to side, giving everybody an opportunity to gaze upon a truly wonderful snozzle!

The audience roared again.

That was the beginning of the end of management's racial bias program because it became the No. 1 joke of the community.

Organizers with large or crooked noses bragged about them. Those with small snoots pretended to hide their heads in shame.

A big meeting was held just before employes went to the polls in an NLRB election. One of the principal speakers began with—

"Nobody knows why I was selected to speak tonight, but . . ."

And he ended with——

"And we're going to win this election by more than a nose!"

And the CIO did.

APRIL FOOL

Columbus CIO Council Urges Italian Workers To Keep Freedom

THE Columbus CIO Council has sent a letter to Italian workers assuring them that the Marshall plan would aid them and their country. Excerpts from the following radio script prepared by the Ohio CIO Council's radio dept. tell why the Columbus CIO sent the letter:

Despite the delaying actions of this isolationist senator (Taft) and the few others whom he gathered into his camp, the Marshall Plan has passed the Senate. Now, an equally small group of politically-minded congressmen is attempting to stall the Marshall Plan in the House of Representatives.

President Truman has warned them in no uncertain terms that economic aid for European countries must not be further delayed.

Tonight I want to read to you a letter sent by the workers of Columbus, Ohio, to the workers in Italy—a letter from the voters of Columbus to the people who will vote in Italy's most important election on April 18.

HERE, then, is the text of a letter being sent out this week to our fellow workers in Italy. I quote—

"This is a letter of friendship to our Union brothers and sisters in Italy from the CIO workers of Columbus, Ohio. Some of us are Italian-Americans. Most of us are not of Italian descent, but we have a warm regard for the workers of Italy.

"Whether you are aware of our true sentiment for you, we do not know. In this confused world of ours there is much distortion and censorship of the truth. Falsehood and propaganda have become modern and accepted weapons in the hands of unscrupulous persons. . .

"The war has exacted a cruel toll in Italy as it has elsewhere in the world. Food is short in your country. Proper clothing is scarce. Homes and shelter for your people are inadequate. Factories have been devastated by cruel battle.

"These things we know! But more important, the CIO workers of Columbus, Ohio, and the people of America want to help you. We want to share our food with you that your children may not go hungry. We want to give you of our clothing that you will not go cold. We want to help in the rebuilding of your factories so that Italian Labor may again produce for the needs of your people.

"We assure you that the workers of America are wholeheartedly in support of the Marshall Plan which is simply another way of expressing our desire to extend our unstinted help to those in a world who are hungry and those who are in want.

"WE are certain that the workers of America have no desire to dictate or control the political decisions of Italy or any other country in the world. It is our trust that likewise no other nation shall be permitted to force its political determinations on the people of Italy. Those are decisions which must rest exclusively in the hearts and minds of the citizenry of your land.

"We, the workers of America, share with you a fierce love and respect for freedom. We cherish, as you, freedom of speech and assemblage and worship. We hold that he who cannot speak his mind and conscience—who cannot worship the God of his choice—who is not free from fear of physical violence or imprisonment for his beliefs—is a slave.

"It is because we so deeply cherish human freedom that we abhor the shackles of dictatorship of both Fascism and Communism. We seek the middle path—democracy. We, the American workers, are convinced that we are building toward a society which will provide economic security for all the people and yet preserve individual liberty for everyone.

"THOUGH your difficulties are great and many, and though you are beset with a thousand woes, we urge you to hold fast to your freedoms. We, the workers of America are with you. Help is coming. We shall give of our own bounty. We shall do this because you are fellow workers and fellow human beings, sharing with us the same common destiny—sharing with us the same hope and dream for a better world."

The men and women who decided on this course of action are beset by many problems. They are harassed by the high cost of living, by the lack of adequate homes—by short-sighted, and in many cases, inhumane legislation being passed by our Congress.

We believe Secretary Marshall and President Truman are going to need the help of every American citizen if this country is to achieve its goal of world-wide peace.

Union Trailer Vote

A trailer was the polling place for members of CIO Auto Workers Local 842, the amalgamated local in Hagerstown, Md. The trailer went from plant to plant for balloting. Local 842 has a weekly broadcast over Station WARK.

COUNCILS RALLY TO BACK UP POLICY

". . . Councils shall take no action or issue statements in conflict with CIO policy" — From Rules for Industrial Union Councils, adopted unanimously in Nov., 1946, by the CIO Executive Board.

"It is politically unwise to inject a third party into the political scene in 1948 . . . We of the CIO are determined to continue to work for international peace, for the adoption and implementation of the Marshall Plan, for a strengthened UN" — from the statement of policy adopted 33-11 by the CIO Executive Board on Jan. 23, 1948.

LETTERS bearing directly on those two statements continued to pour into the office of CIO Council Dir. John Brophy last week.

The letters were in reply to one from Brophy, addressed to all CIO industrial union councils, asking for reports on their actions concerning the CIO's policy against a third party in 1948 and for the European Recovery Program.

The replies continued to indicate that the vast majority of CIO members and affiliates are solidly back of top level policy. The reaction of the minority group of opponents ranged from "dictatorship" to "thought control."

Replies were pouring in faster from city and county councils, which meet more frequently than the state organizations.

Three more state groups—Indiana, Rhode Island and Tennessee—joined Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland-District of Columbia, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Utah and Wisconsin by sending in replies endorsing CIO policy.

California and Iowa remained the only state dissenters.

Brophy received these state communications last week:

INDIANA: from Pres. Neal Edwards and Secy.-Treas. Claude Becktell—"The majority of the executive board, to solidify the CIO movement in Indiana, voted (a) to back CIO policy and (b) to suspend eight board members who voted against policy." The suspended officers are James A. Nash, Electrical; Thomas Wilson, Packinghouse; Charles Kasselly and Edward Prather, Farm Equipment; Mrs. Virginia Fish, Public Workers; William Crary, Gas, Coke; Gretchen Flent, Office & Professional, and Mrs. Jessica Rhine, Food, Tobacco.

RHODE ISLAND: from Exec. Secy. Antonio DiPinto—"After much discussion, executive board voted unanimously to support... we are going to make it plain to every local union that if they do not support CIO policy they cannot participate in the functions of the State Council."

TENNESSEE: from Acting Exec. Secy.-Treas. Harold S. Marthenke—"unanimously commits itself to strict adherence."

From the Michigan State Council came this statement:

"We certainly cannot go into the Republican Party and lining up with the disruptive, misguided Wallace forces would be just as suicidal . . . By getting into the Democratic Party we will have a voice in the determination of policy . . . line up with its liberal elements."

For California, where the state CIO has ignored CIO Council rules, CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll has appointed Morris Zusman as State PAC director. Zusman resigned as head of the State CIO Council in protest against its refusal to follow CIO policy.

Kroll also designated the California Committee for National CIO Policy as PAC's political arm in Los Angeles. Jerome Posner is chairman of the committee. The L. A. City CIO Council has taken an unfavorable stand.

Albert Lunceford, who resigned the presidency of the L. A. Council in protest over the failure to follow policy, is chairman of the CIO Policy Group; Robert Clark is secretary.

The Washington State CIO was meeting over this weekend to decide its position, according to Secy. A. A. Fisher. In a letter to Fisher, Pres. Harold Slater of the Southern Washington District No. 3 CIO Woodworkers stated that "Brother Brophy is exactingly correct as to policy and program."

In Pennsylvania, State CIO Pres. Harry Boyer dispatched a letter to Pres. James Durkin of CIO Office & Professional, protesting a story which had appeared in the UOPWA News. The story said that Boyer had sent UOPWA's Eastern Pennsylvania director a note "ordering him to refrain from any public expression of his views favoring a third party."

"Nothing in that letter 'ordered' anyone to do anything," Boyer declared. "All my letter was intended for was to remind some people of the unauthorized use of the abbreviation of the CIO in connection with support of a third party movement."

Durkin meanwhile sent an appeal to CIO Pres. Philip Murray: "Recent developments impel me to write you since I feel very deeply these events require a review and reversal of the position taken by the CIO Executive Board." The "events" he listed included "efforts of the Administration to intervene in the Italian election."

News from the city and county councils (in letters to Brophy, except where otherwise identified;

CHICAGO: from Reg. Dir. Michael Mann—"unanimously voted to commend the National CIO for its forthright position on these two matters."

GREATER CINCINNATI: from the Cincinnati CIO SUN—"voted overwhelmingly to support CIO."

FORT WAYNE, IND.: from Secy.-Treas. Wallace L. Clayton—"indorsed a six-point program . . . does not favor a third party movement . . . Of course, there is always one black sheep, I am from UE."

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL.: from Rec. Sec. Edward Martinez—"This council wishes to inform you that it has never deviated from CIO policy. And that this council in line with the above mentioned policies, does not indorse, support nor pretend to support formation of a third party. Hoping this will indicate clearly the position of this council."

WILL COUNTY, ILL.: from Mann—"subscribed completely . . . conducting a great deal of activity in support of our position on these two issues."

VERMILLION COUNTY, ILL: from Mann—"reversed its previous position and unanimously declared against any third party."

ROCKFORD, ILL.: from Mann—"There has been a sharp split in the official body of this council. The president and secretary are both opposed to CIO's policy on these two matters. The entire issue was hammered out at a meeting and the delegates repudiated both the president and secretary by a vote of 23 to 15 . . ."

WAYNE COUNTY (DETROIT): from news services stories—this council refused to follow policy. (The Michigan State CIO is solidly behind the national program.)

ST. JOSEPH COUNTY, IND.: from Secy. Otie Jenney—"We support."

BOYD AND GREENUP COUNTIES, KY.: from Sec. Sec. George E. Perrin: "It is the belief of the council that proper action has been taken along these lines and that the membership we serve has been kept up to date on all policies of CIO."

NEW CASTLE, IND.: from Secy. Charles W. Glasco—"unanimously."

TORRINGTON, CONN.: from Sec. Eva T. Hudak—". . . has gone on record against a third party. In fact, I might add that we have a by-law which forbids Communists or persons adhering to their policies to be delegates to the council."

BERKS COUNTY, Pa.: from Pres. Andrew Kondrath—"by a unanimous vote. Our Council has, and always will, support the determination made by our parent organization."

LIMA REGIONAL, O.: from Exec.-Secy. Joe Emmons—"I am asking permission from you to table this question."

PONTIAC, MICH.: from Sec. Kathleen Henson—"Our council board recommended that we concur in a letter from Brother Carey regarding the Marshall Plan. The delegates concurred. We recommended to follow national CIO-PAC policy regarding the third party, but suggested we recommend to our national CIO and to the international UAW they reconsider opposition to a third party. This was accepted by the delegates."

SCRANTON - LACKAWANNA, PA.: from Rec. Sec. Frank A. Kozik—"Motion carried that letter be placed on file and complied with."

LEHIGH COUNTY, PA.; from Sec. Milo Himes—"in accord with policy established by National CIO."

The Roosevelt Story

Two sons of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt have made sharp attacks on those claiming to have inherited the mantle of F. D. R.

Says F. D. R., Jr.: "All the members of my family have carefully refrained from ever stating what we thought FDR would do, were he alive today, for the simple reason that no one on earth could possibly tell."

Says James Roosevelt: "Mr. (Henry) Wallace and his backers claim to be the sole inheritors of and believers in the policies of FDR. By what right? Look close and you will find among those people some with strong personal grudges, some who follow a totalitarian line and some Republican propagandists. Most of them wouldn't know or support a Roosevelt policy if they saw one. And none of them—repeat—none of them knows what FDR's policies would be today."

Oil Union's Big Local Registers 96% Of Members, Wants 100%

IN Local 128—largest in the CIO Oil Workers—96% isn't enough.

Finding that a registration drive had shown that all but 4% of the members had been enrolled, Local Rep. George M. Russell declared: "We're not satisfied. We're going to get the remainder before registration closes."

Local 128, in Long Beach, Calif., has more than 8000 members.

The Local's PAC committee is working on mechanics of records of its members' registration. The committee has a stack of 364 precinct maps—which cost $58—from which the number of each member's precinct will be taken and inscribed on his card.

Precinct captains will contact the non-registered persons. Some of the captains have done an amazing job. For instance, Russell himself has registered 1261 new members.

Active participation is the key word for the local's 82 stewards and 36 executive board members—in fact, all 118 have signed for the duration with PAC.

Oil helped CIO in the formation of the area's Big Four—CIO, AFL, railway and machinists—for joint cooperation in political action.

* * *

IN Martinez, Calif., Anne Parkison, stenog for Oil Locals 5 and 445, has found that people who have ignored politics a life-time are awakened this year.

She was thrilled to find that she had registered one man who claimed he had not registered for 30 years. He asked her how much back poll tax he would have to pay and was delighted to find California has no poll tax. Next day his wife registered.

KNOW THEIR STUFF: While on strike against Aluminum Industries, Inc., Cincinnati, members of Local 310, Steelworkers, decided that registering to vote against anti-labor Congressmen was vital to their union. Here they are leaving the Board of Elections. They won their strike, too, by obtaining the reinstatement of eight men fired in violation of the contract. Now they hope to win their fight at the polls in November.

Labor Board Bars Company Union, But Makes It Hard To Prove

UNION charges that the NLRB under Taft-Hartley would encourage company unionism have been further substantiated by the Board.

Announcement that the NLRB would define "company union" so narrowly as to permit most of them to obtain a clean bill of health appeared in a Board decision involving the Carpenter Steel Co., plant in Reading, Pa.

The Board upheld the CIO Steelworkers' contention that the Employes Representation Committee at the plant is company-dominated, and ordered the corporation to disestablish it and cease attacking the CIO union.

However, from now on it won't be easy to get the NLRB to brand a union as "company-dominated." The decision continues:

"When the board finds that an employer's unfair labor practices were limited to interference and support and never reached the point of domination, we shall only order that recognition be withheld until certification (through a board-conducted representation election), whether or not the organization happens to be affiliated."

In keeping with that statement, the Board then threw its weight behind the Employes Committee at the Hershey Metal Products, charged the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers with being a company-union.

(Both the USW-CIO and the MMSW charges were filed before the T-H act became effective last August.)

The Board admitted that the company had supported the independent union against the CIO union, but found that the E. C. had occasionally disregarded company requests, and, therefore, was no company union.

The NLRB refused to order the disestablishment of the union, but ordered the company to cease discouraging membership in MMSW. Also the company may not bargain with the independent union until after a board election.

The MMSW has not qualified for the Board's "services" and therefore cannot appear on an NLRB ballot.

Company Refuses To Let Children Use Hall, Union Builds Them One

LOCAL 384 of the CIO Textile Workers has a brand new union hall.

Of course, that isn't top news in itself; lots of unions have their own halls.

But, the new home of Local 384, in Greensboro, Ga., has two important news angles:

(a) A "junior union" of Greensboro children was responsible for the construction of the hall;

(b) Main speakers at the dedication ceremonies were the State Attorney General, Eugene Cook, and the executive vice president of the Textile Union, George Baldanzi.

Local 384 represents the workers of the Mary-Lelia Cotton Mill.

AT THE dedication a group of workers' children presented a skit under the direction of Ruth Warren, of the Georgia Workers' Education Service. In their playlet, the children depicted life in the Mary-Lelia mill village before and after the coming of the union.

A project of the GWES was responsible for the new hall. GWES formed a junior union; the company refused to allow the children's union to use its property. The union, in turn, pledged itself to build a hall in which members' children could find expression.

Baldanzi, in his address, admonished the members of Local 384 to keep their hall ever at the service of children. He said:

"The union has taught us all a way of life just a little better than that of our fathers. We must in turn, make life even better for these children. Keep this hall ever free for them. Make it a theatre for them, and you will find they will soon develop latent talents that you never suspected they possessed."

COOK, one of Georgia's more liberal state officers, spoke on the need for organized labor within the state. Urging unity and understanding among community groups, Cook declared:

"The farmer must understand that his welfare and that of the industrial worker are interdependent."

Councils Rally To CIO Policy

and ERP. The Council voted unanimously to concur in this."

OMAHA (NEB.)—COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA.: from Rec. Sec. C. W. Stover — "Unanimous support to National CIO and PAC. All local unions and international representatives are giving full support to the city council program, except John A. Cassidy, Transport Workers, who is heading Wallace campaign for Nebraska. The State PAC has expelled Cassidy from participating in PAC activities."

HANCOCK COUNTY, O.: from Rec. Sec. Willis Opperman—"supporting national CIO-PAC policies, especially opposition to a third party and giving positive support to the Marshall Plan."

GREATER NEWARK, N. J.: from Reg. Dir. Ewald Sander—"At a meeting at which I was present to install the officers a resolution was offered by Steelworkers' Local 1833—in my interpretation in conformity with CIO policy—which was tabled. Rep. Jack Rosen, Steel Rep. William Mackey and I urged passage, since councils are obligated to conform to CIO policy. Council Exec. Morton Bloom opposed this motion. Council Pres. James McLeish then announced Bloom had requested a leave of absence to work for Wallace. Despite statements by Rosen that granting such a leave would be obstructing CIO policy, Bloom was granted the leave.

"I have been informed by Mackay that several meetings of locals in violent disagreement with the Newark Council's position have organized themselves to carry out CIO political action."

Brophy then wrote McLeish, again informing him that Newark should conform with CIO policy.

In reply, the new executive secretary, Katherine Hoffman, wired, "McLeish away on urgent business; special council meeting postponed to March 30 at which time your letter will be acted upon."

DENVER, COLO.: from Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda—"The council held its first meeting under the reorganization plan—bringing all unaffiliated locals into the council. About 19 locals were present and a plan of genuine procedure on strictly CIO policy was inaugurated. Your letter was read and indorsed by an overwhelming majority. Opposition included Council Secy. Eunice Dolan, UOPWA. Graham Dolan was present, but his propaganda did not get very far. Council elections are in May."

685 to 4

If Taft-Hartley supporters thought they were going to prove that union members are opposed to union shops they'll have to think again.

Latest example of workers' overwhelming desire for union security was the 57-to-1 victory of the CIO Auto Workers at the American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corp. in Baltimore in an NLRB union shop poll.

Workers voted 746 to 13 for the union shop.

After six months of T-H, the NLRB reported that out of 689 such polls, the union shop lost in only four cases.

CIO policy notes from here and there:

LOCAL 16, UOPWA: from a union news release—"Unanimous support of Greater New York Industrial Union Council in its rejection of the 'thought control' demands by Brophy."

NORTHERN CALIF. DISTRICT COUNCIL, WOODWORKERS: from Ken Hunter, Steelworkers—"sharp criticism of councils failing to fulfill obligations to CIO was voiced at a meeting in Sacramento in a resolution without a dissenting vote. Action followed verbal clash between Tim Flynn, new CIO Regional Director for Northern California, and Bjorne Halling, State secretary-treasurer. Flynn sharply criticized the California State CIO for refusing to follow CIO policy.

GREATER NEW YORK CITY COUNCIL: Issued a news release defending its action in refusing to follow policy, captioned "Council Acts to Protect Democracy in CIO." Meanwhile, the new regional PAC office, set up a week ago by Kroll, designated a six-man committee to start its work. The members: Patrick J. McGrath, Utility; Charles Kerrigan, Auto; Milton Rosenberg, Textile; Mrs. Norma Naughton, Telephone; Paul Arnone, Amalgamated Clothing; Jack Altman, Retail, Wholesale.

LUZERNE COUNTY, PA.: from Reg. Dir. Joseph M. Walsh—"The United Labor Educational Committee of Luzerne County—composed of AFL, CIO and Rail brotherhoods—will hold an institute for union representatives on April 24 at the Hotel Redington, Wilkes-Barre. Professors from Pennsylvania State College—students of labor problems; friends of trade unions and members of unions themselves—will speak."

LONGSHOREMEN: from a union news release—"The executive board of ILWU urged support for Wallace, denounced the Marshall Plan as unworkable and scored the suppression of civil rights by the Truman Administration."

FURNITURE WORKERS: from a union news release—"The advisory board is greatly concerned with the contents of the communication sent by Brophy . . . The American people resent thought control . . . we call upon Pres. Murray to revoke the brazen, undemocratic orders contained in the Brophy letter."

BARBERS & BEAUTY CULTURISTS: from Pres. John Tartamella, Local 2, New York—"I have been authorized by Greater New York Local representatives to inform you that the locals demand that Adolph Rosenbaum be removed as our representative on the State CIO executive Board and Greater New York City CIO; and also removed as a member of the executive Board of BBCU of A because 'in violation of his obligations he permitted publication of a report that the BBCU of A was in favor of the third party movement."

LOCAL 123, (RED ORE), MINE, MILL UNION: from the Alabama CIO News Digest—"Pres. R. L. (Bob) Lowe announced his group has voted to oppose Wallace and fight for ERP." (The National Mine, Mill union has indorsed Wallace.)

FEDERATION OF ARCHITECTS, UOPWA: from Sec. George Curran — "by unanimous vote, the metropolitan federation rejects your attempt to dictate the policy either of the Greater New York City council or of this local and its delegates."

CLEVELAND: Two Cleveland labor groups followed the example of the city's council, which voted 150 to 75 to indorse CIO policy. The Cleveland UAW District voted similar action, 65-0; the Central body of the Cuyahoga County PAC voted to relieve opponents of CIO policy from membership in the committee.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Reg. Dir. George Craig, Philadelphia, Pa., reports the following NLRB election victories held in that area: Penn Textile Corp., approximate eligible voters 64, for Textile Workers 57, challenged 0; Opal Sportswear Co., Inc., approximate eligible voters 92, for Textile Workers 53, against 28, challenged 3; Armstrong Cork Co., for Rubber Workers 64, against 0.

Dir. of Org. George Brown, International Woodworkers of America, Portland, Ore., advises that in an election for the Potlatch Forests, Idaho, the IWA received 873 votes, AFL 812, no union 26. He also advises the following election results for Patten Blinn Lumber Co., at Florence, Ore.—21 yes, 18 no.

Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst, St. Louis, Mo., reports the CIO won the following elections: Kopman Waracek Shoe Co., Flat River, Mo., United Shoe Workers 210, no union 29. CIO Rep. Dave Wilson in charge of a union shop election at Burkart Mfg. Co., St. Louis, Mo., won by Local 141, Textile Workers, of 381 eligible to vote, 318 voted yes, 16 voted no and 5 votes were void. CIO Rep. Frank Swantner in charge.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci, Columbus, Ohio, advises that in a NLRB election at Bush Woolen Mills, Dresden, Ohio, 120 ballots were cast for the Textile Workers, and 4 against. This plant was formerly under District 50. Rep. William Walters of Textile was in charge under supervision of State Textile Director Charles Bubb.

Thomas J. Starling, Director, Region 8, UAW-CIO, comes through with a report on a smashing victory in Memphis, Tenn., where the UAW-CIO won an election in the International Harvester Plant. With 902 eligible to vote, 861 voted for CIO and 4 for no union—almost 100% of the votes cast. Most of these workers were already paying their dues to the union before the election.

Much credit goes to Thomas A. Hendricks and M. E. Duncan, International Representative of UAW-CIO, with the help of an excellent organizing committee of CIO members who had formerly worked in the plant in the Memphis area and the support of CIO Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland there and other CIO organizations. Credit is also given to the Rubber Workers Local 186 of the Firestone Plant, who gave every assistance possible, including the use of their hall, which is located near the plant. Congratulations to all of them!

The AUTW (Long Lines) had their convention recently in Jacksonville, Fla. Pres. Jack Moran and Vice Pres. Robert Creasey were re-elected unanimously, and the Executive Board as well. Moran and Miss Norma Naughton were also again re-elected to serve on the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, of which Moran is one of the Vice Chairmen.

The delegates were unanimous in their opinion that the convention was the best they ever had. They were addressed by John Gibson, Assistant Secretary of Labor, and Ted Silvey, Secretary, TWOC-CIO. Stanley Ruttenberg, assistant CIO Research Director, presented the realistic facts on the wage situation in the telephone industry. The writer also addressed them as Chairman of TWOC-CIO.

The delegates were pleased with factual information presented by Ruttenberg and stated that the loose structure of NFTW and CWA has caused them to lose ground. They made it clear that the proper place for the telephone workers is in one industrial organization, the CIO.

'EUROPEAN WORKERS WANT ERP'-CAREY

"MY conversations in Europe convinced me that European workers want the Marshall Plan (European Recovery Program) and they want political and economic democracy . . .

"They are not going to be satisfied with anything less than a complete victory for their democratic forces."

These conclusions were brought back to the United States last week by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, after a 6-week trip that had taken him to conferences with union officials in London, Paris, Berlin and Moscow.

REPORTS ON EUROPEAN TRIP: CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey holds a press conference to tell of the reception accorded him by trade unions in Europe where he went to urge support of the European Recovery Program.

Carey went to Europe to push for discussion of European aid in the World Federation of Trade Unions. He talked with Vassili Kuznetsov, head of the Soviet labor unions, in Moscow, and won from him a pledge that ERP matters can be discussed in the WFTU executive bodies at any time.

"Even Kuznetsov smiled when I reminded him of propaganda that American unionists who support the Marshall Plan are agents of Wall Street," Carey said.

"He knows better than that—and he may make compromises on discussion of the Marshall Plan in the WFTU—something he refused to do two months ago.

"In Europe, the Communist leaders of labor are clearly worried. In Italy and France (where the principal labor federations have taken anti-Marshall Plan positions) I am convinced there is going to be a change in the policies of the labor organizations or a change in their leadership, for the split between membership thinking and leadership action has widened tremendously in recent months."

Carey told a crowded press conference at CIO headquarters that CIO intends to stay in the World Federation of Trade Unions.

"There is less chance of the CIO leaving the WFTU than there is of the U. S. leaving the United Nations," he told reporters. CIO hopes that the WFTU will develop real effectiveness for workers everywhere.

During his trip Carey talked with WFTU leaders in Paris; met with Kuznetsov in Moscow during a three-day period; attended the meeting in London of union federations which support the Marshall Plan; and conferred with Guiseppe Di Vittorio, head of the Italian Confederation of Labor.

At Paris, Carey told Louis Saillant, secretary-general of the WFTU, that he thought the WFTU executive had been interfering with the internal affairs of CIO by engaging in correspondence on policy affairs with leaders of some CIO unions.

He cited letters from Saillant to Ferdinand Smith, secretary of the Natl. Maritime Union, Don Henderson, head of the Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers, and others. The CIO official said he told Kuznetsov of the need for WFTU not only to discuss but to give active support to the European Recovery Program, since the world labor organization is committed in its constitution to helping promote post-war economic recovery.

However, Kuznetsov argued that the Marshall Plan includes political questions on which "every state and every trade union center must have full freedom of action in accordance with its independence and sovereignty."

Soviet trade unions feel that the Plan cannot be a question "on which the WFTU can adopt any decisions compulsory for national trade union centers," Kuznetsov added. The Marshall Plan "by no means can be the cause for splitting the international trade union movement," he said.

The Soviet labor leader, however, was sharply critical of the proposed confab of European unions at London—attended by CIO and AFL representatives—which voiced full support of the Marshall Plan and pledged themselves to work with their respective governments.

Carey told him that the failure of the WFTU to act on the problem was the biggest threat to the unity of the world labor group. The London meeting had been called only when the WFTU showed no indication of ending its long delay in grappling with important problems arising from the devastation of war.

The London conference (reported in last week's issue of The CIO News) adopted a 15-point program, the most important of which called for establishment of a continuations committee and close cooperation with their governments in working out the relief program.

DI VITTORIO, head of the Italian Confederation of Labor (CGIL) and a leading member of the Italian Communist party, came to London for talks with Carey. He urged that CIO and CGIL publish a joint statement of agreement on U. S. aid to Italy.

The Italian labor head said he had no disagreement with the "principles" of the Marshall Plan, Carey reported, but he felt it necessary for Italian unions to criticize those aspects of the plan considered unfavorable.

Carey replied that "it is our judgment that ERP is not a fruit cake out of which one could pick the cherries and nuts—it was all or nothing." The CIO official told Di Vittorio that there seemed to be no agreement on the part of CIO with the view of the CGIL.

Civil Rights Not Lost In Greece—Golden

THE Greek Confederation of Labor meets this week in its first "freely convened" Congress since the beginning of the Metaxas dictatorship in the early '30s.

Some 1,200 delegates representing 300,000 workers in 1,350 local unions throughout the strife-torn Aegean country will be present. They'll discuss wages, prices, social welfare policies, collective bargaining—and the membership of the new executive board to be elected at the confab.

To Clinton Golden—former vice-president of the CIO Steelworkers and labor adviser to the U. S. Mission to Greece—that convention represents not only a landmark in Greek labor affairs but strong evidence that civil rights and democracy are by no means absent from the Greek scene.

Golden is back in Washington after nine months in Athens. He's conferring with State Dept. officials, both on the Greek situation and on problems of labor representation in the Marshall Plan.

"Greece is no utopia," says the former steel union official. "It's poor; it's been devastated by a pre-war dictatorship, by Axis occupation forces and by civil war; its economy and its government have suffered.

"NEVERTHELESS, the propaganda that the country is run by a clerical-monarcho-fascist clique is all wrong—and I want to help answer that sort of false picture. The fact that labor unions are functioning and that they can meet for full discussion of their problems is proof of the fact that civil rights and free speech haven't been lost."

Reports of large-scale police activities have been exaggerated in American press reports, Golden believes. While the government did round up some 10,000 Communists and suspected Communists, less than 5,000 are still in jail. That's a smaller number of the opposition in prison than in neighboring Balkan countries, Golden asserts. Considering that the country is in a bitter civil war, the government's record is far from black, he said.

"Promises of recovery in Greece just aren't enough," he said. "To the Greeks, recovery means a simple return to the old days of poverty and hardship. The Greek government and Greek labor must think in terms of offering a new, a better life based on higher living standards.

"That will win over the loyalty of the poor Greek peasants and workers—and substantial numbers of the people who now fight the government in the northern hills."

THE task isn't easy, Golden observed. It will require introduction of more modern industrial equipment, elimination of overlapping taxes, and—most of all—planning with Greece's neighbors in the middle East for a regional economy in which Greek industry can process the raw materials of the area.

During his months in Greece, the former CIO union official worked closely with the leaders of Greek labor and the government's Labor Ministry in developing collective bargaining.

Perhaps his biggest accomplishment was to "sell" Premier Sophoulis on the need for workers and management to sit down together to work out common problems. Such a meeting was set up last October, attended by two spokesmen from the union, two from the most important employers' association and two from the Ministry of Labor. In addition, Golden and the U. S. Mission's industrial expert acted as observers.

As the committee members told Golden, "it was the first meeting we've ever had without pressure from the government, without the government 'holding a gun at our heads' and telling us what to do."

Out of that confab came a national wage agreement covering all private industry. It raised minimum wages for common laborers from 5,000 to 11,000 drachmas a day (5,000 drachma are worth from 50c to $1). More skilled workers received corresponding pay boosts.

AFTER adoption of the new scale, the government made similar rates in a number of state-owned or state-controlled industries.

At Golden's suggestion, the national wage meeting adopted a "productivity" clause unique in Greek history. It provided for further wage increases up to 30%, to be granted provided there were increases in the quality and quantity of production.

Unfortunately, the economic picture isn't altogether bright. The index of 20 cost-of-living commodities, which had been 100 in 1939, rose to 186.3 at the end of 1946 and to 293.8 on Feb. 24, 1948.

The fall in the value of the drachma is due far less to increased wages than to distrust of Greek money, fears about the civil war and instability of the war-torn economy, Golden says. As a result of this continued inflation, he expects the Labor Congress in Piraeus this week to ask for higher wages.

And to help the situation, the American mission is studying plans for making a little more sense out of the Greek tax structure. Inflation and previous dictatorships had wrecked the big social welfare funds set up before the first war.

As the Greek labor movement develops, it will play a major part in these reforms, Golden believes, and he looks to this week's convention to help chart a course of action for the months ahead.

There are no national unions in Greece. There are about 1,350 local unions; a big batch of local labor centers—in areas where three or more unions exist; and the national Confederation.

At the first post-war union elections, charges were filed that the Communists had engaged in ballot-box stuffing and repeat-voting. The courts upheld these charges, deposed the Confederations new executive board, and requested the three major political groups each to nominate seven men for the executive group.

SIX of the men named by the Communists under this agreement withdrew at the last moment, Golden says, and raised the cry of government control over the unions. The courts then appointed the 14 men named by the other two groups, as well as the one Communist who did not withdraw.

For the past two years the unions have functioned under this arrangement. This week they'll elect a new 21-man executive board to guide the organization.

Murray to Greek Labor: Retain Your Independence

The first "freely-convened" Congress of the Greek Confederation of Labor, which met on March 28, received warm words of greetings from CIO Pres. Murray.

Murray said American workers realize the "principles involved" in the Greek people's fight to "retain their independence, make secure their freedom and establish their democratic institutions . . ."

The Greek government's fight is part of a world-wide struggle "against the brutal forces of terror and oppression," and Americans look forward to the day when internal peace and order comes to Greece.

Workers' organizations in the U. S. "have steadily supported all proposals to aid the Greek people in this struggle," Murray added—not only through full support to the Greek aid program a year ago but through current support for the Marshall Plan

Expressing hope for a successful convention of the Greek unions, the CIO president said that a "large and successful" labor meeting will "demonstrate to the freedom-loving peoples of all the world that the Greek workers have won their own deeply-rooted convictions concerning human rights and democratic values.

"Greece today is the only country in the Balkans in which it is possible for workers to meet freely and engage in democratic discussions of their problems.

"It is our earnest hope that your government will keep its solemn commitment to repeal the anti strike act and to lift any other restrictions on your rights and liberties that may have been unwisely imposed upon you in the past."

Step Right Up, It's The Marvel Of The Age

Don't Be So Old-Fashioned

Do It The Modern Way—With Hydrostatics

Graphs And Charts? Just Turn On Your Tap And It Tells All

MACHINE AGE: If the makers of this machine achieve their wistful dream, no more will someone have to look at charts when someone wants to prove something to someone else. Just attach these gadgets to your wall electric plug and to your water tap. Presto! All is proven. Here, Walter Fried (left) explains the workings of the machine to Reps. Frank A. Barrett (R.), a resident of Lusk, Wyo., and Frederick C. Smith (R.), of the Marion, O., Smiths. The latter is the man who had the machine brought to the Caucus Room of the Old House Office Bldg., where it is herewith pictured. That's water, Bub, flowing down those inclines. The one to the right signifies improvements and not watered stock as some unkind wisecracker might wise crack.

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

"Mr. Speaker, Mr. Truman has just about out-Wallaced Wallace. If Mr. Wallace can make a more Socialistic or Communistic speech than Mr. Truman has just delivered, he can accomplish what I believe to be the impossible."

THOSE historic words were uttered Jan. 7 just after Pres. Truman had delivered his State of the Union message to an assembled Congress. Those historic words were spoken by Rep. Frederick C. Smith (R., O.) after the Gentleman from Ohio had asked for permission to address the House for one minute. As any fool can plainly see, the Gentleman from Ohio did not take his full 60 seconds, him a'coming to the point with speed and dispatch.

This particular Gentleman from Ohio represents the good people of the 8th District—Crawford, Hancock, Hardin, Marion, Morrow and Wyandot counties. He also served the good people of Marion—the city, that is—as mayor in 1935 and 1937 before being sent to the 76th Congress. He was sent back to Washington in the 77th, 78th, 79th and the present 80th Congress. Mr. Smith is really Dr. Smith, since he is a physician and surgeon and founder of the Frederick C. Smith Clinic.

(The Ohio delegation to Congress must be a pretty healthy one, what with Dr Smith and Dr. Walter Ellsworth Brehm, also a Rep., who holds a dentistry degree. In fact the delegation is pretty cosmopolitan. Rep. Bender is an insurance executive and also an editor and publisher; Rep. Elston is an attorney; so is Rep. Hess; Rep. Burke is an educator and personnel manager; Rep. McCullough is a lawyer; Rep. Clevenger is a merchant; Rep. McCowen, a former coal miner and presently an educator; Rep. Brown is a publisher; Rep. Ramey, a former judge; Rep. Jenkins, a prosecutor; Rep. Vorys, a member of the law firm of Vorys, Sater, Seymour & Pease; Rep. Weichel, a lecturer and a barrister; Rep. Huber lists no occupation; Rep. Griffiths, an auto dealer and head of a chemical firm; Rep. Carson, a member first of the firm of Burt, Kinneson, Carson & Shadrach and now of the firm of Burt, Carson, Lynch & Miller; Rep. McGregor, a contractor; Rep. Lewis, a trustee and a lawyer; Rep Kirwan, a public servant; Rep. Feighan, a lawyer, Rep. Crosser, also; Rep. Bolton (the Gentlewoman from Ohio), long active in public health nursing and nursing education, social service and education.)

Words, Words, Words

Says Funk & Wagnalls: "Hydrostat: n. 1. A contrivance for preventing the explosion of steam boilers. 2. An electrical device for making known the presence of water, as a protection against leakage, overflow, etc."

"Hydrostatics: n. The science of the pressure and equilibrium of fluids, as water."

"Hydrostatic: a. Pertaining to hydrostatics."

But, to get back to Mr. Dr. Smith. When this Gentleman from Ohio is not busy assailing Henry A. Truman or Harry S. Wallace, as the case may be, he ponders deeply over the "basic workings of a free economy."

Many "ingenious attempts have been made to demonstrate" those workings, he stated in a letter to his colleagues recently. "Economists have endeavored to reduce the operation of economic principals (that's what the letter said) to mathematical terms. Graphs, tables and et cetera are in common use."

But, the Gentleman from Ohio found a better way, he thought. "Recently, there have been developed a series of five machines, one weighing more than two tons," Mr. Smith wrote, "which, by analogy, demonstrate the operations of economic forces by means of hydrostatics." (Somewhere on this page, if we haven't forgotten to carry it, is a definition of hydrostatics.)

So, the Gentleman from Ohio reasoned, why don't we Congressmen take a gander at these devices? No sooner said than done. "The Speaker of the House graciously consented to exhibiting these machines in the Caucus Room of the Old House Office Bldg.," Mr. Smith stated.

WHEN we wandered in there the other day, Mr. Smith, whose eyebrows—and nothing else—remind you of John L. Lewis—was saying something to a couple of men. It sounded like "Marshall Plan and Socialism." Anyway, he posed for his picture with the largest of the machines and urged us to look the whole show over. We did.

Why bother any more with boring old graphs and tables, etc? Just attach these gadgets to your water tap and off you go. Of course, says Walter Freid, New York engineer who built the gadgets, "Just as in real life, leave the hydraulics alone and supply and demand balance themselves perfectly." And why not?

Want to know about "Break Even Point and Economic Proportion," or "Industry's Gross Income," or "Paper Profits of Cotton," or "Stable Money," or "Distribution of Monthly Income?" Well, folks, just step right up to these gadgets and the pretty red, blue, green, etc., colored water will tell all.

Mr. Fried built the machine especially for James D. Mooney, chairman of Willys-Overland. Mr. Mooney, tired of charts, hit on the idea of expressing variables and stuff like that with fluid. So, Fried threw together a lot of pipes and stuff. He hit the big time when the gadgets, water and all, were rigged up in the Old Caucus Room.

SAYS one of the signs on the machines: "To the man who leads economic groups, the law of supply and demand is like the compass to the navigator.

"All of the various areas of economics—production and distribution, banking and credit, taxes, international trade, foreign exchanges, and the gold standard—can be intelligently explored once a firm grasp is had of the law of supply and demand.

"The various actions and reactions that are included within the operation of this law are based on human behavior. The law operates as it does because human beings have fundamental attitudes toward material things, and when we examine their actions in groups we find a certain continuity in these attitudes that can be used as a basis for forecasting what their actions will be in the future.

"The operation of the law of Supply and Demand is depicted here in three dimensional, graphic forms. No liberties have been taken in the interpretation; the scheme maintains absolute consistency and integrity in illustrating the classical relationship between Supply, Demand and Price."

Get that? (Neither do we. But, we are sure the Gentleman from Ohio does.)

RAYON WORKRS, F.E. TO JOIN WAGE HIKE PARADE

By GLORIA CAPLAN

TAFT-HARTLEY, Congressional "investigation" and multi-million dollar management publicity campaigns notwithstanding, CIO unions were going right ahead with their plans for higher wages for their members.

Most CIO unions with nationwide contracts were already in negotiations or had requested early wage talks. Last week two additional national unions notified management they intended to join the parade.

The CIO Textile Workers announced it will seek substantial gains for 38,000 rayon workers throughout the country when contracts expire in the near future.

Last July the textile union won a 5c hourly boost, which brought the rayon workers' minimum wage in the North to 97c an hour and to 88c in the South.

In Chicago, the CIO Farm Equipment Workers asked the Intl. Harvester Corp., to open wage talks. The contract, affecting 40,000 workers in 12 plants, expires in mid-May.

IN addition to substantial wage increases, FE will seek a company-paid health and accident insurance fund, streamlining of grievance procedure and strengthening of other contract provisions.

While CIO Auto Workers negotiations with General Motors and Chrysler took the spotlight, the union set machinery into motion for wage boosts for some 20,000 employes of Briggs Manufacturing Co.

Last June the Briggs workers were forced on strike to obtain wage gains. This year they are seeking a 25c hourly boost, 5c for a social security and group insurance program, elimination of wage inequities between the Detroit, Evansville and Cleveland plants, a guaranteed 40-hour week, dues check-off and other benefits.

And on the local level:

FTA: Cotton compress workers at six Anderson-Clayton plants, Houston, Texas, won increases up to 15c an hour plus a week's vacation after two years, seniority and other gains.

Southern compress workers, the union noted, have been receiving 55-75c an hour less than those on the West Coast.

Textile: In Chicago, some 650 Western Felt Works employes came up with a package increase averaging 20c an hour, retroactive to March 1. New minimum base rate for women is $1.15 an hour; for sweepers $1.28 and for mechanics and electricians, $1.81.

In Burlington, Wisc., 225 Burlington Mills workers won a 19c package increase, improved vacation provisions, check-off and a union shop.

Newspaper Guild: Tacoma (Wash.) Times and News-Tribune employes won a 17% increase for those earning under $75 a week and a $15.25 weekly boost for those earning $75 and over.

Long Beach (Calif.) Independent employes were guaranteed a 11.6% hike, bringing the top minimum for reporters, photographers and rewritemen to $94 a week.

Transport: In Chicago, Transport Workers requested the city's Transit Authority to begin negotiations on proposals for a 30c hourly increase, six paid holidays, a guaranteed 40-hour work week 52 weeks a year, and other benefits.

Longshoremen: Ordering the Waterfront Employers Association to reopen the locked-out port of Los Angeles, Impartial Arbitrater Arthur C. Miller supported Marine Clerks of the ILWU.

The employers were ordered to abide by the contract they signed June 16, 1947 and cancelled March 11.

Public Workers: The 11-week strike of CIO cafeteria workers in Washington, D. C., government buildings ended as proposals drawn up by Federal Works Administrator Philip Fleming were accepted by both sides.

An arbitrator appointed by Fleming will decide disputes arising from reinstatement of strikers. The agreement, which includes a 6½c hourly increase, will run until January, 1949.

Shipbuilding: Most of the 2,500 Bethlehem-Sparrows Point Shipyard employes in Baltimore, Md., would suffer severe wage cuts if the company carries out its announced intention to eliminate incentive bonus payments.

Local Union Pres. Peter D. Bolfar, protesting the move, said it indicated that the "company intends to make still greater profits at the direct expense of the people who make all profits possible."

Communications: Three Congressmen and two city councilmen are members of a newly-formed Citizens Committee to support the (CIO) Cables Strikers in New York City.

Retail, Wholesale: An effort by the union to avoid a strike by distributing leaflets to the public after the contract expired, resulted in the filing of a $500.000 damage suit under the T-H Act by the Vim Electric Co., New York City.

The union charged the company with failure to bargain in good faith and refusal to abide by an arbitrator's decision.

Auto: Charging irregularities, the union has requested a new representation election at the Consolidated Vultee Aircraft Corp., in San Diego, Calif.

UAW West Coast Dir. C. V. O'Halloran said 700 official NLRB ballots mysteriously disappeared. The CIO lost by only 23 votes to the Intl. Association of Machinists, 3,337 to 3,314.

- About 900 CIO Packinghouse Workers at the American Sugar Refining Co., in Baltimore were out on a strike. They are seeking a 24c raise to bring wages on a par with those at the company's plants in Boston and Brooklyn.
- CIO Electrical Workers were involved in three strikes in Pennsylvania, thanks to employers! T-H-encouraged refusal to bargain.

Long Line Phone Workers To Ask 30c Hourly Rise, 35-Hour Week

LONG-LINES employes of the American Telephone & Telegraph Corp. will seek wage boosts of 30c an hour and a reduction of the work week from 40 to 35 hours when the nationwide contract expires early in May.

The contract demands were formulated in Jacksonville, Fla., during the American Union of Telephone Workers' first convention since affiliation with the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee last June.

Over 100 delegates, representing 25,000 members, cheered Pres. J. J. Moran as he remarked: "This year we have the CIO Research Department statistics to back us up. We have behind us 6 million members of the CIO."

Delegates adopted strongly-worded resolutions condemning Henry Wallace's third party and supporting the Marshall Plan and CIO-PAC.

The AUTW will seek to narrow sectional wage differentials, which vary as much as $18 weekly for telephone plant craftsmen and $6 among operators.

THE Bell System's conversion to dial telephones will replace 12 million manually-operated telephones in the next few years, the union explained. To protect its members' jobs and to gain them a share in the fruits of technological improvement, the union hopes to shorten the work week, and obtain time and one-half pay for Saturday and double-time for Sunday work.

Prior to the delegates' unanimous acceptance of the wage resolution, Stanley Ruttenberg, associate CIO research director, presented a picture of peak profits and lagging wages in the telephone industry.

Bell Telephone rates rose by more than $45 million a year in 1947, he pointed out. AT&T profits, he stressed, are far higher than represented by the corporation due to inflated prices it pays for equipment, bought from AT&T-owned Western Electric. These prices, he said, are 15-20% above those in the competitive market.

Telephone workers' wages, on the other hand, trailed behind those in other industries, Ruttenberg explained. Wage increases for Bell employes since June, 1946, lagged 9c an hour behind gains for manufacturing workers. While telephone wages rose about 8% since the end of OPA in June, 1946, prices increased 25.3%, he said.

To restore their 1946 purchasing power—without provision for an actual increase—telephone workers would require an hourly wage of $1.40, Ruttenberg reported. Today the average is $1.21, AUTW is now making preparations for a union shop election under the Taft-Hartley Act. It is planned to complete the election before negotiations begin.

PRINCIPAL convention speakers were Asst. Labor Secy. John Gibson, who described the inadequacy of present Bell wages and urged support for the Marshall Plan; CIO Organizational Director Allan S. Haywood; CIO Shipbuilding Workers Pres. John Green and Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee.

Haywood reported that nine telephone unions, representing 85,000 workers, have affiliated with TWOC. In a sharply-worded resolution, delegates "rejected and spurned" a Communications Workers of America (independent) invitation to join its ranks.

The union's two top officers were reelected by acclamation. They are Pres. Moran and Vice-Pres. R. T. Creasey.

Following the convention, the TWOC executive board held a two-day conference in Jacksonville. Plans were made to extend organization, strengthen present affiliates and increase the flow of literature and research information to affiliates.

AID CRIPPLED CHILDREN: The CIO Brewery Workers has contributed more than $5000 to the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults for research. Above picture shows a 14-year-old boy demonstrating use of an experimental model of a stand-up table devised to help crippled children walk. With him are Joseph E. Brady, coordinator of state councils for the Brewery Workers and Miss Jayne Shover, director of the National Society's cerebral palsy service.

Fur Union Asks Bar On Lockout

New York fur manufacturers, who voted to close their factories on April 2 until a new contract is signed, where confronted with a suit for a temporary injunction.

In filing the suit, the CIO Fur & Leather Workers' counsel, Lee Pressman, charged that the employers were planning a lockout without first giving the workers a sixty-day notice and filing a 30-day notice with the Federal and state mediation services. Such notices are required by the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Fur Workers' contract expired Feb. 15. Negotiations since then have been stymied by the manufacturers' insistence on putting back into effect the two sets of wage scales in use before the war—one for the slack season, another for the busy season.

In addition, the manufacturers are demanding that the union's officials sign non-communist affidavits under the T-H Act.

"With prices what they are, I pay less for this model—and get twice the compliments."

U. S. Hurt Abroad By Polltax

WITH victory closer than ever before, the CIO has renewed its year-long drive for U. S. action to outlaw the polltax in seven Southern states.

Appearing before the Senate Rules Committee, CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey urged quick action in the Senate and labeled arguments against constitutionality of the proposed law as "without foundation."

The polltax bill has already been passed by the House. Action in the Senate seems likely at this session, since it has the support of many Northern Democrats and a considerable number of Republicans.

The bill is apt to die on the legislative vine, however, unless the Senate adopts "cloture" rules to cut off debate and forestall a filibuster by the Southern polltaxers. Cloture requires a two-thirds vote.

Polltaxes must be paid before persons can vote in the states of Virginia, South Carolina, Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Tennessee and Texas.

NET effect of the taxes, Carey pointed out, has been to cut heavily into the number of persons in the seven states who can use their voting rights.

The percentage of potential voters who went to the polls in the '46 elections in the seven polltax states, he pointed out, was only 9.58%, while in the other 41 states 47% of the voters cast ballots.

The polltax problem is more than local, the CIO secretary—who had just returned from a trip to Europe—told the Senators.

"An American diplomat cannot forcefully argue for free elections in foreign lands without meeting the challenge that in many sections of America qualified voters do not have free access to the polls," he said.

CAREY'S testimony was backed up by John Edelman, Washington spokesman for the Textile Workers Union, who appeared in behalf of a quarter-million Southern textile workers.

He recalled that the union had just recently won a Labor Board election in a mill at Stonewall, Miss., where the minimum rate of pay is 41c an hour and where only a few key workers make as much as 60c an hour.

"People who earn such disgracefully low wages simply cannot afford even sufficient food for an adequate diet, let alone pay poll taxes," Edelman charged.

Sponsor of the bill (HR 29) is Rep. George Bender, an Ohio Republican. Opposition has come largely from Southern legislators and governors, who have argued the plan is constiutional or that it interferes with states' rights.

SUCH 'NEWSBOYS' NEEDED: The CIO News is in the market for "newsboys" like Tulla Augusta, secretary of the Omaha-Council Bluffs CIO Council. She was so impressed with the first issue of the council's edition of the CIO News she became a "news butcher." The "newsboys'" line forms at the right.

Congress Ignoring U.S. Needs

WHILE rushing action on the badly-needed European aid program, Congress is paying less attention to the needs of the American public.

- The Knutson tax bill—passed and vetoed twice last year—won strong support in both Senate and House, and moved over to the White House for a probable third veto.

CIO has steadily opposed the tax bill—largely on grounds that it gives tremendous benefits to the wealthy, while passing along only $1-a-week savings to families with a $2000 net income. CIO's own tax program called for big cuts in taxes for low and middle income families, with heavier taxes on big corporation profits and closing of tax loopholes.

- Funds for the Labor Dept.—severely hacked in the House—were up for study before a subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Secy.-Treas. Carey told the Senate group the $4 million cut in funds will produce damage "cut of all relation to the dollars involved." He said much of the work of the Department is devoted to helping "maintain full production and full employment."

MUCH of the cut is directed at the Board of Labor Statistics, used by labor, management and government as a source of factual material on key industrial problems. The Women's Bureau, the Veterans Reemployment Bureau and the Wage-Hour Division would be seriously crippled by the cut.

- The long-feared, long-expected GOP wage-hour bill has been produced by Sen. Joe Ball (R., Minn.), a prime mover in the Taft-Hartley campaign. It lifts minimum wages from 40c to 60c an hour (CIO, Pres. Truman and some industrialists had asked for a 75c minimum rate).

The bill is a long, complicated legalistic re-write of the present Wage-Hour Act. Like the T-H Act, it promises to give lawyers a field day, while making enforcement and protection of workers almost impossible.

- Bills to increase the salaries of U. S. employes—who have taken a bitter bearing from rising prices—are still locked up in Congressional committees.

Bills (HR 4704-5) in the House by Rep. Dingell (D., Mich.) and in the Senate (S 1848-9) by Senators Langer (R., N. D.) and Chavez (D., N. M.), would lift pay of federal employes and postal workers by $1,000 a year. The proposals have support of the CIO United Public Workers.

- Removal of taxes on oleomargarine was seen headed for possible action in the House, where about 130 Congressmen signed their names to a petition to discharge the House Agriculture Committee from further handling of the tax-cut proposals.

The Committee—dominated by midwest dairy interests—had voted 16-10 to table all bills to remove the tax on oleo. Signatures of a majority of the 435 Congressmen are necessary before the bills can come directly to the House for debate and vote.

- The Gearhart bill (HJR 296), which would cut some 600,000 workers out of the social security system, is under study by the Senate Finance Committee.

14 MOUTHS AND $36: John Brannon, (r.) a CIO Packinghouse worker on strike in Council Bluffs, Iowa, gives 14 good reasons why he can't make ends meet on his $36 a week at Armour & Co. Two of his boys had to quit school before finishing the 8th grade to help feed the family. "A packinghouse laborer," he says, "is driven, driven until he nearly drops. There is no humanity in a packing plant." (See Page 2.)

CIO Asks Discharge of Woods

WALTER Reuther, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, has called for the withdrawal of Tighe E. Woods as Federal Housing Expediter.

In a wire to Democratic Nat. Committee Chairman Howard McGrath, Reuther charged that Woods, in dismissing the Cleveland, O., rent director and in making changes in the New York area office, "perverts the powers of the executive department."

The Senate Banking & Currency Committee delayed action on Woods' confirmation until after passage of the 1948 rent control law. In committee and on the Senate floor Sen. Harry P. Cain, outspoken foe of rent control, severely attacked Woods' administration.

Shortly after Cain's attacks, Woods dismissed Henry Zetzer, Cleveland rent head, who had been under Cain's fire.

Reuther's wire read:

"Am appalled at the action of Acting Rent Administrator Tighe Woods in making changes in the New York area office, which have been urged upon him by the real estate lobby.

"Recently he fired the best area rent director of them all in Cleveland, O., at the request of Senator Cain, who as you know is the real estate lobby's most active proponent in the Senate.

"Woods' action perverts the powers of the executive department. He takes his orders from those in the Congress who are most against rent control even though the majority voted a comparatively good bill.

"His name ought to be withdrawn and an administrator proposed who would enforce the Act as passed by the Congress."

As the new rent control bill went into effect April 1, debate on the Wagner-Ellender-Taft Housing bill and Sen. Ralph Flanders' amendments was stepped up in the Senate Banking committee and on the Senate floor.

PICKET LINE WEDDING: Rev. Andrew Jenkins marries Doris Mae Wilson and Eugene Plumley, who met 11 days before the ceremony while picketing Armour's plant at Atlanta, Ga. Mrs. Plumley was employed in the egg packing dept., while her husband worked as a wiener packer. Strikers are seeking 29c hourly increase.

Packinghouse Workers Undaunted By Arrests and Police Violence

IN ST. PAUL, Minn., mass arrests of striking CIO Packinghouse Workers was in vogue.

In Tifton, Ga., strikers at Armour & Co. were reported battling tear gas attacks and deputy sheriffs, said to have beaten women pickets.

In Chicago, 200 ex-GIs took time out from UPWA picket lines to picket the Veterans Administration and the state unemployment compensation offices in a vain effort to obtain unemployment benefits denied them as strikers.

And in every meat packing center where UPWA pickets pounded the pavements, strikers were waiting April 8, when President Truman's fact-finding board will report its findings in the walkout. The Taft-Hartley Act empowers the President to seek an injunction to halt the strike for 80 days following receipt of the board's findings.

IN the meantime, support for the strikers mounted as religious, civic, veterans and union groups pitched in to help.

In Chicago, the American Veterans Committee doctors, dentists, lawyers and nurses offered their services to strikers without charge. The Catholic Charities, the Salvation Army, the Catholic Back of the Yards Council, Catholic businessmen, the University of Chicago Settlement and the CIO Community Services Committee are contributing relief and financial aid.

At the union's Chicago headquarters, sympathetic letters from individual farmers continued to pour in.

The 100,000 strikers are seeking a 29c hourly increase to bring wage rates up to $1.39 an hour, described by the Bureau of Labor Statistics as the amount necessary for a minimum standard of decency for a family of three.

Sets Farmers Straight On Strike Issues

CIO Packinghouse Workers Pres. Ralph Helstein believes in "turning the other cheek."

To the DeKalb County (Ill.) Livestock Feeders Association, which threatened violence, if necessary, to market their livestock, Helstein offered the skilled labor of UPWA strikers to help slaughter the cattle.

Education Bill O.K.'d By Senate

FEDERAL aid to education —a subject which has been proposed, debated, shelved or killed in Congress every year for the past 25 years — has finally won approval by the Senate.

To some of the nation's children the measure, if passed by the House, would mean a chance for a decent education for the first time. To all it would mean better schooling than their states could heretofore provide.

The bill, which seeks to guarantee a minimum expenditure of $50 a year on education for each child between the ages of 5 and 17, would grant federal funds of from $5 to over $25 per student to the states. The sum, which totals $300 million, would be apportioned according to need.

The most hotly-contested issue in the debate was the question of whether the funds should be used to support religious and private schools. This was resolved by a section which leaves it entirely up to the states to spend the money in accordance with their laws. Nineteen states now provide for assistance to non-public schools.

Amendments to ban the use of federal funds for private schools and, conversely, to require that a portion be used in this way were both decisively defeated.

Final plea for the bill was made by Sen. J. William Fulbright (D., Ark.), who asserted that the U. S. was spending only 1.5% of its income on education, while Russia was spending 8%.

To Virginia's Harry F. Byrd, the bill was a "Pandora's box." It would open the way to federal regulation, he insisted.

(Last year Virginia's median education expenditure per pupil was $56 a year, seventh state from the bottom. New York, by comparison, spends $234; California, $177; Connecticut, $154.)

That Food Price 'Decline' Saved You Only 2c A Lb.

THE "food basket" index—issued by Dun & Bradstreet—is heading up again after a fall during the market break in February.

D&B estimated that 31 pounds of 31 foods would have cost you $6.75 last week. This year's low was $6.61 on Feb. 24. The all-time high was $7.28 on Jan. 13, this year.

So, you will note that the foods fell an average of slightly more than 2c per pound. (In case you've forgotten the dark days of the depression—and who can forget them?—the index on Jan. 31, 1933, was $1.49, an all-time low.)

AND here is some more food for thought from Leslie Fishman, of the CIO Research & Education Dept.:

"Profits are now so huge that corporations have been hard put to try to explain them away. They are so high that they are double the golden year of 1929. They are so high that on the average a 20% wage increase could be granted to all corporation employes and still leave profits at the 1929 level—with no increase in prices!!!

"There have been two main arguments that have been cooked up by the corporations to fool the public about their present huge profits.

"In public statements corporations are now reporting profits as a per cent of sales, although in the past they have always reported profits as a per cent of investment. For their own private use, the only measure they use to determine profits is return on investment. That tells them how much money they make for every $1 they invest.

"And, of course, that's the really important question for all businessmen. But for public consumption and newspaper ads, they switched to sales because this makes profits look a lot smaller. In meat packing, for example, the correct profit per cent is, on the average, eight times greater than the one packing corporations are publicizing.

"THE official newspaper publishers' magazine, Editor and Publisher, on Nov. 8 urged newspapers to stop playing up the huge profits of corporations and suggested they switch to industry, new method of reporting profits. The NAM full page ads in Time, Look, etc., have helped them make that switch. And, today, even the New York Times is carrying all their profit stories with this shabby measure of profits as a per cent of sales.

"Don't be fooled when corporations say their profits are only 6% or 8%. The question is 'per cent of what?' Is it a per cent of what you put in to the business (the investment) or per cent of sales?—which doesn't mean a thing.

"THE second dodge in hiding the huge profits is to say they need the profits to stay in business. They have to spend it for higher priced inventories. It isn't real profits at all—it's just inventory profits. Here, the Commerce Dept. is helping corporations out by agreeing that much of the profits today are only inventory profits.

"The catch is that Commerce's 'correction' assumes inventories are figured at cost. Many businessmen have indicated they are doing no such thing. They know that the present price inflation is going to break one of these days and they are protecting themselves against that day valuing their inventories very, very conservatively.

"Many have formally gone over to the LIFO (Last In—First Out) method of calculating inventories, which enables them to protect themselves openly.

"But those who are still under FIFO (First In—First Out) can get the same result by being very cautious and careful in pricing their inventories. Commerce has made no attempt to check this assumption.

"But if this type of argument is used by the corporation, attempts should be made to check the companies' inventory figures with the actual physical inventory in the plant. From the information we have, the results will probably be very interesting to the union and very embarrassing to the company."

AND, oh yes, getting back to food prices. The U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics (such a valuable arm of the U. S. Government that even Sen. Taft howled when "economy-minded" Congressmen tried to cut its appropriation sharply) last week announced that the February-born decline in food prices has halted.

As if housewives didn't know that already.

ERP PASSES; SHIP TRANSFER KILLED

THE Marshall Plan is now a reality.

This broad humanitarian and recovery program—officially called the European Recovery Program—was passed late last week by Congress after details had been ironed out in a House-Senate conference committee. CIO Pres. Philip Murray had directed CIO to make ERP its No. 1 priority.

The House—which the Washington Post described as "sometimes irresponsible and misguided"—last week adopted ERP by a thumping 329 to 74 majority—an even wider margin than the 69 to 17 ballots by which it had passed the Senate.

But, the House had added a number of things to the bill which necessitated some strong leadership from the Senators on the conference committee. Evidently there was strong leadership, since the bill which came out of the committee leans toward the Senate's version.

The Conference report was accepted by the House on a 317 to 75 vote. The Senate accepted on a voice vote. Then the bill went to the White House.

The item in the House bill which differed most from the Senate bill was one which included Spain among the nations to benefit from ERP. It was sponsored by Rep. Alvin O'Konski, (R., Wis.). Pres Truman immediately declared he was "utterly opposed" to inclusion of Spain, and Murray asserted "we believe that neither the U. S. nor the people of Europe have anything to gain by including the fascist dictatorship of Gen. Franco in a program to reconstruct the European economy and strengthen world democracy."

The House-Senate conference killed all reference to Spain in less than two hours. In fact, the conferees came to agreement on a report in startlingly fast time.

One item that the conferees did not have to argue over was a provision that would authorize transfer of American ships to European nations. This had been opposed vigorously by the CIO and its various maritime and shipbuilding unions. The provision was stricken out in the House, as it had been in the Senate.

The measure, as finally adopted, included:

1. A total of $6,098,000,000.

a. $5,300,000,000 for ERP.

b. $275,000,000 for Greek and Turkish military aid.

c. $333,000,000 economic and $125,000,000 military aid for China.

(The Senate yielded on b and c. Originally, it had contended they should be handled in a separate bill.)

d. $60,000,000 for the UN Children's Fund.

2. A joint committee of the Foreign Policy and Appropriations committees of the two chambers to facilitate reports of the ERP administrator to Congress.

3. $300,000,000 for the plan to encourage participation of private American capital in European recovery.

4. A House provision that $1,000,000,000 of the $5,300,000,000 should come from loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corp.

5. $20,000,000 in relief for Trieste.

ONE House provision, backed heavily by labor, was eliminated in the conference. It would have provided that the ERP advisory board must include representatives of business, labor, agriculture and the professions.

The bill is an authorization measure which sets ceilings on the amount of money to be spent on the respective programs but not actually appropriating the money. Those appropriations will have to be voted on later after review by the two Congressional committees.

Rep. John Taber (R., N. Y.)—one of the most "economy"-minded members of the House—has stated that the House Appropriations Committee, of which he is chairman, may not be able to submit a bill before May 10. "I intend to go into the need of every nation before I provide funds," he told the House. But, since the margin for passage of ERP was better than 4 to 1, it doesn't appear that Taber's penny-pinching will get far.

The delay will not retard the start of ERP, because the $1,000,000,000 RFC loan will come immediately.

THE House vote on passage of its version of ERP included 171 Republicans and 158 Democrats for the measure and 61 Republicans, 11 Democrats and two American Laborites opposed.

Before final action, a motion to recommit (which is polite language for "kill") the bill made by Rep. Glen D. Johnson (D., Okla.) was roared down.

A move by third party supporter Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.) to substitute the "Wallace Plan" was defeated by a standing vote of 270 to 6. In the Senate, a similar motion by Sen. Glen Taylor (D., Ida.), who will be Wallace's third party running-mate, was defeated 74 to 3.

The final passage of the House version marked one of the few occasions on which Marcantonio and Reps. John Rankin (D., Miss.) and Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.) voted on the same side.

MURRAY, in declaring ERP the No. 1 task for CIO, had declared:

"If the ERP idea should collapse tomorrow, a recession would follow immediately because (a) an outlet for goods would be cut off; (b) we would be closer to chaos and totalitarianism in Europe and (c) would be close to a regimented economy in which both our manpower and material would be devoted to military preparation for war."

Answering critics—such as Wallace—who said such an aid program should be operated through UN, Murray declared:

"How could it? It's 22 vetoes too late for that. But the bill does call for maximum use of agencies of UN and other international agencies."

Film Tells Italians The Merits of ERP

A newsreel showing Exec. Vice-Pres. George Baldanzi of the CIO Textile Workers giving a brief interview in Italian in favor of the Marshall Plan will be shown throughout Italy, to combat communist claims that American labor opposes the European Recovery Program.

Baldanzi tells the Italian workers that American labor backs the plan as a step to peace and freedom.

Mary Lou Smith (r.), queen of the New York Guild's 1948 Page One Ball receives the victory ribbon from Mary Snee, last year's Miss Page One. The dance will be held May 5 at Manhattan Center.

We Couldn't Have Said It Better

It was a strange place for the CIO's case for higher wages to appear, but it popped up in U. S. District Court in Washington, D. C.

A bank teller came up for sentencing for embezzling $1800 to pay off his family debts. He was paid $2100 a year—$40.38 a week. On this he was trying to support a wife and child.

In court the bank's irate vice president charged the theft was "more a case of high living rather than the high cost of living." The bank executive said, "When I began, I was making $25 a month."

But Judge Alexander Holtzoff had another explanation.

Because of the low salaries paid by banks to their trusted employes, large sums of money passing through their hands serve as a "great temptation," especially in view of the high cost of living, he said.

The sentence: three years' probation.

Win Union Shops

Five more union shop election victories won by the Federation of Dyers during the past two weeks brings the total won by the union to 49. Only 249 votes were cast against the union shop in all 49 elections.

Plan Co-op Palestine Tie Plant

PLANS for establishing a co-operative necktie factory in Palestine are being pushed by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

In cooperation with the Men's Neckwear Mfrs. Association, the union's neckwear joint board will seek to raise a kitty of $100,000 to get the project started. It will be located in the Naga colony in Palestine, and will be managed by Histadrut, the Palestinian labor organization.

Louis Fuchs of New York, union official and head of the fund drive, said 2,300 members of the Amalgamated's neckwear division will devote the pay they receive on May 17 to the co-op project.

About 100 Jewish refugees in Palestine will be trained for jobs in the union-sponsored factory.

As in a similar project to make men's suits in an Italian co-op factory, the Amalgamated will supply trained technicians to set up the plan and train the workers. Raw materials and machinery will be shipped from the United States.

Radiomen Transfer From ACA to MEBA

Some 3,000 marine radio operators have transferred their affiliation from the CIO American Communications Association to the CIO Marine Engineers beneficial Association.

Prior to the operators' referendum, which approved the move by the ratio of 16 to 1, the executive boards of both ACA and MEBA sanctioned the transfer.

Silence Is Not Consent

You hear some of the darndest things on the radio.

The other night, for example, we tuned in late on a program --and the first words that came out of the speaker went like this:

"Organized labor raised all kinds of objections to the Taft-Hartley Act when it was being considered by Congress. The Act has been in effect for some time now—and union leaders are no longer making a fuss about it.

"It seems to me that this is pretty convincing evidence that the unionists are realizing that the Act isn't nearly as bad as they said it was."

It was at this point that the doorbell rang and visitors came in. Somebody switched off the radio—so we didn't learn the speaker's name.

Nevertheless, we're positive the guy doesn't know convincing evidence when he hears—or fails to hear—it.

Organized labor made a lot of noise about the T-H Act when it thought noise might help.

The Republican-controlled Congress, however, passed the measure. It was obvious that the present crop of lawmakers wouldn't repeal it.

So, unionists told themselves, let's concentrate our efforts on getting some new Congressmen and Senators.

And that's why the CIO's political action campaign is picking up speed all over the country.

There is nothing strange about the "strange silence" of union leaders toward T-H. They still abhor it.

Instead of raising objections, they're raising funds for PAC.

Their change of tactics seems to make sense.

Passage of the T-H Act resulted from political action on the part of industry and business.

Political action on the part of labor can get it removed from the statute books.

GOP Campaign For Economy

The "economy-minded," Republican-controlled Congress began whacking away at "useless" expenditures almost as soon as it organized under the GOP banner.

It slashed several hundred millions from appropriations for dams, reclamation, rural electrification and for operation of governmental agencies that aided labor.

It became most generous with the National Labor Relations Board—after passage of the Taft-Hartley Act.

It set aside some two millions for half a hundred farcical "investigations."

The other day, Senator Scott Lucas (D., Ill.) revealed another peculiar thing about GOP economy. Lucas said:

"On Dec. 31, 1946, just before the control of Congress was shifted to the present majority party, the Senate was spending for employes a total of $3,297,500. As of last Feb. 20, the Senate was spending $4,743,708, an increase of almost $1,500,000 in the total payroll.

"I understand that a similar increase has taken place in the House of Representatives."

This type of economical nest-feathering at the expense of public improvements makes us wonder what kind of alibis the GOP will trot out in a few months when the campaign gets hot.

'Hot' NAM Letter Backfires

It Says Labor's 'Socialistic Windbags, Leftwingers Hate Private Business'

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE National Association of Manufacturers, which usually operates as smoothly as a $100 watch, could learn a valuable lesson from that letter which backfired.

It would be a lesson in the dangers of name-calling and insinuation—a lesson many outside the NAM could profit by.

The whole thing resembles a tragic comedy of errors—but nobody is laughing about it.

It began when a NAM representative drafted a fund-raising letter and sent it out over the signature of Earl Bunting, chairman of the NAM Board.

"AS you know, the so-called Progressives are re-doubling their vicious attacks in speeches and articles in the press upon you as a businessman, assailing you as a money-getter, trickster, stock-manipulator, and bandit living off the national income," the letter says.

"These attacks cannot go unanswered and that is why the NAM, as the recognized spokesman for American industry, is united in replying to them by giving the true facts to the public.

"These Socialistic windbags and Leftwingers of the labor unions are obsesses with a bitter hatred of private business. They care nothing about the fact that salaries and wages do not depend on arbitrary decision. They care nothing about the fact that the consumer is the lifeblood of business."

AT this point the letter really gets going. It continues with: "They care nothing if your business is doomed—if its operation brings losses only. What these spellbinders do want is to strike down property rights to the level of Socialism.

"We must not ignore these Leftist attempts to control industry. If we do, our economy will be smashed like Britain's.

"Because of these facts and the necessity of defending our rights against this naked display of power seeking to convince the people that 'special privileges,' unconcealed, raw and undiluted, are necessary for the common good, I believe you will want to join with us in NAM's powerful, hard-hitting programs, and straight-spoken statements to give our people the facts on the principles in danger at this hour of compulsion and coercion.

"So I say, let's turn on the heat and go to bat, let's defend your rights and mine—rights to make a profit—rights to manage our own business. Let us go all out in these crucial months ahead with the utmost expenditure of energy, manpower and purpose, before the public, showing up those who would destroy our free economy in their true blood red color.

"Since you have so much at stake in this fight, and are equally concerned over the threat of a planned economy with all of the evils of a Socialistic state, I hope you will fill in the enclosed membership form for your company's cooperation and participation and return it to me."

NOT many copies of this letter were sent out to prospective contributors—and the reception it received is known to have been bad.

The man who drafted it has been "permanently retired" by NAM, which considers that its issuance was a blunder.

We'd have been willing to consider the matter as a "closed chapter" had is not been for the fact that the viewpoint expressed in the letter has been expressed time and again by NAM—but in more subtle and softer terms.

NAM and many other groups—in government, in labor unions, in the professions—have fallen into the bad habit of trying to substitute name calling for sound logic.

They do not attack a program or an idea on the basis that it's unworkable or undesirable. They try to beat it by hanging on it such tags as "Red," "Fascistic," "Socialistic" or "Reactionary."

The technique has been overworked. The public is becoming fed up.

To illustrate:

We could say that the NAM letter was reactionary and Fascistic, but we won't.

We'll just say that the fellow who wrote it displayed an amazingly crude talent in the art of using half truths and insinuations.

Koestler: 'U. S. Democracy Is Hope Of World'

AMERICAN democracy "means the only hope of survival and salvation" for the world, Arthur Koestler, internationally-famous author, is declaring in a series of lectures throughout America.

"It is not a fight of white against black," asserted Koestler, author of "Thieves in the Night" and "Darkness at Noon."

Eastern totalitarianism is black. It would mean the end of our civilization, of a tradition of 2000 years if eastern totalitarianism won.

"On the other hand, American democracy is far from perfect, it is gray rather than white. But, for us Europeans from Prague to Rome, your American democracy, however gray, means the only hope of survival and salvation."

Typical Koestler lecture was that given at New York's Carnegie Hall before a overflow crowd. It was sponsored as will be all his lectures, by the Intl. Rescue and Relief Committee, an organization devoted to aid of anti-totalitaritan refugees. CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey and CIO Vice. Pres. Walter Reuther are members of the IRRC national committee.

At that lecture, places of honor on the stage were accorded to such refugees as George Domitrov, leader of the Bulgarian Peasant Party and head of the Peasant International; Dr. Karel Pusta, former Estonian foreign minister; Dr. Mladen Zujevich, member of the Jugoslav Central Natl. Committee in Exile; Jan Korbonski, secretary general of the Polish Peasant Party and a leader of the Polish Resistance; Jaime Miravitles, press attache of the Spanish Government-in-Exile, and representatives of Czech, Lithuanian, Latvian, Hungarian and Romanian refugees.

"People who are unable to distinguish between the burlesque of the Hollywood purge and the sinister tragedy of the Moscow purges should keep their mouths shut," Koestler said. "They are the Babbitts of the Left."

Of the "seven fallacies of radical Babbittism," Koestler declared the major one is the inability to distinguish between the long-term struggle for social progress and the short-term necessities of emergency action against an immediate threat to the survival of civilization.

Koestler, who will tour the country for six weeks, delivering a number of lectures, says he is indebted to IRRC for the aid it gave him and his family—they are Germans—when they were victims of the Nazis.

"AND NOW LET'S START PRESSURING FOR A SALES TAX TO INCREASE REVENUE"

They Certainly Had The Correct Spirit

IT would be gross exaggeration to say that a good broad-jumper could leap from one side of the village to the other without straining.

But it is a tiny town, nestled among pine trees near one of the principal highways leading out of New Orleans.

Its economic life centers around a sawmill—a sawmill that formerly paid low wages.

It was here that CIO organizers unraveled a mystery which for a time was delightfully baffling.

EMPLOYES of the mill got together and decided they needed a union—a strong union.

They sent word to this effect in to State Director Fred Pieper, who had several large organizing drives under way and was in no position just then to assign an organizer to the mill village.

Pieper, however, told one of his own men to stop over in the village and talk with the mill workers.

The organizers followed Pieper's instructions. He explained the situation to the employes and suggested that they might organize a union without direct supervision from the CIO staff.

He left some membership cards and went on to Baton Rouge—or wherever he was going.

A short time later Pieper was notified that "everybody" at the mill had joined the CIO and he was asked, "What do we do now?"

An organizer was dispatched to the village to check on the situation—and he was shaking his head in consternation when the checking was completed.

Membership cards were counted and recounted. Obviously there was an error somewhere. A serious error.

There were more cards than there were mill employes.

How come?

Oh, that was easy to explain, the workers said. Some of their relatives and friends who didn't work at the plant signed up, too—just to demonstrate the folks were really behind the CIO.

THE mill management was asked to recognize the union—a local of the International Woodworkers.

Management said, flatly, that it wasn't going to deal with the union. To heck with this new-fangled business of collective bargaining.

And just to prove that it wasn't fooling, it shut the mill down—tight.

At this point Director Pieper moved into high gear. He sent word to management that it was heading for serious trouble with the National Labor Relations Board.

THE mill was closed for three days, then reopened with management expressing willingness to have an election to determine the union's strength.

An election was held three weeks after a petition for certification was filed. Five of the 131 eligible voters failed to cast ballots. The vote was 125 for the CIO and 1 against.

Then union and management representatives sat down and negotiated a contract.

When Southern organizers get together and swap yarns about unusual campaigns somebody from Louisiana is sure to tell about this one. And chances are about 10 to 1 that the story will end with the remark that—

"Management paid the workers for the time they lost when the mill was shut down. And, you know, that was the first paid vacation they ever had!" A.L.S.

IT'S TIME FOR SPRING PLANTING

ACW Member Is A Cutter By Day, An Author By Night

THE story of the productive "double life" led by a member of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers is told in the following story from the union's newspaper, The Advance:

There is a cutter in Boston, a member of Amalgamated Local 267, who bends over his table in the shop during the day and his own writing desk at night. In the local they know him as Leon, but the third political book he has just finished carries the name of his after-hours self: Leon Sakhiem-Rumagra.

The books Brother Sakheim-Rumagra has written are about Germany—the Germany that made World War I, World War II, and is today once again a point of conflict and a potential sore on the body politic of Europe. He shows how and why Germany played the evil role she did in the history of the continent.

His latest book, called FALLEN GERMANY and subtitled An Immigrant Looks Back—Chapman and Grimes are the publishers—contains a rapid survey of the political and military history of Germany, from its unification under Bismarck until the Nazis came to power.

The rest is a sober account of how the Nazis took over—and why the German people made it possible for them to take over. He traces carefully the success of the Nazis in promoting the anti-democratic superman theories of Nietzche among the German people, defeated and confused victims of economic and social decay. This part is by far the most interesting section of the book because here Sakheim-Rumagra can and does speak from first-hand knowledge.

Born in Hamburg, Germany, Sakheim-Rumagra has had a life full of experiences as colorful as anything Hollywood can offer. In his early years he was interested primarily in sports, in which he was an amateur champion athlete and sports writer in Germany. In that period he was also in the export-import business and traveled widely in Europe.

In his early thirties political awareness caught up with him as he watched the steady Nazi climb to power. He began to dig into German history, trying to find out why things were happening the way they did and what he could do about it.

Sakheim-Rumagra remained an anti-Nazi, and when his business was liquidated and he was put on their lists he knew he had to flee. He visited his sister, a doctor in Berlin, and departed from there 24 hours before the Nazis came around to question him.

With the Nazis on his heels he fled to England, where he worked in drugs and chemicals. But England was only a stop to what he recognized from across the Atlantic to be the one militant democracy in which he wanted to live: Roosevelt's USA.

Sakheim-Rumagra's admiration for FDR is boundless—an admiration, incidentally, which is still very much alive in millions of people throughout the continent today.

He got to the U. S. in 1938, and, personally, he had to start from scratch. He learned a new trade—became a cutter; joined the Amalgamated as soon as he could, and at night he wrote his books. In 1939 it was "The World's Disturber"; another book on Germany, published in 1940 by Harvard, told the democracies why they must watch out and what they must watch out for. "Fallen Germany" is his third book.

Although his work as a cutter is a severe tax of time and energy from his first love—his political writing—Sakheim-Rumagra shows no disposition to change.

He is a cutter who has his work cut out for him.

Matchless!

The President of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers has a new approach in singing the blues about how business is being "choked to death" by taxes.

In St. Louis, he told NAM members to jot some figures on the inside of a match box. The St. Louis businessmen wrote down the following statistics:

Corporate profits before taxes—$28.7 billion.

Corporate profits after taxes—$17.4 billion.

Inventory adjustment — $5.7 billion, leaving $11.7 billion.

Dividends paid out—$6.8 billion.

Retained profits—a paltry $4.9 billion.

The NAM president neglected to add the following interesting profit figure:

Corporate LOSSES after taxes in the NAM-GOP prosperity of 1932—$3.4 billion.

On National Policy:

QUILL HITS CIO DISSENTERS

BY ARTHUR RIORDAN

TWO telegrams—addressed to "Dear Phil" and "Dear Mike" — highlighted last week's development on the CIO's national pro-Marshall Plan and anti-third party policy.

The wires, of course, were between Pres. Michael Quill, of the CIO Transport Workers, and CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Quill, in a move which caused a sensation in labor and newspaper circles, resigned as president of the Greater New York City Industrial Union Council, wiring Murray:

"I was one of the founders of this council and took a reasonable and active part in its leadership and activities . . . From the events which took place in the council within the past several months I feel I can no longer continue to serve in the capacity of president.

(He succeeded CIO Maritime Union Pres. Joseph Curran as council head in January.)

"You will recognize, of course, that it is perfectly proper for me as president of the TWU and a member of the national CIO board to agree or disagree with some parts of the national CIO policy which may effect the TWU.

"But if those disagreements will be seized upon by a group of strange people within the CIO council as a cheap and underhand way of splitting the unity of the CIO here or elsewhere, then in all fairness to the membership of the TWU, the national CIO and to your honest leadership I must call a halt as far as my participation is concerned."

HELEN GAHAGAN DOUGLAS
She won't be the Wallace pin-up girl.

The Greater New York Council had refused to adhere to CIO national policy. It assailed a letter from Council Dir. John Brophy—in which Brophy pointed out it was the duty of councils to follow CIO policy—as "a betrayal and a most dangerous attack upon democracy." The New York State CIO has indorsed CIO policy.

The day after he sent his wire, Quill was quoted in New York papers as saying he had resigned because the Greater New York Council "is controlled by Communist crackpots."

In his telegraphed reply to Quill's wire, Murray stated, "I wish to convey to you my deep sense of appreciation for your forthright affirmation." (Full text of his message is elsewhere on this page.)

(The Communist Daily Worker commenting editorially on Quill's resignation, declared: "Michael Quill is going fast . . . He is starting to echo the language of the warmongers. He mutters something about not wanting 'peace at any price' . . . Quill is also starting to make eyes at Gen. Eisenhower, the last hope of the busted down Truman "liberals' who want the General to head off the only genuine peace candidate—Henry Wallace . . . The Marshall Planners want labor to 'sacrifice' its wage demands.")

(This week CIO Pres. Murray, an ardent supporter of the Marshall Plan, was scheduled to help his Steelworkers open their negotiations with U. S. Steel for a "substantial wage increase.")

Four other state CIO Councils were in the CIO policy news last week. They were Florida, Oregon and Nebraska.

FLORIDA: Brophy received the following from Pres. John Lackner, Secy.-Treas. Edwin F. Waller and Exec.-Secy. & Org. Dir. Charles Smolikoff:

"The statement attached by the three top officers of the State council is self-explanatory.

"The resignations are effective as of April 1.

"With all good wishes for the continued growth of the CIO to which we pledge our continued efforts."

Attached was:

"Whereas, the CIO Southern Organizing Committee appointee for Florida, Charles Cowl, has arrogated to himself certain functions of the CIO in Florida, although we are elected officers; and

"Whereas Cowl has attempted to dis-organize the organized in two TWU locals, in consort with UAW organizers; and

"Whereas, Cowl assisted UAW Vice. Pres. Livingston in smearing a number of national CIO leaders, such as Albert Fitzgerald, Michael Quill and Donald Henderson; the latter two being the presidents of the TWU and Food, Tobacco unions, which have done almost all of CIO organizing in Florida; and

(Cowl is CIO Regional Director for Florida.)

"Whereas, you have written us demanding that the Council must affirm (CIO policy) 'or else,' which is an ultimatum without regard for the wishes of any autonomous local individual CIO member, who as American citizens detest Japanese-type 'thought control' and will insist as individuals to look and vote on any political issue they please; and

(NOTE: The CIO's Rules for Industrial Union Councils, adopted unanimously in 1946 and supplied to all council officers, say: "Councils shall take no action or issue statements in conflict with CIO policy.")

"Whereas there was a difference of opinion on a Third Party and other questions as a result of which we meticulously avoided action on the question to allow each individual CIO member and each local to exercise their individual rights, according to their conscience;

"Therefore,

"1. We, the top elected officers herewith tender our resignations as officers of the council and will return to building our respective CIO unions, to work for the further improvement of said CIO unions' membership wages and working conditions.

"2. We will work jointly with CIO members to defeat the political enemies of the labor movement;

"3. We will continue to devote our time, in cooperation with all of CIO, to organizing unorganized workers into CIO unions."

In reply, Brophy wrote: "Thank you for your letter advising me of your resignation."

Late last week, Murray wired Cowl, naming him administrator for the Florida Council "until reorganization has been completed by democratic processes."

OREGON: from Secy. Treas. Stanley Earl—"passed a motion adopting official CIO policy."

ARKANSAS: from Pres. Lee F. Tucker and Secy.-Treas. Charles M. Catton—"by a unanimous vote . . . Mr. Brophy, we do not know of a single local union that is affiliated with the State Council that is not going along with National CIO policy."

In Pennsylvania, State CIO Pres. Harry Boyer said the March 17 issue of "Progress," organ of District 6, UE, carried "in big type Dist. 6 Pres. Loney's challenge to Boyer demanding to know what Boyer stood for, instead of against (Boyer and the State CIO have indorsed CIO policy). It (Progress) does not print Boyer's answer, dated Feb. 13, four days after the date of Loney's letter."

Boyer's reply said: "I support the CIO Executive Board . . . I support the Pennsylvania State Council. I support Philip Murray."

Murray to Quill:

Here is the text of CIO Pres. Philip Murray's telegram to CIO Transport Workers' Pres. Michael Quill:

Dear Mike:

I acknowledge with thanks receipt of your telegram expressing your support and confidence in my leadership of the CIO and your devotion to our great labor movement.

Mike Quill

Today, more than ever, it is of paramount importance that all CIO officials and members rally behind our great organization in view of the serious threats to the welfare and integrity of our movement. Of course, I recognize the rights of individual members of the CIO, as private citizens, to vote and speak as they please on political questions and similarly the autonomous rights enjoyed by our international unions. No one in the National CIO has suggested anything to the contrary.

However, state and local chartered councils of the CIO are agencies of the organization and under duly adopted rules must "take no action or issue statements in conflict with CIO policy."

As president of the CIO it is my constitutional duty to take a forthright stand in support of National CIO policies as established by our National Executive Board, and this I shall continue to do to the best of my abilities. It is the equal duty of local and state CIO councils and their officers to comply with CIO policy as officially declared by the National CIO Executive Board, and I would be remiss in my duties as President if I did not insist upon such compliance.

The processes at which the CIO arrived at its decision in this extremely important matter, as you know, were truly democratic in every sense of the word. I am sure you understand that it is not my disposition to assume any dictatorial attitude toward our membership or the organizations affiliated thereto in the administration of their affairs.

It is a source of great personal satisfaction to me to note that the overwhelming majority of our affiliated internationals and local unions, recognizing their moral obligation to the CIO, have voiced their support of our national CIO policy.

I wish to convey to you my deep sense of appreciation for your forthright affirmation of the position of the CIO and myself in these matters.

With every good wish.

Milwaukee PAC Backs Zeidler

The Milwaukee County PAC has unanimously indorsed Frank P. Zeidler, Milwaukee School Board member running as a non-partisan candidate for mayor.

In the recent primary, Zeidler, a member of the Socialist party came in first in a field of 15. He tallied 49,818 votes to 38,369 for Henry Reuss. They oppose each other in the April 6 general election. Others in the primary included John. J. Fleming, 33,000; Daniel W. Hoan, former Socialist mayor of Milwaukee from 1916 to 1940, 21,828 (Hoan has urged his followers to back Zeidler); Arthur Ehrmann, 21,000; A Communist candidate ran 12th with 749 votes and a Trotskyite 14th with 222. Zeidler is a member of an AFL union.

THE last issue of the Harrisburg, Pa., Telegraph, which was folded (suspended publication to you non-newspaper guys) last week by Publisher Albert Stackpole, didn't have too much advertising.

(That's one newspaper death the American Newspaper Publishers will have a hard time trying to blame on the American Newspaper Guild. The Telegraph employes never reasoned they had to join the Guild because they thought the good old Telegraph would never let them down. Well, it did.)

But, the Telegraph had at least one full page ad. It was what the newspaper business calls a "challenge." This time it was a challenge to the CIO from the Dunn Survey, Robert C. Dunn, Prop. It said in large type; oh, much larger than this type:

"In Pennsylvania, we CHALLENGE Philip Murray and the national leaders of the CIO-PAC to keep your pledge NOW.

VIRGINIA Labor's persistent campaign to unseat the Sen. Byrd machine received dramatic impetus in Danville when a coalition of union forces and younger business and professional men took complete control of the city's Democratic executive committee.

Union members and their allies, who had been clamoring for reorganization of the committee since Jan. 1, so out-maneuvered the machine henchmen that when the mass meeting to effect the reorganization was finally called, the Byrd machine didn't even resist. Only a few turned up to sit quietly by as a 27-man anti-Byrd slate was unanimously elected.

The committee was supposed to have reorganized in 1947, under the "Party plan" of the Virginia Democratic Party. Apparently afraid of labor's growing political strength, the Byrd machine failed to call a reorganization meeting.

Early in January, Labor's Legislative League, the political arm of all of Danville's unions, charged that the machine was illegally perpetuating itself in office.

WHEN no meeting was called, LLL announced that if the machine did not set a meeting date by Mar. 1, Labor would call

(Hey there, chum, you must still think it's 1940 and that John L. Lewis is President of CIO. Remember, he tried to deliver the CIO—and the miners—to Wendell Willkie. F.D.R won, backed by the vast majority of labor.)

Dunn lists eight Pennsylvania Republican incumbents who are facing primary opposition. (The other 18 Republicans are unopposed in the Apr. 27 primary.) "We challenge CIO-PAC to oppose publicly now, each of the eight, who voted for the T-H Law over the President's veto."

The eight: Reps. James Gallagher, Robert N. McGarvey, Hardie Scott, E. Wallace Chadwick, Paul B. Dague, James P. Scoblick, Wilson Gillette, John McDowell.

If Mr. Dunn wants to waste his money in dying newspapers to "challenge" the CIO, let him do it. But, it really takes two to make a legitimate challenge. Pennsylvania CIO-PAC has indorsed no one in the Rep. primaries and the chances are pretty certain that there will be no GOP indorsements come Apr. 27.

All this is very challenging.

OTHER news on Political Action and Marshall Plan:

California: The Daily Worker reports that "the Independent Progressives Party (Wallacites) is supporting candidates for Congress in at least 21 of California's 23 districts.

"It was not certain whether the IPP would find candidates to support against incumbent Democrat Henry Sheppard in the 21st or Republican John Philips in the 22d.

(According to the CIO Voting Guide, Sheppard voted "right" the least of any California Democrat except Clarence Lea. Philips voted "right" only once.)

"Support was offered to incumbent Reps. Chet Holifield and Helen Gahagan Douglas on the basis of their overall record and despite their support of the Marshall Plan, but was declined under pressure from Truman forces.

"CIO Public Workers Union leader Sidney Moore, a Negro, was put up on the IPP ticket against Mrs. Douglas and Progressive Jack Berman in Holifield's."

Kansas City, Kan.: CIO Vice Pres.-Org. Dir. Allan L. Haywood addressed more than 1500 persons at a PAC rally on Easter Saturday. The meeting inaugurated the PAC drive for Kansas and the Greater Kansas City area.

Haywood passed up his dinner to walk on the CIO Packinghouse Workers' picket line.

Murray: In a radio speech inaugurating the "Labor Speaks" program over WOR, New York, and WOL, Washington, he declared: "This matter of registering and voting is the most imperative contribution that any citizen can make to his country. It is more than a privilege, it is a high duty."

Local 308, UE, Buffalo: Voted approval of ERP and condemned the spread of Communism.

Local 1028, Steel: Duluth, Minn.'s largest local union indorsed CIO 3d party-ERP policy and "demanded that its officers, committee members and delegates be instructed to follow this policy."

Philadelphia: Many residents of this city were snickering over handouts of the Wallace committee referring to "Judge" Joseph Rainey, who has filed a Wallacite petition for Congress. They are snickering because Rainey is not a "judge," he is a magistrate. In Pennsylvania, a magistrate is far below a judge, he handles minor legal cases, he does not have to have a law degree, no educational requirements are stated, the jobs are definitely in the lower echelon.

Rainey, elected as a Democrat, has been in office for several years, showed little or no interest in labor or liberal causes until his second marriage a couple of years ago.

Wallace dinner: the third party group announced it would have a $100 a plate fund-raising dinner, just like the Dems and Reps do.

Teachers Union, Local 55, CIO Public Workers: sent a letter to Murray denouncing Brophy.

New Jersey: State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman gave the Conference to Carry Out CIO-PAC Policy in Essex County (Newark area) full authority to act for CIO in political matters in the Essex and West Hudson area.

At the same time, he barred the Greater Newark CIO Council, which has refused to back CIO policy, from engaging in political activity in the name of CIO.

Cleveland: The Cuyahoga County PAC has been reorganized, following action of the Cleveland CIO in backing national policy.

Four PAC officers who refused to conform with the policy were left off the ticket and the new officers voted unanimously to back national policy. Paul Miley, Auto, is new chairman; William F. Donovan, Steel, vice chairman; B. W. Ohler, Steel, secretary, succeeding A. E. Stevenson, who refused to o. k. policy; Carl Sapiente is treasurer, replacing Marie Reed, UE, also a dissenter.

Executive board members are Richard Reisinger, Auto; Beryl Peppercorn, Amalgamated; Sam Sponseller, CIO Regional director; Perry Carpenter, Utility; William Davy, Newspaper Guild.

Other unions which will participate in PAC work are Barbers, Furniture, Lithographers, Oil, Paper, Public, Textile, Transport.

Hardy Merrill, Auto, was named permanent PAC director.

Other officers who either resigned or were voted out for disagreement on policy were Louis Hahn, former director; Fred Keller, UE, Leroy Feagler, Longshoremen.

Councils Report:

CIO IS RIGHT; FLORIDA AIDES QUIT

'3d Party Disrupts'

RECENT decisions by the Wallace third party have proved the wisdom of CIO's policy in opposing that third party in 1948, Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC director, declares.

In a letter to Jerome Posner, chairman of the Los Angeles Committee for Natl. CIO-PAC Policy, Kroll pointed to the action of the Wallace unit in California — the Independent Progressive Party—in filing candidates to oppose Reps. Helen Gahagan Douglas, Chet Holifield and Cecil King, all Democrats.

"The California report only substantiates what is already evident — that the 1948 third party movement is a disruptive influence which could result in the elimination of many progressives in the present Congress," Kroll wrote.

"Reports from Minnesota and Illinois add to this conclusion. In those states, there is a strong indication that third party candidates may be entered in opposition to liberal candidates which may result in the re-election of such out-right isolationist and anti-labor spokesmen as Sens. C. Wayland Brooks and Joseph Ball.

"The announcement that Rep. Melvin Price of Illinois, whose voting record is judged 100% by CIO voting standards, will be opposed and that third party Congressional tickets are sprouting in New Jersey, Maryland and Pennsylvania and other states only vindicates the wise judgment of the CIO Executive Board.

"The third party movement, rather than helping elect a more progressive Congress, in effect, is opening the way to a more reactionary body. It is dividing the progressive forces, not uniting them, as their propaganda handouts would trick people into believing.

"As we build block by block, precinct by precinct, ward by ward and Congressional district by Congressional district we shall bring to the people facts on the crucial issues which now confront them."

Since both the Los Angeles and California CIO Councils have refused to adhere to national CIO policy, Kroll has appointed the L. A. and California Committees for Natl. CIO Policy as the official PAC spokesmen in their areas. Jerome Posner heads the L. A. group. Morris Zusman, who resigned as State CIO president in protest against failure to back national policy, heads the new State group.

Taft Pays, Pays, Pays And Pays

It pays to solicit votes for Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.).

Don't get us wrong. We don't mean for service the country will get it return. Far from it. We mean that in Cleveland, paid canvassers are working from house to house attempting to sign up vote pledges for Taft. Local politicians estimated that as many as 100 solicitors had been hired and that the cost ran "into hundreds of dollars."

Paul W. Walker, Taft's representative, denied the canvassers were being paid on a signature basis. He did not state how they were doing—at getting signatures, that is.

Clare's In Again

IN Elyria, O., the CIO Auto Workers don't fool. When they read in the Elyria Chronicle-Telegram that "the witty, 75-year-old seven-term member of Congress," Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., Michigan), was scheduled to address the local Lorain County Republican Committee at a dinner, they got downright mad.

So, the Elyria UAW-PAC prepared a mimeographed leaflet, which posed two questions to Lorain GOPers:

"Do you support the views of Rep. Hoffman? If you do, how can you speak for the party of Abraham Lincoln?"

The pamphlets were distributed at the door of the high school auditorium where the dinner was held.

The pamphlets read:

"Clare Hoffman says:

TO THE UNEMPLOYED:

"Give them a two-bit pole apiece, a dime's worth of linen line, a nickel's worth of sinkers, and let them dig their own worms."—New York Times, April 24, 1935.

TO UNION MEN:

In 1937, during the Chrysler strike: "This is nothing but a communist plot to Sovietize Detroit."

Feb., 1947, during Taft-Hartley hearings: "Put the food on the flagpole and when workers get hungry enough, they'll climb for it . . . what's more, I'd grease the flagpole."

TO CATHOLICS:

"The Gentleman is a Roman Catholic. Why doesn't he quit following the Pope?"—referring to Rep. Rabaut (D., Mich.). Remarks were stricken from the Congressional Record of May 26, 1944.

TO AMERICA:

"This Freedom Train is nothing but a propaganda exhibit"—August, 1947, referring to the train which carries Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation, the Bill of Rights, etc.

(Reporters say that Hoffman was so perturbed by the leaflet that in his haste to throw it on the dining table he also tossed down an American flag which had decorated a red, white and blue elephant at his and all other plates. Then, realizing his mistake, he made a show of picking up the flag and stroking it gently, evidently to prove his 100% Americanism.)

NMU Asks Talks On New Pacts

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THE CIO-Natl. Maritime Union has requested the 106 companies with which it has contracts to begin negotiations immediately.

In a letter to the employers, NMU Pres. Joseph Curran urged an early meeting date to permit ample time for talks before the contracts expire on June 15.

Main issues in this year's negotiations will be the questions of wages and the union hiring hall.

Writing in the March 26 issue of the union's newspaper, Curran warned that "our membership will make it very clear to officials and to shipowners alike that come June 15, if we do not have a satisfactory contract that protects the wages, hours and conditions aboard ship, and protects fundamental principles of hiring hall, there just won't be any work."

The union will mail out strike ballots shortly.

STEEL: The CIO Steelworkers were scheduled to begin wage talks with about 600 companies this week. The wage reopening will affect about three-quarters of the union's members. USA-CIO is seeking "substantial" wage increases plus a social insurance program.

AUTO WORKERS: The UAW, now in negotiations with General Motors and Chrysler, will create a strike fund by a $1 assessment on each of its 900,000 members. The action was taken by the union's executive board.

WOODWORKERS: Over 40,000 CIO Woodworkers in the Pacific Northwest lumber industry will strike if negotiations, now in their seventh week, do not reach a satisfactory settlement soon.

The Woodworkers approved possible strike action in a referendum by a margin of 88%.

The employers' single offer of a 7½c hourly increase on condition that all other union requests be dropped was rejected by the union. IWA Pres. J. E. Fadling termed the offer "patently inadequate in the face of higher and higher living costs, and increased productivity of the workers and the inflated profits of the industry."

Any settlement, he said, must include consideration of the health and welfare proposal, paid holidays and an adequate wage boost. The union is asking for a 30c increase.

OTHER developments in CIO: The CIO Auto Workers, The Intl. Association of Machinists and four AFL craft unions are seeking bargaining rights at the much-advertised Tucker plant in Chicago . . . CIO Farm Equipment Workers and Intl. Harvester will begin wage talks covering 40,000 workers, on April 6.

Rises ranging from $246 to $900 a year for New York State employes, largely the result of CIO Public Workers' pressure, were approved by legislature .

Cambridge and Charlestown, Mass., Steelworkers at the Crosby Steam Guage & Valve and the Ashton Valve companies walked off their jobs to attend a union meeting. Three and a half days later they returned to work with an 8c hourly increase, 1c to correct inequities; health and accidents insurance, and four paid holidays.

An 8c hourly increase and dues checkoff were won by 6,400 CIO Communications workers in the Western Union domestic division in New York City. The new agreement carries a no-strike clause.

GE Advises:

Skip Rises, Work Like H---, Save

HOW to become an expert on inflation and deflation in one easy lesson:

Raise your prices 31 to 70%, then lower them 3 to 10%.

This will also qualify you for the title of "chief public benefactor of 1948.'

General Electric, which did just that and consequently holds the title (in its own eyes, at least), has issued an impressive brochure telling employes and communities how they, too, can become public benefactors.

Here's its advice (for free) to GE employes, who are now in negotiations:

"Please forego any further pay increase demands now and go on to try to help us at least save 5% in the present cost of labor . . . Please see if this effort on our part isn't worthy of an even intensified interest in your work. Please try to join in the thrill of this common experiment and go home not tired and disturbed but more satisfied with your accomplishment and its consequences.

"And try to save 5% to 10% of your own pay —no matter how hard that may be." (Italics GE's.)

And at the bottom of the page appears this further note:

"Let's each one be completely selfish about this greatest of our current problems—but let's be sure it's 'enlightened selfishness'."

Labor Spy Is Government Witness

A STORY of spying in the ranks of labor came out in the open last week at a government hearing in New York.

Frank W. Eleey, a government witness, admitted that he had been retained by both government and private agencies to act as a spy among workers.

Eleey claimed at first that he had merely spied on "Communists" but under cross-examination it developed he had worked in the ranks of the old CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee, fore-runner of the present United Steelworkers of America.

Eleey's testimony came at Immigration Service hearings to determine whether Charles A. Doyle of Buffalo, N. Y., an ex-officer of the United Gas Coke & Chemical Workers, should be deported to Scotland as an alien committed to over-throwing the U. S. government.

Eleey claimed he had kept "tabs" on Doyle's politics. Eleey's services as a spy were done in behalf of the Pinkerton agency and the Standard Service Bureau of Buffalo.

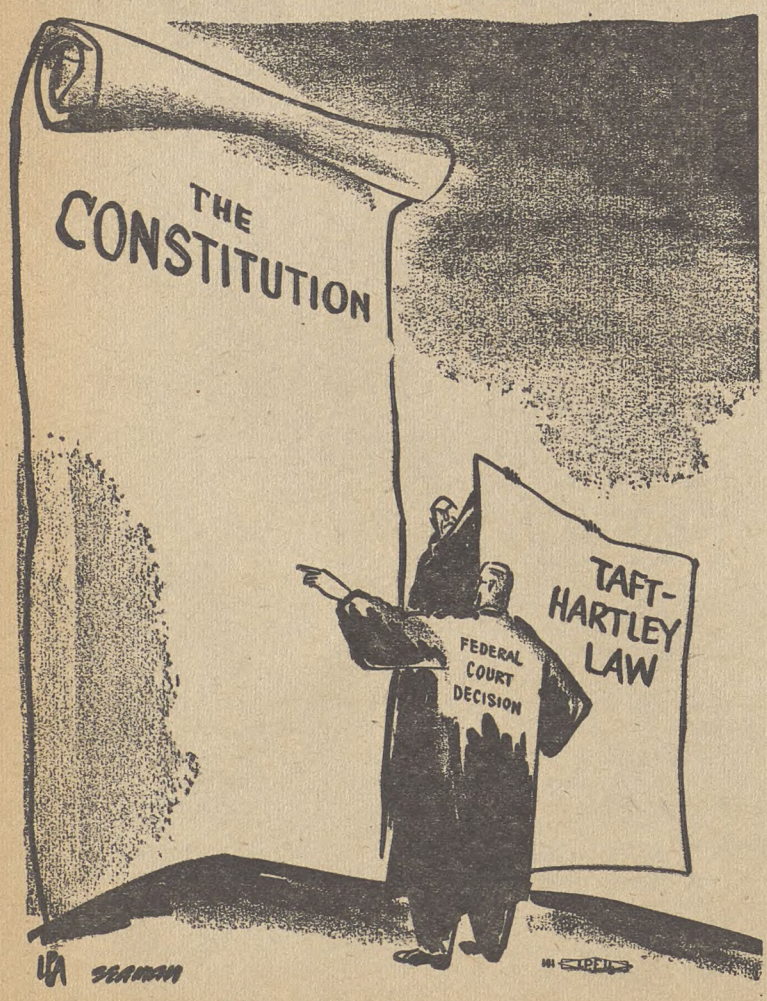
But he admitted that in his espionage career during the years 1926-41, he had also turned over information to a National Guard officer, to the Secret Service, to the Buffalo police and to several industrial firms.

Eleey said he had received money for his services from a Major Higgins of the National Guard and from one Edward McHugh of the Secret Service. But Eleey, apparently fond of the Buffalo police force, reported to the cops "out of my own free will."

During a three-hour spell on the witness stand, Eleey finally admitted that he had been employed by at least one company whose business was labor espionage, though he stoutly contended that most of his activities were directed against Communists.

Eleey's testimony came in the concluding days of the hearing against Doyle, against whom deportation orders are being considered by the government. The hearings ended last week.

'That Still Looks Bigger!'



ADA Will Discuss Indorsements

Leon Henderson, chairman of Americans for Democratic Action, has announced that "in view of swift and critical political developments since the national ADA convention, an expanded meeting of the executive board has been called for April 10 in Pittsburgh."

At the ADA convention in February, the delegates "unreservedly condemned the third party candidacy of Henry A. Wallace" but withheld endorsement of any other presidential candidate.

CIO Wins W. Virginia Phone Vote

IN its first election contest with the independent Communications Workers of America, the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee emerged victorious.

Climaxing a vigorous five-month campaign among the membership of the West Virginia Union of Telephone Workers, TWOC won bargaining rights in an NLRB election by a vote of 1650 to 1379 for CWA.

The Toll Test and Repeater men of the Pacific Coast also voted by a ratio of over 7 to 1 for affiliation with TWOC, and the vote went against the independent union at the Western Union plant at Allentown, Pa. The repeatermen voted to shift affiliation from the American Communications Association. (See Allan S. Haywood's column on this page.)

The victory brings to over 85,000 the number of telephone workers now represented by TWOC. This is an increase of 28,000 since the beginning of the year.

TWOC ranks will be further swelled when formal affiliation of some 6000 Maryland Telephone Traffic Employes is completed. They have already voted to join.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

The Toll Test and Repeatermen of the Pacific Coast completed their vote for affiliation with TWOC-CIO—309 for affiliation, 39 against. This makes a total of four West Coast unions that now have voted for affiliation with the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee.

Reg. Dir. George Craig, Philadelphia, Pa., reports the employes of the Blue Mountain Telephone & Telegraph Co., Inc., voted for the union shop 33 to 0. Margaret Kish, president, and associate officers are to be commended.

In the election among the telephone workers in Charleston, W. Va., CIO won over the the independent CWA in a NLRB election. The vote was: CIO 1650, CWA 1379, no union 241. Congratulations to Jack Easton, J. D. Shepherd, president of the W. Va. Telephone Workers, all the officers, all the organizers and the CIO staff who took part in this great achievement. This test is significant and means much for the future.

Reg. Dir. Craig advises CWA also failed in the election at Allentown, Pa., Western Electric plant, where the vote was: For CWA 334, 500 against. It is obvious that the telephone workers are getting fed up with CWA and want affiliation with CIO.

Sub. Regional Dir. John J. Maurillo, Syracuse, N. Y., advises CIO won a second overwhelming victory in the NLRB election at A. E. Nettleton Co. 243 voting for United Shoe Workers, 162 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst, St. Louis, Mo., reports he has been advised by Region 5, UAW-CIO, Russell Letner, St. Louis, Mo., of two union shop election victories in plants under UAW-CIO contract: Local 691 UAW-CIO, Lincoln Engineering Co., 346 for union shop, 6 against; Local 881 UAW-CIO, W. N. Matthews Corpn., 57 for union shop, 1 against.

Reg. Dir. James J. Leary, Kansas City, Mo., advises of a victory for UAW-CIO among the employes of the Falls Spring Corp., North Kansas City, Mo., 241 for CIO, 6 against. Intl. Rep. John Rinkenbaugh was in charge, assisted by Local President Salvatore Abbott and Vice President Leland Cox.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Eandner, Newark, N. J., reports an election at the Edward E. Robinson Brush Co., Nutley, N. J., was won by the CIO Novelty Workers by vote of 29 for the CIO union to 17 for no union. Rep. Paul Eaton was in charge.

The writer addressed a well-attended CIO rally in Kansas City, Mo., on Saturday March 27. While there he visited the headquarters of the Packinghouse Workers. Everybody was "on their toes" and the strike was solid.

Our unions there are supporting CIO-PAC policy solidly. The maximum degree of unity prevailed among our forces there. The writer stopped over in St. Louis and Chicago, and in Chicago met with representatives from Illinois and Indiana.

Wage-Hour Notes:

Now Joe Ball Is Trying To 'Simplify' Law

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

FOR months the CIO has urged Congress to improve the Wage-Hour law, which was passed in 1938.

It has asked that the minimum wage be lifted from 40 cents to 75 cents, and that the coverage provided by the law be extended to new groups of workers. And it has indorsed the Thomas-McCormack Bill, which would bring about those improvements.

Now Sen. Joe Ball (R., Minn.) has introduced a bill which recognizes the need for higher minimum pay rates—but it would shelve the forward steps proposed by the Thomas-McCormack Bill in favor of a mass of legal verbiage which would do harm to decent wage-hour legislation.

Ball's bill—a 50-page affair—is known as S. 2386. Remember that number—you're going to hear it often in the weeks and months ahead. It's the sort of bill that might have been expected from Sen. Ball, who wanted to make the Taft-Hartley law even tougher than it is.

Any day now, you and the rest of the public will be on the receiving end of a big propaganda drive—a drive to convince you that the Wage-Hour law is all wrong, that the Ball bill must be passed to "simplify" the present law.

THE Ball Bill has only one good feature —it recognizes the principle that minimum wages should be higher.

CIO, liberal groups, the Administration have often asked for a 75-cent minimum. The Thomas-McCormack Bill would not only grant a 75-cent minimum, but would permit Industry Committees to raise the base pay to as high as $1 an hour in any particular industry.

Ball's Bill would lift minimum rates only to 60 cents an hour. However, it would let Industry Committees cut the rate to only 50 cents—which could be done easily—or raise them to 70 cents, which would be difficult under the law.

The two proposals—the Ball Bill and the Thomas-McCormack Bill—are in sharp contrast on every type of issue.

Behind the Ball Bill lies the thinking that the Wage-Hour law should be cut down, benefits restricted, coverage limited. The Thomas-McCormack Bill seeks to expand Wage-Hour protection — in money wages, in coverage, in effective enforcement.

HEARINGS on the Ball Bill start April 19 before a Senate Labor sub-committee. Head of the sub-committee—you guessed it—is Joe Ball. Most of the other members of the committee have never shown love for unions. They're Sen. Donnell (R., Mo.), Jenner (R., Ind.), Ellender (D., La.). The only consistent friend of labor on the sub-committee is Sen. James Murray (D., Mont.).

House Labor sub-committee leaders (headed by Rep. McConnell [R., Pa.]), admit they're waiting only for a "green light" from the GOP leadership before they, too, report out a bill.

Once hearings start, it's apt to be the same old story all over again. The House Committee will probably go down the line for the worst possible bill. Then the Senate Committee will round off a few of the roughest edges, but make few real changes. After that, the result will be hailed by many Senators and Congressmen, and many employers and papers, as a "moderate compromise."

Here, point by point, is how the Ball Bill shapes up:

Minimum Pay

The Ball Bill's 60-cent minimum rides on a lurching elevator. Industry Committees set up by the Wage-Hour Administrator can easily knock the base rate down to 50 cents in any industry. In theory, the Committees can raise the rate to 70 cents for any industry—but the bill is so complicated as to make that a far more difficult task.

The Thomas-McCormack Bill sets minimum rates at a flat 75c, permits jumps to $1 in any industry, permits no decreases in the minimum rate.

Fewer Workers Covered

The Ball Bill provides so many exemptions and opportunities for employers to squeeze out of its coverage that CIO experts think as many as three million workers will lose Wage-Hour protection.

The Thomas-McCormack Bill increases coverage for workers not now protected by the Wage-Hour law.

Regional Differentials

The Ball Bill permits different minimum rates in various sections of the country. Passage of such a provision would be a hands-down victory for runaway employers, who regard low-wage sections as ideal spots to move plants from union-organized areas. That sort of competition can hurt wages everywhere.

The Thomas-McCormack Bill and the present Wage-Hour law provide a flat minimum for the entire country.

Overtime

The Ball Bill requires five full printed pages to define a worker's "regular rate of pay." Each line of those pages is filled with legal language which can create loopholes for employers who want to get around the law. It makes it all the more difficult for workers to collect time-and-a-half pay for work over 40 hours a week.

The language is so complicated that CIO experts think hundreds of law suits may be necessary to find out what the law actually says about overtime.

The Thomas-McCormack Bill retains the present tested methods of the Wage-Hour law overtime provisions.

Back To 1900

Under the Ball Bill, Industry Committees could practically ignore the cost of living as a factor in setting minimum wage rates.

That's not all. The Committees would be permitted to make "due allowance" in determining wage rates for the fact that unmarried workers may not have "legal" dependents (though many help support parents or relatives).

The Committees could also make their decisions on minimum wages on the basis of the number of wage earners and dependents in a family.

The Thomas-McCormack Bill does not permit such a back-to-1900 basis for setting wage rates. It is based in large part on the fact that living costs have risen tremendously since the 40c rate was set under the present law.

Jokers By The Dozen

In its 50 pages, the Ball Bill contains more jokers than the card pack of a Mississippi riverboat gambler.

Chiseling employers benefit particularly from the jokers. For it seems clear that passage of the bill would permit thousands of employers—in retail and service trades, as well as manufacturers—to wiggle out of the bill's coverage.

Almost every section of the bill seems written with the desire to make interpretation difficult—to the benefit of employers rather than of workers.

The Thomas-McCormack Bill would tighten, rather than make more loose, the language of the law.

Walsh-Healey Act Changed

The Ball Bill would drastically revise the Walsh-Healey Act, which sets up decent wage standards for employers filling government contracts.

For one thing, it sets a 2-year limit under which workers may sue for back wages under the Walsh-Healey Act. And it writes the complicated, lawyers-paradise "regular rate of pay" clause into that law. Both things will make the Walsh-Healey Act more difficult to enforce.

The Thomas-McCormack Bill doesn't tamper with the Walsh-Healey Act.

Sub-Sub-Standard Rates

The Ball Bill introduces a new gimmick —a special sub-minimum rate of 50 cents an hour for the first four weeks (160 hours) that a worker is employed by a new boss.

In a non-union plant, an employer would be within the law in paying even a skilled worker only 50 cents an hour—10 cents less than the general minimum—during that introductory period. He'd also be able to pay the 50-cent rate to school kids working during their vacations.

But the law has no safeguards to protect workers from employers who might want to chisel on this arrangement.

The Thomas-McCormack Bill contains no such special invitations to wage-cutting.

The moral is clear—workers should ask the Senate Labor sub-committee to defeat the Ball Bill and to seek passage of the Thomas-McCormack Bill.

Action is needed quickly.

Education Notes

BRITISH LABOR OFFERS EXCHANGE SCHOLARSHIP

TWO scholarships at Ruskin College, Oxford, are being offered American trade unionists by the British Trades Union Congress as part of a plan for the exchange of worker students between the United States and England.

The scholarships provide 200 pounds each, or the equivalent of about $800, to cover tuition, room and board at Ruskin College for the three school terms running from October 1948 - June 1949.

Ruskin is a resident workers' college governed by a council of representatives from the British TUC, General Federation of Trade Unions, Cooperative Union, Working Men's Clubs and other national working class organizations.

Courses offered are directed chiefly toward social studies, with emphasis on the history, organization and functions of trade unions; economics, and the theory of practice of government.

Two committees, one British, the other American, have been formed to carry out the scholarship plan. The U. S. committee is headed by Dr. Harold Taylor, president of Sarah Lawrence College, and includes two CIO representatives—CIO Education & Research Director Kermit Eby and Education Director Lawrence Rogin of the Textile Workers Union.

CIO members may obtain further information about the scholarships from the CIO Dept. of Education, 718 Jackson Place, Washington 6, D. C.

Chicago Parley

What are the big health and welfare issues of the 1948 campaign? How do local unions set up workmen's compensation and health and welfare committees? What is CIO policy on agency fund raising drives? How can union counsellors help meet neighborhood-wide problems through community organization?

These were a few of the problems to which CIO people sought answers at the third annual Chicago CIO Council Community Services Conference March 13. More than 450 CIO members and their friends attended.

Different phases of the Chicago Community Services program where covered at three morning and three afternoon workshops. At the evening banquet, Philip Murray citations were presented to eight locals in the Chicago area which did an outstanding community service job during 1947.

Carl Miller, United Auto Workers, was presented an award as the union counsellor who had handled the greatest number of referrals.

Essay Contest

A state-wide essay contest for high school students is being planned by the Wisconsin CIO Council. Topic for the essay will be: "Why I Should Belong to a Union." The winner will be awarded a trip to the National CIO Convention for a week with all expenses paid.

The contest is scheduled to begin April 1 and close June 1. Essays will be limited to 400 words. Educators of the Wisconsin School for Workers and Marquette University will act as judges.

Cooperation

A workshop on church and labor cooperation will be one of six classes offered at the sixth Institute on Industrial Relations for Church Leadership, July 11-23, in Madison, Wis. The Institute is sponsored by the National Religion & Labor Foundation in cooperation with the University of Wisconsin School for Workers.

BEST WISHES: Arthur J. Goldberg, new general counsel for the CIO and the Steelworkers, receives congratulations over the phone on his appointment to the posts, while Frank Donner, assistant counsel for the CIO and the steel union, beams his approval.

Union Shops Win In 99% of Polls

Business at the NLRB is booming.

While the Board chased around conducting union shop elections in which the unions won 99% of the time, its backlog of cases mounted to 9,468 at the end of February.

With unions waiting and sighing and waiting for action on petitions for collective bargaining elections, the Board managed to find time for 266 such polls. During the month requests for 629 representation elections were filed.

In contrast, 1,473 union shop elections were conducted.

Of the nine representation contests in which the CIO and AFL were pitted against each other during February, the CIO won seven. Valid votes cast for the CIO in these elections totaled 1714 to the AFL's 945.

Rules For NLRA In Pre-T-H Case

An NLRB trial examiner, Charles E. Persons, has ruled that Wagner Act provisions still apply to cases which arose before the passage of the Taft-Hartley law.

Despite the 1947 act's barriers to the unionization of plant foremen, he held that Carnegie-Illinois must reinstate 82 foremen who followed the policy of their union, Foreman's Association of America, and did not scab on the CIO Steelworkers in the 1946 steel strike.

Persons also recommended that the company be required to pay back wages to the foremen for the time lost since the company refused to rehire them in 1946. If Carnegie-Illinois does not appeal the ruling within 20 days it automatically goes into effect.

Persons overruled the company's contention that he should dismiss the case now that T-H is on the statute books and amends the Wagner Act (NLRA) to deprive foremen of union rights. He cited previous rulings of the board to the effect that "Congress made no provision in the amendments for absolving employes of liability for unfair labor practices committed prior to such amendment."

The 82 foremen were discharged, Persons held, in direct violation of Wagner Act prohibitions against firing men for union activities. The FAA local decided when Steel struck the plants in 1946 that its members should continue to perform their normal duties but not take over the jobs of other workers. When the company, after failing to agree with USA on the composition of a skeleton maintenance force, tried to coerce the foremen into such work they too walked out.

1,000 Will Attend FDR-CIO Center

More than 1,000 students are expected to attend the fifth annual Leadership Training Institute at the FDR-CIO Labor Center, Port Huron, Mich., July 11-Aug. 21, according to Michigan CIO Director Bill Kemsley. New classes this summer will include Union Objective, Public Relations, Advanced Education Training, and Political Theory.

The Institute is sponsored jointly by the Education Departments of the Michigan CIO Council and the Auto Workers.

Final Decision Expected

U. S. SUPREME COURT TAKES T-H PRESS CASE

THE U. S. Supreme Court has agreed to consider the CIO Freedom of Press case.

April 26 has been set for hearings on the issue, which comes as a result of an appeal by the Government against a decision of Federal Judge Ben Moore, that the indictments of the CIO and Pres. Philip Murray were unconstitutional.

The CIO and it chief officer were indicted on charges that they violated Section 304 of the Taft-Hartley Act. The accusation grew out of an order from Murray to the CIO News that it print an indorsement of a Baltimore Congressional candidate and that copies of the paper be distributed in Baltimore, where the election was held.

(Last week. the conservative Philadelphia Inquirer, which is often critical of unions, declared "the decision (Moore's), if upheld by the Supreme Court will remove a section which many think had no proper place . . . Untrammeled right of free expression of views, as Judge Moore said, promotes, rather than hampers, the freedom of the electoral process.")

After Judge Moore had heard arguments from CIO and the Government and issued his ruling, the Government immediately appealed to the Supreme Court. The CIO — through Special Counsel Charles J. Margiotti, former Attorney General of Pennsylvania, and his assistants, former CIO Gen. Counsel Lee Pressman and CIO Associate Counsel Frank Donner, entered an "appellees' statement as to jurisdiction." (The free press case began before Arthur Goldberg was appointed CIO general counsel.)

IN the statement, the lawyers said the CIO doesn't contend that the Supreme Court lacks jurisdiction. The statement argued:

"The issue presented by the appeal is one of transcendent importance. The issue is whether the Congress may constitutionally make it a crime for a labor organization to publish and circulate a newspaper indorsing a candidate for federal office. A further question is whether a president of such a labor organization commits a crime when he consents to publication and circulation."

"Every case in which the Supreme Court is called upon to vindicate civil rights and to overthrow a statute invading the liberty of the individual presents issues of more than routine importance. In this case, however, a peculiar significance attaches to the prohibition:

"1. The right which Congress has invaded is the right to a free press. Few rights are more important.

"Far less serious invasions than that presented by the statute have been repeatedly condemned by the Supreme Court as inconsistent with basic rights.

"2. The restraints involved present a compelling case for judicial intervention because they seek to bar access to the political process.

"3. The injuries thus imposed are particularly serious for the defendants are an unincorporated association and an officer who seek to speak in the political arena for millions who have joined together for the precise purpose of achieving through group action what as individuals they are powerless to do."

Exclude Labor At Bogota Meet

The U. S. government is playing a leading role in the big inter-American conference at Bogota, Colombia—but labor representatives won't be there.

The reason, if you'd believe the State Dept. big-wigs:

(a) There aren't many rooms available in Bogota. (Bogota, says the World Almanac, has a population of 395,300 persons.)

(b) The State Dept. is embarrassed by "lack of funds."

The official reasons didn't impress Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who heads the CIO's Latin-American Affairs Committee. He charged that it was a sharp break-away from past inter-American confabs where U. S. labor has been represented.

The decision not to invite labor spokesmen, Potofsky said, "is all the more glaring" since the Bogota confab "will deal with important economic and social problems which deeply affect the future of the Latin-American countries and their population, including the laboring masses.

"Failure to invite labor to participate in the Bogota conference is a short-sighted policy from which our State Department is bound to suffer in prestige and influence in this hemisphere."

Tough Campaign Pays Off For UAW With 861 to 4 Win

INTERNATIONAL Harvester Co. opened a new plant in Memphis nearly a year ago.

Three weeks later the CIO Auto Workers had a dues paying local established among the employes.

Since then a majority of workers in the expanding plant have belonged to UAW.

The CIO asked for a consent election. The company refused on grounds that it was an "expanding unit." Threat of a strike, however, caused the company to change its position.

UAW Pres. Walter Reuther went to Memphis shortly before the balloting and urged workers to vote for UAW-CIO.

The vote was 861 to 4 in favor of the union.

The International Association of Machinists, which had fought CIO's organizing efforts, didn't even seek a place on the ballot.

The victory was "more significant than the vote indicates," because the plant is expected to have 4,000 employes by the end of 1948, according to Thomas Hendrix, UAW organizer, and Paul Christopher, Tennessee director of the CIO Organizing Committee.

Labor's World

WFTU Meet Scheduled At Last

AFTER long delay, the executive groups of the World Federation of Trade Unions will meet in Rome, Italy, on April 30. Sec-Treas. James B. Carey and Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross will represent CIO.

Scheduled are meetings of the nine-man executive bureau and the 22-man executive committee.

AUSTRIA's Federation of Free Trade Unions will hold its first post-war convention in Vienna during the middle of May. A large number of fraternal delegates from other nations are expected.

The Austrian Federation emerged quickly from years of Nazi dictatorship, and now has 1,250,000 members, or about 80% of the country's wage earners. They comprise 16 national unions.

Since liberation of the country from the Germans in early 1945, the unions have been governed by a three-party executive board. The convention will elect a new council. The Socialists have an overwhelming majority in the Austrian unions.

* * *

POLICIES of the British Labor Party will come up for review at the party's annual conference starting May 17. Unions form the core of the strength of the party, which won majority control of Parliament and of the government in the elections of mid-1945.

While a number of resolutions critical of the government's foreign policy have been filed, the party leadership is expected to have little difficulty in gaining endorsement of that program, according to Allied Labor News.

Sharper debate is apt to come on domestic economic problems, however. The powerful Transport & General Workers Union has demanded stronger controls to curb "exorbitant party policies" and to abandon "mere reliance on voluntary effort" to curb high profits.

AUSTRALIAN workers staged a national one-hour work stoppage March 10 to protest a police attack on picketlines established by striking railroad workers in the state of Queensland.

INDUSTRIAL production in the Soviet Union during 1948 will exceed the 1940 pre-war level by about 14%, according to a government report. One report said that 1,900 industrial plants and factories have been built or reconstructed from war time devastation since V-E Day.

CIO: What's the Rush on UMT?

CIO still is strongly opposed to peacetime compulsory military training or to a peacetime draft.

But it will review its position quickly and "act accordingly" if there's a deep turn for the worse in international relations or if open warfare is imminent.

Those views were presented to the Senate Armed Services Committee last week by two CIO officials—Nathan Cowan, legislative director, and Meyer Bernstein of the Steelworkers Union, who serves as CIO veterans' representative. Bernstein is also a top official of the liberal American Veterans Committee.

Their testimony was given to the Senate group while television cameras recorded the scene. The CIO is one of a large number of groups which have offered various opinions on UMT and an emergency draft.

SENATE hearings started soon after Pres. Truman went before a joint session of Congress to urge adoption of the measures in view of the world situation.

But Cowan told the committee that CIO stands by its convention resolution against universal military training.

"No information has been forthcoming to indicate that the dangers to the United States and our democratic ideals are any more pressing now than they were several months ago," he told the Senators.

"The CIO abhors conscription and militarism generally.

"We believe both, unless made imperative by circumstances beyond our control, are inconsistent with our republican form of government."

Cowan said CIO opposition to UMT "is based upon the belief that UMT under existing conditions is harmful in itself and will not achieve the goal expected of it."

The CIO spokesman asked that neither UMT nor the draft be passed at this time "but that rather we re-enforce our democracy on the economic and political level at home."

He called for a program to make democracy work "by reducing prices, alleviating the housing shortage, extending educational opportunities, erasing racial discrimination, providing for full employment and otherwise developing a fuller and freer life."

REBUILDING of the European nations through the Marshall Plan will be "our greatest contribution to the peace of the world . . . not UMT or the draft," Cowan predicted.

He charged that "some of the opposition to UMT and the draft is based upon a desire to weaken the United States with respect to the USSR. As patriotic Americans, we condemn this purpose."

He pointed out, however, that "military training today is more likely to resemble the confusion of 1940 and 1941 than the purposeful activity of war years," and adoption of UMT and the draft would produce "futility and waste."

Another objection cited against UMT was based on grounds that "we are challenging the menace of international communism in the one field where communism is strongest and we are weakest—that of manpower."

NOTING that the Russians have compulsory military training, the CIO witness said "no American would dare suggest that in peacetime we call up even half as many men as are today in the Red army."

Cowan said that if the aim of UMT and the draft is to impress the Russians, we could do it far better by using our manpower in productive industry than by having a million young men "playing with wooden rifles."

CIO feels that the armed forces should be permitted to increase, he added, but the armed forces have fallen down on the job of making the services more attractive for people wishing to enlist.

Prepare Records

The Oregon State CIO Council has prepared a pamphlet listing the voting records for 1947 of all State legislators. Ten key bills vital to labor are listed.

Cable Strike Over

Members of the CIO Communications Association have voted to end their strikes against four cable companies.

A contract has been signed with Western Union Cables. No agreement was made with three Intl. Telephone & Telegraph subsidiaries — Commercial Cables, Mackay Radio and All-America Cables.

GOP Aim: Security For Fewer

YOU probably think the social security system should be strengthened and improved.

Rep. Bertrand Gearhart (R.) a 58-year-old lawyer of Fresno, Calif., disagrees with you. His bill (HJR 296) to pull more than half a million workers out of the social security system is due for Senate action any week now.

A similar Gearhart bill was vetoed last year by Pres. Truman after Congress had adjourned. The same bill has already passed the House, and last week CIO urged that it be defeated in the Senate.

Frank Donner, CIO assistant counsel, told the Senate Finance Committee that the bill would pull the social-security rug out from under a large group of workers who "are among the most underprivileged in our society."

The bill would remove social security benefits from all workers whose jobs don't classify them as having a "master-and-servant" relationship under the old English common law. It would apply to a large variety of salesmen, industrial home workers, entertainers, taxi operators, loggers, journeymen tailors, owner-operators of leased trucks and other similar groups.

DONNER reminded the Senators that people in these categories "peculiarly face the risks of wage losses due to unemployment, premature death and old age."

And he said the move to limit social security comes at a time "when expansion of social security benefits is a universally-agreed upon objective in the public interest."

Efforts to remove these workers from the social security system have been underway for years. The U. S. Supreme Court put the kibosh on one such effort by ruling that the old "common law rules" don't apply to Social Security System or Internal Revenue Code coverage.

Having failed in the courts, supporters of the move—employers interested in cutting social security taxes, among them many large newspaper publishers—took their case to Congress.

Senate committee action is expected in the next few weeks.

Bill Aids Seamen To Become Citizens

A bill which would provide American citizenship for foreign seamen who served on American ships for 2½ years during the war has been introduced in the House by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D. N.Y.)

The proposed legislation, strongly supported by the CIO Maritime Union, would allow the seamen two months' credit toward naturalization for each month spent in wartime service.

Naturalization laws for seamen now require five years' service on American ships.

In proposing his bill, Celler said the move would enable the nation "to honor its wartime promises and pay for its debts to a small but heroic group of men who bring vitally needed skills to our economy."

BABY-SITTING PAC

The Oregon State PAC is utilizing all kinds of methods to get out the registrants, as these pictures, supplied by the CIO Woodworkers, demonstrate. Above is part of a cavalcade which parades evenings in the Portland area, urging people to register and taking them to the offices if they have no other transportation available. The musicians are Jerry Jones' Santa Fe Buckeroos, who got so interested in their work that they, too, registered. At the right are some of the pretty girls who volunteered to act as PAC baby sitters while mothers and fathers registered. Two of their charges, one wearing boots, are shown with them. They got a big kick out of this, did these girls. And so did PAC. James W. Lowman is Oregon state director. See story about Baby Sitters and PAC scholarships on Page 6.

WOOD UNION WINS 12½c HOURLY RISE

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THE CIO Woodworkers, first CIO union to complete major industry-wide wage talks in 1948, have won wage increases of 12½c an hour for 50,000 workers in Oregon, Washington and California.

The settlement came after negotiations dragged on into the eighth week and strike action was approved by the membership. The contracts are with six operators' associations, representing some 300 lumber operations.

The new increase was won despite a prior settlement by the AFL Lumber & Sawmill workers for 7½c an hour. They have now been offered an additional 5c to bring them into line with the CIO agreement.

With the boost, the average rate in the three states is $1.75 an hour. The increase brings the CIO union's total wage gains since V-J Day to 55c an hour.

EXPLAINING the relatively high wage level in the industry, IWA Pres. J. E. Fadling said:

"This may seem high when compared to other industries, as the lumber operators endeavored to do during negotiations, but West Coast logging is the most hazardous of any industry in the U. S., including mining, and the lumber industry is noted for its high frequency accident rate."

Meanwhile, wage talks in CIO's "Big Three" unions—Steel, Electrical and Auto—continued without visible signs of progress.

Steel: Steelworkers' Pres. Philip Murray last week met twice with U. S. Steel Pres. Benjamin Fairless. Outcome of separate negotiations with 610 steel companies will be determined by whatever settlement is reached with U. S. Steel, the industry's pattern-setter.

Auto: UAW officers have notified the Michigan Labor Mediation Board that a walkout is "impending" at the Chrysler plants in Detroit. A similar 30-day strike notice was filed last month with the U. S. Conciliation Service under the T-H Act.

Michigan's Bonine-Trip law requires the filing of a 10-day strike notice, after which the mediation board must conduct a strike vote. Twenty days after expiration of the 10-day notice the union may strike.

Electrical: The continued refusal of General Electric to consider union demands for a wage increase last week brought from UE Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald the charge that the company has taken an "indefensible position."

"GE has continued to refuse a badly-needed wage increase despite proof that workers in the electrical manufacturing industry have lost on the average of $13 a week in purchasing power since January 1945 due to rising prices."

Shipbuilding: Latest CIO international union to throw its hat into the 1948 "substantial wage increase" ring is the CIO Shipbuilding Workers, whose contracts expire or open for wage review in June.

IUMSWA Pres. John Green said the union would also seek equal pay for equal work, health and welfare insurance plans, a guaranteed annual wage, liberalization of shift differentials and paid variations ranging from one week after one year to three weeks after five years.

The bargaining program was approved by the union's general executive board. Green pointed out that while shipyard wages have gone up 34% since June 1941, living costs have gone up 61.38% in the same period.

Farm Equipment: While some of the nation's big manufacturers were stalling on negotiations, Intl. Harvester didn't even bother to do that. Company negotiators just refused to appear on the day talks were scheduled to begin.

"To excuse their absence," said Farm Equipment Workers Harvester Council Director Gerald Fielde "they offered the far-fetched explanation that 84 out of the 40,000 Harvester workers in our union were on a so-called stoppage."

The Harvester contracts expired May 22.

FE, Fielde said, "is prepared to enter into negotiations on a corporation-wide basis whenever Harvester is willing to enter such negotiations in good faith."

Until the company changes its attitude, FE locals are being urged to press for bargaining sessions with their own managements, he said.

Meanwhile, an FE strike at the giant Caterpillar Tractor Co. plant in Peoria, Ill. began as the contract expired April 7. Some 16,000 workers are employed there.

The company, largest tractor manufacturer in the country, broke off negotiations March 15 after the union refused a no-wage increase contract. Reason given for the refusal to negotiate was that union officials had not signed Taft-Hartley affidavits.

Transit: A long-delayed showdown with New York City's privately and city-owned transportation lines shaped up as CIO Transport Workers on six private bus lines struck and pressure for wage hikes on the other lines increased.

CIO Pres. Murray wired his support to the strikers, saying:

"Today the 42,000 transport workers in the private and public lines in New York City are grossly underpaid . . . As president of CIO I want you to inform your membership that the national CIO will give full support in the campaign to achieve this goal."

The union claims its 42,000 transit workers earn 15 to 20c less than those in every large city in the country.

Union Bug Bit Engine, Too

A deputy sheriff in South St. Paul, Minn., was trying to hand out printed copies of a court order restraining picketing, to a group of striking CIO Packinghouse Workers who had stopped a switch engine.

"It hasn't a union bug (label) on it," remarked one picket.

"It doesn't mean anything to me."

"We thought you wouldn't want an AFL label on anything connected with a CIO strike," kidded a sarcastic company attorney who accompanied the deputy.

"But, you don't understand labor," retorted another striker. "You don't think that engine crew belongs to CIO, do you?"

The switching engine crew, members of railroad brotherhoods, had been refusing to cross the CIO picket lines to haul out refrigerator cars loaded with meat.

ASK $100,000,000 FOR NEW SHIPS

AN intensive drive by the CIO Maritime and Shipbuilding unions to bring the Government to realize the need of a stronger merchant marine bore fruit last week.

Upon recommendation of Pres. Truman, Secy. of Navy John L. Sullivan asked the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee to authorize $100,000,000 in new merchant marine ships. He spoke of the "vital importance of the merchant marine to the efficient functioning of the armed services in event of another emergency." He noted the lack of "commercial passenger-type ships" and stated that even with the "maximum utilization" of ships now on hand, "we would be still deficient in necessary troop-lift capacity by about 50%."

In answer to suggestions that conversion of cargo ships would answer the problem, he declared "conversions are time-consuming and costly and they are made at the sacrifice of cargo ships themselves."

He also noted what has been pointed to often by CIO spokesmen. "The continuing attrition of skilled mechanics in the shipbuilding trades is a matter of serious concern," he said. "Unless employment of personnel actually engaged in the construction of new ships in both naval and private shipyards can be increased to and maintained at the approximate level of between 80,000 and 100,000 workers, the demands for a future emergency cannot be met."

The proposal of $100,000,000 was increased from the $39,000,000 specified in Truman's original budget message. It was raised on the advice of a special Cabinet committee of Secs. Harriman, Forrestal, Schwellenbach and Snyder.

Hoyt Haddock has been the main representative of the NMU and IUMSWA in pushing for a stronger merchant marine. Both Pres. John Green, of IUMSWA, and Joseph Curran, of NMU, have made personal appearances before Congressional and Government groups.

More Children's Bureaus Sought

A children's bureau in every state and every large community in the country was the major recommendation made last week at a White House conference on planning for children and youth, attended by some 250 state officials and youth experts.

"Planning for the 1950 conference will be built upon an awareness that in our children is a stronger potential of power than lies in the power of atomic energy," the conference stated.

"In these children are the statesmen, the scientists, the artist who will mold the world of tomorrow. We cannot afford to limit the provisions for children because of funds—the service is an investment in the future, not an expense."

Union Resentment Wins Reinstatement

May Morgan is one of several hundred CIO union stewards at Macy's, one of New York City's giant department stores. She works in the corset department and belongs to Local 1-S, United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes.

Several weeks ago Miss Morgan was suspended abruptly for engaging in "union activities" on the job, or specifically for accepting money for the union from a member.

Because it seemed a simple enough matter to Macy officials to suspend May Morgan for a week for this "offense," they got the surprise of their lives later when 200 Macy stewards gathered outside the store's executive offices to protest her suspension.

Taken aback at the resentment expressed by the stewards, management not only agreed to lift Miss Morgan's suspension but also to meet later with stewards to take up piles of unsettled grievances.

Tax Cut Gives Millionaires $33 an Hour Pay Raise

By STANLEY RUTTENBERG

Associate Director, CIO Dept. of Research & Education

AND what of the new tax bill? What does it mean to the average U.S. wage earner?

Over the veto of the President of the United States, the Congress has overwhelmingly passed the 1948 tax reduction bill, cutting taxes and reducing the federal revenue by $4,800,000,000.

The CIO opposed the passage of this bill. (The CIO also opposed the two tax reduction bills of last year which Congress was unable to enact over the President's veto.)

The CIO opposed the bill not because tax relief isn't vitally needed, but because this measure gives the wrong kind of tax relief. It gives major relief to the wealthy—those best able to pay as well as additional relief to special privileged groups.

Example: Married couples can divide their income in half before paying tax upon it. This kind of provision aids, mainly, those with incomes ranging between $10,000 and $100,000 a year.

The CIO has long insisted that a proper tax relief be granted. We have insisted that exemptions be raised to $3000 for a married couple, $1500 for a single individual and $500 for each dependent. This kind of tax relief would help ease the terrific strain which inflation has placed upon the income of a workingman and his family.

(To the unwary observer, it would appear that Congress, in setting a $600 exemption for dependents, had done better than the CIO asks. But, under the Congressional Bill, the average family—husband, wife and two minor children—would get a total exemption of $2400. Under CIO's plan, the exemption would be $4000.)

THE CIO realizes that the federal government must maintain a high level of revenue in order to meet its budget obligations. We have proposed that the tax upon corporations be increased by the imposition of an excess and undistributed profits tax, along with needed basic reforms in our tax structure.

However, the Congress did not accept these recommendations made by the CIO and passed a tax bill which gives major relief to those best able to pay.

Beginning May 1, new withholding tax rates will go into effect.

You can expect a slight reduction in the amount of taxes being withheld. To a married person with two dependents earning $3000 a year, this new tax law means the equivalent of a 4½c per hour wage increase.

This reduction will be helpful, but it should be remembered that a $10,000 a year man has a tax cut the equivalent of a 24c an hour wage increase, the $25,000 a year man gets $1.46 an hour increase, the $100,000 a year man gets $8 an hour while the individual making $1,000,000 a year gets the tax equivalent of $33.43 an hour increase in wages.

ALREADY there is talk, because of the armament program and the foreign relief program, that the federal government should secure increased revenue to make up for the reduction resulting from this new tax law. Rep. Knutson, (R., Minn.), chairman of the House Ways and Mean Committee which originally wrote the tax bill, is now talking about examining the excise taxes and even considering the possibility of a sales tax to recoup revenue losses.

This problem should have been considered before the present tax law was enacted.

So, Congress has passed a "tax relief" bill in an election year. It has passed the bill over the President's veto—as it was unable to do twice last year—because this is an election year and last year wasn't.

Heavy expenses are ahead for the Government—the Marshall Plan, for example. It's not likely that a vote-conscious Congress will increase income taxes. And it is almost positive that Congress will not impose excess profits taxes to halt the present exorbitant profits which are hitting hardest at the pocketbooks of wage-earners.

No, it appears that Congress will consider imposing excise and sales taxes—levies which will make economic life more difficult for the vast majority of citizens.

In other words, Congress will be trying to make up the revenue it has lost by taking care of the wealthy. It will attempt to make up that loss by slapping on excise and sales taxes, which hit hardest at those least able to pay.

Promising Crop on Our Side of the Curtain

Hoffman Speeds ERP; It Pains Chi Trib

WITH the appointment of Paul Gray Hoffman as administrator of the Economic Co-operation Administration, the Marshall Plan began to swing into full operation last week.

Hoffman, president of the Studebaker Corp. and employer of thousands of CIO Auto Workers, is selecting his assistants and staff from the cream of the Government and public lists.

P. G. HOFFMAN

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has authorized the expenditure of the first $1 billion in ERP funds.

Pres. Truman, often accused of being a bit on the dull side when it comes to public relations, certainly wasn't that in the appointment of Hoffman. The President signed the papers for the appointment while sitting in the reviewing stand during Washington's annual Army Day parade. Hoffman had just returned from Japan, where he had been part of a committee studying occupation problems.

He was in Honolulu on his way home when a cablegram arrived from Truman asking him to take the ERP berth. "I just didn't know how to say no," he told reporters in Washington. "The main reason that I couldn't turn the job down is because it may be an opportunity to put up a fight for peace. I think it does give the chance to develop peace in the world."

Hoffman, who will be 58 on Apr. 26, has seven children: Hallock, Peter, Donold, Robert Lathrop, Barbara and Kiriki. He rose from a salesman (1911) to head of the Studebaker Corp. A registered Republican, he lives in South Bend, Ind.

MEANWHILE, our old opposition paper—none other than the Chicago Tribune—raved against ERP. Rep. Fred E. Busbey (R., Ill.), a fervent Tribuner, took 6½ inches of the Congressional Record to have reprinted this editorial from Col. Robert Rutherford McCormick's modestly named World's Greatest Newspaper:

"Of the 61 Republican Congressman who voted against the folly and extortion of the Marshall Plan, more than half came from six Middle Western States. (The Tribune then listed the "heroes.").

"These men spoke with sanity against the panic that gripped most of the rest of Washington and the Atlantic seaboard. They undoubtedly expressed the will of the large majority of the people in the pro-American section of the country . . .

"One thing Mr. Truman and Mr. Marshall and all their bleeding heart and anti-American followers can never plead. That is that any of their plans were frustrated . . .

"Never in the history of our country have its affairs been in the hands of such fools and knaves."

Strange to say, no one in official Washington (except perhaps Mr. Busbey and Sen. Curley Brooks (R., Ill.), Col. McCormick's alter ego in the U. S. Senate, paid the least attention or even got mad at Col. McCormick.

MEANWHILE, CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey, who went to Europe to attempt to sell the Marshall Plan to labor through the World Federation of Trade Unions, accused Italian Communists of misleading the people on ERP.

Carey made his charges on "Labor Speaks," over Station WOR, New York, and several other stations, in an address before the national conference of the League for Industrial Democracy and in a broadcast piped to Italy.

Said Carey: "Since my return to this country, it has become increasingly apparent that the Communists are trying to attach political conditions to ERP, a procedure that we have steadily rejected.

"Our sole interest in ERP in relation to Italy is the welfare of the Italian workers—the welfare of all Italy.

"The Communists who oppose ERP are disregarding the needs of the Italian people. We are neither surprised nor shocked by the deceits of Giuseppe Di Vittorio (of the Italian Confederation of Labor.). He is a Communist. It is to the Communist interest to make it appear that I represent interests other than those of 6 million CIO workers and their 14 million dependents. Di Vittori doesn't believe his own lies. He knows he cannot speak for the people of the U. S."

Senate Group May Act Soon On Poll Tax

CIVIL rights bills in Congress have already kicked up a "Southern revolt" in the Democratic party — but they haven't yet added any new laws to the statute books.

Action is expected soon, however, on the anti-polltax bill, which would end levying of special taxes on voters in seven Southern states in connection with federal primaries or elections.

The Senate Rules Committee, after four days of hearings, is expected to report soon on the Bender Hill (HR 29), which was passed by the House last year while the Southern polltax bloc was sleeping at the switch.

A Senate Rules sub-Committee gave the bill a 3-0 endorsement, and similar approval is expected from the full committee. While liberals have crossed their fingers, Congressional Republicans have indicated they'll give the green light to the anti-polltax proposals.

THE GOP majority, together with northern liberals in the Democratic party, have sufficient votes for the two-thirds majority necessary to pass a cloture rule limiting debate in the Senate.

If "deals" or changes in attitude swing any substantial number of Senators into voting against cloture, Southern Democrats from the polltax states will enter a filibuster to talk the measure into the grave.

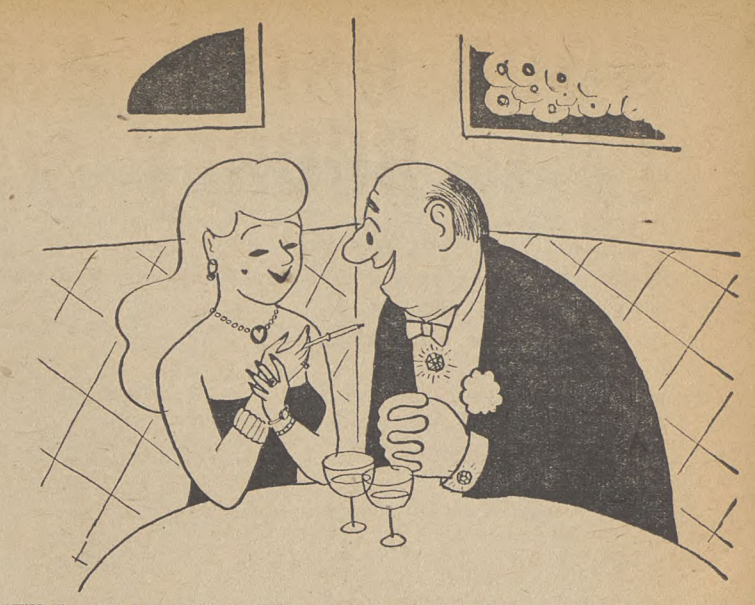
Some Washington observers believe the issue will come up for action in the Senate during April or first part of May. Legislation has been before Congress several times in recent years, but has always been allowed to die.

The Senate Republican Policy Committee said last week that anti-lynching bill would be given priority over anti-polltax and FEPC measures.

Reuther Demands Aid To Hospitals

CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther had called for a special session of the Michigan legislature to meet the problem of the hospital bed shortage in Detroit and in the state through public financing.

In a letter to Gov. Kim Sigler, Reuther urged that the Legislature not be allowed to adjourn "until a forward-looking tax structure has been set up so that no citizen need suffer for lack of a hospital bed when he is sick and so that other neglected social welfare programs can be financed adequately."



"I'll do anything if you'll be mine, dearest! I'll even lower my workers' salaries."

Ball Bill Seen Aiding "Short-Sighted" Bosses

THERE'S little that's good and much that's bad in the Ball Bill, which would seriously amend the present Wage-Hour Law.

That conclusion was reached by representatives of numerous CIO unions who met in Washington last week to discuss pending wage-hour legislation.

CIO strongly favors the Thomas-McCormack Bill (S. 2062), which would broaden wage-hour coverage and lift the minimum wage from its present 40c level to 75c an hour.

Attending the CIO meeting were spokesmen for CIO's five biggest unions—steel, auto, electrical, clothing and textile—as well as from other affiliates whose members are most seriously affected by the wage-hour law.

After the meeting, Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, in a statement issued for the group, declared:

"An analysis of the Ball Bill reveals that suggestions advanced over a long period of years by short-sighted employers for undermining the Wage-Hour law have been incorporated on a wholesale basis into Senator Ball's proposed measure."

THE Thomas-McCormack Bill, on the other hand, "is in conformity with the pledges of both major parties to strengthen and improve the Wage-Hour law, and it should be speedily adopted by the Congress," Potofsky said.

CIO's views will be set forth in detail at Senate Labor sub-committee hearings which open in Washington April 19. Spokesmen for a number of unions will testify in support of the Thomas-McCormack proposals and against the Ball Bill.

The 50-page Ball Bill rewrites the entire wage-hour law, and weakens almost every provision for coverage and enforcement. It would lift the minimum pay rate under the law from the present 40c to 60c, but would provide "escalator" apparatus to send the minimum down to 50c or, under more difficult procedure, up to 70c.

The Potofsky statement said it's difficult to believe that Senator Ball, "whose anti-labor record is notorious, does not have as his objective the destruction of the Wage-Hour law which he claims to wish to improve."

POTOFSKY recalled that both Democratic and Republican platforms have stressed the need for improving wage-hour standards.

But, the statement charged, "Senator Ball would return us to a pre-1938 status, rather than prepare the country for complex industrial and economic problems of the years ahead.

"The total effect of this bill is to leave the working people of America in a worse position with respect to wage-hour protection than they are in today."

Bad effects of the Ball bill would first be felt by unorganized workers who lack union-contract protection, Potofsky predicted. But eventually the Ball proposal might affect the standards in union plants as well, he said.

The CIO leaders listed a number of specific complaints against the Ball bill.

They charged it would remove wage-hour protection from many groups of workers now covered; that it would force hundreds of lawsuits until clear interpretations of the law were reached; would permit regional differentials, long desired by sweatshop and "runaway employers"; and would "introduce sheer chaos" into efforts of labor and management to reach clear policies on payment of overtime wages.

Extra: All About Wage-Hour Bills

"Operation Wage-Hour"—a popular leaflet on new wage-hour bills—is ready for distribution by CIO.

It's a reprint of the full-page story in the April 5 CIO News covering high spots of the Thomas-McCormack Bill (which CIO favors) and the Ball Bill (which CIO opposes).

Copies of the leaflet—No. 159—may be ordered from CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Job Applications Reach Seven-Month High

Applications to the U. S. Employment Service for jobs hit a seven-month peak in January. Applications totaled 652,750, or 30% more than in December, while job placements fell 17%.

Most of the unemployed were women; veterans were next.

That Income Tax Cut

A couple of our best friends told us we'd be extremely stupid to come out flat-footedly in opposition to the income tax reduction which Congress recently put into effect.

We were told that nobody likes to pay taxes and that everybody likes a tax reduction. With that we readily agree, but——

There's another side to the picture and we might as well take a look at it while anticipating a reduction in the amount withheld from our pay.

The U.S. piled up a huge debt during the war—and we think it's good business to retire as much of it as possible during the present boom.

Then there's going to be that piece of magic known as paying for ERP and military aid with reduced Federal revenue.

Furthermore, we're a bit suspicious about the whole thing.

This is April—and the November elections aren't far away. It's smart politics to reduce taxes just before an election even if they have to be hiked again soon after the ballots are counted.

Rep. Knutson of the House Ways and Means Committee has announced his group is "considering" the possible imposition of new excise taxes and perhaps a federal sales tax.

Maybe we're too skeptical, but if the average individual finds late this year or early next year that his total tax load hasn't been reduced we're going to say, "We told you so."

Just As Predicted

Events are proving that CIO opponents of the third party in 1948 weren't talking through their hats several months ago when they said the new party would serve the liberal forces of the nation poorly.

The third party lads in about a half dozen states have announced they're running candidates in opposition to men and women who are listed by the CIO as friends of labor.

In California, candidates of the Independent Progressive Party intend to oppose Reps. Helen Gahagan Douglas, Chet Hollifield and Cecil King, all Democrats.

PAC Director Jack Kroll said the California situation "substantiates what is already evident—that the 1948 third party movement is a disruptive influence which could result in the elimination of many progressives in the present Congress."

You have to understand only mathematics—not politics—to know that if the liberal-progressive bloc is split badly the next Congress will be worse, from labor's standpoint, than the one which enacted the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Big Backlog

Back in 1947 B.D. (before Denham) the National Labor Relations Board had become so bogged down with unfinished business that it could get around to conducting elections only months after petitions for certification were filed.

The situation became so bad that the CIO Organizing Committee started seeking recognition without NLRB action and filed only a small portion of the unfair labor practices charges it would have had NLRB not been so far behind schedule.

NLRB got out of the Congressional doghouse and became an appropriations pet when T-H was enacted—but the "backlog" situation is as bad as ever.

At the end of February the Board had more than 9000 cases awaiting disposition. Many of these involved union shop elections.

It looks like NLRB is making progress backwards.

Well, Where Do We Go From Here?

Passage of European Recovery Legislation Was The Beginning, Not The End

By ALLAN L. SWIM

SOME of the folks who had been thumping the drums for the European Recovery Program breathed deep sighs of relief last week, sat back and relaxed, and said, "Well, that's that."

The ERP Bill had been passed by both houses of Congress and had been signed by the President. Everything was lovely.

But was it?

Of course not. A major step in the right direction had been taken, but there were still important steps ahead.

One was the creation of an effective ERP administrative machine.

Another was the safeguarding of our already-strained economy, which will be strained further by the foreign aid and rehabilitation program.

MAKE no mistake about it, those who administer ERP will be like men walking a tight wire in a high wind.

They will need the best possible "balancing pole" that can be provided. They will need the advice and guidance of representatives of every important segment of American life.

This means, of course, that organized labor, which has played a strong role in the creation of ERP, should have a voice in its administration.

And the top administrator, Paul Hoffman, must attempt to make ERP representative of the best thinking of all groups—business, industry, labor, agriculture—and not just of the group he represents.

THE CIO months ago firmly stated its position in opposition to use of ERP to meddle in the internal affairs of other nations.

Because of this, the CIO has been accused by those of the extreme left of engaging in meaningless double-talk.

How, they ask, can CIO take such a position when one of the objectives of ERP is to halt the spread of Communism in Europe?

The answer is simple:

The CIO wants no nation—neither the United States nor Russia—to engage in the type of meddling that makes it impossible for a country to determine its own political future.

NOBODY can tell today how much of an impact ERP will make on the economy of the United States. It's a cinch, however, that it will be great.

Material that could be used at home will be shipped abroad. Every American—be he a corporation executive or a mill worker—will have to pay a portion of the cost.

There will be shortages. There will be price increases. There will be "gray market" operations.

There will be those who will attempt to feather their own financial nests with exorbitant profits resulting from the "short supply" situation.

We must guard against permitting these things to throw our economy more out of balance than it is today.

THE government, through Congressional action, should take whatever steps are necessary to keep the United States running smoothly while it is pouring billions into other countries.

If price and material controls are necessary, then they should be imposed.

We don't like government regulation any more than any other group does, but we believe that regulation sometimes becomes necessary in an emergency.

Sure, we'd like to see the whole thing handled on a voluntary basis, with no group taking advantage of the situation.

But what happened after price control was killed convinces us that the desire for profits often outweighs the fear of uncontrolled inflation.

Now They Want To Shout 'Rinso White!' At You

SOAP operas, singing commercials, symphony concerts and labor speeches go out from the country's radio stations to the public with a maximum of 50,000-watt power.

Some people say that any juice in a radio transmitter is electricity wasted. Others think stations should be even "bigger and better."

The matter came up for heated discussion in Washington last week at hearings of a Senate Interstate Commerce sub-Committee. Up for study is a bill by Sen. Edwin Johnson (D., Colo.), which would set up a 50,000-watt ceiling for radio station power and break down "clear channels"—the exclusive use of certain wavelengths by certain licensed stations throughout the country.

OPPOSED to the bill are a variety of radio groups. One faction favors a set-up of 20 stations licensed to operate on 750,000 watt power—enough, presumably, to blow a singing commercial into the weakest radio set in the most remote section of the country.

Spokesmen for this group complain that large, though sparsely settled, sections of the country receive weak, unstable radio service which licensing of the big stations would overcome. The opposition argues that 20 such super-stations would be a powerful propaganda medium to blanket the entire country, and would drive numerous smaller stations out of business.

Another group wants the clear channels preserved. They argue that a change in policy will upset both domestic and international practices, and permit even more radio confusion than now exists.

MEANWHILE, officials of the CIO Auto Workers appeared at a hearing before the Federal Communications Commission to ask licensing to operate a full-time radio station in Detroit.

The UAW is opposed by WCAR, Pontiac, Mich., which now operates on 1130 kilocycles, the wavelength sought by the auto union in its application. The union was represented by Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, Education Director Victor Reuther and Morris Novik, UAW radio consultant.

The UAW, they said, has guaranteed loans up to $300,000 and stock purchases up to $160,000 to underwrite costs of the station. Stock will be made available to other unions in the Detroit area, and the station, if licensed, would sell only enough time to cover operating expenses.

UNION officials said the station would not be used for "collective bargaining" but as part of its educational work. Free time will be offered for religious broadcasts, and all viewpoints will be given time to discuss controversial issues.

If successful in getting the license, the UAW would have the country's second labor AM radio station. WCFL, operated by the Chicago Federation of Labor, AFL, has been on the air for several years.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP By YOMEN

"Today's prices show how silly we were to worry about the grain market dip."

No Wonder That He Knew The Score

YOU come across guys like him about once in a blue moon—and even then it knocks the props out from under you.

He does the unexpected in the most casual manner. He doesn't behave at all like you'd expect him to.

You say to yourself, "I wish there were more like him," and you mean it.

You wonder if he'll ever be a "big shot," an industrial leader, a business tycoon—and you wonder, too, if he won't pop up unexpectedly somewhere as a union official.

It keeps you guessing.

THIS guy we're talking about isn't an important man—if you measure importance in the managerial field by the size of the plant you operate or the number of workers you employ.

Chances are he'd get in the doghouse with higher-ups in his organization if we used his name, so we'll just call him Joe.

The small, new plant that Joe was to manage began operating during the midst of an intense CIO organizational drive.

His plant wasn't placed high on the list, but the organizers planned to get around to it in due time.

Finally they did.

MANAGEMENT opposition was the rule—not the exception—in this town, and sometimes it got pretty strong.

There had been considerable head-cracking a few years before and some management groups still considered a good beating was proper treatment for CIO representatives.

So, the organizers figured they might run into a bit of trouble when they started talking unionism to Joe's employes.

They talked. Nothing violent happened—but something unexpected did.

Joe telephoned the man heading the CIO drive.

Joe came right to the point: "Say, I hear you're trying to organize my employes."

"That's right," said the CIO man.

"Having any luck?" Joe asked.

"Yeah, we're making progress."

"Well, get in touch with me when a majority signs up. I don't believe in stalling around, dealing with the National Labor Relations Board."

"You mean you'll recognize the union as bargaining agent if I can show you signed cards from a majority of the workers?"

"Sure," Joe replied—and that was that.

WITHIN a short time the CIO had signed up a comfortable majority, and Joe was informed of the fact.

OK, he said. And he recognized the union.

The thing had moved along so rapidly that nobody in the CIO group had given serious thought to concrete contract proposals. So they were caught off base when Joe said:

"Well, let's start negotiating."

He was told the union would get around to that in a day or two.

"Well," said Joe, "be sure to put in a closed shop clause. We'll talk about severance pay, too—and let's have good but fair pay rates."

THERE was no doubt about it—Joe was an unusual guy. He signed a good contract with the union in short order.

The story of his behavior has been told time and again by those who know it.

Near the end of each telling somebody asks why Joe behaved as he did. Well, Joe explained that to a curious CIO representative. He said:

"Oh, heck, I know what's needed in a good contract. I was a member of the Newspaper Guild—up in New York—for quite a while."

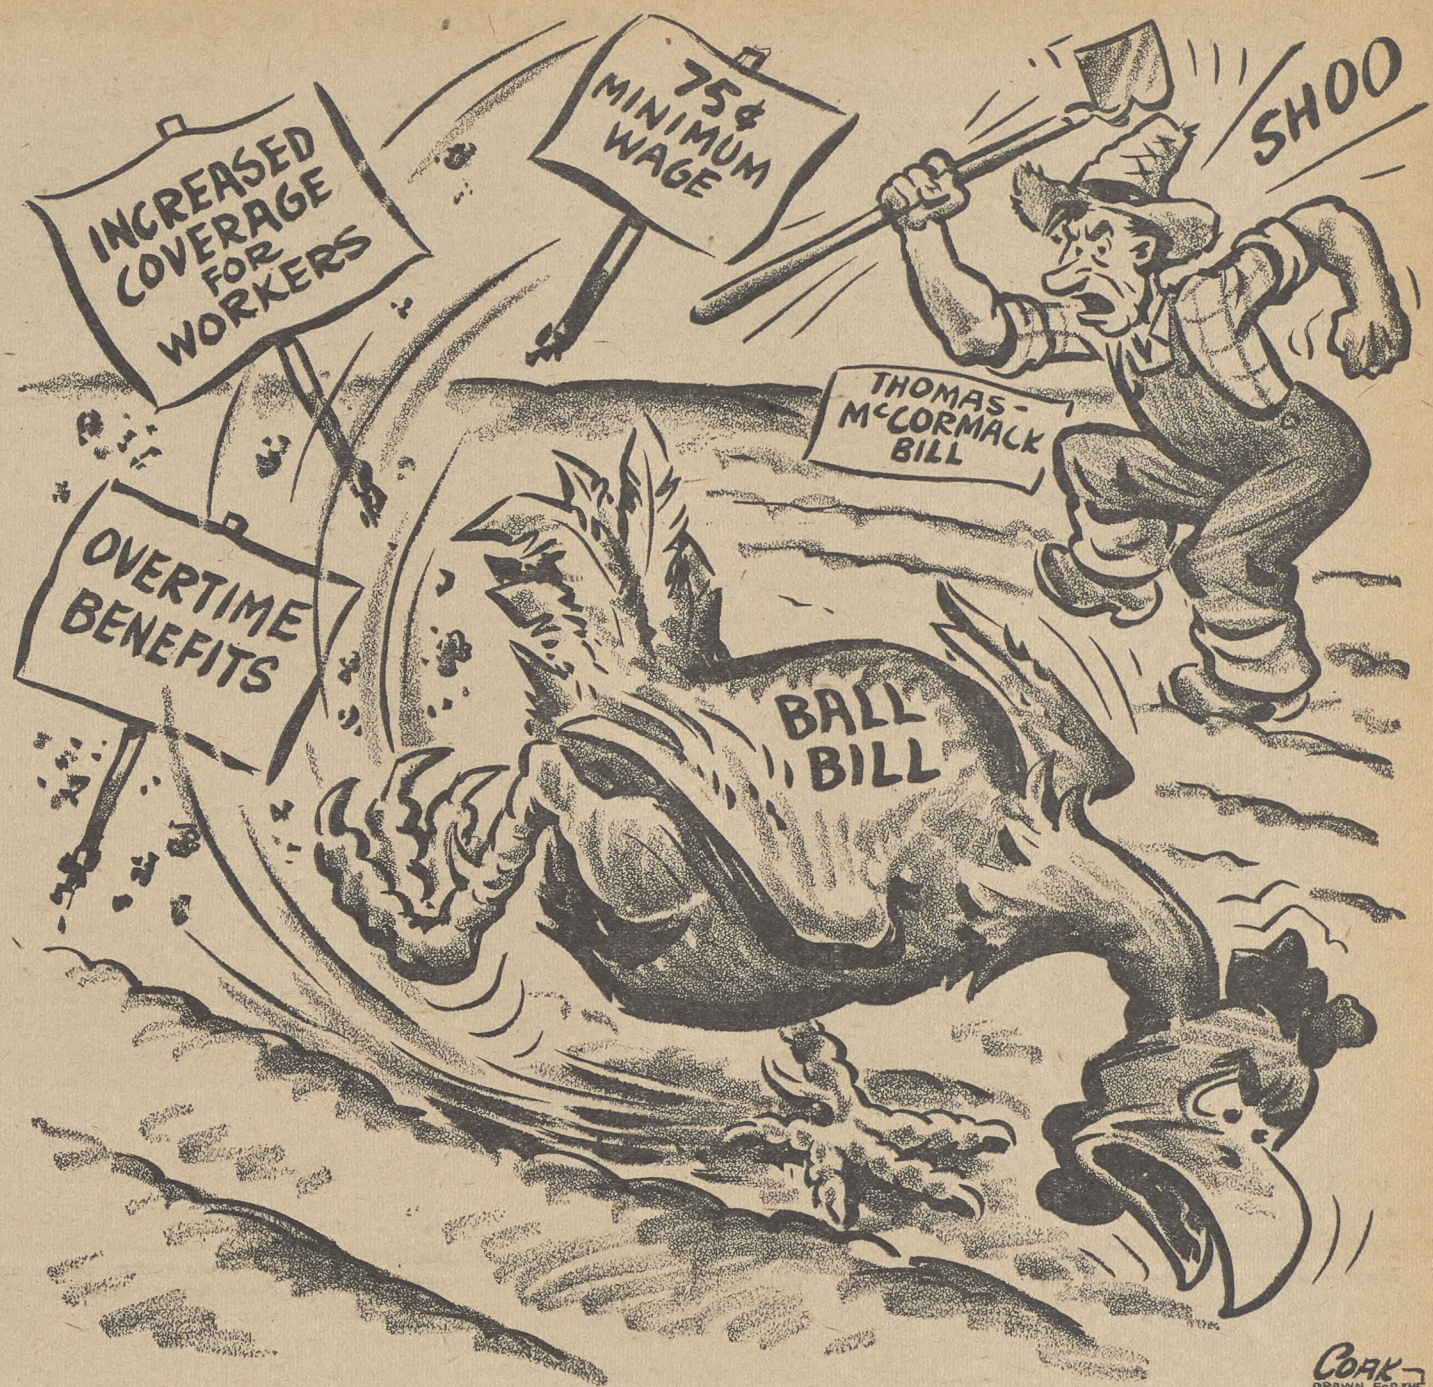
A FOUL DEED



Salome: She Just Phones And Phones And Phones

By TED OGAR, Editor, Michigan CIO News

THERE'S an old song that says:

There's no one with enaurance
Like the man who sells insurance

but then the guy who wrote that had never met Salome Williams.

Salome is a secretary in the Detroit office of Auto Workers' Pres. Walter P. Reuther and is known far and wide as one of the hardest-hitting opponents of the If Once You Do Not Succeed to Hell With It philosophy.

Last Saturday she took a telephone call from a man who said he had heard the union had lost an NLRB election by two votes in a Kansas City spring plant and hoped it wasn't so and could she tell him for sure.

Salome said she didn't know but if he would wait just a second she would find out.

SO SHE CALLED the office of Vice-Pres. John Livingston and told his secretary that she had a man waiting on the line who heard the UAW had lost a spring plant election in Kansas City and he hoped it wasn't so and could Mr. Livingston tell him for sure.

Mr. Livingston couldn't help, his secretary said, because he was out of town, but Ed Cote, West Side regional co-director might know.

So being a courteous secretary, Salome asked the man to wait another second and she called Mr. Cote's office and he was busy so she told his secretary that she had a man waiting on the line and she wanted to know what happened in Kansas City and the secretary said she didn't know but Mr. Cote was free now and she could ask him and she did, but Mr. Cote said he could not help out, but why didn't she call Mike Lacey, East Side regional co-director, because he might know about spring plants.

Salome went back to the other phone and told the man she didn't know yet but if he would wait another second she could maybe find out for sure and the man was real nice and said he would wait.

So Salome called Mr. Lacey's office and told his secretary that the nice man had been waiting a long time now and could Mr. Lacey let him know whether we did lose by two votes or not and the secretary said she was sorry but Mr. Lacey was out, but maybe his assistant, Bill Fagan, might know and she would switch the call to his office.

Mr. Fagan was in but he was busy on another line so Salome asked the secretary did she know how the vote came out in Kansas City because the nice man had been waiting a long time and it would be nice to let him know quick so that if it wasn't so he could be happy, but the secretary said she didn't know and Salome would have to wait for Mr. Fagan and that he would probably know because he knew about spring plants.

SO SALOME was worried when she went back to the other phone and told the man that she was sorry that it was taking a long time but she would know right away and could he wait another second and he said nicely that he would.

Then Mr. Fagan's secretary came back on the other line and she said Mr. Fagan was holding his other call and would talk to her and she asked him did he know whether we did lose by two votes and he said very nicely he did not know but would know right away because he was waiting on another line for Walter Reuther's secretary who was checking for him and would let him know.

So Salome told him who she was, but he was awfully nice about it anyhow—From Michigan CIO News.

Ah, Ha!

Attention, House Un-American Affairs Committee:

Recently you questioned a State Dept. employe concerning his loyalty because he had a cousin-in-law suspected of disloyalty.

Well, here's a hot one—Oil Workers Legislative Rep. W. A. (Bill) Hanscom, roaring with laughter over the silliness of the House Committee, says that Dr. Edward A. Condon, who has been pot-shot at by the committee, married an Oregon girl whose sister married Hanscom's wife's brother. And Hanscom, because of the chain of marriages, had the Condons to his Washington home for dinner.

(Editor's note: Hanscom visited the offices of the CIO News the other day.)

IN OREGON, IT'S BABY SITTERS!

(See Picture on Page 1)

YOU can't register, lady, because you haven't a baby sitter?

PAC'll provide you one!

You can't register because you have no transportation facilities?

PAC'll provide a bus!

And that isn't all the Oregon State PAC is doing in the State's registration period which ends April 20.

State PAC Dir. James W. Lowman reports:

"We have underway a card-mailing campaign. Communications to all locals request that they forward to the State CIO office a list of members and addresses. We check the lists at the county court houses to see whether the members are properly registered. Cards are then sent to all not registered.

"The checking is a considerable job. We have received excellent cooperation from the auxiliaries, both in Multnomah County (Portland) and other counties in the state.

THE POSTMAN doesn't have to ring twice for the Oregon State PAC. Here is the postcard which is sent out to CIO members who are not registered.

(Dick Fagan, columnist for the Oregon Journal, noted that "a survey made of the Vanport district by CIO-PAC showed only 9.5% of the voters registered, only 16% in St. Johns Woods, only 13% in University Homes," all in the Portland area.)

"Another campaign we have under way is our parade campaign. The parades are held in the evening between 5 and 8. The purpose is to stimulate interest in good citizenship. They are held in St. Johns Woods, St. Johns Proper, Guilds Lake Housing Project, Columbia Villa, University Homes, Fessenden Homes, Vanport City and other adjacent areas.

"The parades consist of a truck, orchestra, bus, public address system and autos. The bus provides free transportation for all those wishing to register. The truck is for orchestra or band, the members of which donate their time and talents.

(The Jerry Jones Santa Fe Buckaroos are participating in many of the parades. In St. Johns Wood one evening they played for the parade. When they reached the registration place, the Buckeroos were the first to register.)

"Two parades were held in St. Johns Woods. The first night, the entire parade was held in pouring rain. Seventy-nine registered to vote. On the second day, 233 registered. We have succeeded in getting the American Veterans' Committee, American Federation of Musicians (AFL), Democratic and Republican Central committees and community clubs to cooperate."

The motto for the PAC campaign: "Operation Good Citizenship."

Portland newspapers have carried a number of display stories on the success of the PAC drive.

Murray To

Text of letter from CIO Pres. Philip Murray to three officers of the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council—Pres. William S. Lawrence, Vice Pres. Earnest L. Messinger and Secy. Philip M. Connelly.

I am in receipt of your telegram protesting the action of Mr. Jack Kroll, director of CIO PAC, in authorizing the establishment of a California PAC.

The authority of Dir. Kroll and the Natl. PAC to direct and supervise the activities of state and local political action committees has been established on numerous occasions by resolutions and pronouncements of CIO conventions, and the CIO Executive Board. In proceeding in California, Dir. Kroll is merely discharging his duty to implement national CIO policy in the field of political action.

POSNER

You state that your wire is "in the interest of preserving political effectiveness of labor in California." I heartily join in the sentiment that the political effectiveness of labor in California should be preserved. The only way this can be done under our democratic CIO processes is for you, as officials and officers of the Los Angeles CIO Council, to support, without reservation, national CIO policies in the political field as recently promulgated by our National Executive Board.

As president of the CIO it is my constitutional duty to take a forthright stand in support of national CIO policies as established by our board and to implement these policies to the best of my abilities. It is likewise your equal duty as officers of a local council to comply with CIO policy as officially declared by the Natl. Board.

The processes by which the CIO arrived at its decisions as to political activity were truly democratic in every sense of the word. It is not my disposition to assume any dictatorial attitude

Wis. Nixes MacA.; Mil. OKs PAC Mayor

THE Japanese, who worry a lot about "face," are looking askance at Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

F. P. ZEIDLER

Is this the Invincible One? they are asking in their soft voices. Is this the boss of our country? Can he be the same man who took a thumping (or the Japanese word for "thumping") last week in the Wisconsin Republican Presidential Primary?

And what a thumping The Man took. Many political writers hung their heads in shame, for hadn't advance signs pointed to a MacArthur victory? But, you don't win on straw votes and men left on bases. You gotta get the votes. Harold A. Stassen, from the neighboring state of Minnesota, got the Wisconsin votes; MacA. got a lot less; Tom Dewey, who carried Wisconsin's presidential primaries in 1940 and 1944, snared nary a delegate this time.

Probably the most embarrassed gent—other than MacArthur—in this situation was one William Randolph Hearst, the San Simeon Sage. His Hearst papers had thumped and thumped and thumped for MacArthur. There were times when the whole front page seemed to be one mass of MacArthur medals. Marion Davies, a movie star back in the long ago silent days, was engaged by The Chief to write a profound series about The Man. Even that didn't help.

GOOD news from Wisconsin was the election of Frank P. Zeidler as the PAC-indorsed mayor of Milwaukee. Thus, Milwaukee, long a stronghold of the Socialist party, returns to the fold, for Zeidler is a Socialist.

Zeidler, 35, is brother of Carl J. Zeidler, who left the mayorship during the war to serve in the merchant marine, where he died for his country.

The new mayor, a surveyor, is a member of Local 54, AFL Technical Engineers. He defeated Henry S. Reuss by 25,000 votes.

His platform: municipal aid for a housing program; an integrated mass transportation system; a municipal parking authority; blight elimination and a sound financial policy.

Daniel Hoan, Socialist mayor of Milwaukee for years, had built for the city a reputation of sound financial stability. Now a Democrat, he was defeated in the primary and urged his backers to vote for Zeidler, whose brother defeated him five years ago.

Scholarships

The Oregon CIO-PAC is offering scholarships as part of its campaign.

Public and parochial high school seniors in Multnomah County are writing essays on "Civic and Political Responsibilities of Labor Unions" or "Should Labor Unions in a Democratic Country Engage in Political Action?" The prizes: a $100 savings bond; a $50 bond and a $25 bond.

All would be set aside to aid in college eduction.

The contest actually has a twofold purpose, since it not only aids the PAC drive but also brings labor home to children. Much interest is also being shown in the contest by parents and, indirectly, they also learn more about labor, even if they are not in a position to be covered by a labor contract.

In Oregon, it's learn your PACs!

OHIO'S PAC

THE OHIO PAC wants you to "Vote for Your Rights."

And, to help you to do that, the O.-PAC has issued a pamphlet by that name.

"Vote for Your Rights," attractively-printed, lists PAC's indorsements for office and states what labor wants for Ohio. For instance:

WM. LAVELLE

"WRONG—The present state legislature, which passed the wickedly anti-labor Van Aken Bill which would have saddled unions with law suits . . . virtually outlawed peaceful picketing . . . prohibited political action.

"RIGHT: A new and progressive State legislature which believes in the American right of Labor to organize . . . to be free from malicious court injunctions . . . to be protected from discrimination on the job because of Union beliefs."

And, for Congress:

"WRONG: The present Congress, which shattered price control and started the upward trend of the present high cost of living.

"RIGHT—A new and progressive Congress, which will put the lid on prices and make a dollar worth a dollar once again."

Jack Kroll is chairman both of the national and Ohio PAC. William Lavelle is state secretary.

'Do Yourself A Favor, Register To Vote!'

REMEMBER, a "bad candidate with 10 votes will beat a good candidate with 1000 supporters who forgot to register." That's what PAC says as it outlines its goal to register 75,000,000 voters for the 1948 elections.

PAC registration plans were set forth in a leaflet titled "Registration," another in the series "How We Win in 1948," which deals with various political action techniques.

Stating that there is no acceptable excuse for an eligible person failing to register, the pamphlet cites the fact that over 90,000,000 people in the U. S. will be eligible to vote in 1948.

"The very minimum goal of CIO is the registration of at least 75 million of these 90 million. Good citizenship demands the active participation in government by the people who live under that government."

The PAC announced that its registration campaign would be carried on in both the shops and the neighborhoods where CIO workers worked and lived.

In both cases, the pamphlet said, the important thing was to obtain a list of registered voters in the area covered, which would be checked against lists of unregistered voters.

Urging that all CIO families and members register, the PAC leaflet exhorts, "You can do something about that haunting fear that tomorrow may sneak up and slug you with a war or depression. You can do something to put an end to the menacing upward march of prices. You can do something toward the building of decent homes at decent prices. That something is voting. And you have to register to vote.

"Do yourself a favor. Register."

Keep repeating that so you'll not forget to sign up for Freedom.

90% OF COUNCILS O.K. POLICY

IT WAS apparent last week that at least 90% of the CIO's industrial union councils were adhering to the National CIO's policy of opposing a third party in 1948 and of indorsing the Marshall Plan.

Councils were still reporting their actions to Council Dir. John Brophy, who had written them pointing out that under the CIO constitution and under the CIO's rules for councils they were under an obligation to follow policy.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray stated the case when he wrote a letter to three Los Angeles CIO officials. The officials—Pres. William S. Lawrence, Vice Pres. Ernest L. Messinger and Secy. Philip M. Connelly of the Los Angeles Council—had written Murray protesting action of PAC Dir. Jack Kroll in authorizing the establishment of a California PAC independent of the State and L. A. Councils. Both had refused to adhere to policy.

Wrote Murray: "Kroll is merely discharging his duty to implement national CIO policy in the field of political action.

"You state that your wire is 'in the interest of preserving political effectiveness of labor in California.' I heartily join in the sentiment that the political effectiveness of labor in California should be preserved. The only way this can be done under our democratic CIO process is for you, as officials and officers of the L. A. CIO Council, to support, without reservation, national CIO policies in the political field as recently promulgated by our National Executive Board." (Text on this page.)

Brophy last week received these communications:

ALABAMA: from Secy.-Treas. Eugene M. Wells—"We believe the Marshall Plan to be the only answer to the problems facing us in Europe and Asia . . . We believe that for us to support a third party would be detrimental to our country."

WASHINGTON STATE: from Federated Press—"A complete departure from basic policy . . .

Yergan Charges Plot To Swing African Group To Wallace

DR. MAX YERGAN, for 10 years executive secretary of the Council on African Affairs, Inc., accuses "Communist-inspired forces" of trying to seize control of the council in the interests of the Wallace third party.

Yergan said a fight began to drive him out of the organization when he told the U. S. Government he was neither Communist, Fascist nor subversive. "Today," he said, "it is either me or the Communists."

He accused Dr. Doxey Wilkerson, W. A. Hunton and Paul Robeson as leaders of the drive against him. Wilkerson last year announced he was a member of the national committee of the Communist Party.

Yergan, calling an "official meeting" of the council for later this month, declared that if the opposition were successful, it would use the assets of the council for interests of the Communists and not for the Africans and the American Negro.

He said an attempt to swing the Negro vote to Henry A. Wallace would be a step backward for Negroes, who have learned that their political interests in the South are the same as those of the white people.

He declared that for a long time he had tried to work with the Communists. Asked if he found that association "agreeable," he replied: "I do not find it possible to work with them."

The Council's board of 70 includes Negro college presidents, social workers, lawyers, publishers and physicians. Yergan said opponents of his policy included Dr. Herbert Aptheker, Charles Collins, Dr. Gene Weltfish, Irving Potash, Ferdinand C. Smith and Dr. W. E. Burghardt DuBois.

William Jay Schieffelin has resigned as vice chairman of the council, saying that Yergan had rightly expressed his "disgust with recent developments."

PROGRAM IN CANADA

The Canadian Congress of Labour, with which the CIO is affiliated, has offered this program for labor legislation:

1. Outlawing of company unions.

2. Specific reference to check-off and union security.

3. Automatic certification for a union which shows a majority.

4. Protection of unions against court action, with certain specific exceptions.

5. Broad powers to the Labour Relations Board, including power to order an employer to bargain collectively.

7. Simplication of procedure in strikes and lockouts with shortening of waiting periods.

8. Wider coverage for Federal legislation.

9. Elimination of the clause in the government's 1947 bill which provided for revocation of a union's certification.

10. Elimination of the government's 1947 proposal for individual presentation of grievances.

Julian's The Man!

The secret is out!

CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll is for W. A. Julian, treasurer of the U. S., for President! (that's Julian's name you see on those paper money bills that don't go very far these days).

Or, at least, Kroll, who is running unopposed for national convention delegate from Ohio to the Democratic national convention, is pledged to vote for Julian on the first ballot. Julian is the "favorite son" of Ohio Democrats. After that perfunctory first-ballot vote, the delegation can vote for anyone it chooses. So, Kroll's choice after that is still a secret.

GARST NAMED

THE appointment of Delmond Garst, CIO Regional Director for southern Illinois and eastern Missouri, as mid-west field representative of the National CIO-PAC has been announced by PAC Dir. Jack Kroll.

DEL GARST

Garst, who will make his headquarters in St. Louis, will represent PAC in Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Indiana, Ohio and Illinois.

Garst was a member of the executive board of the CIO Auto Workers, representing the Southwest region, from 1936 until 1942. From 1942 until the end of the war, he represented CIO on the War Labor Board. He was appointed assistant organizational director of CIO under Dir. Allan S. Haywood in 1945 and held that post until March, 1947, when he was named CIO Regional Director.

Garst, 44, is married and has one child.

Kroll also announced that he has recognized the CIO-PAC Committee for Northern California as the official national PAC spokesman in that area. Similar recognition was granted to a group upholding National CIO policy in regard to the third party movement in Southern California last week.

Blackout Rosy Picture

Congress Unit Finds T-H Harassing Trade Unions

THE minority members of the Joint Congressional Committee on Labor-Management Relations have issued a sharp attack on the majority report praising six months' operation of the Taft-Hartley Law.

The minority members — Sens. James E. Murray (D., Mont.) and Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) and Reps. John Lesinski (D., Mich.) and Augustine Kelley (D., Pa.)— declared:

"When the full impact of the law is finally felt, the complete measure of the injury to all our people by this harmful reversal in our national labor policy will become apparent to the American public.

"It is our hope that corrective action will be taken by the Congress before the restrictive provisions of this act come into full play and bring about the harmful consequence to our economy we foresee."

The sweeping conclusions of the majority were blasted on the premises that the conclusions were unsupported by the limited experience under the act and that they could serve only to mislead.

The minority members outlined the following conclusions:

1. The majority's claim that the act had not adversely affected wages fails to take into account a number of factors that shed a different light on this assertion. These include the fact that during the initial period of the act's operation workers have not fared as well as other segments of our population, for wages have lagged behind the rise in the cost of living and behind the tremendous increase of profits earned by business.

2. Experience with restrictions on union security agreements has already revealed serious defects. These restrictions have resulted in widespread resort to "bootleg" contracts.

3. The tremendous number of union shop elections has impaired the ability of the NLRB to discharge its functions; union shop elections have resulted in an extravagant waste of taxpayers' money; and the results of union shop elections thus far establish the fact that American workers are overwhelmingly in favor of union security agreements, rather than the reverse as claimed by the sponsors of the act.

4. The increasing backlog of Board cases, which has reached a figure almost double the largest in the Board's history, is seriously delaying the expeditious settlement of disputes.

(At the end of February, the NLRB had 9468 cases pending. In January, the figure was 7237.)

5. The existing sweeping prohibition against all secondary boycotts is restricting legitimate trade union activities. It compels unions to contribute to their self-destruction.

6. Immediate repeal of the prohibition against union political activity is necessary to prevent the continued invasion of constitutional rights.

(A U. S. Supreme Court hearing will be held Apr. 26 on a Government appeal in the CIO-Philip Murray free press case. The Government had indicted Murray and the CIO on grounds of violating the political activity provisions through use of the CIO News. Federal Judge Ben Moore ruled that the section of the law was unconstitutional.)

7. A disturbing pattern is being created in the use of labor injunctions which fully justifies the conclusion that the era of government-by-injunction is being revived.

8. The enlargement of the meaning of coercion to a point where it now includes legitimate trade union activities confirms the fear that this provision, when applied to labor organizations, would provide a weapon for improper interference with labor's legitimate activities.

9. The report of the majority intrudes dangerously on the executive and judicial powers.

10. The report of the majority intrudes unwisely on existing bargaining relations in a number of industrial plants.

11. A pattern has already evolved for harassing trade unions by litigation.

Union-Hating Firm Faces Cartel Charge

Brassy is the word for the Timken Roller Bearing Co. of Canton, Ohio.

The CIO State Council reports that while the company is spending thousands of dollars annually on anti-union ads in Ohio daily papers accusing unions of holding down production, it is being prosecuted by the U. S. Government on charges that it participated in an international cartel in restraint of trade.

The government has introduced evidence to support its charge that Timken and its foreign associates agreed to "sell only at an agreed price." Cartel agreements are entered by corporations in various countries to insure high prices and high profits.

Hands Across Sea

Local 181, CIO Textile Workers, Hazelton, Pa. recently presented to Exec. Vice Pres. George Baldanzi a $150 check for purchase of CARE packages for textile workers in Italy.

Decimation

CIO Organizing Committee Dir. Van A. Bittner waxes furious over the Taft-Hartley NLRB:

"It's been decimated so much by the law and embroiled in so much red tape it can process only a fraction of its cases."

Bittner pointed to a total of only 266 bargaining elections in February, while NLRB was kept "busy chasing around the country holding 1473 union shop elections."

Clothing Workers Start Film Service

A film service set up as part of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' expanded education program has been announced by ACW Education Director Robert A. Levin. A central film library is being established and a film catalog prepared for the use of locals and joint boards.

Albert Hemsing, former director of the Overseas 16mm. film program for the Office of War Information, and more recently head of the State Department's film work in England, is acting as film specialist for the ACW's Education Department.

Steelworker's Son Wins Scholarship

James Pippin, son of a Kansas City, Mo. CIO Steelworker, won a $2,500 4-year scholarship awarded by the Western half of Dist. 34, USA-CIO. The scholarship will be used for a pre-medical course at Washington University. The scholarship was open to children of steel union members.

Woodworkers Win 17 N. Car. Elections

The CIO Woodworkers have won 17 representation elections in North Carolina in the past year. In addition, four election petitions have been filed with the NLRB. The union's latest victory was at the J. Herbert Bate Lumber Co., Wilmington.

After Fact Finders Report

Truman Urges Packers, Union To Resume Talks

AS the CIO News went to press, the White House released the 93-page report of the President's fact-finding board on the CIO Packinghouse workers' strike.

In issuing the board's findings, Pres. Truman stated:

"I am convinced that if it is read and studied by the parties with an open mind, it can provide a basis for renewed negotiations looking toward a prompt settlement of the dispute."

He said he has requested Federal Mediation & Conciliation Director Cyrus Ching to arrange further conferences between the company and the union with members of the Mediation Service in attendance.

In addition, the President asked the fact-finding board to reconvene and continue to be available for assistance.

Commenting on Pres. Truman's statement, UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein, said his union welcomed the President's suggestion to resume negotiations and "will cooperate in every way possible to resolve the dispute."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has urged all CIO affiliates and members to contribute complete "financial and moral" support to the 100,000 striking CIO Packinghouse Workers.

In a letter to all CIO international unions, the CIO head noted that in the three weeks since the strike's beginning the meat packers "have used the injunction weapon in almost 50 instances in an effort to break the strike. In addition, they are counting upon the infamous injunction provision of the Taft-Hartley Act."

Murray accused the "Big Four" companies of refusing to bargain with the union for a "settlement adequate to meet the economic needs of its members" after imposing a "completely inadequate" settlement on the AFL Meat Cutters. Contributions to the union should be addressed: United Packinghouse Workers, CIO, 415 Engineering Bldg., 205 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago 6, Ill.

Say Sheriff Took Armour's Orders

By LEE R. SIMONS

COMPANY-MADE "blackjacks" for use against pickets — 14-inch lengths of copper cable, bound with friction tape — were introduced into evidence by packinghouse workers during an injunction hearing at Fargo, N. D.

The injunction hearing was initiated by Armour & Co. against Local 73, UPWA-CIO. In six days of testimony, however, the striking local union took the offensive against the company. The following facts were brought out in court:

1. That the sheriff of Cass county had "taken orders" from Armour and deputized "the superintendent of the plant, Armour watchmen, Armour foremen and other anti-union employees."

2. That the sheriff, also taking orders from Armour's, had violated North Dakota laws and deputized, Minnesota residents.

Over 25 members of the striking local testified. They told the judge and the crowded courtroom stories of company provocations which included "wild joyrides at 35 miles an hour" by deputies in Armour trucks riding through the picket lines. Three pickets who had been knocked to the ground by Armour trucks, also testified.

ALSO introduced into evidence by the union were stockyard canes, used for herding livestock, which were issued to the deputies, together with the blackjacks, for use against the strikers.

Meanwhile, responding to my appeal as farmer-labor relations director of the union, the North Dakota Farmers Union appointed a committee of three farmers to investigate reports of violence. Orlando Odegaard, Buxton; Harvey Wheeler, Wheatland, and Homer Golliet, Durbin, were appointed to observe the injunction hearing by Pres. Glen Talbott, of the North Dakota Farmers Union.

The judge delayed decision on the injunction, much to the disappointment of company officials. In announcing his intention "to take my time," the judge said the hearing had served a useful purpose in "getting the facts to the public." Previously, no stories of Armour-provoked violence had been reported by the press.

Among those who testified for the local union were Gilbert Simonson, field representative; Pres. Benjamin Edward Hart, of Local 73; Ruth Wendt, recording secretary; Werner Sitte, George Bordman, Dorothy Johnson and Melvin W. Nulle.

IT HAPPENED IN GEORGIA

Court Flays Attacks on Pickets

IN a rare ruling favoring a union, a Georgia court has denounced a hammer-swinging attack by 75 alleged scabs on three women pickets at the Anchor Rome Mills, Rome, Ga.

Superior Court Judge Claude F. Porter has ordered the company, "its agents, servants and employes" not to interfere in any way with legitimate strike activities by the CIO Textile Workers.

According to Benjamin F. Wyle, the union's associate counsel, few, if any, similar restraints have ever been won by labor from Southern courts. As a rule—and as in this case, prior to the mob action—only the union feels the weight of court interference.

The attack which precipitated the court action took place a few days after TWUA's Local 787 struck when the company sought to wipe out 12 basic contract protections, ranging from seniority to piece-work guarantees. About 600 workers are involved.

HERE is the story of the attack, as told by J. D. Pedigo, manager of TWUA's Northwest Georgia Joint Board:

"Since the beginning of the strike," Pedigo said, "we have stationed only three pickets on the Central of Georgia railroad siding during the lunch hour. This time we left three women, as the switch engineer has respected our picket line and until this assault no cars were pulled in or out of the yard.

"The company waited until the men were gone and then closed down the plant, brought all of the scabs outside and led them toward the women pickets. Six strikers who were hanging around saw what was about to happen and ran to aid the women, but, at a signal from Parker Brown, a company official, this mob attacked the unarmed and defenseless pickets and best, blackjacked and clubbed them until they were forced away from their posts and the switch engine entered.

"The picket lines were quickly restored after this exhibition by the company and enough additional guards have been stationed near the pickets to prevent a repetition of such an attack.

"But where are the headlines? If a union official led a mob into a factory to beat the workers the newspapers would scream their heads off, but when a company official leads an unprovoked attack on defenseless women not a word is said.

"WE do not understand what goes on in the hearts of the owners of Anchor Rome Mills that they would promote such a thing. We have made no demands that are not just and reasonable. However, we do not intend to let this company break down the minimum protection which the union has gained through years of struggle.

"Neither do we intend to let this assault go unchallenged, but we will set the example—we will do things the peaceful and lawful way and seek our recourse through the courts."

In the court action, Judge Porter also modified an injunction he had issued earlier against the union. While only three pickets are permitted within 50 feet of each mill entrance, the number beyond 50 feet is unlimited. Previously, no other pickets had been allowed within 100 yards of the mill.

Co-op Notes

Pontiac Store Sets Record

THE Pontiac Co-op, new-type cooperative distribution outlet in Pontiac, Mich., reports it has sold more groceries since its opening several months ago than any other cooperative store in the country. The store is patronized by members of the Auto Workers and other unions.

UAW local unions in Detroit are backing an all-out six weeks' drive to set up other permanent cooperative distribution centers on the Pontiac model. The UAW and the Motor City Cooperative have asked for the aid of the Council for Cooperative Development in the campaign.

Osram, a branch of the German electric bulb trust taken over by Swedish authorities after the war, has been bought from the government by a Swedish wholesale cooperative. At present the cooperative factory employs 1,300 workers. Osram was formerly one of the co-ops' biggest private competitors.

Second largest coal importer in Denmark is the Danish Cooperative Coal Import Co., which supplies 1,400 cooperative dairies and hundreds of other co-ops.

N. Y. Bars Bias From Colleges

New York State now has a law making racial and religious discrimination illegal in the admission of students to colleges within the State.

Last week Gov. Dewey signed the bill sponsored by Sen. Elmer F. Quinn, Democratic leader of the State Senate, and Assemblyman Lewis W. Olliffe (R., Bkln.). It was based on a recommendation of the commission on the Need for a State University. Owen D. Young was head of the committee.

The U. S. Supreme Court, meanwhile, agreed to review the conviction of Gaither Lovelady, who was condemned on charges of slaying a city marshal in Lexington, Tex. He contended he had not been tried by a jury of his peers, since Negroes were barred from it.

In Americus, Ga., Judge William M. Harper commuted the death penalty for Mrs. Rosa Ingram and her two teen-age sons to life imprisonment. The Ingrams had been convicted by an all-white jury of the slaying of a white farmer, John E. Stratford. Mrs. Ingram says Stratford had threatened to kill her. Many groups are working for a new trial or pardon.

Grocer Alters Views on Unions

"My mother is going to get $2,000 from the Chrysler Corp.," 12-year-old Phyllis Lesniak told the grocer one morning as she stopped by on her way to school.

"Your mother's never going to collect that," replied the grocer. "Unions are no good."

The grocer was wrong on both counts, as he readily admitted later when Phyllis took her mother's check down to show him. "I guess I could be wrong about unions," said the storekeeper

Behind Mrs. Jeanette Lesniak's check is the story of a union grievance filed by the Auto Workers against the Dodge Truck Division of Chrysler in behalf of 31 women fired unfairly by the company.

The union fought their case through various delaying technicalities until finally it came before the impartial chairman of the appeals board. The chairman examined the evidence and upheld the union's charges. Result was a $55,000 settlement awarded the women in amends for the pushing around they'd received.

Oleo Tax Cut Has a Chance

THERE'S still a chance that Congress may act this session to cut the tax on oleomargarine.

In a surprising comeback, supporters of the proposal pushed a successful petition campaign through the House of Representatives and insured debate and vote on the tax cuts in the near future.

Much of the Congressional tussle has been between southern Democrats—whose constituents grow cotton and soy beans for oils used in oleo—and Midwest Republicans, whose constituents raise cows whose milk winds up as butter.

The Midwestern Republicans won the first round in the House Agriculture Committee, where they tabled all proposals to cut the oleo taxes. But the farm-country Democrats rounded up the necessary 218 signatures (a majority of the House) to bypass the committee and bring the bills directly to the floor.

CIO, in testifying before the committee, had urged removal, not only of taxes, but of a complex structure of license fees on Don Montgomery, UAW Washington representative and former Agriculture Dept. consumers counsel, argued that removal of the taxes would give the customers a long needed break.

CIO Quiz Show In 2nd Round

1. They asked the barber: "What do you do if a baldheaded man asks for a singe?"

2. "Why do you soak fur skins in water?" a CIO fur worker was questioned.

3. "What's the difference between a white collar worker in the U.S. and a black coat worker in Great Britain?" the quizmaster asked an insurance salesman.

The questions have come up during the first 13 weeks of "It's In The Family," CIO's novel weekly quiz show, now moving into the second half of its 26-week schedule.

The show—which has won wide acclaim—is heard every Tuesday night on the coast-to-coast ABC network at 10:45 P.M. EST, and at corresponding hours in other time zones.

Each week Quizmaster Joe O'Brien tosses questions at two families chosen by various CIO unions. He asks them about current events, unions and history. Winning family gets a $100 U.S. savings bond; the loser "wins" a $25 bond.

THIS week's show—April 13—presents two striking CIO Packinghouse Workers and their families. In succeeding weeks, members of the retail, lithographers, brewery, furniture, oil, transport service and other unions will step before the ABC mike.

The UE's popular 15-minute program with Arthur Gaeth, which has been heard on Mutual network, switches to ABC network on Monday, April 19. The show will be broadcast across the country at 10:00 P.M. EST each week.

And CIO presents a discussion of issues of the day for the next two weeks on the America United program, broadcast over NBC on Sundays at 1:00 P.M. EST. The April 18 program will deal with wage-hour bills now before Congress.

P.S. The answers to those questions at the beginning of the story: (1) he does the best he can, without burning the man; (2) to soften the furs for working into clothing; (3) they're the same thing.

Mush!

Air mail brings the CIO News promptly to Cordova, Alaska. Regular mail would take as long as two months.

That has been reported to the CIO News by John Wiese, business agent, Local 10, CIO Fishermen, Copper River & Prince William Sound Cannery Workers, at Cordova.

The bundles of the CIO News are read in sort of a progression system, Wiese reported. One member reads it, then passes it on to others.

Find Better Word For Dixie Labor

Old-timers can remember the days before the CIO started organizing in the South when southern industrialists used to try to attract northern capital by advertising that they had a cheap and plentiful supply of "docile old-stock American labor."

But times have changed. For example, a piece in a recent issue of the Winston - Salem (N.C.) Journal on the growth of the rayon industry in the South, states:

"This growth should continue. The South has many advantages to offer the synthetic fibre and other textile industries, including the availability of raw materials, advantageous plant sites and an adequate and highly intelligent labor supply."

Hurt Vet Aids Civil Rights

Harold Russell, the ex-GI who won two Academy awards for his role as the handless veteran in "The Best Years of Our Lives," says in the April issue of Negro Digest that loss of his hands has led him into a crusade to sell American youth on democracy and civil rights.

"After the film won the hearts of America," Russell says in the Negro Digest article, "I began to visit veterans' hospitals and talked with hundreds of men, some maimed lightly, others unable ever to walk, talk, see or hear again because of their war injuries.

"I was impressed by the large numbers of Negro, Jewish, and Catholic patients in these hospitals," Russell continues. "Here were quiet sanctuaries of democracy where nobody raised ugly questions of skin color or national origin or religious beliefs."

An infantryman who lost a leg at Anzio told Russell, "Look chum! Why don't you reach the teenagers who are still in high school with a message from us? Tell them that we guys flat on our backs don't like what we hear about lynching, race-baiting, segregation, all that kind of stuff."

The Anti - Defamation League later made Russell the same proposition. Since then he has been speaking regularly at high schools all over the nation and the cooperation he has received has convinced him that he is on the right track.

Strike Ban Illegal

A new Wisconsin law barring strikes by public utility workers was branded "thoroughly unconstitutional" in a circuit court ruling in Madison.

CIO Begins Education Parleys

HEAT in the rambling old summer hotel was scant. The men had to shave in cold water and the slick conveniences of modern city hotels were all lacking.

Outdoors there was plenty of beautiful scenery, but the CIOers who had taken over the hotel at Jefferson, Mass., for a three-day education conference were too busy exchanging ideas and listening to lively discussions on present-day problems to think much about scenery outside, or to mind the chill and inconvenience inside.

Some 60 delegates from CIO local unions, state and city councils, attended this New England education conference, the first held by the National CIO in this area, and the first of a series of regional conferences to be held this spring and summer in the East, North, Mid-west, South and West.

George Guernsey, National CIO associate director of education, was in charge of the New England conference. Other CIO staff members who participated were Leslie Fishman, National CIO assistant director of research; Alan Reitman, CIO-PAC public relations director, and Joseph Glazer, Textile Workers Education Dept.

UNIONS represented included Textile, Steel, Auto, Office & Professional Workers, Retail, Stone, Electrical, Paper, Ship, Clothing, Toy & Novelty Workers, state and local councils and one local industrial union.

Aime J. Forand, pro-labor congressman from Rhode Island, in a talk on practical legislative and political action, told the CIO delegates how to get their ideas across to their representatives in Congress by letters, delegations and interviews, and Reitman led a discussion of CIO-PAC policy and the organization of local campaigns.

He was assisted by Margaret Connors Driscoll, legislative representative of the Connecticut CIO, who ran for Congress several years ago against Clare Booth Luce, and came near defeating her.

Samuel Horovitz, nationally known workmen's compensation attorney, spoke on the need for expanding benefits under state compensation laws, and Mrs. Mildred Mahoney, chairman of the Massachusetts Fair Employment Practices Commission, described the handling of cases under the state law.

Dr. Royce Pitkin, president of Goddard College in Vermont, gave a talk on "What Colleges and Universities Can Contribute to Labor Education." Other educators at the conference were Fred Dunn, Extension Service, Rhode Island State University, and James Williamson, New Hampshire State University Extension Service.

Gee, GM!

General Motors, now in negotiations with the CIO Auto Workers, has announced that it reaped the greatest profits of its entire history last year.

Profits after taxes were $287,991,373, more than three times as high as the 1946 net of $87,526,311.

Dir. of Org. George Brown, Intl. Woodworkers of America, Portland, Ore., reports the following results of union shop elections: Redding Forest Products, Redding, Calif., for 14, against 1; Scott Lumber Co., for 139, against 7; Burney Lumber Co., for 50, against 2. These latter operations are both located at Burney, Calif.

Reg. Dir. Geo. DeNucci, Columbus, Ohio, advises that in an NLRB election held at Peerless Optical Co., Columbus, the CIO Optical Workers won 12 to 1. Rep. James O'Reilly was in charge. DeNucci also reports that at the Hocking Brewery Co. Nelsonville, Ohio, the company has agreed to recognize the Brewery Workers and has signed a stipulation to that effect and a union shop election will be held in the very near future.

In addition, the Manson Distributing Co. Nelsonville, Ohio, has agreed to recognize the Brewery Workers and a petition for a union shop election has been filed. The Pico Distributing Co. Glouster, Ohio, and the Washington Distributors and McCreevy Distributors, New Lexington, Ohio, have also agreed to recognize the Brewery Workers and union shop elections will be held soon. All of the above situations were handled by Int. Rep. Mel Greenthal of the Brewery Workers Union with the assistance of DeNucci.

Here is another victory for the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee. The membership of Local 103, Communications Association, Los Angeles, voted 206 to 8 to affiliate with TWOC-CIO, it was reported by local Pres. Ralph D. Horn, Vice-Pres. P. A. Yeriam, and Secy-Treas. James Murray.

A wage and policy conference of telephone workers will be held in Detroit, Tuesday and Wednesday, April 13 and 14, when a wage policy will be mapped out. Asscoiate CIO Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg has made a thorough study of the telephone industry. TWOC-CIO continues to grow, ignoring the falsehoods published by CWA.

The writer attended and addressed a meeting of ACEW in Miami Beach, Fla., last week, where they had their general conference, and Ernst Weaver was reelected president and Brother Williams, secretary.

Election victories are increasing—let's keep them rolling.

S.F. Sells CIO Office To Longshoremen

Sale of the San Francisco CIO Building by the CIO Building Association and its purchase by the CIO International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union has been announced by Paul Schnur and Louis Goldblatt, secretary-treasurers of the respective organizations.

The California State and San Francisco CIO Councils will continue as tenants in the building. Plans are eventually to erect a larger building suitable for housing all CIO unions. The Building Association was organized in 1941. The property was purchased by it from the Knights of Columbus that year.

No, Son, That's No Tiger

Wayne Morse, Oregon's liberal Republican Senator, has some advice for anti-labor colleagues who will be campaigning for re-election this year.

If Congress continues its anti-labor course, Morse said, his colleagues should take "this practical advice on how to make a speech in the 1948 campaign:

"First: Whenever possible, do it by radio from a studio.

"Second: Speak at a meeting arranged and attended by representatives of employers who agree with you; or,

"Third: When you have to talk to a labor audience and there is no way out of it—such as sore throat, grounded planes or missed train connections—I suggest that you borrow one of those cages they have behind baseball catchers and hockey goalies. Just turn the cage around and speak through it."

Better Health Assembly Aim

CITIZENS representing a cross-section of American life will be asked for their views on improving the nation's health at an assembly of 800 men and women May 1-3 in Washington.

Spokesmen for medical and health professions, voluntary organizations, labor and citizens generally will send delegates to the assembly, called by the Federal Security Administration at President Truman's request. CIO Pres. Philip Murray is a member of the assembly's executive committee.

A number of discussion panels will be held to consider such subjects as medical care, hospital facilities, local public health units, chronic disease, maternal and child health, rural health, community planning, mental health nutrition and santitation.

Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing said the President's request for a survey of the Nation's health to develop a blueprint for a health program was "one of the most important asignments ever given in peacetime to a Federal agency."

"In the final analysis," Ewing said, "health is the people's job. We can have national interest and action only to the extent that we have community interest and action."

Urges Exporting U. S. 'Know How'

An idea for exporting American "know how" to European countries which are trying to help get back on their feet industrially was suggested in a recent speech by William F. Patterson, director of the U. S. Dept. of Labor's Bureau of Apprenticeship.

Patterson said that one of the things this Nation should do for some of the countries less industrially developed than ours is to export skills, either by supplying them with craftsmen and engineers, or with our methods and procedures of producing them.

We should provide not only instruction methods, Patterson said, but also the method of American voluntary employer-employe cooperation in apprenticeship programs and other matters involving industrial relations which work to the mutual benefit of labor and management.

Pamphlet Reviews

Lack of Medical Care Kills Thousands Yearly

THOUSANDS of persons die unnecessarily in the United States each year for lack of proper medical care, according to a report just issued by the National Planning Association in a 48-page pamphlet entitled "Good Health is Good Business."

The report is a summary of a two-year study made by a joint subcommittee on Health of the NPA Agriculture, Business and Labor Committees. Mrs. Katherine Ellickson, CIO asst. director of Research, was one of the seven members of the subcommittee.

Although American medical care at its best is excellent, states the report, "there are many places where good medical care is not available, and there are many people who are unable to afford it."

Some of the significant findings brought out in the study are:

Tuberculosis can be virtually wiped out in 10 years with the medical knowledge we now have.

Proper medical care would go far in reducing the deaths of some 100,000 babies in the first year of life, and of more than 7,000 mothers who die in child birth each year.

About 40% (12,000) counties in the U. S. are completely without recognized hospitals.

The NPA study's aim was to discover how much some programs of adequate care would cost and whether it would be "good economics and good business" to provide adequate medical care throughout the country, if such programs were administered and financed privately, publicly or by some combination of the two. No one plan was recommended by the committee.

Education's Benefits

EDUCATION is not a local problem, says a popularly written pamphlet, "What Can We Expect of Rural School?" published by the Woman's Press of the YWCA, New York.

A child born in Mississippi may work in Detroit 20 years later. His good education benefits the nation, Mrs. Mildred Welch Cranston, author of the pamphlet, points out. Poor schools waste talented young people in jobs beneath their capacity, she says. Good schools are insurance against a big crop of truants, delinquents and problem children.

The pamphlet is available from The Woman's Press, 600 Lexington ave., New York 22, N. Y.; price 35 cents.

Columbus, Ohio, CIO Backs Symphony

CIO members in Columbus, Ohio, love good music as well as good wages. To prove it, they've just contributed $2,500 through the Columbus CIO Council to sponsor a special concert of the Columbus Philharmonic Orchestra next season.

Under the plan worked out by George De Nucci, CIO regional director, with the orchestra association officials and okayed by the Columbus Council, CIO members, their families and friends will hear a concert presented especially for them by the orchestra under the direction of Izler Solomon.

William Spratley, president of the Columbus CIO, said the plan, called "CIO Goes to the Symphony Day," was endorsed overwhelmingly by Council delegates representing 25,000 CIO members in Franklin county.

Essential Food Values Condensed

Multi-Purpose Food, developed by the California Institute of Technology, isnt quite a meal in pill form, but it approaches that.

It's a soy bean product so fortified that two ounces, dry measure, will provide the essential proteins, vitamins and minerals equivalent to a meal of beef, milk, green peas and potatoes.

Put up in red, white and blue labeled cans, Multi-Purpose Food was introduced recently for the first time to the American public at the Gramercy Co-op Food Store in New York City, and will be available soon at other Consumer's Cooperative Service stores in the city.

Backers of Multi-Purpose Food say it can be a boon to people of war-ravaged lands and offers to workers everywhere a way of stretching the shrinking food dollar. The cans may be sent abroad as a supplement to CARE

Vetoes Curb On Social Security

THE first of two Gearhart bills to limit social security coverage bounced back from the White House last week with a sharply-worded veto by Pres. Truman.

The bill (HR 5052) would have taken certain groups of newspaper and magazine salesmen out of the social security system.

Another proposal by Rep. Gearhart (R., Cal.) is House Joint Resolution 296, which would take an even larger number of workers out of the system. That measure, passed by the House, is being studied in Senate committee; CIO testified against it a week ago.

The House is scheduled to act on the news vendor bill veto the middle of this week. The President's veto—which must be overridden by a two-thirds vote in both House and Senate—recalled that he had refused to approve an identical measure last year.

Pres. Truman said the Gearhart measure has "far greater significance than appears on the surface . . . It raises the fundamental question of whether or not we shall maintain the integrity of our social security system."

THE President predicted that if it becomes law, employers could work up "artificial legal arrangements" to cover the status of their employes, and thereby deprive them of social security coverage.

He recalled that the Supreme Court, in a case affecting the news vendors, had ruled that relations between employer and employee should be looked at realistically rather than through legal technicalities in determining whether they come under social security.

"Administrative difficulties"—which were claimed by employers as a principal reason for the proposed trimming down of social security—were brushed aside by the President. He said that such bookkeeping problems as might exist for employers are not enough to cause a large group of workers to be deprived of the law's benefits.

WHAT'S needed, Pres. Truman added, is greater social security coverage, not less of it.

"Any step in the opposite direction can only serve to undermine the program," he said, and it would destroy confidence of the people in the permanence of the social security system.

Under the other Gearhart resolution, workers not covered by the old English common-law "master and servant" relationship would be excluded. All sorts of salesmen, industrial home workers, loggers, journeymen tailors, and other similar groups would thus lose social security rights.

Expect Senate To Pass TEW Housing Bill

THE drive to rescue the 2-year-old Taft - Ellender-Wagner Housing bill from asphyxiation in committee gained momentum in both houses of Congress, and proponents felt there was some likelihood of success.

Amendments sponsored by Sen. Ralph A. Flanders (R., Vt.) to improve and modernize the bill cleared the Senate Banking & Currency Committee last week by a vote of 7 to 6. Capitol observers expect that the TEW bill, approved by the committee a year ago, will be passed by the Senate this week.

A similar series of amendments was introduced in the House by Rep. Hale Boggs (D., La.), who has led the fight in the House for effective housing and rent control legislation.

With Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R., Mich.) sitting on the measure in the House Banking Committee, TEW proponents speeded up efforts to obtain 218 signatures to a discharge petition to pry the bill out of committee. Launched by Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Calif.), the petition now has 114 signatures.

APPROVAL of the Flanders amendments by the Senate committee was considered a major victory for Flanders and Sen. Charles Tobey (R., N. H.) in their struggle to retain the public housing provisions of the bill.

The bill was opposed by six Senate committeemen because of the public housing section, which plays a relatively minor role in the entire 10-year program.

Voting against were Sens. Buck (R., Del.), Capehart (R., Ind.), Cain (R., Wash.), Bricker (R., Ohio), McCarthy (R., Wis.) and Robertson (D., Va.). Voting for were Sens. Tobey, Flanders, Wagner (D., N. Y.), Maybank (D., S. C.), Taylor (D., Idaho), Fulbright (D., Ark.) and Sparkman (D., Ala.).

Aimed at the construction of 15 million new housing units in the next 10 years, the amendments provide loans to builders, financial aid to cities for slum clearance and low-cost housing, federal low-cost housing construction and federal research in home-building techniques.

The Boggs proposals differ substantially in only one instance. They include a program to encourage prefabricated housing construction.

REP. BOGGS

ON THE House floor last week Rep. Boggs asserted that the housing shortage was largely the fault of antiquated building methods. "Houses are being produced in much the same way that they were 50 years ago," he said.

The research and prefabricated housing sections of his bill were designed to remove this obstacle.

Boggs referred several times to the "inability of private enterprise to serve the needs of low-income families at the present time." Therefore, he said, "it is the responsibility of Government to provide for the housing needs" of such families.

Side-by-side with the drive to bring the housing bills to a vote was the attempt by the CIO and tenant groups to strengthen the 1948 Rent Control Act as much as possible through the local rent boards.

The new act makes it mandatory that the boards be representative of the community. A survey of the boards last November disclosed that 334 of the then-appointed 521 boards were dominated by real estate or business interests. The boards can recommend to Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods that rents in the area be decontrolled, raised or remain the same.

In order to be representative, a board, according to the Expediter, should be composed of the ratio of one tenant, one landlord and three public interest members. Public interest members could be from the ranks of labor, veterans, business, women, civic groups and educators.

As now constituted, the 650 boards, with a total of 4600 members, contain only 239 representatives of organized labor, 75 of them from the CIO.

In a move to obtain greater labor representation, John Brophy, CIO Councils director, and Walter Reuther, CIO Housing Committee chairman, last week urged CIO councils to "press vigorously for new appointments."

"All affiliates," the letter said, "should carefully check the personnel of the present boards and press vigorously for new appointments, either of additional labor members or of dependable consumer or public representatives."

Battle Looms For Decent DP Law

PROSPECTS are bright for the passage of legislation to admit displaced persons—and to restore to the U. S. its waning prestige as the haven for the oppressed.

The battle that lies ahead for the Citizens Committee for Displaced Persons, the CIO and other liberal groups is to improve proposed legislation.

In the House Rep. Fellows (R. Me.) last week introduced his bill to admit 200,000 displaced persons over a two-year period. This is below the standard set by the bill introduced by Rep. Stratton (R. Ill.) a year ago, supported by the CCDP. This bill which would admit 400,000 persons over a four-year period was buried by the House Judiciary subcommittee, headed by Fellows, which has reported his measure favorably to the full committee.

The Fellows bill is superior to the measure introduced by Sen. Wiley (R. Wis.), which would admit only 100,000 persons over a two-year period. Approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee, this bill is expected to be considered this week by the Senate. This bill is such a poor makeshift that CIO Pres. Philip Murray wrote CCDP:

"The number of displaced persons which could be actually brought into this country as the Wiley measure is now drawn is so pitifully small that every effort must be made to have the bill drastically amended both in this and other respects. What is particularly repugnant are its discriminatory and restrictive features which would penalize thousands upon thousands of displaced persons because of their national background, skills or religious beliefs, and prevent them from entering the United States.

"Whatever their trades or skills, whatever their lands of origin, or whatever their creeds, the displaced persons are human beings who, as victims of oppression and persecution, are unreservedly entitled to our traditional offer of asylum."

MURRAY pledged himself and the CIO legislative committee to cooperate with the CCDP and other groups in their efforts to amend the bill.

Sens. Ferguson (R. Mich.), Smith (R. N. J.), Cooper (R. Ky.), McGrath (D. R. I.), Saltsonstall (R. Mass.) and Morse (R. Oreg.) will introduce a series of amendments to the Wiley bill on the Senate floor. These amendments would:

Increase the number of persons to be admitted over a two-year period from 100,000 to 200,000; eliminate the restriction which provides that 50% of the immigrants shall come from territory "annexed by a foreign power;" advances the "cut off" date for persons eligible for admission from Dec. 22, 1945, to April, 1947, when the DP camps were actually closed to newcomers.

A real fight looms to improve the Wiley bill. Those who have been following the long fight for decent DP legislation point out that letters and wires to Senators from residents of their states will make them realize the importance of the proposed amendments.

TRUCK HITS HIS STRIKER—MA

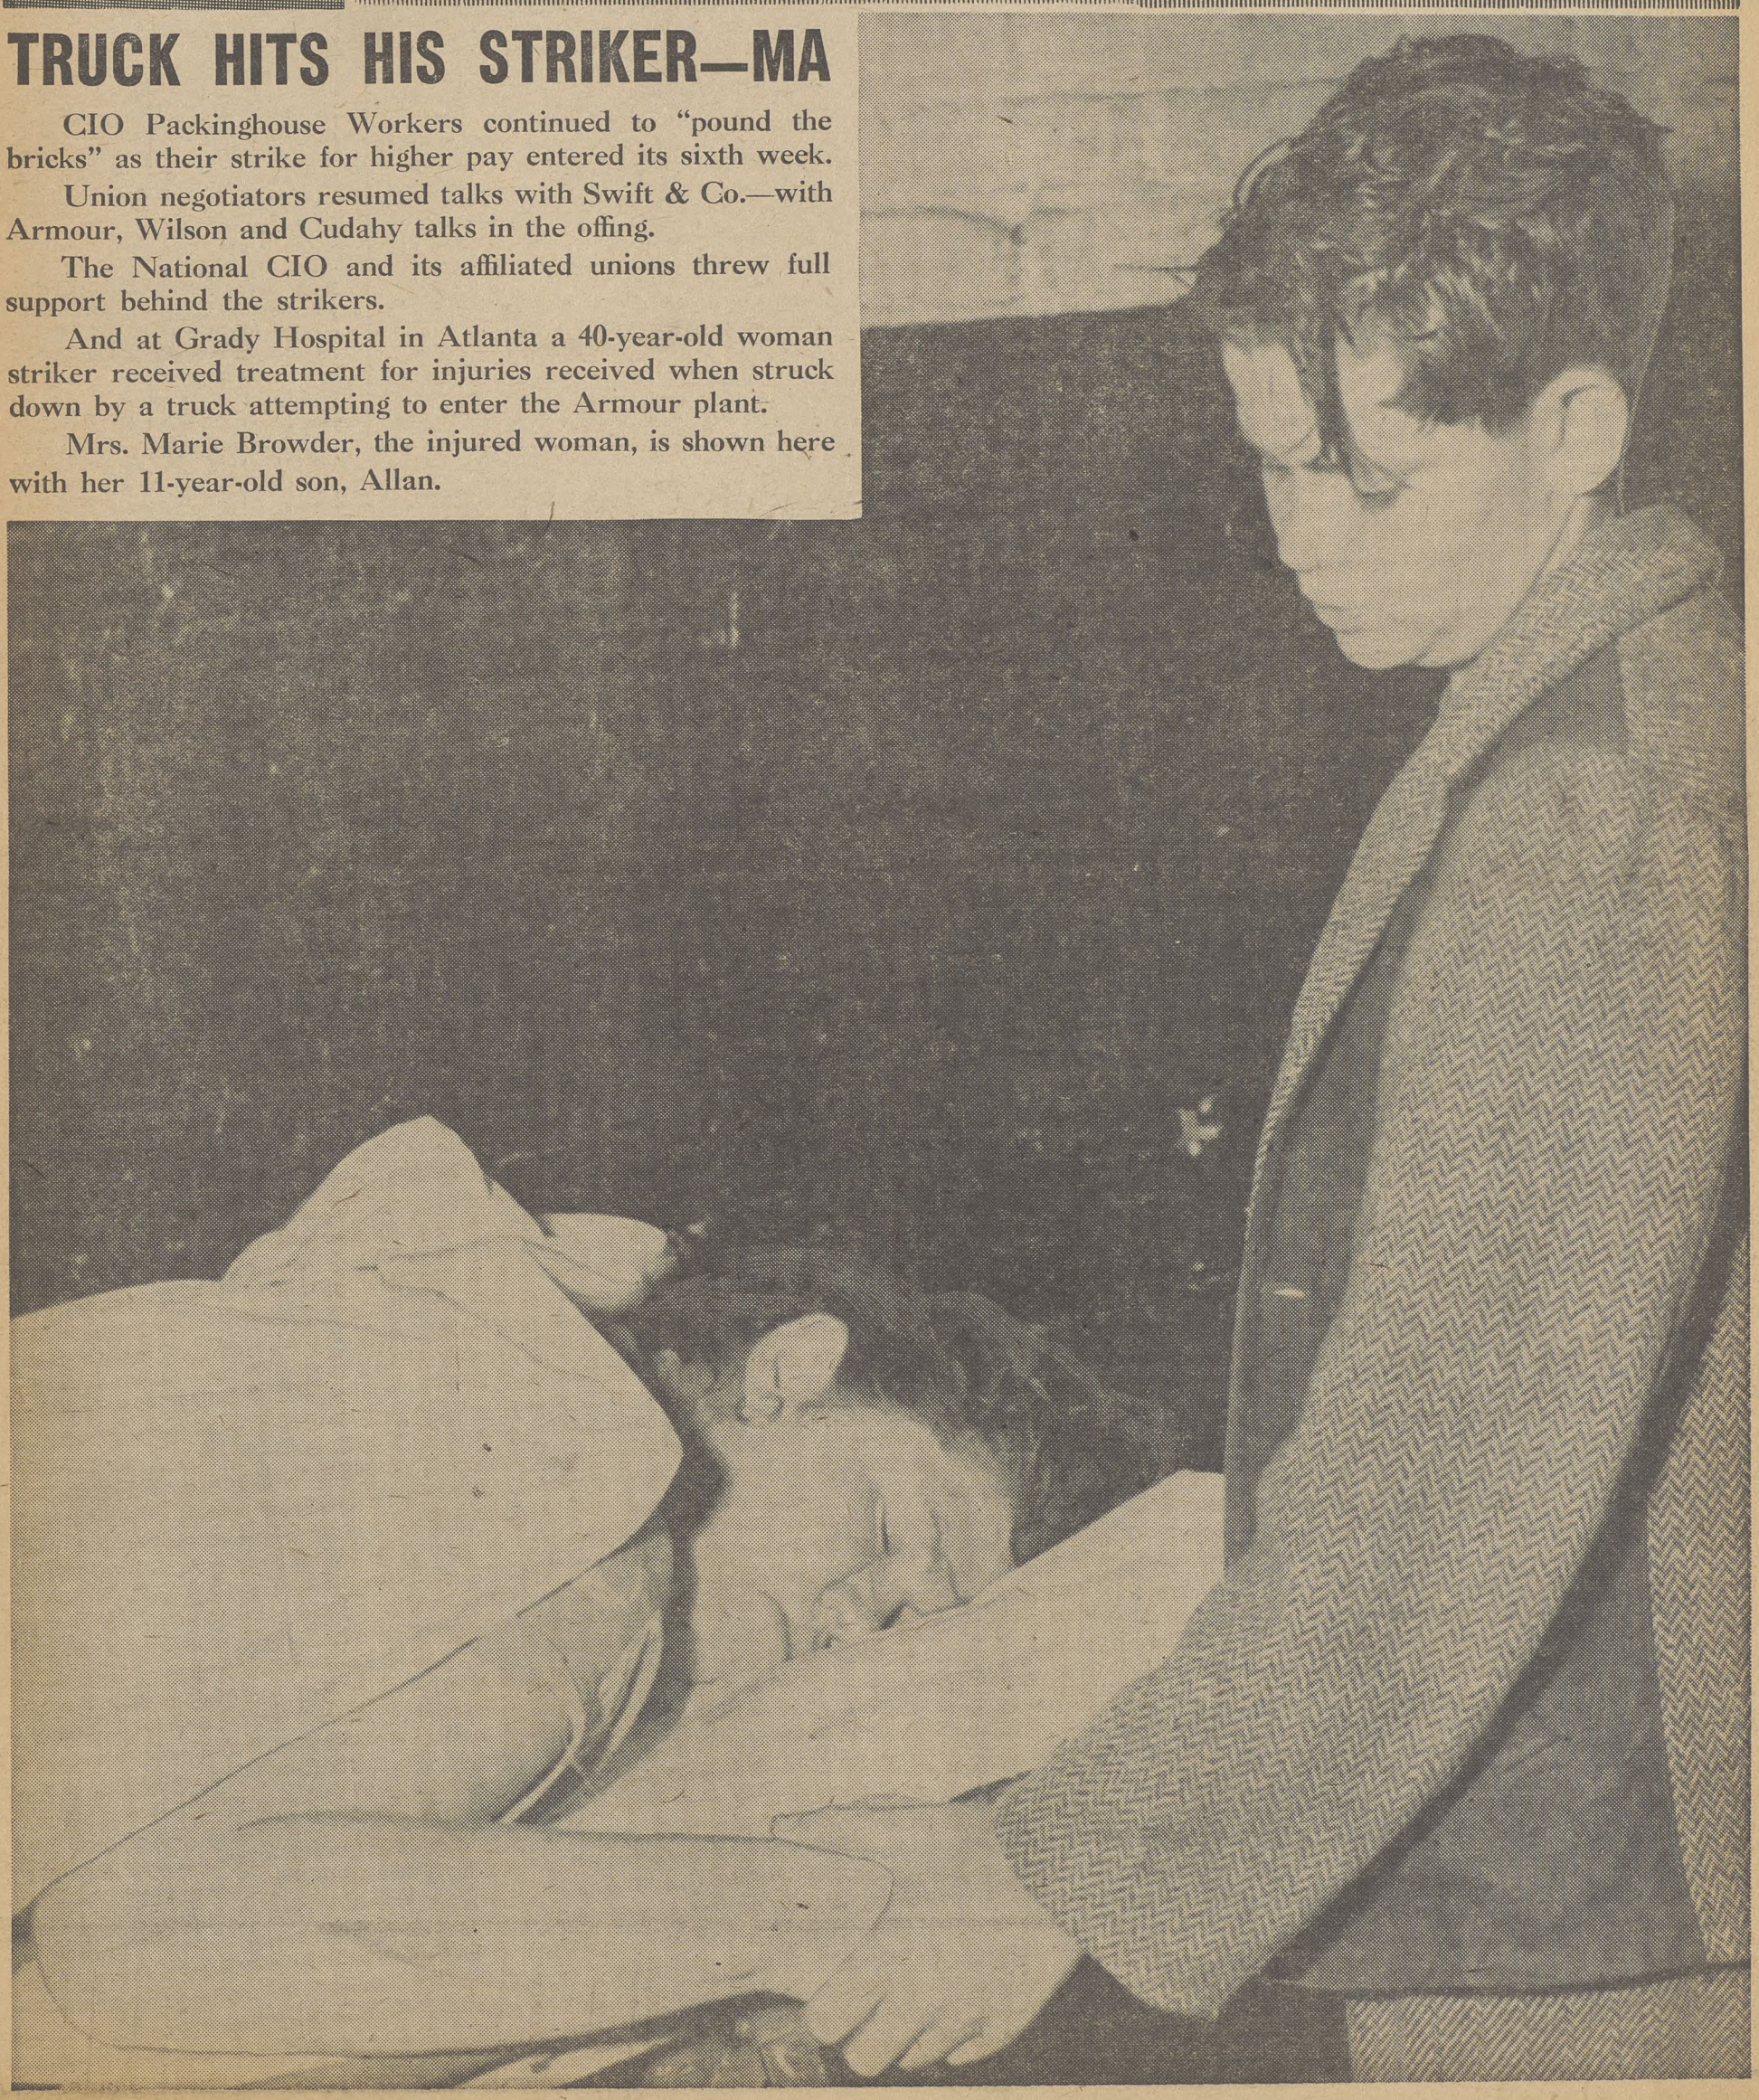
CIO Packinghouse Workers continued to "pound the bricks" as their strike for higher pay entered its sixth week.

Union negotiators resumed talks with Swift & Co.—with Armour, Wilson and Cudahy talks in the offing.

The National CIO and its affiliated unions threw full support behind the strikers.

And at Grady Hospital in Atlanta a 40-year-old woman striker received treatment for injuries received when struck down by a truck attempting to enter the Armour plant.

Mrs. Marie Browder, the injured woman, is shown here with her 11-year-old son, Allan.



U. S. Food On Way Abroad

TRANSPORTATION pipelines to Europe are beginning to fill up with the "first installment" of relief and reconstruction goods made available under the Marshall Plan.

Events moved fast immediately after passage of the bill in Congress and its signing by Pres. Truman.

With Paul C. Hoffman of Studebaker Corp. (which has a long record of good labor relations with the CIO Automobile Workers) in the driver's seat, the new recovery agency went right to work.

In his first few days as head of the Economic Cooperation Administration—EAC, for short—Hoffman allotted $37 million to cover immediate shipments to Italy, Austria, France, Greece and the Netherlands.

Shiploads of wheat, horsemeat, lard, wheat flour, seeds and dry peas were earmarked for immediate transportation to meet crisis demands in those countries.

THE money came from a billion-dollar advance from the government's Reconstruction Finance Corp., as authorized in the ERP legislation.

Meanwhile, Pres. Truman formally asked Congress to appropriate 4¼ billion dollars to meet the committments for the first year of ERP.

"Congress has recognized the imperative need for prompt American assistance to the free peoples of Europe," the President's message said. He asked for appropriation of the full amount.

Rep. Taber (R., N. Y.), head of the House Appropriations Committee, has already indicated he will go over the request with a fine-tooth comb.

Much remains to be accomplished before the ECA is ready to function at peak efficiency in handling the European recovery program.

HOFFMAN must build a new organization from the ground up, and Washington was looking with interest on his appointments to key staff positions. Most important of these is the "roving ambassador" who will supervise the program on the other side of the Atlantic.

It is expected that Hoffman will appoint a chief labor advisor, who will also have a staff of men in Europe to work with union organizations overseas.

In Europe, spokesmen for the 16 countries involved in the aid program set up a permanent cooperative agency to work closely with ECA in Washington on program details.

How Many In U. S. Are Handicapped?

How many physically handicapped persons are living in the United States?

To find out, Sen. Johnson (D., Colo.) has filed a bill (S. 2319) calling upon the Director of the Census to determine the number, age and location of physically handicapped persons and to submit the results to the President and Congress within 18 months.

CIO Links FDR's Ideals and Jouhaux's

WARM fraternal greetings to Leon Jouhaux, veteran French labor leader and head of the newly-established "Workers Strength" union organization, have been sent by CIO leaders.

The cable was signed by Pres. Philip Murray, Secy-Treas. James Carey, and Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross. It described Jouhaux—who resigned as a secretary of the French Confederation of Labor (CGT) last winter—at the time of the split in the French union movement—as "our old friend."

The cable, sent on the third anniversary of the death of Pres. Roosevelt, said that FDR's ideals were the same as those "for which Leon Jouhaux, in common with the leaders of workers throughout the world, has struggled throughout his life."

It added that American workers look with pleasure on their "fraternal friendship" with the workers of Europe, and that CIO joined wholeheartedly in support of the European Recovery Program to help "regain economic security and move towards higher standards of living.

"The record of Leon Jouhaux throughout his stewardship on behalf of French workers gives us great confidence that he is continuing to strive for the traditional goals of good and free trade unionism."

The Workers' Strength organization grew out of a left-right split in the rank of the CGT, with Workers' Strength leaders charging that last autumn's general strike was part of a Communist move to force a change in the government.

Reports from Paris indicate the CGT still has about three million members—down at least two million from its post-war high—while Workers' Strength leaders say their present membership is 1½ million and due for steady increases in coming months.

After considerable discussion, the Workers' Strength convention in Paris voted to apply for membership in the World Federation of Trade Unions. Jouhaux was a founding member of the WFTU when he was a leader of the CGT, and he is still a vice-president of the world labor group.

Decision to seek affiliation with the WFTU—which came on a vote of 12,380 to 3,580—was in line with Jouhaux's pleading that the new organization should take its place with other national groups in the world organization.

It marked a set-back for the AFL, whose European representative has tried to keep the new French group out of the WFTU. The AFL is about the only sizeable labor organization in the world not now belonging to the WFTU.

Official name of the new group is General Confederation of Labor—Workers' Strength. Jouhaux was elected its president and Robert Bothereau was named executive secretary.

CIO Voices Full Sympathy 'For Plan To Create Jewish State in Palestine'

INTO Yankee Stadium—the house that Babe Ruth built—thousands of New York workers flocked last week to push the cause of partition of Palestine into Jewish and Arab states.

The Stadium, more accustomed to fun-loving baseball crowds than to political mass meetings, was filled by thousands of workers despite a cold April rain.

The meeting, sponsored by the American Trade Union Council of the National Committee for Labor Palestine, heard speeches by a dozen leading figures in labor, Congress and religion; and messages from many others.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who with AFL Pres. William Green serves as an honorary chairman of the Council, sent a strong wire of greetings.

"The CIO voices full sympathy with your hopes and aspiration for creation of a national Jewish state in Palestine," Murray said. "Any other decision would be a serious betrayal of a good and just cause, and a set-back to the future of the United Nations."

Similar sentiments were voiced by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, a featured speaker at the gathering, and by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

MEMBERS of the Amalgamated, the Intl. Ladies Garment Workers and other unions in the city's busy garment trades knocked off work for the afternoon to attend the meeting.

"We have been revolted and let down by each new manifestation of international deceit, of oil-politics, of double-dealing and broken promises" on the Palestine issue, Carey told the throng.

'The CIO gives you its solemn pledge to work unceasingly at your side to bring justice and peace to Palestine."

The CIO officer lashed out at the U. S. "somersault" in the United Nations, where this country, after first leading the fight for partition, changed its position completely on the issue.

'The ill-considered somersault has hurt us all—hurt Palestine, hurt the chance of democratic progress for the rank-and-file Arab people, hurt American moral leadership in a world which is looking to us for light and guidance," he said.

". . . To cap the climax, we stand idly by and permit Arabs to murder Jews in Palestine, while we refuse to see arms for defense to the democratic Jewish people. This is diplomacy that leads to nothing but chaos."

BLAMING policies of the U. S., British and Soviet governments which have led to conflict and uneasiness in the world, Carey said the "future can be saved—by vision, by democratic action, by courage and the logic of persuasion . . . The average man in Europe, Asia and America wants that method to be tried and he wants it to be successful."

Potofsky said that final United Nations action on Palestine will show "whether the interests of oil or the cause of humanity shall prevail.

'The Jewish State in Palestine was earned, it was paid for with the corpses of six million Jewish men, women and children strewn all over the face of Europe."

American abandonment of the idea of partitioning Palestine into independent Arab and Jewish states, and of substituting a plan for temporary trusteeship, "is a betrayal of the good faith, moral leadership and good conscience of the United States," Potofsky declared.

HE called for lifting the embargo on arms for the Jews of Palestine, and for official recognition of Haganah—the Jewish resistance force in Palestine—as the militia of the Jewish state.

"If we did not learn the lesson of appeasement at Munich, before it was too late, we must learn the lesson of appeasment at Lake Success before it is too late," he said, in criticism of actions designed to please the feudal leaders of the Arab League.

Robinson Ordered Deported To U. S.

A CANADIAN immigration board of inquiry last week ordered the deportation to the U. S. of Reid Robinson, a CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers vice president, on grounds that he is trying to overthrow the Canadian government, opposes "organized government" and teaches the "unlawful destruction of property."

Charged at the deportation hearing with being a communist, Robinson said he "was not a communist and never had been."

Robinson charged that "the proceedings against me are really an attack on all unions. It is an attack which has been inspired by anti-labor employers."

Chief witness against Robinson, the union said, was Jack Dymond, leader of a rival independent union at New Toronto's Anaconda Brass Co.

The union official was arrested March 23 and held for deportation pending a hearing. Released on bond, he was required to sign a statement pledging to "refrain from engaging in any union activities while at liberty under this bond." He was not required to refrain from overthrowing the government or engaging in "unlawful destruction of property," the union pointed out.

CIO's Top Officers To Meet April 22

CIO's top executive officers—president, secretary-treasurer and nine vice-presidents—will meet in Pittsburgh Thursday, April 22.

Pres. Murray called the meeting, which will be held at steel union headquarters.

Woman Golf Star To Aid Auto Union

Betty Hicks, one of the nation's leading golfers, is helping form a women's golf club for the recreation department of the United Auto Workers. UAW Recreation Director Olga Madar said plans and rules for the women's golf club would be submitted for approval to an organization meeting at which Miss Hicks would preside.

Delegates Start Soon For WFTU

CIO delegates to executive meetings of the World Federation of Trade Unions leave for Rome, Italy, within the next few days.

Representing CIO at the WFTU sessions will be Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; Michael Ross, director of the international affairs department of CIO; Harry Read, executive assistant to Carey; and Helen Kissane, secretary to the delegation.

The important WFTU meetings—first since last autumn—open in Rome on April 30. First session will be that of the nine-man executive bureau. That will be followed by a meeting of the 23-man executive committee.

Unusual attention will be focused on the Rome meeting, since disagreements within the WFTU about the organization's stand on the Marshall Plan have caused widespread discussion on both sides of the Atlantic.

At the last executive bureau meeting—held in Paris last November—Carey argued for discussion of the Marshall Plan on the grounds that the WFTU's basic constitution calls for support of all programs for post-war reconstruction.

WHILE Carey finally won the right to discuss the matter at the November meeting, the subject was kept off the agenda. When the WFTU failed to hold another executive meeting to consider it during February, leaders of the Belgian and British unions called an independent meeting in London early last month.

It was attended by spokesmen for pro-ERP unions in the various Marshall Plan nations, as well as by representatives of the CIO and AFL. The meeting voted full cooperation with the European recovery program, called for no political strings in the operation of the program, and said it would help rather than hinder development of European democracy.

The London meeting was sharply criticized by some anti-ERP union groups in Europe, principally because it had taken place outside the framework of the WFTU. Carey, in conversations with European labor leaders last month, explained that such a conference was necessary in view of fast-moving action on the recovery program—and that if the WFTU wouldn't hold it, the meeting would be held outside the WFTU.

THE permanent committee set up by the London confab on ERP will hold a meeting this week, with Michael Ross scheduled to represent CIO. He will then move on to Rome for the WFTU parley.

Both the bureau and committee meetings, however, have scheduled long and complex lists of problems for study.

They include problems of the administration of the WFTU by the secretariat under the direction of Louis Saillant—which have brought forth criticism from CIO at various times; problems of unions in Germany, Palestine, Greece and India; relations with the UN Social & Economic Council; and plans for the biennial World Labor Congress, now scheduled to be held in Brussels, Belgium, late this fall.

FATHERS AND SONS: Strikers and their children protest lockout by the East Side and Comprehensive bus lines. The CIO transport workers have been on the picket lines two weeks, following companies' attempted change in bus schedules which would have thrown many out of work. Bus drivers on three other lines have voted to go out if wage talks fail.

CIO Snubs Oakes' Bid For Office

THE Illinois State CIO, the Illinois State PAC, the Chicago CIO and the Chicago CIO Regional Office have all unanimously "rejected and repudiated" the gubernatorial candidacy of Grant Oakes, president of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers.

Oakes, a supporter of Henry A. Wallace, has been nominated for governor on the Illinois Progressive Party ticket. The four CIO groups assailed the third party move and denounced it as a "fantasy."

Newspaper wire services and daily newspapers last week carried stories which reported labor had taken a beating as all Republican Congressional incumbents were renominated in Illinois.

The stories were an exaggeration. Here are the facts supplied by State PAC chief Frank Annunzio.

CIO-PAC entered only two of Illinois' 25 Republican Congressional districts. Here is what happened (attention AP and UP):

14th District: CIO backed Walter Miller against incumbent Chauncey Reed. The latter won, 30,537 to 17,116. That was in sharp contrast to 1944, when Reed was nominated, 40,951 to 7717.

15th District: Labor split in the primary here, the AFL backing Troll Bridge and the CIO indorsing Henry Burkardt against incumbent Noah Mason. The latter won with 25,673 votes to 9385 for Bridge and 9376 for Buckardt. In 1944, Mason, unopposed, had 30,000 votes.

In Illinois' legislative primary, a CIO Auto Workers' member, Harvey Pearson, won the Republican assembly nomination in the 8th Senatorial (13th Congressional) District. The district is overwhelmingly Republican.

In the Democratic Congressional primaries, Frank Brown, a member of the CIO Steelworkers, defeated Alvird Sheetz, an officer of an FE local, for the nomination in the 19th District.

Brown is mayor of Kewanee, Illinois.

CIO Unit Wins In Court Suit Over Funds

A District of Columbia Federal district court judge has appointed receivers for the National Federation of Telephone Workers, independent.

Judge Mathew F. McGuire, acting on a motion from the American Union of Telephone Workers, an affiliate of CIO's Telephone Workers' Organizing Committee, named Attorneys Keith L. Seegmiller and Al Philip Kane, both of Washington, D. C., as receivers and issued an injunction to help them carry out their duties. At the same time, he denied an AUTW motion for a judgment on the pleadings.

(A judgment on the pleadings means that the parties would forego a trial and allow the judge to make a decision based on their arguments.)

The NFTW, according to CIO-TWOC secretary-treasurer Ted Silvey, operated as a loose federation of independent telephone unions. It had voted to set up trustees, put its assets into cash and distribute them.

A new organization, the Communication Workers of America, was to be set up. Trustees were to be named to carry out the liquidation of NFTW. But, said Silvey, large numbers of NFTW members affiliated with CIO after the phone strike of 1947. Because of that affiliation, according to Silvey, the trustees of NFTW first rented and then sold various equipment and assets to CWA, and loaned that organization money. Most of the trustees are officers of CWA. AUTW contended they had no power to act as they did.

More N. Y. Bus Workers Vote To Join Strike For Better Pay

NEW YORK CITY, which has prided itself on having the world's longest ride for a nickel, was facing a transit crisis. CIO Transport Workers' patience in awaiting pay increases had worn out.

The union bargains for some 42,000 employes on both city and private bus, trolley and subway lines.

Refused an additional share of state taxes by Gov. Thomas Dewey and the legislature, the city has been operating its subways at a deficit.

Accordingly, union demands for wage increases, first submitted last October, were put on ice pending a fare increase or some other means of increasing the city's revenue.

Last week, after talks with three private bus companies broke off and while Mayor William O'Dwyer was surveying pros and cons of a fare rise, the bus employes voted to strike unless demands are met. Employes of East Side and Comprehensive Omnibus Companies have been on strike two weeks.

Although the state Condon-Wadlin Law prohibits city and state employes from striking, TWU Pres. Michael Quill warned that the subways would "go down of their own weight" following a bus walkout due to the burden of extra passengers. For that reason, he said, it would be unnecessary to call a subway strike.

Maritime: At a joint conference of CIO maritime unions, delegates recommended "that all unions strike together for their common demands, stay out on strike together and go back to work together" in case negotiations fail.

The Natl. Maritime Union last week held an initial session with representatives of 40 steamship companies. Earlier Pres. Harry Bridges, CIO Longshoremen and Warehousemen, announced that "accord has been reached on nothing" in meetings with representatives of the Waterfront Employers Association.

Utility: A strike that may determine the future of collective bargaining in the entire utilities industry began at an Ohio Power Co. plant near Brilliant, O., last week.

The walkout started after the company refused to recognize NLRB certification of the CIO Utilities Workers at its George Tidd plant. Three weeks ago the Board ordered the company to bargain with the union, but the decision is being appealed by the company in Federal court. Although the NLRB's order for an election last year was not challenged by the employer, it is now contending that many of the employes are "supervisory" and were ineligible to participate in the poll.

About 48 hours after the Tidd plant strikers threw picket lines around the company's plants at Wheeling, W. Va., and Philo, O., the company obtained injunctions in state courts against picketing the two non-struck stations.

Ever Meet Cop Like This One

At least one police chief in the country doesn't intend to be used as a strikebreaker.

When an attorney for the struck Armour plant in Omaha, Neb., urged the city council to have police usher scabs through the CIO picket lines, Police Chief Boesen drew the line.

"If they start that, I'm through," he declared.

ACW Bank's Birthday

The Amalgamated Bank of New York—one of the country's two labor-owned banking institutions—celebrated its silver anniversary last week.

The bank is owned by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, CIO, which also operates a "younger" bank in Chicago. The Deny Craft Union Election Plea in Steel Plants

IN a precedent-making decision, the NLRB has rejected a craft union's request for separate elections in two steel plants.

The ruling was a victory for industrial unions, which, under the Taft-Hartley Act, ran the danger of being split into numerous craft units.

Petitioner for the elections was the AFL Bricklayers Union, which sought separate units at the Natl. Tube Co., Lorain, O., and the American Rolling Mills plant, Middletown, O. The CIO Steelworkers for many years have held a contract covering all production and maintenance workers at the first plant, and the Armco Independent Federation, Inc. in the second.

The two main factors on which the decision was based were the close integration of the bricklayers' work with the whole steel-making process and the relatively long history of plant-wide bargaining in the industry. It was on these two points that the Steelworkers based their opposition to the election.

NLRB OK's Pension Talks, T-H Says 'No'

Employers must bargain on pension or retirement plans if requested by the workers, the NLRB has ruled.

In a case involving the Inland Steel Co., the Board ruled that the company's refusal to bargain with the CIO Steelworkers on an old age and retirement program was in violation of the Taft-Hartley Law.

Since the union has not filed non-Communist affidavits or financial data as required by the T-H law, the Board cannot enforce the decision.

The pension program was put into effect before the union became the bargaining agent. The union had sought since then to discuss coverage or modification of the plan.

"In substance," the opinion stated, "the company's monetary contribution to the pension plan constitutes an economic enhancement of the employe's money wages. Realistically viewed, this type of wage enhancement or increase, no less than any other, becomes in integral part of the entire wage structure. . . ."

GOP WOOS ORGANIZED LABOR

If we didn't know about the elections of next November we might suspect that spring had something to do with the GOP's decision to go a-courtin'.

Newest object of Republican affection is organized labor—er, that is, the votes that unionists will cast next fall.

While we have no illusions about the romance culminating in marriage, as the society writers say, we think it worthwhile to give details of the courtship.

The Republican National Committee has issued a 16-page "love letter" designed to convince American workers that the Taft-Hartley Act is a wonderful piece of legislation.

Ten pages are devoted to cartoons which raise phony issues and then knock them down.

Three pages are used to list the "protections" provided by T-H for individual workers, for unions, for employers and the public—with only about a half page devoted to employer benefits.

The "pay-off" is on the back page, where the GOP seeks to prove that it is the workingman's best friend. One paragraph says:

"The Republican Party has consistently provided and fought for the long-range welfare of the worker—not short-term, politically motivated advantages that will back-fire and in the long run curtail his freedom and endanger his economic welfare."

It was altogether fitting and proper that the GOP should have employed the comic book technique in its love-making attempt—because nothing more amusing has shown up on the political scene in many a moon.

Simple Issue: Higher Wages If you're looking for a trade union issue that's easy to understand and even easier to appreciate, you can find it in the strike of the United Packinghouse Workers against the Big Four packers.

Prices went up—way up. Buying power of UPW members went down.

Packing industry profits skyrocketed.

The union asked for a pay increase, reduced its original request, then offered a fair arbitration deal, which the packers turned down.

The union then went on strike.

The workers need the pay increase they originally asked for. The packers can afford to grant it.

Yes, it's a simple issue—a strike for higher pay. It's a strike that deserves the moral and financial support of all CIO members.

Not Waiting Until Fall CIO groups throughout the country are operating on the theory that they can't afford to wait until September or October to forge weapons for the political battle that will be waged in November.

They're right, of course, because the weapons are an awareness of the issues, qualifying to vote and setting up organizations that will encourage heavy balloting.

Real progress is being made. State, city, precinct and block organizations are beginning to function smoothly.

Politics being what it is, it costs money to campaign successfully. So, if you've got a few bucks to spare, send them to PAC.

Commie Smear Campaign Under Way

CIO Leaders Called Dictators Because They Won't Follow The Party Line

By ALLAN L. SWIM

PHILIP Murray is a dictator with strong fascist leanings—a misguided guy who's selling the CIO down the river.

Jim Carey's nothing more than a tool of the Vatican, a vicious war-monger who wants to make cannon-fodder out of American youth.

John Brophy believes in dictatorial methods, too, and even tries to practice "Japanese thought control."

The CIO News is merely a junior edition of the Hearst newspapers and its editor is as bad as Col. McCormick.

At least that's what those sterling patriots, the Communists, are saying these days.

And they're even suggesting that our next step will be to support Franco!

THE party line mouthpiece, the Daily Worker, is having a wonderful time trying to prove that its war-time "hero" Murray is a peace-time heel.

It has been aiming its editorial pop-guns in Murray's direction and firing away with frequent regularity. One of the little editorial dandies it carried recently was headed "Murray and the 'Bandits'."

"Neither Clinton Golden nor Philip Murray's connivance with the reign of terror against the Greek people will save the Greek fascists," it said.

"Will Franco Spain be Murray's next on the list of allies? It would be a simple matter, after all, to whitewash some of the cruder aspects of the bloody dictatorship in Spain for American CIO approval."

BACK in the days when the Yanks weren't coming and there wasn't going to be a second front, Murray was the enemy of the common man, according to the party liners.

He was "elevated to sainthood," as he puts it, when the German-Russian alliance was broken and the U. S. entered into the war.

Now he's back in the Red doghouse—because he supported the European Recovery Program and opposed the creation of a third political party in 1948.

So abuse is being heaped upon him and his colleagues. An attempt is being made to paint them as men who play footsie with the fascists.

Murray didn't change—but the party line did.

THE best way to illustrate the "liberal" and "tolerant" manner in which the Daily Worker has been handling its campaign against the CIO leadership is to quote from the paper.

For example:

"Top officials moved swiftly last week to establish a tightly-controlled reactionary political dictatorship over the CIO and smother pro-Wallace opposition to the Truman administration's war drive.

"All signs indicate the CIO leadership is preparing to force something distasteful down the throats of the membership . . ."

"The CIO is even ahead of the State Department in a policy of political blackmailing."

"Like vultures that hopefully watch for carcasses, several sneaky characters in the leadership of James B. Carey forces in the UE, and UAW leaders worked out a strategy . . ."

"The firing of Harry Bridges as Northern California regional director of the CIO . . . is only the opening shot to turn the CIO into a political dictatorship."

FEW union-hating sweat-shop operators have gone as far in the dirty business of name-calling and smearing as has George Morris, columnist for the Daily Worker.

But, what the heck?

Nobody expected him or the Worker to do otherwise after the CIO leadership threw its support behind ERP and against the third party.

We're neither surprised nor excited by the Worker's would-be character assassination campaign.

We merely thought that readers who are fortunate enough not to read the Worker might like to know what it's been saying.

NAM Says 14 Million Stockholders--But 61,000 Get Gravy

A MAN we know who is handy with a pencil has been doing some figuring on Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers figures. He has analyzed a recipe concocted and highly touted by the NAM—and finds that it is based on an ancient 50-50 formula for rabbit pie. (The formula: one rabbit and one horse.—Ed.)

Seems a short time ago the NAM came up with a new figure —14,000,000 stockholders in America. That's supposed to prove that high profits are good for the country because they go to so many people—widows and orphans and such.

Confidently, this friend who knows about these things says the 14,000,000 figure is probably padded—lots of duplication, he says—but we won't argue about that. We'll just take the NAM figure at face value for the moment.

Now the Securities and Exchange Commission, a government agency and an institution in whose statistics we have much more confidence than we do in NAM, says that 61,000 people get half of the dividends from American corporations.

Get it?—14,000,000 stockholders, but 61,000 of them get half the gravy.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP BY BEN YOMEN

"Of course, it was self-defense, wasn't it?"

Paternalism

SOME day workers in unorganized mills will wake up to the fact that wages duplicating those the union wins and vacations similar to those in contract plants are no substitute for the freedom union organization brings.

Some day workers in unorganized mills will wake up to the fact that none of these handouts and sops are safe unless the workers through their union have a democratic voice over all aspects of their working conditions.

When that day comes, workers will organize and put an end to the evil practice that is known as paternalism.

Paternalism is evil because it is an attempt to use a mess of pottage to bribe workers away from their birthright of freedom.

Paternalism is evil because it is a fraud. For there is nothing secure about wages or vacations as long as it remains in the employer's power alone to decide whether they should be given.

When the day comes that workers realize the evils of paternalism, we will see a new birth of freedom in our industrial southland. For through union organization, workers will win the freedom of having a voice over their working conditions and through this freedom they will win a standard of living higher than anything we have ever seen.

Poor Monument To Those Who Lived

IN a little park in the center of Lorain, Ohio, citizens have erected a huge white honor roll—dedicated to the men who fought and died in World War II.

In the midst of a mud flat, just two miles away, the citizens have erected a memorial to the men who fought and came back.

This memorial is a dirty, disease-breeding housing project—which cares for only about a tenth of the city's home-hungry, house-starved veterans, who swapped tin hats for tin houses.

This project wasn't enough. So the county obtained 60 trailers from an Army camp—trailers built for use in the South—and placed them on the cold shores of Lake Erie.

THE story of Lorain and its acute housing shortage is told in a radio script prepared by the Ohio CIO Council. It says:

"The best way to get the real picture of housing in Lorain, and remember that Lorain is just typical of the rest of the state, is to talk to the people most affected.

"There's a Navy veteran, who has a wife and two youngsters. They are natives of Lorain—and the sailor's wife was embarrassed.

"'Please don't use my name,' she begs. 'I've lived here all of my life. I don't want people to know I live under these awful conditions.

"'Anyway, I'm better off than the others. My trailer is near the toilets. I don't have too far to carry the children when they have to go to the bathroom in the middle of the night.'

"IN a nearby trailer, a former Army flier, veteran of many combat missions, talks about heating trailers.

"'Why, in winter time,' he said, 'I can place a pan of chocolate on top of this cabinet (the cabinet was five feet tall) and it will melt. At the same time, a pan of water on the floor will freeze.'

"An anti-aircraft gunner, who wooed and wed an English girl, was a little rueful.

"'I didn't intend to bring her back to this,' he said. 'You see she was bombed out of Exeter and I wanted to make up for it when she came here.

"'Now the six of us—my wife, our four youngsters (the two babies are twins) and myself live in this little trailer.'

IN trailer after trailer there were children suffering from bad colds and other ailments.

"'We can't let them out to play because of the mud,' the mothers agreed.

"The mud is almost indescribable. Cinder paths, two feet wide, were put in last fall. Until then, there were no paths. Now you slip into mud over your ankle if you let one foot stray from the path.

"For all this the veteran pays well. His trailer rent is $27 a month. On top of this he pays $20 to $30 a month for fuel to heat his trailer home. His electric bill runs $10 a month, for every trailer dweller has purchased an electric heater to try to keep the place warm for the little ones."

THE story continues, revealing some of the effects of the bad housing situation:

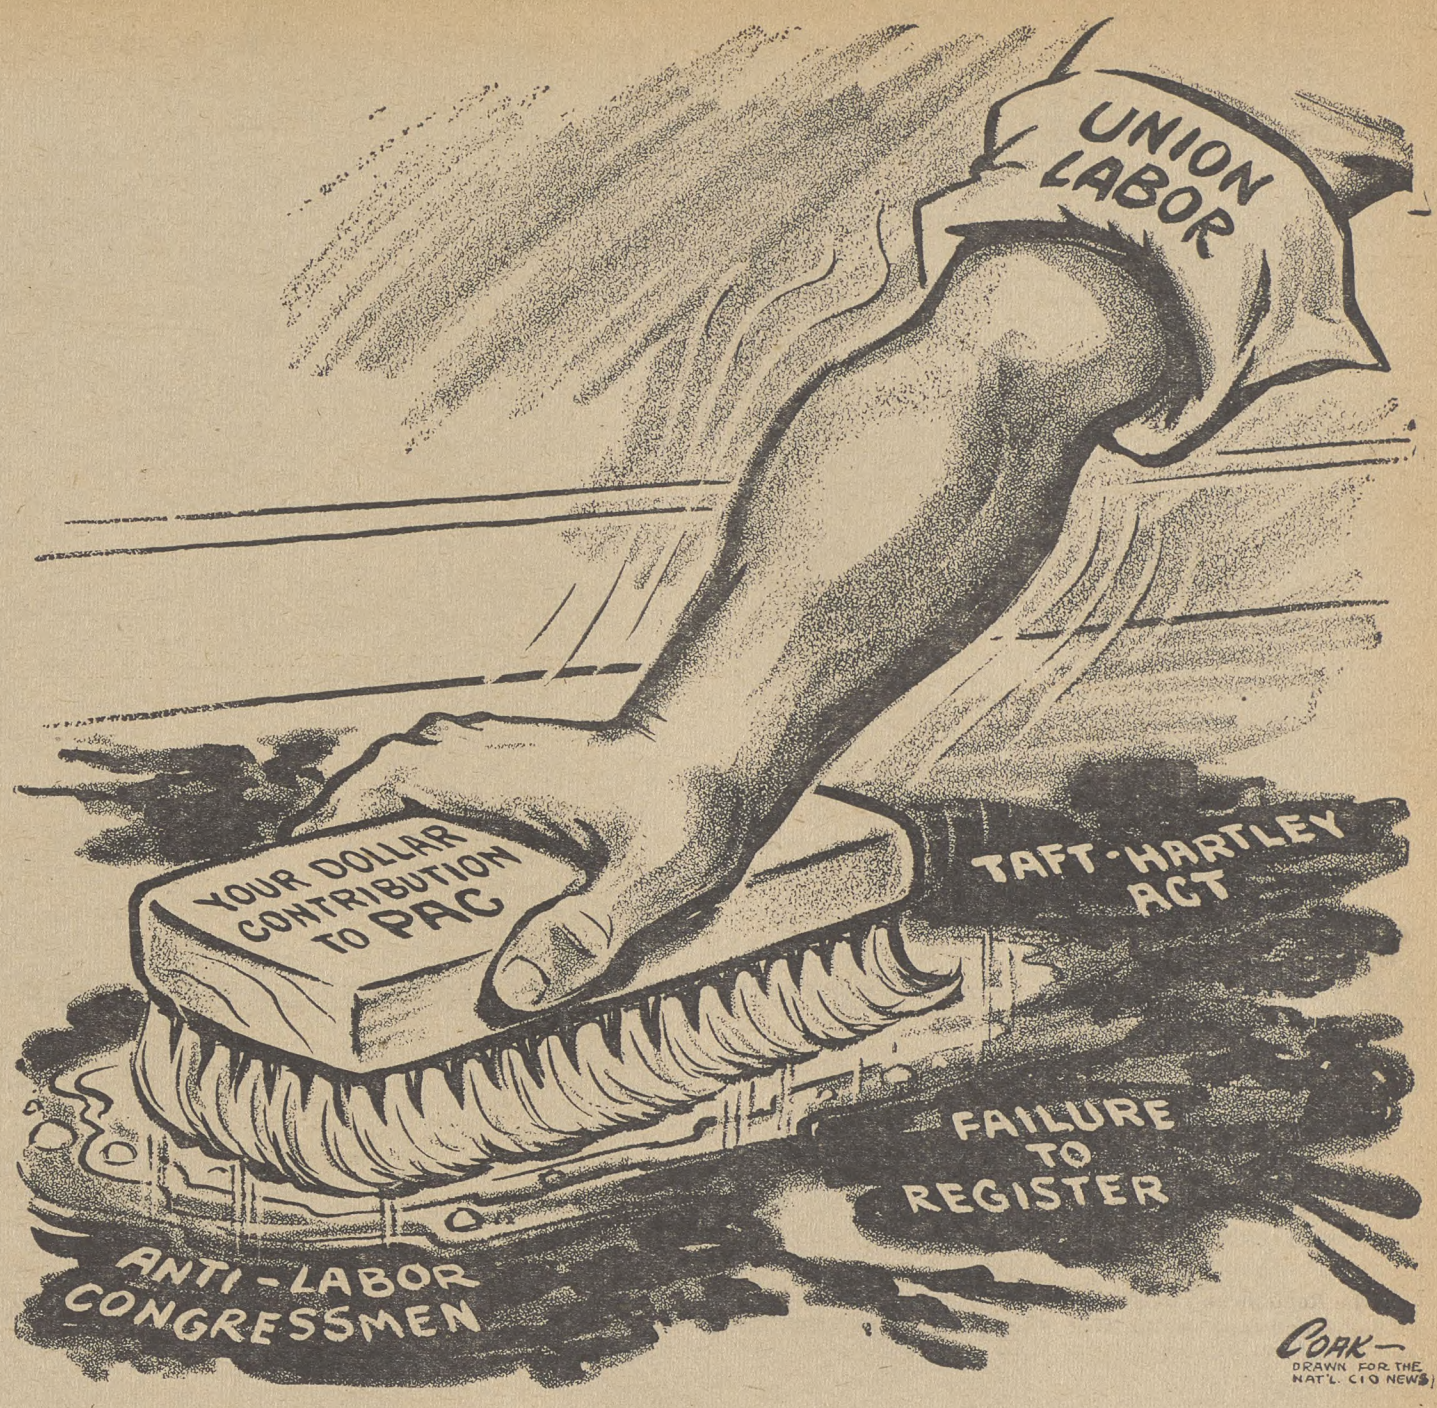
"Police say crimes are on the upswing. The jail is always crowded. Fire officials can't sleep nights. They are haunted by fear of what would happen in a nighttime fire in one of the overcrowded homes.

"Juvenile delinquency is increasing. Broken homes are more numerous."

Then to Senators Bricker and Taft and other lawmakers "who hasten to do the bidding of the big-moneyed interests and ignore the common man" is addressed this question:

"Which is more important—the health and safety of millions of Americans or the bankrolls of real estate interests?"

TIME FOR SPRING CLEANING



Printer's Arrest Ends 'Cracker' Machine in Augusta, Ga.

IT took the aroused citizenry of Augusta, Ga., four years to shake off the grip of the corrupt "Cracker" machine, which in the words of a veteran, dominated the residents "the way Hitler dominated Europe."

The story of the fight against the machine, which was run by John Kennedy as Public Safety director, was told by Lawrence Lader in a recent issue of "This Week" magazine.

The "Crackers" saw to it that only 9,000 voters out of a population of 66,000 ever registered. They paid the polltax of their members, registered hundreds of others fraudulently, brought in dummy voters from another town and canvassed the local houses of prostitution for voters.

The battle to oust Kennedy and his cohorts started when Bridges Evans, a printer, criticized the machine in public. Two policemen arrested him without a warrant at his printing shop, dragged him off to police headquarters where he was photographed, fingerprinted and held incommunicado.

THIS was only one of many similar cases of intimidation, but it was the spark needed to set off the fire of public indignation. The town's newspapers ran the story and were flooded by hundreds of letters and telegrams of protest against "Boss" Kennedy, who had two Fire Dept. captains as chauffeurs for his sleek $4,000 Cadillac that was charged to the city.

So great was the terror that only three of the letters and wires to the newspapers were signed. Only one small group, the Augusta Citizens Union, organized by novelist Barry Fleming, dared to fight the Cracker machine in the open.

Fleming, who had traveled widely and had seen the dictatorships of Hitler and Mussolini, had come back to Augusta to live in the house his father had willed him. The year before he had helped stop the plan to the "Cracker" machine to pull down Augusta's beautiful and historic courthouse and replace it with a new building, whose construction would "line" the "Cracker" pockets.

FLEMING sponsored a big public meeting, which with stoppage of all construction when the nation went to war, saved the courthouse. Now with public feeling crystallized by Evans' arrest, Fleming and the handful of people who constituted the board of directors of the Citizens Union issued a call for volunteers. A thousand responded within a week.

Fear was so widespread that in the 1942 election they could get only one man to run for city council. He was badly beaten. In the 1943 election they entered five candidates against the "Crackers." Their investigation revealed that of 9166 registered voters, 3735 had been registered from addresses where they did not live.

Waiting until 11 o'clock the night before the election, the "Cracker" machine announced that no challenges would be allowed at the polls, and that the police would remove any Citizens Union representative who attempted to challenge.

THE Citizens Union decided to withdraw all its candidates from the race. But it did not quit. In 1944, it decided to concentrate all its work in one residential ward. They buttonholed acquaintances, rang doorbells and put up posters. Their aggressive campaign paid off with the election of their candidate "Chich" Lehmann.

Fleming now found allies, a group of veterans who wanted no dictatorship at home. They entered six candidates for the 1946 councilmanic race. It was a rough and tumble fight.

"Cracker" mobs circled the polls on election day. City offices were closed so that city employes could do electioneering. Police shrugged their shoulders when a Citizens Union watcher challenged a "Cracker" voting another person's name.

All the Citizens Union candidates won. Kennedy retired as Commissioner of Public Safety, his Cadillac was sold and he moved out of his rent-free apartment in the city-owned building. The machine's grip was completely broken when its candidates captured all positions on the school board.

Technicality Ousts Augusta's Manager

A technicality will cause the dismissal of City Manager Roark at Augusta, Ga.

Citizens Union followers had prevailed on the legislature to let the voters decide by referendum whether they wanted the city manager form of government.

The Georgia Supreme Court last week ruled that the city manager would have to go because of a technicality—the failure of the legislature's record clerks to attach proof of advertisements to the official copy of the act authorizing the new government.

Augusta will now have to return to the council-mayor form of government.

D. C. Lets Negroes Picket White House But Is Jim Crow Otherwise

WASHINGTON, D. C. is one of America's most beautiful cities — as well it should be.

And, Washington, D. C. is one of the Nation's most flagrant Jim Crow towns—as well it should not be.

But, even the Nation's Capital has its moments. Negroes are barred from almost all restaurants and other public places—but they are often seen in groups picketing the White House. So, at least one basic right is granted them—But that is far from perfection in Washington's sordid denial of most civil rights.

There were other items of civil liberty news:

Philip Murray: received the award of the Council against Intolerance (see below).

New Orleans CIO: adopted a stirring statement on basic freedoms. (see adjoining column.)

Clifford Durr: This member of the Federal Communications Commission in a speech before the Natl. Citizens' Conference on Civil Liberties, declared:

"The world today is threatened by the aggression of a totalitarian dictatorship. But we cannot safely assume that the source of our danger lies in any one nation, ruler, organization or ideology. The name of the dictator is fear."

He assailed the Executive "Loyalty" Order as a contributory factor to this fear. "I am convinced that the evils of this order far outweigh any possible good that can come from it. It has within it such potentialities of injustice, oppression, and cruelty that its administration will inevitably result in the alienation rather than the promotion of the loyalty of Government employes.

"I am convinced that the end result of the order will be to endanger national security rather than to safeguard it.

"It impairs the morale, and therefore, the efficiency of Government employes by exposing their reputations and jobs to continuous attack by nameless accusers. It discourages the entry—and in some cases bars—into government service of men of ability, integrity, experience and imagination because of their inability to answer unspecified charges of unidentified informers.

"I intend to force all political, economic and social thinking into orthodox patterns to cope with new and unorthodox problems."

Walter Reuther: The CIO Auto Workers' head issued a sharp demand for government action against a mob which destroyed the Columbus, O., home of Frank Hashmall, a Communist Party official.

Reuther declared. "The UAW, who has successfully resisted Communists in its ranks is opposed to political persecution, whether it happens in Prague or Columbus or Windsor." (An incident similar to the Columbus one occured in Windsor, Canada, recently.)

Reuther asked Pres. Truman and the Justice Dept. to act. At a press conference, Truman deplored the Columbus violence—and that aimed against a Wallace rally in Evansville, Ind.—but said local authorities should correct such ills.

Amnesty: A group of prominent Americans, including CIO Amalgamated Clothing Pres. Jacob Potofsky, demanded restoration of civil and economic rights to Selective Service violators.

Dr. Edward U. Condon: At a dinner in his honor, sponsored by the Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists, the chief of the U. S. Bureau of Standards declared the U. S., "the most powerful and wealthiest of nations," is in the grip of baseless hysteria and fear which leaves it unable to consider world problems "in a sane and balanced fashion."

Condon has been under attack by the Thomas House Committee on UnAmerican affairs, despite the fact the FBI gave him a clean bill of loyalty.

Witnesses: Rep. George Bender (R., O.), in an indirect slap at the Thomas committee, said a special sub-committee on Govt. Purchasing Policy has prepared new rules for Congressional committees which protect witnesses' rights.

Murray: 'Must Advance Human Decency'

CIO PRES. PHILIP MURRAY was presented with the Thomas Jefferson Award for his work against intolerance, but declared: "I want to make it clear that I disavow the personal element involved in it. The award properly belongs to the CIO."

Besides Murray, recipients of the awards included:

Sinclair Lewis

Labor and industry: Clarence Derwent (head of Actors' Equity), Charles E. Wilson; public service: Ford Frick, Branch Rickey, Jackie Robinson, George Houser, Bayard Rustin, Bedros Babarian and Herbert King; education: Archbishop Joseph Ritter, Sabra Holbrook, George F. Zook; the arts: Laura Z. Hobson, Darryl Zanuck, Bill Mauldin, Dore Schary; journalism and literature: Bruce Bliven, Norman Cousins, Sinclair Lewis.

"ALL MEN ARE . .": Lynn Hogan (left) and W. W. Smith check the final draft of the civil rights report accepted by the New Orleans CIO Council. Hogan is a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild. Smith is affiliated with Local 1191, United Cement Workers. Two other members of the committee, Lucille Savoie, Textile, and Ernest Wright, Amalgamated Clothing, were not present when the picture was taken. The report is printed in an adjoining column.

Murray, in his acceptance speech, declared:

"The CIO, of which I have the honor to serve as president, was established to institute conditions of justice in the economic field where discrimination has always played too large a part.

"From our very beginning, we set forth the principle that within our ranks, and within our dealings with the community, there would be no discriminations based on race, creed, or color.

"None of our CIO statisticians, we are happy to say, can furnish the figures as to how many Negroes, Jews, Catholics, or any other category of human beings we number in our membership.

"Differences in race, color, or creed, stemming as they do from Nature or from man's innermost conscience, can by no stretch of the imagination be considered as crimes. And yet there are those among us who treat such differences as crimes.

"No punishment exceeds that of denying a man the opportunity to work and support his family; of denying a child a seat in a school room; of denying a citizen the right to participate at the ballot box in the Government that rules over him; of denying human beings equality before the law; of denying them the right to participate fully and equally in the services which the community affords its residents.

"Man has a dual identity—he is a child of Nature and a child of God. As a child of Nature, he is an animal governed by the basic instincts of the animal; the desire to survive and reproduce his kind. In a state of Nature, man's only rule would, of course, be the survival of the fittest. To that end, he could take for his own use anything ready-to-hand provided he had the strength necessary to enforce his actions. The law of the jungle would be his only guide.

"You cannot, of course, legislate prejudices out of the heart of man. You can, however, legislate against putting vicious prejudices into practice in the community.

"That is why the CIO has given its full support to Federal and State fair employment practice legislation, to anti-poll tax legislation, to anti-lynch laws, and to all other measures that seek to put the stamp of public disapproval on prejudices arising out of differences in race, creed, or color.

"One of our most active committees is our Natl. CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination. That Committee is engaged every day with problems of this sort and with the application of the basic principle on which our organization was founded. The democracy of our society concerns itself with three types of equality.

"First — Economic equality, which concerns itself with equal opportunity to get a job and work at pay rates equal to those of all others employed on the same operation, with similar equality of opportunity to improve one's performance at work and to win deserved promotion.

"Second — Political equality — the right of every citizen as defined by the Constitution of the United States to participate at the ballot box in Federal, State and Local government on an equality with all other citizens.

"Third—Equality of opportunity to share in the services of the community, such as hotels, restaurants, railroad trains, schools, and all of the other services which exist only by reason of an implied agreement to serve the whole community.

"The CIO welcomes the opportunity to cooperate with the Council Against Intolerance and other outstanding groups of right-minded citizens in advancing these all-important programs of civil rights and human decency."

"We in Dixie can no longer

Thus goes the preamble of a report on civil rights, adopted by the Greater New Orleans CIO Council. It is particularly interesting because it comes from the Deep South.

The report was prepared by a committee of Lynn Hogan, chairman; Hazel Behenna, Lucille Savoie, W. M. Smith and Ernest Wright. Hogan, a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, did most of the writing of the report.

Here are excerpts:

"Two basic points, we believe, underline all human freedom:

"1. Certain inalienable rights (recognized in the Declaration and Constitution) are natural rights that belong to EVERY man because he is man—and they are as old as man himself is old. No. law or declaration GAVE those rights. Law merely recognized them.

"2. The democratic ideal of human dignity, as we know it today, had its roots in the Christian teaching that the human person is the image of God, and that all men are brothers under the fatherhood of God. From this Christian concept comes the respect for the dignity of the human person which is the foundation of Western Civilization. And religion teaches us that no men may outrage with impunity that human dignity which God Himself treats with reverence.

"Since Pres. Truman's Civil Rights message, we have heard outcry that Southern 'traditions' are in dire peril and that 'American ideals must be preserved.' (That may be passed as so much nonsense.)

"But a conspiracy of silence still clings around one most significant fact: It has cost the South millions upon millions of dollars to keep the Negro 'in his place.'

"SOME Southern opponents of the Civil Rights bills have pointed (child-like) to bias elsewhere—and there is no blinking the fact that some discriminiation against minorities is practiced throughout the country. But if we see discrimination practiced elswhere in retail-scale, we must admit that it is practiced wholesale here in Dixie.

"We know, too, that hand-in-hand with political repressions goes resistance to the Negro's organization in trade unions and resistance to his development of industrial skills. We know that the result is 'cheap labor,' and

"Therefore, in common decency, we believe that Congress has the duty and the obligation, at this session, to declare that no wage-earner shall be discriminated against —because of race, color, creed or national origin, in his struggle to provide for his family a decent home, and for his children adequate educational advantages and opportunity to lead useful and meaningful lives.

"We believe that Congress should prohibit artifices designed to restrict the right of citizens to vote. We believe it has that authority in this Amendment XV clauses 'The Congress shall have power to enforce provisions of this article by appropriate legislation.' While removal of the poll tax (as a requirement for voting on federal offices) would eliminate one of the barriers to free elections, we believe the job will be only half-done unless undue obstacles to registration likewise are prohibited.

" 'States' Rights' opposition to an anti-lynch law can hardly be offered in good faith, unless the states themselves wholeheartedly have done everything possible to prevent lynching or threat of lynchings.

"NONE will deny that compulsory segration in interstate travel offends the dignity of those forcibly segrated.

"And, the Mississippi Legislature knew the 'education' it didn't want. In that state the elector theoretically must be able to read or explain the state constitution 'satisfactorily.' But at the 1948 session, the Mississippi Legislature killed bills to require study of the constitution in high schools. Lawmakers raised the point that, to be graduated, students would have to have proved ability to read and explain the constitution. Then, said the lawmakers, 'Negroes graduating from high schools could use their diplomas as evidence to meet voting qualifications.'

"In the face of the Mississippi action, the argument for 'education' falls somewhat flat.

"Our Declaration of Independence ends with 'a firm reliance on Divine Providence' and our coins say, 'In God We Trust.' The time has come to give meaning to those words."

In The Spring A Company's Fancy Turns To Thoughts of Profits

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THIS spring season is a great time for profits, if you'll pardon the use of the word.

Such as:

St. Regis Paper's profit for the first quarter of '48 was more than 20% higher than in the same three months in '46—$4,494,193 vs. $3,698,826. And common shares had risen from 67 cents to 83.

(We know a guy who sold his St. Regis shares some years back for three cents a share.)

Sinclair Oil had a consolidated net income (profit) in 1947 of $48,776,126 after charges, taxes and reserve for depreciation and depletion. Compare that with the profit of $27,607,645 in '46 and Mr. Sinclair's little business gained 76% in profits.

Now take Pullman, Inc. In 1946 it cleared $2,686,919; in 1947 it was $6,329,589. That's an up of at least 130%.

Then, there's Humble Oil, which rose 72.7% over the 1946 figure.

And, Coca-Cola (New York)—$899,519 in '47 vs. $588,101 in '46. That's 52%. The profit that refreshes, eh kid?

Also, take a gander at Amerada Petroleum and gasp. In 1946, Amerada made $8,855,975 In 1947 it was $14,919,626. In both cases after all charges including—so help us—"intangible drilling costs."

Ford Motor Co. (Belgian) had profits of 68,901,250 Belgian francs in 1947 vs. 23,368,626 B. Frs. in 1946. (B. Frs. are worth about 2.3 cents.)

(You ladies'll have to be more hospitable to the Fuller Brush man. Fuller's '47 profits were down to $515,095 from $700,250 in '46.)

Ford of Canada in 1947 made $5,996,003 ("after $2,000,000 provision for possible inventory decline.") compared with 1946's loss of $239,448 ("Loss after giving effect to $380,000 tax credit").

Budd is doing oke, too. In 1946 a net loss of $3,979,536 ("after giving effect to $8,263,000 tax carry-back credit"). In 1947, a profit of $4,086,253.

And that isn't all on profits:

The Journal of Commerce, which just loves big business, straightfacedly brushes off the more than 40% rise in corporate profits for 1947 by saying it was "thanks more to a spotty 1946 performance than to a sharp rise in 1947."

The authority for the above 40% figure is the cautious Federal Reserve Board. It studied the state of 629 companies. Journal of Commerce remarks:

"However, earnings on current operations from 1946 to 1947 increased more than the figures indicate. Profits in 1946 were swollen by substantial tax credits." (We wouldn't mind having our income swollen by tax credits, thank you.)

Here's the percentage increase for key industries:

1. Iron and steel	45%
2. Machinery	91%
3 Autos	220%
4. Other transportation equipment	72%
5. Non-ferrous metals	40%
6. Other durable goods	43%
7. Foods, beverages & tobacco	0%
8. Oil	70%
9. Chemicals	26%
10. Other non-durables	25%
11. Miscellaneous services	3%

Iron Age, the revered mouthpiece of the steel industry, reports that 1947 earnings of 24 steel companies topped 1946 profits by 57%. Dividends were up 31%. Noted Iron Age: "That they rose only 31% is ascribed by steel executives to the need for keeping more money in the business."

Incidentally, the first 10 steel companies are listed by Iron Age (based on ingot capacity) as: U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Republic, Jones & Laughlin, Youngstown, National, American, Sharon, Inland, Wheeling

NOW ain't that all very nice for Big Business? But, how about us guys?

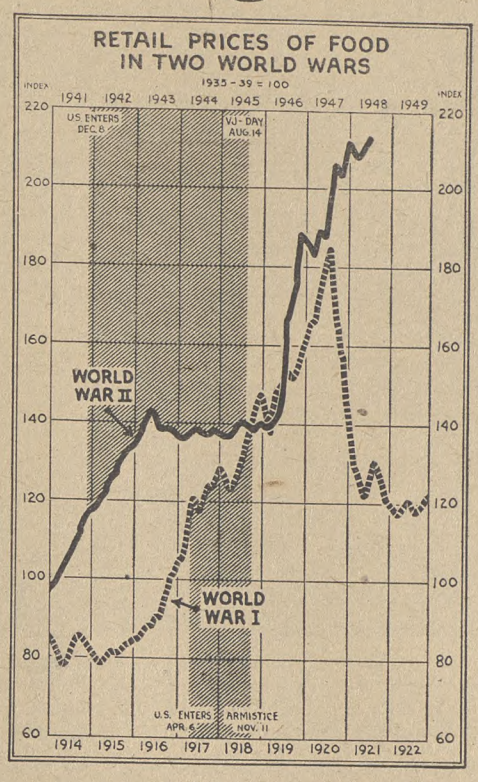
Well, let's look at the record. The CIO's Economic Outlook, in a survey of living costs, notes that soaring prices have forced a $200 rise in the "necessary minimum" budget announced several months ago by the Dept. of Labor's Bur. of Labor Statistics (Dr. Dorothy Brady, who directed the family study for BLS, was given an achievement award by the Women's Press Club for her work).

The CIO publication estimated that the BLS "budget," which had a median of $3250 a year for a husband, wife and two small children, should be increased to about $3450. BLS had based its estimates on June, 1947, price levels. Economic Outlook uses the price levels of recent months.

Ironically, the average American worker doesn't make $3450. He doesn't make $3250 either. Average wage for an industrial worker is about $2650 a year—if he works 52 weeks.

AND, the CIO publication points out, the "reproduction rate for urban women was about one-third higher in 1941 to 1946 than in 1935 to 1940." Economic Outlook said that the Natl. Association of Mfgrs. has "tried hopefully to undermine the obvious moral of the budget cost by claiming that many families have two or more earners." Actually, only one mother out of 10 in a four-person family is working or looking for work.

Economic Outlook's conclusion: the BLS family study constitutes "such powerful support to wage demands" that employers have sought to offset its use by resort to "misleading" arguments.



WAR VS. WAR: This chart shows that the trends of prices after World Wars I and II are completely opposite. Two years after World War I, prices (dotted line in graph) began to plunge. It's now nearly three years after War II.

Taft Opposes Government Regulation!

ROBERT Alphonso Taft just plain blew his top. He shouted:

"Now look, Mr. Reuther, suppose you get rid of the demagoguery and all this political stuff and talk economics."

Taft used that "Mr." as if he would have preferred not to. The occasion was a radio debate between the senior Senator from Ohio and CIO Auto Workers' Pres. Walter Reuther on Columbia's "People's Platform."

Here is why Taft blew his top: Said Reuther:

"Every time you start talking about helping the little fellow, you conveniently put a Socialist tag on it. That is what Mr. Hoover (referring to Herbert) did and . . ."

Taft interrupted to shout his "Now look."

Reuther went on:

"I am going to talk economics. I am trying to say that every time someone proposes something for the little fellow in the world, whether it is a worker or the small farmer, you get out a Socialistic tag, but when the RFC gives billions and helps to bail out big corporations, subsidizes the railroads and the shipping i n t e r e s t s, that, of course, is good American practice.

"What I am advocating is no more Socialistic than these other things, excepting it is an attempt for the people of America to try to have their Government help the little fellow instead of the big corporation. Now getting back to this . . ."

Taft again interrupted:

"I want to help the little fellow. Now, just let's . . ."

It was Reuther's turn to interrupt:

"How do you want to help the little fellow?"

Answered Taft: "I want to help the little fellow, and I say that the only way you can help the little fellow is to improve the plant, the machinery that he has, to increase the production in the U. S., and not by a lot of Government bureau regulation. It has never helped the little fellow yet, and never will."

(Taft is co-author of the Labor management Relations Act (Taft-Hartley) of 1947, which sets up a lot of Government bureau regulation over the little fellow.)

Dwight Cooke, of CBS, who moderated the show, broke in on Taft and said:

"All right, gentlemen, since you are both agreed you want to help the little fellow, let's go into three specific areas and see what kind of action both of you recommend to help the little fellow.' (He referred to the areas of Government, of unions and of business.)

Some of the remarks:

REUTHER: "I think the Government has got to take positive action with respect to price control. It has got to roll back the prices of basic commodities and take that roll-back out of the profits of American industry because those profits are scandalously high and they can afford to give up some of those profits in the way either of a wage increase or a price decrease.

"I say let free enterprise do all it can, but where free enterprise puts the selfish interest of private corporations above the welfare of the people, the Government, as a democratic agency of all the people, has to move in to protect the public welfare, and I say in this case the Government has not done it. It has strengthened m o n o p o l y and made it possible for people who have got too much to get more at the expense of the great mass of the people."

TAFT: "What can the Government do? I think the Government can put its own house in order, can reduce the taxes and the Government spending, because that simply adds to the prices and in the long run those taxes are passed right on to the consumer."

COOKE: "Gentlemen—if I can give you a back-handed compliment—it would be better for all of us if we had more Americans of your caliber, willing to be this frank and honest with your fellow-citizens."

Yachts vs. Bread

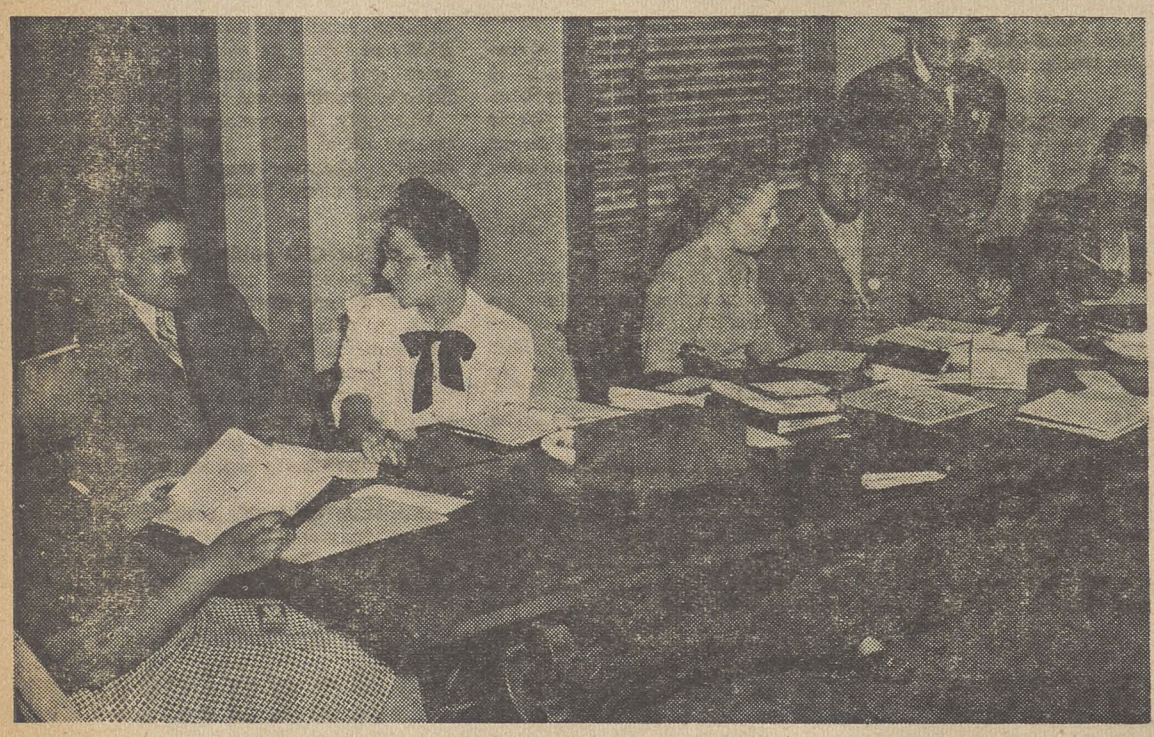
Walter Reuther in his CBS "People's Platform" debate with Sen. Robert A. Taft:

"The tax bill just passed by Mr. Taft and his group in Congress gives a man with four in his family, with a $2500 income, a $69 tax reduction, but gives a man with a $250,000 income a $34,700 tax reduction.

"This means more yachts and less bread and butter for the people."

KEEPING UP STRIKERS' MORALE

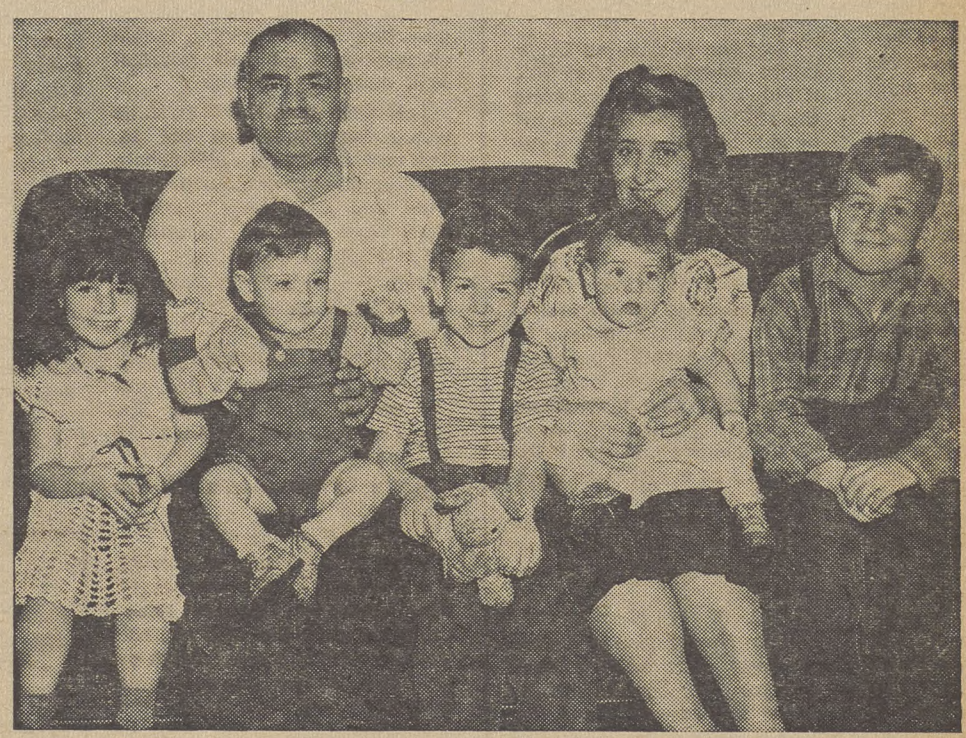
1 Workers and their families do without pay checks and use up their savings during a strike, but their morale must be maintained. The success of the strike and the demands for which they are battling depend on that morale. When the Packinghouse Workers went on strike, the Chicago CIO Council's Community Service Committee called together the UPWA counsellors and representatives of the private and public community agencies, as shown here, to work out plans. Myrna Bordelon and Ellsworth Smith of the CSC, standing, are talking it over with counsellors, who must know how to obtain aid for needy strikers and their families.



2 CSC not only trained new counsellors, but re-trained old ones. The counsellors serve at their union halls learning the workers' problems and referrin g them to the right agencies for help. Here in UPWA's Local 28's hall counsellors are at work, l. to r., Jane Martinez, Fred Hartz, Robert McKinley and Rozanna Thompson.

3 One of the big jobs of counsellors is to get strikers to file their unemployment compensation claims. The sign in the foreground is put there so strikers are given no false illusions about the certainty of collecting compensation.

4 After strikers use up all their resources, they are screened by union counsellors and sent to the Chicago Welfare Dept. Mrs. Ida Jolly, case worker at Chicago Welfare, talks over family needs with a striker. The department director says that the counsellors inform strikers well on welfare requirements.



5 Tony Swan—with six good reasons why he is on strike—is needed full time at strike headquarters. But the CSC arranged with the Salvation Army to help the family. In addition to the Salvation Army, Catholic Charities are also helping the families of some strikers.

BROPHY: 'THE CIO WOULD NOT EXIST POLITICALLY MINUS LOYAL AGENCIES'

ANSWERING criticism of CIO policy by a small minority of affiliates and industrial union Councils Dir. John Brophy has issued a detailed explanation of CIO's structural makeup.

In a letter to Morris Zusman and Jerome Posner, California CIO leaders who are backing the national policy against a third party in 1948 and in favor of the Marshall Plan, Brophy wrote:

"Unless it had agencies in all parts of the country through which local unions loyal to CIO policy could work in support of its program in the political field, the CIO would cease to be an organization so far as politics are concerned, and would be simply an aggregate of individuals or local unions, purposeless and powerless to protect the political interests of labor.

Pointing out that the CIO Executive Board's third-party-ERP stand was arrived at with the utmost democracy, Brophy made these distinctions between the rights of individuals and of councils:

"1. Every individual CIO member is free as a private citizen to vote, speak and act as he pleases in political matters. No one in the CIO has ever suggested the contrary. The pretense that the National CIO is dictating to any one as to how he should think, how he should speak, or what political organizations he should join, is a very serious and irresponsible misrepresentation calculated to mislead the membership of CIO.

"2. Pres. Murray has said that all our international unions have a moral obligation to support the national political policy. He has expressed satisfaction that the vast majority of CIO internationals have recognized this moral responsibility. On the other hand, everyone concedes that CIO internationals are autonomous, and if they or their locals choose to violate their moral obligations to CIO, they have the power to do so.

"I mention this point because the recent 'Statement in Defense of Democracy in CIO,' issued by the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council, which ought to be entitled 'A Statement to Disrupt Democratic Policy in CIO,' makes much of the fact that I gave guarantees of the autonomy of international unions in California in 1937.

"The statement deliberately confuses such autonomy on the part of the internationals with the obligation of industrial union councils, which are subsidiaries of the CIO, and which have a duty to follow CIO policy.

"3. The relationship of councils to the CIO is quite different from that of the individual CIO member, or the international unions or their locals, because our councils, like our PACs, are set up to carry out CIO policy, not to make it.

"Under the CIO constitution, the executive board issues rules governing the 'conduct, activities, affairs, and the suspension and expulsion of industrial union councils.' The CIO board has issued such rules. Among them is Rule 8, which says that 'council shall take no action or issue statements in conflict with CIO policy.'

"The decisions of the CIO Board and PAC in January make it clear that action bypassing the CIO statements on the third party and ERP is in conflict with CIO policy, and I so advised all Councils by circular letter on Mar. 8."

Brophy then noted: "It is true that our councils are composed of delegates from local unions and that these delegates naturally and properly reflect the views of the local unions which select them, and usually of the internationals to which these locals are affiliated. The fact that our councils are delegate bodies, however, does not alter their responsibilities to the national CIO, from which they receive their certificates of affiliation, and which may suspend or revoke those certificates.

"No doubt locals of autonomous internationals which choose to violate their moral obligations to follow CIO policy, will take steps locally to oppose CIO policy, but they have no right, either morally or legally, to use the official machinery of CIO, the councils or the PACs, to do so.

"All issues on which the CIO makes recommendations are not of equal importance. Sometimes, a wide margin is allowed for variation in policy, within the general framework of the official CIO position. In other words, our councils frequently have a broad discretion in carrying out CIO policy which is in fact a limited autonomy.

"But, when the national CIO takes a very sharply defined position, rejects compromises and emphasizes the basic importance of particular issues, as happened in this case, the responsibility of our councils to give positive aid becomes apparent."

Brophy went on to explain that the national policy of CIO is made by the convention, the board and the officers. The convention passes statements on general policy. The board applies those general policies to specific and current isues, as it did on the third party and ERP. The officers carry out policies.

He noted that officers of councils must take an oath to perform their duties under the rules of CIO. The same applies to committeemen of councils. Specifically, he was referring to PAC committees. PAC, he reminded the councils, is a creature of CIO. CIO sets its policies.

"It is precisely this policy of majority decision and concerted action which the CIO calls for in asking the Councils to support the declarations against a third party in 1948 and in favor of ERP.

"Unified action in politics and our defense in the T-H case are based on the same principle, our right to act as an organization, and not as scattered individuals, in the political field."

LOUISIANA: 1st Convention Stresses PAC

By JACKIE McCULLOUGH

ADOPTION of a political action program, including specific proposed legislation for presentation to the incoming State Legislature highlighted the first constitutional convention last week of the Louisiana State CIO Council.

The Convention brought together 146 delegates from 52 CIO locals throughout the State.

Following the invocation by Rev. Vincent J. O'Connell, chairman of the Catholic Committee of the South, delegates were welcomed to New Orleans by Mayor deLesseps S. Morrison.

Stressing the fact that New Orleans' continued progress and well-being will depend largely on the well-being of its citizens, "the 80% or more who are working people," the Mayor credited organized labor with a large share of responsibility for past progress.

He recalled his experience as an NRA attorney, citing the "unbelievably low wages and poor working conditions" which formerly prevailed in much of the city's industry.

"Organized labor," he declared, "has been a great factor in improving these conditions and obtaining for all our people the decent wages and improved standards of living which they, as Americans, have a right to expect."

Pledging the cooperation of his office in maintaining good labor-management relations in New Orleans, Morrison said, "You no longer need fear that policemen will ride trucks through picket lines. They are neutral in labor disputes."

State CIO Dir. Fred C. Pieper acted as temporary chairman of the meeting until the new officers were sworn in by John Brophy, CIO Director of Industrial Union Couicils: Harry Zebal, Chemical Workers, president; Fritz Flebbe, Brewery Workers, vice-president; and Hazel Behanna, Packinghouse, secretary-treasurer.

Brophy stressed the importance of Industrial Union Councils as a means of acquainting the public with CIO's program. He pointed out that in actively supporting the ERP legislation, the CIO voiced not only the sentiments of its members, but the sentiment of millions of Americans eager to lend aid to the war-devastated European countries.

Brophy added, "It ill becomes any nation to question the purposes of the American people in supporting ERP. In fact, only in time of war has the American Labor Movement ever been so united as it was in support of this program."

LT.-Gov.-elect Bill Dodd pledged the full cooperation of the Earl K. Long administration with organized labor. Expressing agreement with the Convention's resolution on appointments to public office, Dodd promised that Labor would be represented on a State Council, to be set up by the new administration.

"And incidentally," he added, "just a word about political action. I've read your literature on registration and other phases of political action—on the responsibilities of citizens in a democracy. It should be taught in our schools. More than that, you owe it to yourselves and to your public officials to educate them on just exactly what you're trying to do."

Final speaker was Dir. Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee. Bittner declared that "through organization will come the real answer to such problems as discrimination, sub-standard pay, and dozens of others."

The executive board of the new groups will be chosen by the membership.

WAY DOWN YONDER: Mayor deLesseps ("Chep") Morrison, of New Orleans, addresses the first constitutional convention of the Louisiana CIO. On the platform with him are (from left) Harry Zebal, Chemical, later elected president of the council; William Allen, Oil; Fred C. Pieper, state CIO director; Dan Powell, Southern director, PAC; John Brophy, CIO Council director, and R. W. Starnes, Mississippi director, CIO Organizing Committee. In foreground is Mrs. Edna Virgens, Pieper's secretary. Morrison kept his speaking engagement despite an auto accident the night before which necessitated seven stitches in his head.

CIO PHONE COMMITTEE OPENS MICHIGAN DRIVE

FRESH from its sweeping victory in West Virginia, the CIO's Telephone Workers Organizing Committee is training its big guns on Michigan.

Allan S. Haywood, TWOC chairman and CIO vice-president, said that 18 key organizers on their way from Virginia to Detroit to spur the drive. They will be assisted by leaders from ACEW and AUTW locals in Michigan.

Directing the Michigan drive will be August Scholle, Michigan CIO president and CIO regional director.

Haywood said that the UAW-CIO has made a financial contribution to the Michigan drive to bring telephone workers into the CIO. Pledges of aid have also ben made by steel, textile, clothing and ship unions, he said.

Haywood went to Detroit to chair a national conference of representatives of the 85,000 workers in TWOC.

TWOC affiliates will press for "substantial" wage increases, the conference decided. The AUTW, key long distance affiliate, has already established a demand of 30c an hour and other TWOC units are expected to follow suit.

The giant American Telegraph & Telephone Corp., last year obtained rate increases of $118,000,000, the CIO pointed out, and can pay out substantial wage increases without further increasing rates.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Reg. Dir. James J. Leary, Kansas City, Mo., advises the UAW-CIO won an NLRB election at the Continental Industries, Inc., Lake City, Mo. There were 503 employes eligible to vote. Of the employes voting, 386 voted for UAW-CIO and 49 voted for no union. The organizational work was directed by Carl Stevens, Int. Rep. for UAW-CIO, assisted by Intl. Rep. Baker of USA, Field Reps. Henry Schwarzott and Lewis of the CIO office, Rec. Secy. Joseph M. Welsh of the Greater Kansas City Industrial Union Council-CIO and UAW representatives and members.

Secy-Treas. Alex Bail of the Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers, reports PJNW was selected as collective bargaining agent by the employes of the Button Corp. of America, Newark, N. J., by a vote of 107 to 28, in an NLRB election. The vote was a smashing defeat for the company, which has been working all the tricks to defeat unions since 1936, and which has successfully repelled organization attempts by UAW, UE, URW, MMS, TWUA, District 50, and several independent unions. The campaign was staged by Intl. Reps. Ben Berger and James Yorke, assisted by members of other PJNW locals. An inside committee composed of Sam Giordano, Frank Hoffman, Bill Collins and Sid Salmon also assisted.

REG. Dir. Loren J. Houser, Indianapolis, Ind., advises the Stone and Allied Products Workers won the election in Alexandria, Ind., at the Johns-Manville Co. The results were CIO 185, AFL 118, neither 7. Field Reps. Howard McNamara and Harmon Ballard assisted Harold Etchison in the campaign.

Reg. Dir. George Craig, Philadelphia, Pa., reports following election victories: Penna Industrial Chemical Corp., Chester, Pa., Eligible votes 152, for Chemical Workers, 81, against 71; Michael Flynn, Inc., eligible votes—15, for Local 45, United Wholesale & Warehouse Employes 11, no union 4.

Dir. of Org. Thos J. Gallagher, IUMSWA, Camden, N. J., advises Union shop was won by Local 9 of the Union at Bethlehem-San Pedro yard. The vote was: number eligible 631, union shop—338, opposed—50.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrane, New Haven, Conn., reports the members of Local 457, Paperworkers voted 348 to 8 in favor of union shop—total eligible to vote 403. He also reports the CIO Paper Workers won an NLRB election at the D. L. and D. Container Corp., New Haven, CIO 19, no union 5. UPA Rep. Frederick Sandner was in charge.

Reg. Dir. John J. Maurillo, Syracuse, N. Y., advises that workers of Geb & Garvan Yarn Co., Seneca Falls, N. Y., that in NLRB election, 41 votes were cast for the CIO Textile Workers, 30 against. The campaign was conducted by TWU Rep. Harry F. Walton.

DIR. of Org. George Brown, IWA-CIO, reports the following victories; Myrtle Point Veneer Co., Marysville, Ore., IWA, 10, no union 4; Robbins Flooring Co., Rhinelander, Wis., election held by Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, IWA 58, no union 27. He also advises of a union shop election held at Minnesota and Ontario Paper Co., International Falls, Minn., 950 to 32 in the large unit and 36 to 3 in small unit in favor of union shop. At the firm's Kenfield Plant the vote for the union shop was 29 to 5, and at Dunham Plant, 57 to 4.

The heads of the telephone groups who have affiliated with TWOC-CIO met in Detroit this week and in view of the coming wage negotiations laid down a policy to render every assistance to one another. Stanley Ruttenberg, Associate CIO Research Director, assembled much data, and if the telephone companies have the consideration of their employes as they profess to have, should convince them of the necessity of the telephone workers getting a substantial wage increase and other improved conditions. The telephone workers under so-called independent unions have lost ground on wages, in comparison with workers of other industries, in the last ten years. The CIO will lend every support possible to the telephone workers.

Steel Dir. Adelman Dies

MEYER Adelman, Wisconsin district director of the United Steelworkers of America and widely known in CIO circles throughout the country, died in Milwaukee April 15.

A few days prior to his death, Adelman had entered a Milwaukee hospital for an operation.

In a wire to Mrs. Adelman, three CIO national officers said "his passing comes as a heavy blow both to the CIO and to the United Steelworkers of America."

The message was signed by Pres. Murray, Sec.-Treas. Carey and Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood. It said that Adelman's "contributions to the welfare of the people, his devotion to the cause of labor, his deep sense of humanitarianism, will always be remembered. For scores of thousands of workers and their families, America is a better place to live because of the untiring efforts and good citizenship of Meyer Adelman."

Back in the late 20's and early 30's, Adelman was a rank-and-file leader who led an active fight against racketeering officials of a Chicago AFL cooks' union. He was badly beaten on several occasions and threatened with death because of his efforts to clean up the union.

When the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee was established in 1936, Van A. Bittner named Adelman to his staff. He was an effective organizer and led the bitter strike against the Fansteel Metallurgical Corp, at North Chicago, Ill., a case which eventually went up to the U. S. Supreme Court.

After formation of the USA-CIO, he was elected district director with headquarters in Milwaukee. For many years he was active in CIO council activities, both on a city and statewide basis.

He is survived by Mrs. Adelman.

Vote Union Shop

Overwhelming votes in favor of the union shop were cast by two units of Local 33, Intl. Woodworkers of America at the Minnesota and Ontario Paper Co. Plant in International Falls, Minn.

Frank McGahey is chairman of the newly formed CIO Plant Guard Organizing Committee, formed because T-H bars plant guards from joining regular plant unions.

EDUCATIONAL PARLEY HELD FOR INDIANA, OHIO

NINETY CIO members from locals and councils in Indiana and Ohio attended the National CIO's regional education conference April 9-11 in South Bend, Ind.

George T. Guernsey, associate director of education, assisted by Stuart Brock, was in charge of the conference one of a series being held during April and May in various parts of the country.

Discussion leaders and speakers from the National CIO included Research & Education Director Kermit Eby, Associate Research Director Stanley Ruttenberg, and Palmer Weber, research director for the CIO-PAC.

William Oliver, co-director of the United Auto Workers Fair Practices Dept., led a discussion on ways to implement the President's Civil Rights program.

Other speakers included Dr. Walter Johnson of the University of Chicago, who gave a report on Britain, and H. E. Evans, Ohio Farm Bureau, who spoke on cooperation between farmers and workers.

Time Study Probe

Specialized courses in time study, now being used in industry more widely than ever before, are among subjects scheduled for the fifth annual Leadership Training Institute this summer at the Michigan CIO's FDR-CIO Labor Center, Port Huron, Mich.

Basic purpose of the instruction is to equip union representatives to defend members against unfair work requirements, according to Jim Stern, director of the Auto Workers' Engineering Dept., who is arranging the time study courses and workshops for the Institute.

An advanced class especially for time study stewards and for workers who have had previous courses in the subject, will be held July 11-17 and repeated the week of Aug. 1-7. All phases of time study will be covered in these two identical courses.

Workshops will be held in connection with the classes. At these the subject matter will be presented from the standpoint of handling production standard disputes as a routine part of the grievance procedure.

"When management is manipulating time study to determine the amount of work we do," states an Institute release, "we must understand its limitations and errors so that we can capably represent our members and prevent abusive work loads. This can be done only if we have an adequate knowledge of the techniques of time study."

Pupils Honored

A five-week educational institute for workers of the Industrial Cotton mill, Rock Holl, S. C., ended with a banquet honoring members of Local 797, Textile Workers Union, who attended five or more sessions. Pat Knight, the union's Southern education director, was in charge of the institute.

Donate Books

A selection of books on labor was donated to the Stonington (Conn.) Library Assn. by Local 110, Textile Workers, representing employes at the American Velvet Co. Joseph Glazer of the union's education department aided in choosing the books.

Roy Cooper, 56, PAC Aide, Dies

Roy Cooper, 56, director of the Jefferson County, Ky. (Louisville) PAC, died last week after a short illness.

ROY COOPER

Cooper, who set up a registration and vote drive system that has been a model for many other PACs, was featured in December in an article in the CIO News. News.

Before taking his post with the PAC, he was active in the Democratic party. He had worked for the city government for a number of years, starting as a fireman and spending some time in the tax commission office.

CIO Reg. Dir. William B. Taylor declared the "untimely death of Brother Cooper leaves us all with a great sense of sorrow and loss."

Cooper, who served in World War I as a sailor, was buried in Zachary Taylor Cemetery after a military funeral at St. Cecelia's Church.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Aimee Receveur Cooper; a sister, Mrs. Cora Guillaume, and a brother, Chester Cooper. He had helped form Local 290 of the AFL City Employes' Union.

Carey To Speak On CIO, ERP

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey will speak on the CIO and the Marshall Plan at the National Conference of Social Work, April 21-22 at Atlantic City. The National CIO Community Services Committee is participating in the conference and has scheduled a program for the two afternoon sessions.

On April 21, Irving Abramson, CIO-CSC chairman, will speak on the CIO's program for the nation's communities, and Dr. Orville C. Jones, education director for the Ohio CIO Council, will discuss CIO participation in health and welfare planning in his state. Sol Stetin, vice-pres., Textile Workers Union, will be chairman of this session.

Leo Perlis, CIO-CSC director, will preside at the April 22 session at which Carey and Dr. Aake Ording, director of the United Nations Appeal for Children, will be featured speakers.

Brewery Workers Win 2 Union Shops

Workers in two Minneapolis, Minn., breweries voted almost 100% for the union shop in elections held under the Taft-Hartley law. They are represented by Local 205, CIO Brewery Workers Union. At the Minneapolis Brewing Co., the vote was 291 to 4, and at the Gluek Brewing Co., it was 85 to 3.

Security Law Curb Veto Overidden

SHOULD newspaper and magazine salesmen be covered by social security?

The present social security law, the President of the United States, the U. S. Supreme Court, the CIO and other labor organizations, all say "yes."

Newspaper and magazine publishers, and the Congress, say "no."

The Gearhart Bill (H.R. 5052) exempts newspaper and magazine vendors from coverage of the law. The bill has been opposed by most newspaper unions as a blow to Social Security. It has been sought for several years by lobbyists representing publishers.

A similar bill, passed last year, was disapproved by the President when it came to his desk after Congress adjourned. Congress re-voted the bill, and the President's veto was over-ridden in the House, with only 28 Congressmen voting against the move to limit the social security law.

In a letter to all Senators, CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan said CIO "agrees completely" with the President's veto.

"Like him, we of the CIO feel that the Gearhart bill will cause unfair and needless harm to that group of wage earners who will lose social security protection if HR 5202 becomes law."

Schedule Hearings On Wage-Hour Bills

CIO will go before Congress next week to request major improvements in the U. S. Wage-Hour Law.

At the same time, union spokesmen will seek to head off crippling amendments proposed by Sen. Joseph Ball (R., Minn.) who last year sponsored a number of the most serious phases of the Taft-Hartley act.

The Senate Labor Committee will open hearings April 19 on the Thomas-McCormick Bill (S. 2062), which would lift the minimum pay rate from 40c an hour to 75c and extend the law's coverage; and the Ball Bill (S. 2386) which, while raising the minimum to 60c, would weaken every section of the law and make difficult the collection of overtime pay.

A trio of witnesses will represent the national CIO. Sol Barkin, research director of the Textile Workers Union; Gladys Dickason, vice-president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers; and Irving Levy, acting counsel of the United Auto Workers, will testify April 26.

Over 90% Of Councils Now Back CIO

LATE returns in reports from CIO councils continued to show that more than 90% have backed the national organization's policy against a third party in 1948 and in favor of the Marshall Plan.

Councils Dir. John Brophy, who wrote councils stating that they were bound, under CIO rules, to adhere to and promote CIO policy, received these replies last week:

COLORADO STATE: from Secy.-treas. Eugene Rosati—"Letter from Brophy supported . . . PAC passed motion that members of PAC committee who do not go along with National policy submit resignations. Only third party backers were Blanche Goldfield, Gus Albert, Amalgamated; Graham Dokan, Al Skinner, Mine, Mill; Mrs. Eunice Dolan, UOPWA."

MONTGOMERY - CHESTER COUNTIES, PA.: from Pres. John Lynch—"The council has consistently followed CIO leadership . . . opposing third party and indorsing ERP. We pledge our loyalty."

QUAD CITY, ILL.: from Secy. Howard Fischer—"A motion was passed with two dissenting votes to remain neutral."

HOWARD COUNTY. IND.: from Pres. Marcus E. Deardorff—"I wish to say this council is away ahead of you. We cleaned house some months ago completely."

MARQUETTE COUNTY, MICH.: from Rec. Secy. William T. Pascoe—"There has never been a discussion on the floor regarding Henry Wallace."

BLACK SHEEP DEPT.: Secy.-treas. Wallace L. Clayton, Fort Wayne, Ind., Council asks the CIO News to print the following "clarification of the statement 'there is always one black sheep—I am from UE' published in the Mar. 29 issue of this paper." The Fort Wayne IUC has endorsed the CIO six-point program. The council officers are Ralph Walter, UPW, president; Leo Ray, UAW, vice-pres.; Clayton; Paul Allen, USA, Hazel Hay, ACW, Adele Bade, AFHW, trustees, and Lloyd Swords, USA sergeant - at - arms. Note the above international unions in regards to following the majority rule. Of course, there is always one black sheep, I am from UE. Signed, Wallace L. Clayton."

Western Pa.—W. Va. Region, CIO Office, Professional Union: from Charles G. Heisel, regional director — "The formation of a third party is only serving the purpose of disrupting."

N. Y. Chamber For ERP

The Chamber of Commerce of New York State was incorrectly reported, in the March 15 issue of The CIO News, to have refused to indorse the Marshall Plan.

The story was based on a report of the March 11 meeting of the Chamber, which returned a resolution on the Marshall Plan to its executive committee for further documentation. But a special meeting later overwhelmingly indorsed ERP.

Senate OK's TEW Bill 49 to 35

AFTER a 2½-year uphill struggle, the Taft-Ellender-Wagner long-range housing bill has finally cleared the Senate with the controversial public housing provision still intact.

By voice vote the Upper House approved the measure, and Flanders amendments. The bill would provide 15 million new homes in the next 10 years.

Sen. Flanders

Rebuffing the real estate lobby, as well as Senators Cain (R., Wash.) and Joseph McCarthy (R., Wis.), the Senate previously rejected a Cain-sponsored move to strike out the bill's public housing section. The vote was 49 to 35.

Actually the public housing provision, bitterly attacked by the real estate lobby, constitutes a minor portion of the entire program. It would authorize the spending of about $160 million a year for 40 years for the construction of 500,000 low-cost public housing units.

AFTER passage of the bill, attention immediately focused on the House, where Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R., Mich.), chairman of the House Banking & Currency Committee, has been sitting on the bill with all his 200 pounds.

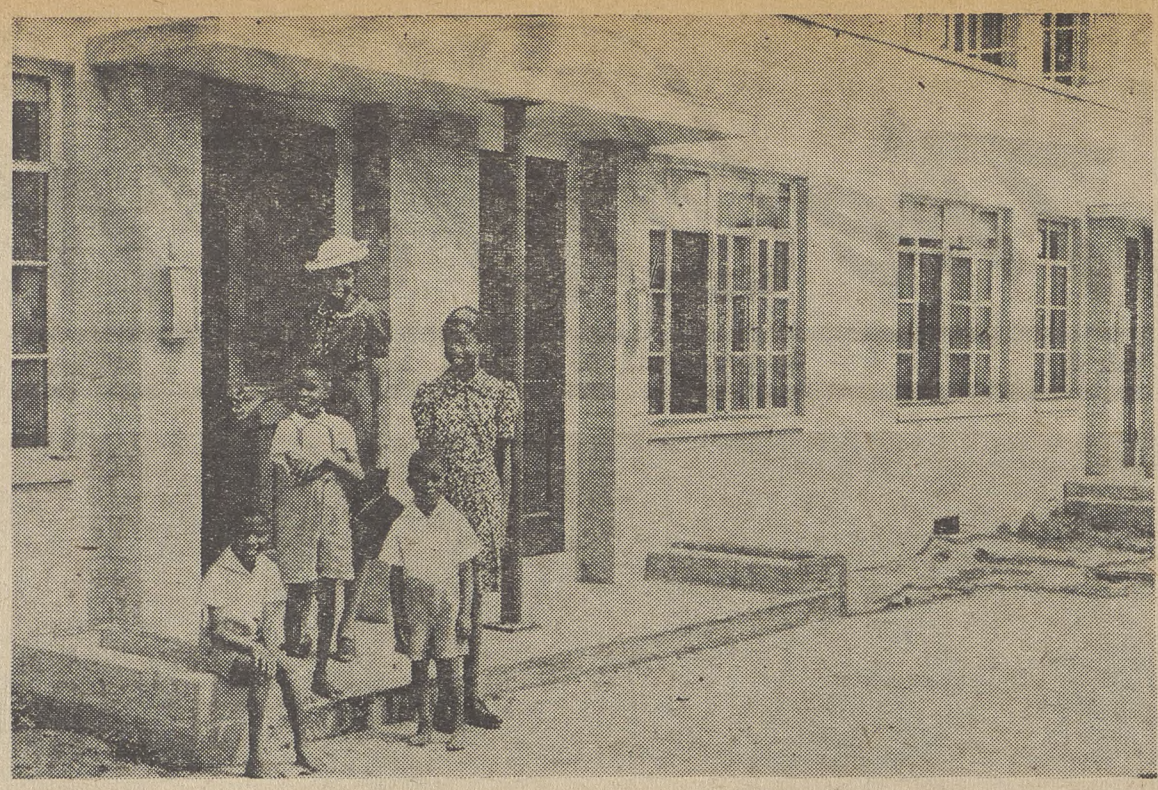
Wolcott finally agreed to schedule hearings on May 3. Nevertheless, TEW proponents in the House stepped up efforts to obtain 218 signatures to a discharge petition, initiated by Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Cal.).

The petition would pry the bill out of committee.

With about 88 more names needed, CIO and other liberal groups were urging voters to deluge their Representatives with letters and wires asking them to sign the petition.

The bill, as passed by the Senate, would encourage private building by insuring loans, granting loans for standard as well as for prefabricated housing, through grants-in-aid to cities for slum clearance, through loans and grants for replacing or improving sub-standard farm homes, One amendment would give "wheel chair" veterans up to $10,000 for specially-equipped homes.

LEADING the fight on the Senate floor to retain the public housing section were Senators Ralph Flanders (R., Vt.), Charles Tobey (R., N. H.) and John Sparkman (D., Ala.). Sparkman, at the request of the CIO and AFL, left his state in the midst of a campaign for re-election in the May 4 primary to add his weight to the public housing battle.



BETTER ROOF: These two pictures show a Macon, Ga., family in front of their old slum home and in front of their new home in a permanent low-rent project which also houses 317 other families.

The Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill would make possible low-rent projects through encouraging private industry and through public housing.

Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.) recently said that Federal resources should be used "to provide the aids needed to achieve decent homes for all Americans."

Senate Overrides Gearhart Bill Veto

Supported by only seven votes, Pres. Truman's veto of the Gearhart bill—which removes newspaper and magazine salesmen from Social Security coverage—was over-ridden in the Senate last week.

The House had previously taken a similar stand against the Presidential veto.

Truman's objection to the bill had been based on its weakening effect on the whole social security system. He argued that strengthening of the system—rather than chipping away of its provisions—is needed in the public interest.

CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan had called for support of the veto, and charged that the Gearhart measure was part of a general campaign to weaken social security.

Supporting the President's veto were seven Democratic Senators Barkley (Ky.), Green (R. I.), Hayden (Ariz.), Kilgore (W. Va.), McGrath (R.I.), Murray (Mont.) and Pepper (Fla.). Seventy-seven Senators voted to over-ride.

High Court Hears CIO April 26

THE nine justices of the U.S. Supreme Court this week will hear the pros and cons on the constitutional issues of the right of CIO—and Phil Murray—to spend union funds in political campaigns.

On Monday (Apr. 26) attorneys for the CIO and the Dept. of Justice debate the issues in the case, which stemmed from Murray's indorsement—on the front page of last July 14th's CIO News—of Edward Garmatz, Democratic candidate in a special Maryland Congressional election.

The Taft-Hartley Act bans union spending "in connection with" federal primaries or elections. After several months of investigation, the Justice Dept. obtained indictments of both CIO and Murray for alleged violation—in a case recognized by both sides as a test of the law.

Before Judge Ben Moore of U. S. District Court in Washington, CIO lawyers argued that the indictment was illegal because the section of the T-H Act on which it was based was clearly unconstitutional.

Judge Moore accepted the CIO argument, threw out the indictment.

The Justice Dept. quickly took an appeal to the Supreme Court.

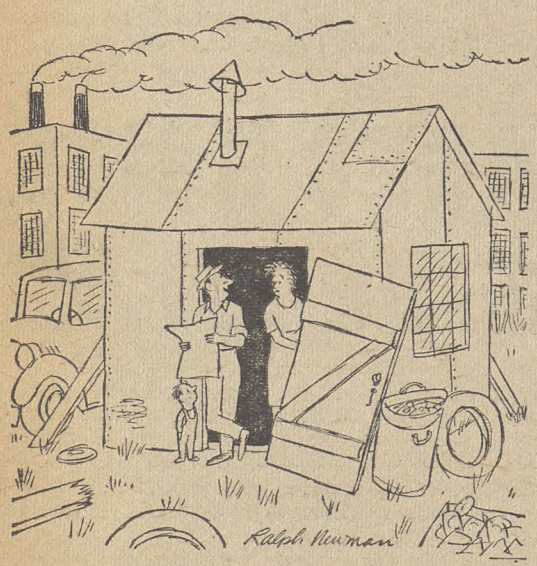
A final decision is expected before the Court recesses for the summer around the end of May. Whatever the high court rules will have an important bearing on labor's role in the '48 election.

REPRESENTING CIO before the Supreme Court's nine men will be Charles Margiotti, former attorney general of Pennsylvania; Lee Pressman, former CIO counsel; and Frank Donner, associate CIO counsel.

Their brief said that union political activity "is an important and legitimate means" by which working men and women exercise their political rights.

The Taft-Hartley Act political section "does not preserve the purity of the electoral process," as the government had argued, but "perverts the electoral process," the CIO brief declared.

"Political activity is no longer a narrow province occupied exclusively by professional politicians," the CIO reminded the court.



"It says here there's bad housing shortage and that some folks have to live in shacks."

HERE'S HOW YOUR SENATORS VOTED ON PUBLIC HOUSING

Here's the Senate vote on the amendment of Sen. Cain (R., Wash.) to ditch the public housing provisions in the T-E-W bill. The move, if successful, would have severely crippled the 10-year long-range housing program. This was the section most bitterly fought by the real estate lobby. The CIO considers the vote on Cain's amendment the crucial test of your Senators' allegiance—whether to the real estate lobby or to the low-income families for whom private interests won't provide desperately-needed housing. The amendment was rejected by a vote of 49 to 35, with 25 Democrats and 24 Republicans voting right; 17 Democrats and 18 Republicans voting wrong. ("R" indicates a "right" vote against the amendment; "W" indicates a "wrong" vote; "NV" means 'not voting"; "PR" means "paired right," "PW" is "paired wrong.")

Murray To U. S. Steel:

YOU'RE NOT ACTING IN GOOD FAITH

THE U. S. Steel Corp. last week was accused of failing to "bargain in good faith" with the CIO Steelworkers.

Philip Murray, Steel Union president, revealed that the corporation has rejected the union's proposal for a cost-of-living increase.

Murray revealed that U. S. Steel had refused to let Murray and the union representatives sit down with any top officials. Second stringers were sent in, as they were in the recent coal negotiations with John L. Lewis. Murray said the fight for a welfare fund would continue, though the parties are far apart.

Murray ridiculed the company's announcement of a $25,000,000 reduction in steel prices. Murray pointed out:

1. The company in the last year has increased prices by $230 millions.

2. The $25 million cut would "be less than $1.24 a ton or about one-half cent a pound."

The union and the corporation had met under a reopening clause in the contract which runs until April, 1949. The reopening calls for 30 days of negotiations, expiring May 1.

Murray said that U. S. Steel's net profit in 1947 increased 73% over 1946 profits. He said the company made $153,000,000 after taxes last year.

"We greatly regret that the company has refused to share its prosperity with and to recognize its responsibility towards its employes by making an appropriate wage adjustment in view of these conditions," Murray declared.

MURRAY said the Steelworkers entered into the 1947 two-year, no-strike contract "in the hope that it would help in stabilizing costs and prices and halting inflation."

"Unfortunately, the corporation used this moderate wage increase (in 1947) as the untenable excuse to raise prices three times as much as the direct cost of the wage increase," he went on.

"Any price decrease is welcomed," Murray said. "We are forced, however, to label this decrease for what it is, namely a picayune decrease, when viewed in the light of the corporation's recent record of price increases."

Murray said he and other union negotiators offered to delay final action on the wage issue until the effect of the price decreases could be measured. He said the company refused to enter into an agreement to extend the time for wage negotiations to test the effect "of this paltry price decrease."

U. S. Steel Pres. Benjamin Fairless said the price cuts would be made on steel products which are bought by the consumer, such as nails, wire fence, wire netting, steel fence posts, steel roofing and siding sheets, barbed wire and other wire products.

He said prices would be decreased on steel products sold to manufacturers who convert the steel into consumer products, such as tin plate for tin cans, cold rolled strip and sheets for automobiles. stainless steel for refrigerators, stoves, kitchen cabinets, washing machines, sheets for furnaces, air-conditioning ducts, and heating equipment; galvanized sheets for silos, grain bins and other farm structures; spring wire for furniture and other uses; as well as many other steel products.

CIO To File Brief In Miners' Appeal

CIO will file a "friend of the court" brief when the United Mine Workers-John L. Lewis case is appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The intention was announced by Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

"We regard the issues involved in this case as of great importance to the CIO and to the labor movement as a whole," Goldberg declared.

CIO's brief, it is expected, will be solely concerned with the legal and constitutional issues involved in the use of injunctions in labor disputes, rather than with the complex problems of the miners' pension demands.

UAW Pledge to Reuther: We'll Carry on Pay Talks

THOUGH deeply shocked by the attempt to assassinate CIO Auto Workers' Pres. Walter P. Reuther, the top UAW officers have pledged to him that they will carry on the "important wage and contract negotiations in which the union is now engaged and which are his greatest and most immediate concern."

Reuther himself was still in critical condition as The CIO NEWS went to press and doctors still hadn't determined whether the 40-year-old UAW chief would be able to use his right arm again.

He was shot in the arm and shoulder by a would-be assassin who fired through a window into the kitchen of Reuther's home in suburban Detroit. His wife, Mae, who was giving him a late evening snack, narrowly escaped injury.

Detroit and Michigan police last week were apparently tracking down even the most meager lead in an attempt to catch the man who fired the shot. Best clue was given by a young neighbor, son of Thomas A. Johnstone, head of the UAW General Motors Division. The boy saw a man drive up to Reuther's door in a two-door red Ford car. However, it was too dark for him to give any description of the man. As to the shotgun, that would be hard to trace, since Michigan is a major hunting state and thousands of Detroiters have shotguns. Another possibility was that the man was from another state.

Detectives were questioning a number of union and company officials. One union steward was reported in "temporary detention."

Many leaders of all factions in the UAW offered to help in any way they could to solve the case. UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, one of Reuther's closest colleagues, said: "We'll get the guy who did it, if we have to turn the whole town upside down."

MANY amateur "detectives" were attempting to solve the case, lured by more than $100,000 offered in rewards for the arrest and conviction of the assailant.

Reuther Pledges To Continue Fight

Victor Reuther, brother of Walter Reuther, asked his brother at the hospital:

"Has this shooting got you down"

"No," replied Reuther. "I am still fighting. I'll keep on fighting until we have a better world."

The awards ranged from $100,000 offered by the UAW executive board to $500 by the Michigan Communist Party. Others putting up rewards included the State and county CIOs, several UAW locals, the Detroit city government ($10,000) and the AFL teamsters.

Late last week, there were several theories as to who might have fired the shot. Police Commissioner Harry S. Toy—who had been under bitter union attack for alleged anti-labor tactics—took personal charge of the case and said he was proceeding on the possibility that the gunman came from one of four groups:

1. Persons engaged in an inter-union battle; 2. A crackpot. 3. management. 4. Communists, local or international.

Neighbors who rushed to aid Reuther after the shooting heard him cry out: "Those dirty—s! They have to shoot a fellow in the back. They won't come out in the open and fight."

Questioned by police at the hospital after doctors had given emergency treatment, Reuther was unable to name a specific person, saying he thought it might be "management, the Communists or some screwball."

THE UAW board, in a resolution, declared: "The attempted murder of Reuther was an attack against the whole labor movement and against the democratic principles for which he stands and fights. The board is not prepared at this time to make any charges or accusations against any individuals or groups. We discount the implications that this assault grew out of internal union disputes. We are convinced that the person or persons who attempted to kill Reuther are agents of the enemies of democracy and labor, and as such they could come from any number of economic or political groups of widely varying ideologies."

Hundreds of auto workers, other CIO members, AFL members and many not connected with the labor movement offered to donate blood transfusions for Reuther as he lay in a Detroit hospital bed. Transfusions were necessary because of his heavy loss of blood.

CIO vice presidents, meeting in Pittsburgh, pledged "full support" to the UAW executive board in its efforts to solve the case. Reuther, a CIO vice president, had been scheduled to attend the Pittsburgh meeting.

Veteran labor leaders said they could recall no other occasion on which a leading union officer was the victim of a would-be assassin. Many public and union sources expressed shock and horror over the shooting.

Perhaps the New York Herald Tribute summed up the feelings of many non-union people:

"The brutal and mysterious attack comes as a severe shock. He is a valuable figure in the intricate web of our developing society."

Perhaps CIO Pres. Philip Murray best expressed the feelings of most unionists when he attributed the attempted murder to "the fine leadership which you have given your people and your outstanding defense of your country and its workers." Expressing "shock" over the shooting, Murray declared, "I am hoping and praying for you speedy and complete recovery."

Dramatizing Problems

A new approach to shop steward training programs is being tried out by Local 293, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Red Bank, N. J. In these programs, shop problems suggested by the members are acted out by members of the group, and solutions suggested and discussed by everybody present.

Packinghouse Striker Killed By Armour Truck; Textile Picket Wounded By Scab

By NORMAN DOLNICK

ARMOUR'S much-publicized last-ditch attempt to reopen its plants was a fizzle, but it resulted in the death of a CIO Packinghouse Worker in front of the company's Chicago soap works.

Aided by Chicago police, the company attempted to run trucks through the UPWA picket lines.

On the order of Capt. George Barnes of the Labor Detail to "step on it," a 10-ton trailer truck hit picket Santo Cicardo, 38, crushing him. He died shortly after.

Witnesses say the truck accelerated after Barnes waved it on.

Cicardo was hit as he approached the truck in an effort to talk to the driver. The union had previously worked out an agreement with the police that its pickets would be allowed to speak to truck drivers and persuade them not to cross the lines.

Barnes said he would get trucks through "regardless of consequences."

Later that day, Mann headed a CIO delegation to Police Commissioner George Prendergast to demand the removal of Captain Barnes.

At a mass meeting that evening, UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein called Cicardo a martyr in the struggle of Packinghouse Workers for a decent living wage."

(Despite the CIO protests, a jury ruled that Cicardo had died accidentally when he slipped under the truck.)

Club-swinging police in Kansas City last week battled CIO Packinghouse Workers at the Cudahy plant, battering the heads of at least six pickets, some of them women.

The bloody battle occured near and inside the union hall, to which police had chased the pickets after smashing their picket line. The Cudahy plant is diagonally opposite the hall. When the pickets tried to take refuge in the union hall, police followed them and continued their attack inside.

Within 10 minutes the hall was a bloody shambles.

HUBERT WILKEY, 19-year-old CIO Textile worker on strike against the Anchor Duck Mills, Rome, Ga., lies near death in a hospital, the victim of a bullet said to have been fired by a scab.

While physicians hesitate to operate on Wilkey, Elmer Adams, who has been accused of firing the shot, was first held on open charges in the county jail, then released under $2000 bail. He has not been seen in Rome since his bond was posted.

Shot through the chest, Wilkey's condition has defied operation. Clotted blood has baffled X-rays, doctors report, and to date it has been impossible to locate the bullet. Wilkey is married and has a small child.

The shooting occurred near the mill last week. Adams, supposedly on his way to work, is reported to have jostled Herman Hyde, a picket. Just as this incident occurred—it was reported to Joe Pedigo, TWUA joint board manager—Wilkey, another man and two women arrived at Hyde's side.

Adams, it was reported, walked on past Hyde, turned and drew his gun. He fired twice. Both shots are believed to have been directed at Hyde. However, the first blast felled Wilkey.

Adams fled the scene, but was later picked up by police.

The Anchor Duck Mills strike, now in its sixth week, was brought on by the company's insistence upon a union-busting contract, Pedigo stated. Foremost in the clauses under dispute is one which would give the company almost a life-and-death power over the workers. This clause, called a physical fitness provision, would make the company sole judge over who is able to work, and would strip old employes of all protection.

The mill, Pedigo said, has the lowest hiring-in rate in the area, and has made no effort to correct it.

MR. HERZOG IS RIGHT

NLRB Chairman Paul M. Herzog, whose agency is snowed under by thousands of cases, really said a mouthful the other day.

He deplored the "habit" of management-labor disputants running to the Board or the courts to demand injunctions against one another.

He said that "those who seek sole refuge in the statute books make orderly collective bargaining and plant harmony difficult if not impossible.

"In the long run, Government will either lose the confidence or gain complete control over the people it is supposed to serve if it is forced to adjudicate all controversies between industry and labor."

We, of course, don't know whether Herzog intended it that way, but his statement was a stinging slap at the Taft-Hartleyites.

It was a slap, too, at employers who use every possible legal technicality in an effort to keep their employes from enjoying the benefits of unionism.

What was it the CIO said when the T-H Act was being considered?

It said the law would tend to destroy collective bargaining.

It said administration of the law would create something of a paradise for lawyers.

It warned against the injunction provisions of the Act.

Yes, Herzog said a mouthful—but what he didn't say is that his troubles have just begun.

Wait until the full effect of T-H is felt! That probably will happen when the thousands of contracts which were signed last year before T-H went into effect come up for renewal.

Mr. Denham Is Surprised

Administration of the T-H Act has brought about two major surprises, Robert N. Denham, NLRB general counsel, told the National Association of Hosiery Manufacturers last week at Atlantic City, N. J.

NLRB has conducted about 6000 union shop elections, he said, and added:

"In only a handful of cases—certainly less than 50—did the proposition for union shop authorization fail to carry, and over-all figures show affirmative votes were cast by 84 per cent of all employes who would be affected."

(These elections, incidentally, cost a lot of money and provide NLRB with one of its biggest jobs.)

Denham's other surprise was a survey showing that unions were filing five unfair labor practices complaints for each one filed by employers.

Denham didn't give his interpretation of the surprises, so we'll give ours:

1. Workers like the union shop, despite all claims to the contrary.

2. Workers have more to complain about.

Italians Say 'NO' to Reds

Italy has a long way to go before she can take her place among the nations of the world as a functioning democracy, but she has certainly taken a step in the right direction.

The Italians bowed once to a totalitarian leader named Mussolini and as a result suffered disastrous defeat in World War II.

Last week, in a nationwide election, the Italian people turned thumbs down on another form of totalitarianism—the communistic kind.

Italy, with aid from the United States, now has an opportunity to redeem herself for her past mistakes.

Our hope is that she makes good.

The Big Guys Get The Breaks

Their Quest For Higher Profits Puts Great Strain On Our Economy

By ALLAN L. SWIM

YOU can't blame the average "little guy" if he's a bit fed up with the way things have been going since the end of the war.

Oh, sure, he has a steady job and he earns more dollars a week than he ever did before.

But he's tired of always holding the short end of the stick.

He's tired of the economic and political maneuvering which has been widening the gap between him and the "big guys."

And there's something about the situation which reminds him of the boom which came before our last terrible depression.

YOU recall that OPA was killed so "free competition" could take over and the nation could return to its "normal" way of doing business.

NAM carried the ball on this one and it assured the public that the end of price controls would not be followed by unreasonably high prices.

The NAM either didn't know what it was talking about or it deliberately misled the public!

Except for short periods, prices have been increasing steadily ever since OPA was killed.

NAM didn't point out that "normal" business cannot be conducted during periods of extreme shortages and that there is no real competition between producers or sellers when there are not enough products to go around.

PRICES and profits went up and the purchasing power of the average consumer went down.

Last year labor tried to bring about an adjustment that would not feed the flames of inflation. It said it preferred price reductions to wage increases.

Business and industry didn't cut prices. They didn't even hold them steady. They boosted them.

The only thing left for labor to do was to seek wage hikes. That it did.

Now some industries are making price cuts that are much smaller than their previous increases—and are refusing to grant badly needed wage hikes.

Many industries could raise wages, cut prices and still make large profits.

THE Republican-dominated Congress, which has a "big guy" complex, saddled organized labor with the Taft-Hartley Law, which is designed to weaken or destroy unions.

It passed an income tax reduction measure which gave much relief to the wealthy and little relief to the low-income wage earners.

It reduced appropriations for agencies which aid labor.

It weakened the Wage-Hour setup and reduced the coverage of the Social Security system.

It weakened rent control.

And it has been reluctant to do anything about one of the nation's most serious problems—housing.

THE U. S. economy, as history has demonstrated, can stand just so much strain and then it starts coming apart at the seams.

The danger point is reached when consumers can no longer buy the products of the farm and factory in huge quantities.

It won't be long before that point is reached if the present trend continues— even if the unions achieve needed wage adjustments.

This will be especially true if industry refuses to pay the increases out of its enormous profits and, instead, slaps on new price increases.

THE "big guys" are entitled to a decent profit and the "little guys" are entitled to decent wages . . . and our economy can provide both.

But the quest for unreasonable profits—and for legislation to aid the powerful at the expense of the weak—will achieve no lasting benefits even for the wealthy.

The reason for this is that there are so many more "little guys" than "big guys" and that the "little guys" occasionally get together and pull in the same direction.

The powerful ones should never forget what happened when the weak ones threw their support to a fellow named Roosevelt.

And they should never forget why.

Can't Fool Rep. Madden; He Knows T-H Pitfalls

VOLUMES of misleading propaganda have been, and will continue to be, circulated among union members and other wage earners in an effort to sell the Taft-Hartley law as a harmless piece of legislation, says Rep. Ray Madden, Democratic congressman from Indiana.

In an article on "Congress Surrenders to Reaction," carried in the first issue of North American Labor, a new monthly review of the labor movement published in San Diego, Calif., Rep. Madden writes in part:

"Organized labor generally has not, as yet, received the full impact of the Taft-Hartley law. Some of this propaganda has emphasized that work-stoppages and strikes have been greatly reduced since this law was enacted six months ago.

"They fail to mention that the great majority of large employers in industry throughout the country stampeded to sign new contracts immediately before the Taft-Hartley law went into effect. The sponsors of this law failed to inform the people that millions of employes under contract will not come in contact with this law until their contracts terminate later this year.

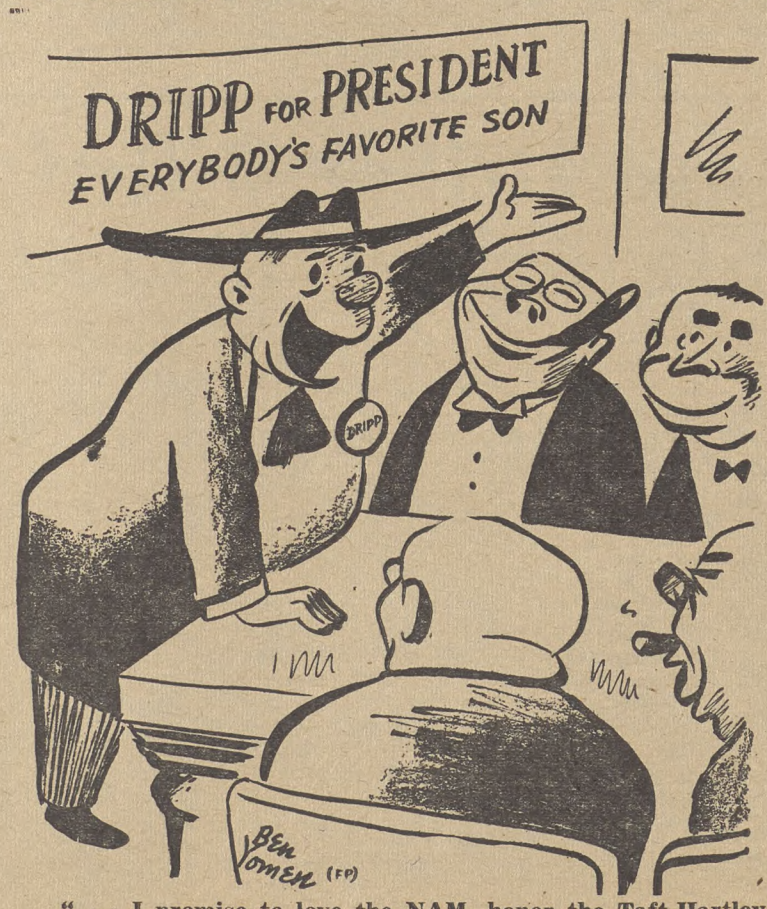
"Last fall, Earl Bunting, president of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers admonished his membership not to be too hasty to take advantage of the powers given them under the Taft-Hartley law. Could it be that the sponsors of this legislation greatly fear to have millions of union members realize the restrictive power of this law before the Presidential election?

"UNFORTUNATELY, but a small percentage of the public and members of union labor realize the contents and cleverly concealed devices set out in this law, which, if taken advantage of by an obstinate employer, practically nullifies collective bargaining and union organization.

"It should be the duty of all members of union labor to secure from their locals a copy of the Taft-Hartley law along with legal interpretations of each section so that they can be fully informed of its contents.

"This year of 1948 is a crucial period in social and labor welfare. All believers in progressive and liberal legislation should unify and marshal their forces to win back the legislative protection which they have lost during the last year."

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP BY BEN YOMEN



". . . I promise to love the NAM, honor the Taft-Hartley law and obey Wall street."

Leon Crawled Off The Spot-- Fast!

LEON Stamey was really on the spot—and he knew it. He'd been there before, but this was different.

The important meeting he'd called was about to flop. If it did it might mean complete failure of the organizing drive he was conducting.

Damn those guys, anyway! They had a nerve—crashing his meeting. Plant superintendents and foremen had no business walking in on an organizing session.

Well, something had to be done—and in a hurry.

Stamey did it.

IT happened down in Merryville, La., where Stamey was working as a CIO Organizing Committee staff member.

He was trying to bring the woods crew of Hilliard-Deutsch-Edwards Lumber Co. into the International Wodworkers.

Eighty of the 100 eligible workers turned out for the meeting Stamey called. Things seemed to be moving along OK.

He was telling the men how their fellow workers at the Oakdale mill of the company had gained benefits by joining the IWA-CIO.

Suddenly he realized something was wrong. The workers weren't paying much attention to his speech.

Then he noticed that the mill superintendent and one of his foremen were circulating among the crowd, holding whispered conversations.

A FEELING of uneasiness ran through the hall at which the meeting was being held.

The men began casting furtive glances toward the door. Some of them obviously wished they were elsewhere.

Stamey wasn't so sure—for a moment—that he didn't wish he was elsewhere, too.

Suddenly he decided to crawl off the spot—but fast—and let somebody else occupy it. He addressed the mill superintendent:

"I am glad to see you here, Mr. Superintendent. You can verify what I have just told the men. Do you mind if I ask you a few questions?"

The super, red faced, assented.

STAMEY was beginning to enjoy himself, so he bored right in, determined to make the best of the situation.

"Have I spoken the truth in telling these men that the union has just signed a new contract with the company at Oakdale, calling for a general increase of five cents per hour in addition to other improvements in working conditions?" Stamey asked.

The uncomfortable superintendent admitted that this was true.

"May I ask you this?" Stamey continued. "Do you intend to violate the law by firing or discriminating, if any or all of your employes sign cards in the union?"

The superintendent replied, "No, we certainly will not violate the law. Our employes are free to join or not to join, as they see fit."

STAMEY thought he'd won. He knew he had when every worker in the hall signed union cards before the meeting ended.

Following the session a committee visited the homes of those who had not attended and signed them up.

Stamey did a lot of chuckling about the manner in which the company had outsmarted itself.

The company must have realized that the game was over—because on the day following the meeting it recognized the new local on a card check.

AVALANCHE!

House Subcommittee Frets Over Army's Pamphlet On Unions

"GENERAL, just exactly what did we fight for?" asked the Congressman. The General leaned back in his chair, puffed his cigarette a moment, and said, "The Ten Commandments, the Magna Charta, the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. All of these had no validity under Hitler."

"But," said the Congressman, "I thought we were fighting to stop aggression."

The Congressman was Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.). The General, complete with three stars, was Raymond S. McLain, director of information of the Army Dept.

Subject of a hearing before an Executive Expenditures subcommittee was Armed Forces Talk 220, on "Organized Labor in the U. S."

The Congressman called in Gen. McLain, as well as Gen. Charles T. Lanham, chief of the Army's troop information and education, to call them down for disseminating "pro-labor propaganda."

The document in question was issued March 12, as source material for one of the Army's weekly discussion hours, often conducted at the platoon level.

The general explained:

"Whereas individual civilians are rightly permitted to acquire as much or as little information as their respective intellectual curiosity suggests, the Army believes that there is a minimum awareness of these fields below which an American soldier becomes a liability rather than an asset to the service.

"A soldier who is ignorant of these things which good citizens are expected to know, to the extent of his ignorance, a less valuable soldier."

Putting the Army's motivation more bluntly, Lanham told the Congressmen that he had been a regimental commander at the Normandy landing, and had fought with U. S. soldiers across Europe, adding, "I'd rather take a group of men with nothing but sticks and stones and bare hands who were convinced of the rightness of what they were fighting for," than well-trained, well-armed men who didn't know why they were in battle.

"Organized Labor in the U. S." was originally written by Sidney Levy, labor reporter for the staunchly conservative N. Y. Journal of Commerce, checked and approved by the War and Labor Dept. information officials, then published.

While the pamphlet states in some detail the "unfair" practices by labor listed in the Taft-Hartley law, it also contains some statements of fact to which the Congressman objected strenuously.

TWO members of the House Labor Committee kicked because the pamphlet states: "Employes join unions because in unions they have more strength than any of them possess as individuals. The purpose of unions is to help workers obtain improved working conditions, higher wages, shorter hours, and just treatment from employers."

"The extent of work stoppage in industry has been greatly exaggerated," reads another statement to which the Congressmen took exception. This simple fact in the next sentence was ignored by the irate committeemen: "By far the great majority of disputes between labor and management are settled peaceably, although these settlements are not often reported to the public as news. A strike is spectacular; peaceful settlement is not."

"While strikes are costly to all concerned, and disliked by everyone, including workers, they have not seriously impeded our industrial progress," the pamphlet points out. "In some measure they have helped it, because they have resulted in the more considerate treatment of labor and better understanding between labor and management."

Rep. Walter Judd (R., Minn.) was especially outraged about references in the Army series to the U. S. as a "democracy." We're not a democracy, but a republic, he insists. And he wants the Army to point out that democracy really means "rule by the mob."

In Winning, You Lose!

How can a union poll a 2 to 1 vote for a union shop contract and yet fail to show a majority? It's easy under the Taft-Hartley Act!

Five employes of the United Baking Co. of Uniontown, were eligible to vote. Two didn't. Of the other three, two wanted a union shop contract with the AFL. One didn't.

Two is not enough under T-H, which requires a majority of those eligible, not of those voting, NLRB Reg. Dir. Henry Shore pointed out.

QUILL LEAVES LABOR PARTY

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

MICHAEL QUILL had his Irish up.

The CIO Transport Workers Union's broguish president resigned last week from the New York American Labor Party, of which he was a founder, denouncing the "screwballs and crackpots who continue to carry on as if the Communist Party and the American Labor Party were the same house with two doors."

Quill recently resigned as President of the Greater New York City CIO Council, because that body refused to adhere to CIO policy against a third party and in favor of the Marshall Plan. He was elected to the New York City Council (the city government body) as an ALP member.

Of ALP, he wrote in his resignation: "I am convinced that this party is no longer the ALP which was founded by such true representatives of the people as B. Charney Vladek and Sidney Hillman. I have good reason to believe that as it stands today the ALP is the prisoner of such crackpots as William Z. Foster (chairman of the Communist Party of the U. S.), Robert Thompson (New York State CP chairman) and a string of lesser job-holders.

"These merchants of confusion cannot command the respect of any large section of voters. Instead of helping Henry Wallace, they are doing him serious damage."

Leon Straus, chairman of the Bronx County ALP (Quill was elected from the Bronx), commenting on the resignation, declared Quill "no longer represents the sentiments of the ALP." (In his letter, Quill referred to Straus as "a boy named Straus.")

Quill's letter was addressed to Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP., N. Y.), chairman of ALP.

THERE was a raft of political action news in the air with the two big key primaries in Ohio and Indiana heading the speculation. Sen. Bob Taft (R., O.), appalled by the delegates Harold Stassen had grabbed in Wisconsin and Nebraska, rushed home to Ohio, leaving second-stringer Fred Hartley to carry on for the Taft-Hartley law.

Stassen—never one to be fazed by a "favorite son"—was opposing Taft in the Ohio delegation race. Your guess is as good as ours as to which will win, though Taft is favored by political observers because of his well-oiled machine.

Political pickings:

Greater N. Y. Council: CIO Dir. Jack Kroll formally stripped this New York City body of the right to represent CIO in the field of politics.

In a letter to State CIO Pres. Louis Hollander, Kroll said the regional PAC setup by the State body is "exclusively recognized and authorized to serve as the political arm of the national CIO-PAC in the New York area."

GOP—"Liberals" in the Republican Party were downright embarrassed as the Rep. Natl. Committee selected Gov. Dwight Herbert Green, of Illinois, as keynoter for the national convention.

Green—as any fool can plainly see—is the right-hand (and we do mean right) man for Publisher Robert Rutherford McCormick, the you-know-what Chicago Tribune publisher. Maybe Stassen and others will stay in their hotel rooms during Green's keynote—with a sour taste in the mouths.

Austin, Minn.: PAC won with four out of five indorsements in the city election. In one ward, PAC made no indorsements because all the candidates were labor men and all had approved labor's platform. The CIO Packinghouse Workers are the dominant union in Austin.

More Quill: He coined a slogan —"Wages Before Wallace"—in blocking approval by the TWU executive board of a pro-Wallace resolution.

Electrical: The CIO Electrical Workers have formed a "UE Independent Political Committee." UE Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald and UE Sec.-Treas. Julius Emspak recently resigned as members of the PAC executive committee in order to support Wallace.

Fitzgerald and Emspak announced that "at every level, UE-IPC will cooperate with all other groups seeking similar progressive political objectives. This includes, specifically, maximum possible cooperation at every level with CIO-PAC, the AFL Political Education League and the Railroad Brothers political organizations."

Los Angeles: The CIO Council, which was stripped of its PAC authority by Natl. PAC Dir. Jack Kroll for refusal to adhere to CIO policy, issued a number of recommendations for consideration by the State CIO indorsements conference.

Federated Press noted that only "conditional support" had been given to Reps. Helen Gahagan Douglas and Chet Holifield for "fear that they might vote for the draft and universal military training in opposition to CIO policy."

Thirders: The Illinois Progressive (Wallace) Party nominated Prof. (of journalism) Curtis McDougall to run for senator against incumbent C. Wayland (Curly) Brooks (of the Chicago Trib. Brookses) and Democrat Paul Douglas, who has strong liberal support. (The Daily Worker, in a Freudian typographical error, spelled MacDougall "MacDouglas.")

Cushing, Okla.: PAC block workers brought out the biggest vote since 1938 and elected labor's candidate for city commissioner, Henry I. Huff. Women carried on the block work.

CIO COUNCILS: Dir. John Brophy was still receiving reports from councils in answer to his notice to them that they were bound, under CIO rules, to follow national anti-third party in 1948 and pro-Marshall Plan policy.

Here are the latest council reports:

MONTGOMERY COUNTY, O.: from Secy.-Treas. William Snoots —"Pres. Sims (UE) resigned. A resolution was adopted to reorganize PAC. Also, the action taken at the last delegate meeting concerning the tabling of your letter was rescinded. I can assure you that CIO policy will be carried."

OKLAHOMA STATE: from Secy.-Treas. Arthur L. Cross—"We of Oklahoma do concur with only one dissenting vote—and this vote being in opposition to the Marshall Plan itself."

CONTRA COSTA COUNTY, CALIF.: from Secy. Roy Sturtevant—"1. A motion was passed to write Pres. Murray protesting the method used in your letter to try and force the councils to take a certain position. 2. A motion was made to conform with national policy and lost by 10-21. This leaves the council as having taken no stand, pro or con, on the questions."

LAKE COUNTY, IND.: from Secy. Russell Graves — "Passed without a dissenting vote. This council has no Negro delegates, no white delegates, no Jews or Gentiles, no Protestants or Catholics, native-born or foreign-born —only good American citizens, who are good CIO members."

DANE COUNTY, WIS.: from Secy. Stanley Prideaux — "We had no dissension in our ranks . . unanimous."

RICHLAND COUNTY, O.: from Secy. M. H. Myers—"Indorse and support."

Let's Get The Horse Before The Cart

on this matter of wages and prices. The corporate interests are trying to sell the American public on the notion that high wages cause high prices.

But let's take a look at the industry we know best, our own, the one we work for—the oil industry. Here are facts about wages and prices in oil:

	Average Hourly Refinery Wage	Refinery Products Price per Barrel
June, 1946	$1.43	$2.11
January, 1948	1.70	3.52
Percentage gain	19%	66%

But plain dollars don't mean much any more. The dollar is inflated, both for us and the refinery owner. Figuring the dollar on terms of what it would buy in 1939 dollars, here's how the figures above affect both our wages and the refiner's prices:

	Average Hourly Refinery Wage	Refinery Products Price per Barrel
June, 1946	$1.07	$1.58
January, 1948	1.01	2.08
	(A 5.6% decrease)	(A 31.6% increase)

The next time they pull that old gag about high wages causing high prices, remind them of the facts and figures in oil.

Remind them that good wages and good farm income are the all-American team that pulls the cart of prosperity.

Remind them that India and China have low wages—and high prices. But who wants to live there?

The American standard of living was never based on coolie wages. Its' the unions of America that made the American standard of living the pride of our nation and the admiration of the entire world.

To preserve that standard of living and to keep it from sliding downhill, the nation's union oil workers are asking a wage increase of 30c an hour.

Every merchant and professional man in ..... depends on the good pay checks of well paid workers for their own prosperity.

That's why we want you to understand our fight to maintain the American standard of living.

It Couldn't Happen In Alabama

It was in Detroit before the War, in the days when the shadow of Hitler had fallen over much of Europe. A Negro woman walked into an election booth, shoulder to shoulder with the white woman who employed her.

"You know," the white woman said optimistically, "this is wonderful, our going to vote this way, you and I. It couldn't happen in Germany."

"No," her colored companion agreed, "and it couldn't happen in Alabama."

That stark incident is the introduction to a series of articles issued by "Labor Reports," of the Jewish Labor Committee. The articles are designed to promote "To Secure These Rights," the report of Pres. Truman's Civil Rights Committee.

* * *

In Atlanta, Georgia Gov. M. E. Thompson accused the Ku Klux Klan of embarking on a new terror campaign. He made his accusation after it was revealed that three KKK members had taken part in the brutal beating of a war vet.

Thompson declared the Klan, through a new organization called the Black Raiders, is plotting beatings of private citizens in Atlanta, LaGrange and other cities. The vet, who is 23, is Joseph Berry, an unemployed construction worker.

On April 15, he was found bent against a tree, partially unclothed and bleeding from a number of welts on his back. Nearby, police found cards on which was printed "Black Raiders," and also found a black mask, a pistol and a two-foot leather strap, which had been used to flog Berry. One of five suspects arrested declared Berry was not supporting his wife. He did not explain how an unemployed man could do that.

The House is considering a proposal to remove race as one of the bars to entering America or becoming a citizen. This law, if passed, would be of particular help to some 80,000 persons, of Japanese ancestry, who live in the U. S. and Hawaii. They suffer loss of many liberties because of state laws which bar those liberties to "aliens ineligible to citizenship."

The Washington Post, commenting on the bill, declared: "Let American citizenship be an ideal to which all men are entitled at least to aspire."

LS/MFT has some average working women in its employ in New York, too.

Comeback: There was bad news for the average working woman from the Labor Dept. Prices have risen almost to the point which prevailed just before the February break in the commodity markets. In fact, the Bur. of Labor Statistics index was only 0.5% below the January figure.

And, meat was rapidly mounting in price.

Apples: Sen. Harry Cain (R., Wash.), who thinks landlords and real estate people are just ducky, was the malaprop of the GOP last week.

He bemoaned the fact the apple industry—one of Washington's biggest—has been hurt by the fact that Americans "generally have more money and will buy only the super-type of apples."

Quipped back the Democratic Party's Capital Comment: "Republicans cannot get over their obsession for the Good Old Days of the Hoover regime when there was a hungry, jobless apple distributor on every corner." (The corner around which Mr. Hoover's prosperity never turned.)

* * *

Resistance: The restaurateurs are not the only ones feeling the effects of customer resistance to high prices. Fred Starrett, of Lloyd Jones, retail management consultants, says: "It is no secret that higher price merchandise is not selling. Coats that did not sell at $69 and $59 were a sellout at $38 in a Pittsburgh store."

Exception: Incidentally, it was feature news in the New York Times financial page when Lit Bros., large Philadelphia department store, with which the fabulous Albert M. Greenfield is connected, reported its sales were increasing.

Freight: In Washington, the poor, poor railroad lines won another freight rate increase, which is bound to be reflected in the cost of living.

Ominous note: The Wall St. Journal reported that "more business firms failed last month than at any time since December, 1942. Four hundred seventy-seven of them gave up the ghost."

The Journal went on: "The trend is not alarming for most industries since the rates of business failure are mostly running well below pre-war. But the swelling statistics are worth keeping an eye on." As one credit man put it, "the gravy train has stopped running and we are getting down to normal."

Sudden morbid thought: How many of these failures are vets who went into business since the war? Few, we hope.

Now about profits:

General Electric (which opposes giving its workers any more dough): reports first quarter (of 1948) profits of $25,389,149. In the first three months of 1947 GE made $17,918,591. Any schoolboy can tell you that here is an increase of 42%.

The decline in the workers' purchasing power was in sharp contrast to GE's soaring profits.

And Atlantic Refining: First quarter profiit of $8,180,000 vs. first quarter profit of $2,765,000. That's about 200%, neighbor.

And General Portland Cement: First '48 three months $814,000 vs. first '47 three months $409,900.

* * *

Orders: Westinghouse's new orders in the first three months of '48 hit a peacetime high of $242,355,168.

More oil: Consolidated profit for Gulf was $95,540,059 last year compared to $58,284,930 in 1946.

Brokest Man

A Boston businessman was so broke recently that he couldn't afford to go broke.

That anomalous situation arose because it costs $45 (a federal filing fee) to go into federal bankruptcy court. The businessman listed his liabilities at $21,079.78 with no assets.

So, he didn't have the $45, and had to delay his bankruptcy plea.

He's Doing Oil Right

L. F. McCollum, president of the Continental Oil Co., is a good negotiator—especially for his own pay.

He has just won a 10-year contract with Conoco. It calls for a $125,000 a year salary.

And, that ain't all. If the wholesale commodities index goes above 210, he gets an extra $25,000.

And, that ain't all. If the index goes above 260, he collects an extra 50 grand.

And, that ain't all. At the end of the 10-year contract, he retires on $35,000 a year for life.

And, that ain't all. He has an option to buy 50,000 shares of Conoco at November prices.

Armour Fails To Break Strike

"A FEW more back-to-work moves like this one and we'll be assured of victory."

That was the reaction of one CIO Packinghouse official to Armour Packing Company's much-heralded move to reopen its 17 strikebound plants last week.

The union branded the "back-to-work movement" a dismal failure. Some 2000 police were detailed to the Chicago plant gates in anticipation of a flock of strikebreakers, and the union increased the number of its pickets to 2000.

The attempt to break the strike was a flop, but not before a picket was killed by a truck as it surged through a picket line. (See story on Page 3.)

UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein expressed regret that some livestock raisers, misled by Armour statements into believing the strike was broken, shipped excessive numbers of hogs to market. "As a result the farmers have sustained heavy losses," he said.

FOLLOWING Pres. Truman's urging that the companies and union resume negotiations, Armour met with the union once, then abruptly broke off talks, announcing its intention to attempt a back-to-work movement.

Immediately Helstein wired Pres. Truman, urging him to reconvene his three-man Board of Inquiry to investigate Armour's refusal to bargain.

In declaring negotiations over, "Armour exposed quite brazenly an attitude typical of its behavior since the commencement of this dispute—an arrogant refusal to engage in any good-faith negotiation," Helstein charged.

"It is this attitude which has caused this strike and which will now prolong it until companies like Armour are willing to indicate a greater concern for the public welfare," the wire continued.

He said the company, rather than negotiate, was relying on injunctions and back-to-work movements to break the strike.

SHORTLY before Armour broke off negotiations, Swift & Co. was in the courts demanding an injunction and $500,000 damages in a suit against the union's Los Angeles local. In addition, the company sought from local and district union officers punitive damages of $280,000 and damages of $10,000 a day as long as the strike continues at the local plant.

The walkout of 100,000 packing employes began March 16 after the four major companies refused to budge from their original offer of 9c an hour. They rejected union offers to arbitrate. The union is seeking 29c an hour.

In a recent letter to the public, UPWA Research Director Lyle Cooper charged that the press and radio almost completely suppressed some of the Presidential Inquiry Board's findings which substantiated the union's case.

Not mentioned, Cooper said, was the Board's statement that the companies' 9c offer would prevent improvement in the workers' low standard of living; that the Board approves the union's use of the Bureau of Labor Statistics Family Budget as a basis for estimating the workers' wage needs; that a liberal application of the budget principle would entitle the workers to more than a 29c raise, while a narrow application would entitle them to more than the 9c offered by management.

"MEET ME IN . . ." CIO Steelworkers' District 34, St. Louis, is staging an elaborate registration drive. Each Saturday, specific groups of USA members gather voluntarily at designated places and are transported by bus to the Election Commission office. The program will go for eight weeks. The district office, of which A. F. Kojetinsky is director, checked local union lists of members against official registration lists to determine who was not registered. The local PAC committee then urged the unregistered members to sign up. Wives and families of members also are transported in the buses. The group above are employes of the Foster Bros Mfg. Co.

Close Textile PlantDespite High Profits

MORE than 900 members of the CIO Textile Workers lost their jobs recently when the Naushon Mill shut down at New Bedford, Mass., sold its property and dismantled its machinery for shipment overseas.

Naushon was a plant that the workers themselves had struggled to keep because the jobs were so important in New Bedford.

Ten years ago, when the plant closed because of the depression, the workers interested the Reconstruction Finance Corp. in opening it again under new management. They agreed to buy $150,000 worth of stock through 5% payroll deductions and the RFC put up $370,000 as a loan. Meanwhile, the 1938 hurricane swept through the mill. The workers spent three payless weeks repairing the damage.

Finally, Naushon was set up. The city waived $235,000 in back taxes so that the venture might succeed and the 900 jobs continue. By 1942, the company was making good profits, the workers' stock was bought back and the mortgage was paid off. The owners began to recover their original investment.

Last year—1947—was the best year in textile history. The high profits that year, plus the whole selling price of the mill and its equipment, were gravy for the owners. When the liquidation was announced the company president admitted the mill was making a profit but he refused at least two offers from buyers who wanted to keep it going.

He could make more money by selling the machinery separately, particularly to foreign buyers. When the union asked severance pay for the workers, he said the demand was "ridiculous."

Congress Ups On-Job Pay Ceilings Despite Sen. Taft

AT long last Congress has passed a bill raising the income ceilings for war veterans going to school and taking on-the-job training under the GI Bill of Rights.

The bill, which was passed by the House last week and which Pres. Truman is expected to sign, permits on-the-job trainees without dependents to earn as much as $145 a month, those with one dependent as much as $180 a month and those with two or more dependents up to $200 a month.

They could earn these wages and still receive from the government $65 a month without dependents and $90 if they have dependents.

CEILINGS now in effect are $175 for veterans without dependents and $200 for those with dependents.

The new ceilings also apply to student veterans and those taking training on the farm, although they receive bigger allowances: $75 a month with no dependents, $105 with one dependent and $120 with two or more dependents.

When Pres. Truman signs the bill, the higher ceilings will be retroactive to April 1.

The fight against the ceilings began during the 79th Congress with the CIO, the American Veterans Committee and other veterans' organizations taking the lead. Congress, however, voted the ceilings.

Raising the ceilings shows how involved Congress can become in its own proceedings. Although the Senate passed the bill last July and the House last February, the House made the mistake of substituting the language of a House bill so that it could raise the ceilings further.

There followed a parliamentary tangle which was not helped by the maneuvers of Sen. Taft (R., Ohio). Credit for the Senate passage of the bill goes to Sen. Wayne Morse (R., Oreg.), author of the measure.

Under parliamentary rules, the House had to vote again on the bill, although it had already accepted the conference report.

Surprised?

It wouldn't be an effective strike if some anti-labor Congressman didn't charge it was a red plot to deliver the country into the hands of Joe Stalin.

By that yardstick, the CIO Packinghouse strike has been effective, for Rep. Fred E. Busbey (R., Ill.) has asked the House Un-American Activities Committee to start looking for reds in the union.

"There is good reason to believe that this strike is part of an initial attempt to threaten our national defense program," Busbey informed Committee Chairman J. Parnell Thomas.

(Now where've we heard that before?)

UAW Board Authorizes Strike Against Chrysler

THE CIO Auto Workers Intl. Executive Board has authorized Norman Mathews, director of the UAW Chrysler Conference, to call a strike against the Chrysler Corp. if and when he finds it necessary to win the union's demands.

Previously the Chrysler workers in a secret ballot had voted to walk out if necessary.

The union's original demand for a 30c hourly increase was scaled down to 18½c after the UAW Chrysler Conference rejected a company offer of 6c.

The executive board termed the offer "ridiculously inadequate" and stated that it supported the conference's rejection "100 percent."

"It takes a 30c-an-hour wage increase to restore to Chrysler workers the purchasing power they lost through inflation and permit them to make a slight advance in their standard of living," the board pointed out.

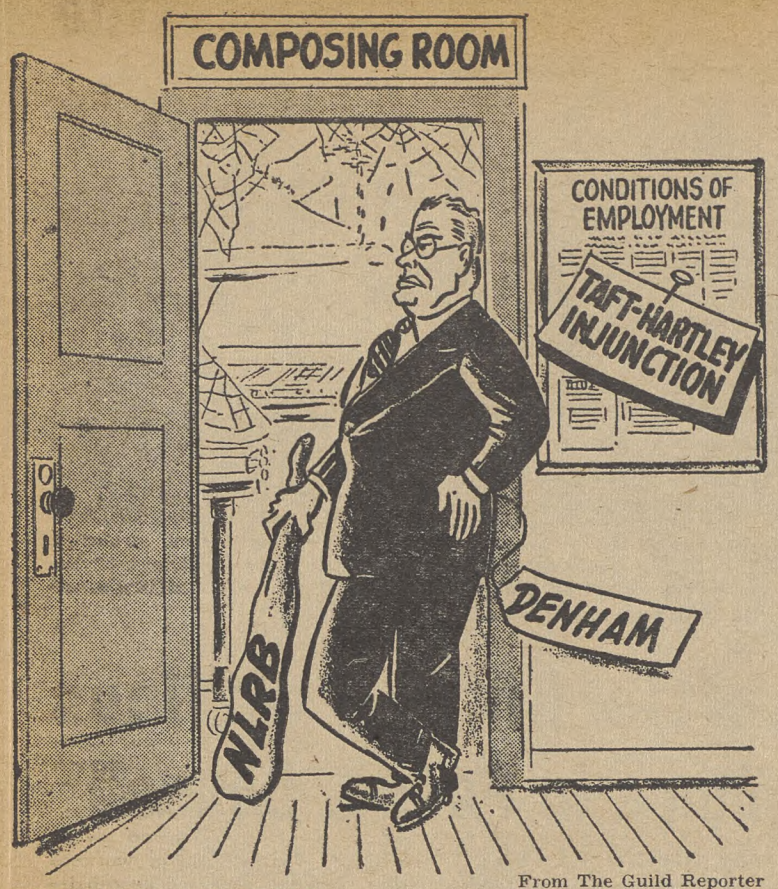
"The corporation admits that it takes $70 a week for a family of four in Detroit to live on the meager, inadequate city's worker's budget compiled by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics," it continued. "The present weekly average of Chrysler workers is $57. A 30c-an-hour increase would still leave Chrysler workers $1 a week short of that standard."

CHRYSLER has not disputed the fact that it can afford the increase, it commented.

In support of this claim, the IEB pointed to the company's 1947 profits after taxes, representing a 25.6% return on its investment. Average return for all U. S. manufacturing corporations, according to government figures, was under 16%.

Union negotiators with General Motors, at the same time, were struggling through an obstacle course the company attempted to set in the way of a NLRB union shop election.

UAW Pres. Walter Reuther hinted that GM's closing of most of its 100 plants, ostensibly because of a steel and pig iron shortage, may have been a strategic lockout. The period of the shutdown will coincide with the union shop election.



From The Guild Reporter

THE NEW FOREMAN: The AFL Typographical Union—whose members work in composing rooms—is being injunctioned to an extreme under the Taft-Hartley Law.

If You'll Pardon Us, T-H, We Told You So

By GLORIA CAPLAN

TAFT-Hartley is turning out as CIO repeatedly warned.

To NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham some of the developments came as a "surprise"—or so he told 600 hosiery manufacturers in Atlantic City, N. J., last week.

He was surprised, for instance, that workers showed virtually no desire to dump the union shop, which requires membership in the union after a given period. "In only a handful of cases . . . did the proposition for the union shop authorization fail to carry," mused Denham, "and the over-all figures show affirmative votes were cast by 84% of all the employes who would be affected."

(The section of the T-H law requiring an election before authorization of the union shop was inserted, proponents said at the time, to protect workers from labor "czars". At a cost to the government of approximately 50c a ballot, the Board has now conducted 6000 such elections, of which "certainly less than 50" failed to result in authorization. Union shop petitions constitute three-fourths of the new NRLB cases.)

But Denham hastened to assure his listeners that the new law is "working."

ON THE opposite coast another NLRB chieftain aired his views.

Alarmed at the habit of labor-management disputants running to the Board to get injunctions against each other, NLRB Chairman Paul Herzog spoke of the "flood of cases inundating us."

(That sounds like CIO again.)

The NLRB is trying to cope with the heavy case load that followed passage of the T-H Act, Herzog said, but "no matter what miracles we may perform—and I promise none—it cannot be solved until industry and labor determine to deal reasonably and unreservedly with one another . . ."

Complaints brought to the Board are like law suits, he said, and he quoted the adage that "a bad settlement is better than a good law suit." Particularly is this true, he continued, in labor relations, where the parties must continue to live together.

Labor and management can usually resolve their differences "quicker and better than we can do it for them," he pointed out.

THEN followed a statement that CIO spokesmen have often made. "In the field of labor-management relations," he said, "legislation will never remove the need for cooperation, mutual understanding and confidence . . . Those who seek sole refuge in the statute books make orderly collective bargaining and plant harmony difficult, if not impossible.

"The more government has to do, the less likely it is to do it well."

Meanwhile, parts of the new law were being challenged in the U. S. courts.

For instance, a Federal district court in Washington prepared to consider the constitutionality of the T-H ban on political expenditures by unions. The suit was filed by the CIO Auto Workers, seeking to throw out the entire section.

The UAW argued that the recent Federal district court ruling involving CIO Pres. Philip Murray and the CIO News invalidated only the ban against unions' use of their publications for political purposes.

And as for the Board itself—it continued blazing new trials under the Act.

LATEST unprecedented decision was one in which an employer's anti-union campaign was so flagrant that the Board set aside a representation election held at the plant. But under T-H, the Board couldn't cite the company for unfair labor practices, because the employer did not in so many words bribe or threaten the workers.

The NLRB said the president of General Shoe Corp., Pulaski, Tenn., called employes into his office in groups of about 20 before the election and read them an "intemperate anti-union address." In addition, it said, foremen were sent to homes of workers to talk against the union.

Toy Train Makers Walk Out

IN Irvington, N. J., there's a "train" strike, but the Railroad Mediation Board isn't excited, and no passengers have been inconvenienced.

Maybe that's because this particular strike involves toy trains.

Involved are 1800 CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers who make toy trains at the Lionel Corporation plant. At issue are pay increases, increased holiday, hospitalization and night shift bonus provisions.

Elsewhere other CIO local unions were making news as they pushed for higher pay:

MINE, MILL: American Zinc Co. employes in Columbus, O.; Taylor Springs, Ill., and Fairmont City, Ill., have won wage increases of 12½c an hour, effective March 1. The contract expires June 30, 1948.

ELECTRICAL: At the A. Schrader's Son division of the Scovill Mfg. Co., in Brooklyn, N. Y., 1500 workers, on the verge of striking, succeeded in obtaining 9c hourly wage boosts and the right to reopen wage discussions on the basis of any "national pattern" that may be established.

In Lexington, Ky., another UE local is battling a circuit court injunction against mass picketing in a strike for recognition and pay hikes at the General Electric lamp works. The workers are seeking a pay scale equivalent to that in other GE plants.

OFFICE & PROFESSIONAL: Close on the heels of the smashing of a CIO cables strike by Telephone & Telegraph, three other IT&T locals succeeded in gaining sizeable increases and contract improvements.

Some 1100 UOPWA white collar, 5000 UE production workers at the Federal Telephone & Radio Co., and several hundred UOPWA technical employes at the Federal Telecommunication Laboratories, were affected by the simultaneous signing of contracts. Both companies are IT&T subsidiaries in New Jersey.

None of the locals has filed noncommunist affidavits under the T-H law.

In Los Angeles, UOPWA social service employes at the Los Angeles Jewish Community Council and the Mt. Sinai-Duarte Natl. Medical Center also won increases.

In addition to average increases of $20 a month, the new contracts provide improved seniority, time-and-a-half for overtime and double time for Sundays.

Employes of the Los Angeles Federation of Jewish Welfare Organizations, failing to reach agreement after expiration of their contract on March 1, have taken a strike vote.

PUBLIC WORKERS: Under constant prodding by the CIO Public Workers, the Detroit city council has voted a flat $208 yearly pay raise for all city employes, except those on the city-owned transit system. The union had asked $250.

BREAKS PRECEDENT: Miss Thelma Porter is the first Negro chosen as "Miss Subway." Her picture is appearing this month on posters in New York subways. She is president of the Youth Chapter, Brooklyn Branch, Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

N. Y. Fare Increase Means Transport Union Wins Rise

NEW YORK CITY'S traditional 5c transit fare is out the window, and for thousands of transportation employes it will mean the arrival of long-awaited wage increases.

CIO Transport Workers' Pres. Michael Quill vigorously supported the fare rise. Effective July 1, fares will be increased to 10c on city-owned subway and elevated lines, to 7c on city-owned trolleys and buses, and to 12c for combined rides.

Approval of the fare rise by Mayor O'Dwyer and the Board of Transportation followed a determined effort by the Transport Workers to obtain 30c hourly increases for 42,000 transit employes. Quill had pointed out that New York, whose cost-of-living index is second highest in the nation, pays its transit workers considerably less than some other large cities.

Announcing the increased fare, Mayor O'Dwyer deplored the necessity of having to "unload on the rider the present real estate obligation," and repeated that the real estate interests have not paid a fair share of city expenses.

Previously the mayor had requested permission to raise the real estate levy, but it was turned down by Gov. Thomas Dewey and the Republican-controlled state legislature. "Apparently my plan clashed with the Republican party policy of protecting the big real estate interests," he charged. "The Republicans believe that the little fellow should carry the load."

In its resolution recommending the increased fare, the Board of Transportation backed the Transport Workers' demands for wage increases and an improved pension plan.

A number of CIO units in the city had previously expressed disapproval of the fare rise proposal, among them the Greater New York City CIO Council, Local 65, Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes; Amalgamated Lithographers; Electrical Workers; Office & Professional Workers and units of the Newspaper Guild.

When the fare increase appeared imminent, the Transport Workers called off an 11-day-old strike on six Manhattan bus routes operated by the East Side and Comprehensive Bus companies.

Amount of the proposed pay increases was not announced, but there were reports of a contemplated rise of 20c an hour on city lines and 14c on private lines. Austin Hogan, president of TWU Local 100, however, hit the rumors with a statement that the union would insist upon 30c and its entire program.

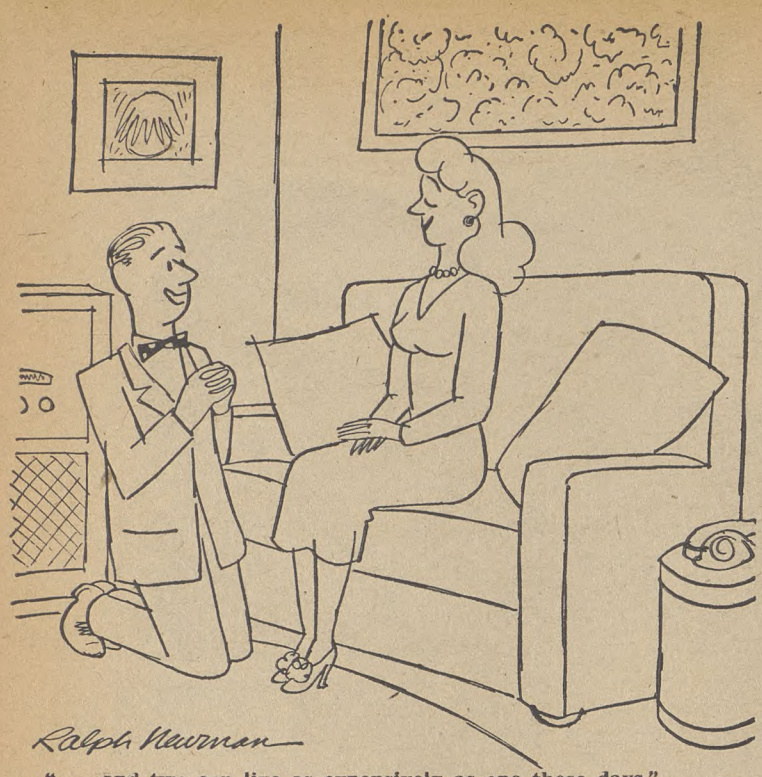
In Akron, Ohio, the union is engaged in a similar struggle, resulting in a 26-day bus strike against the Akron Transportation Co. Although the City Council has approved a fare rise, a settlement still has not been reached.

Murray Indorses Fight on Cancer

Cancer kills 16,000 members of organized labor each year, according to the American Cancer Society which is carrying on a year-round struggle against the malady through education, research and service programs.

CIO Pres. Murray, in endorsing the work of the Society, urged all CIO members to aid its efforts.

Informational material on what unions can do to fight cancer may be obtained from the American Cancer Society, 47 Beaver St., New York 4, N. Y.



"... and two can live as expensively as one these days."

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Martin Gerber, Director, Region 9, CIO Auto Workers, reports the members of the Engineers and Salaried Employees Association. (Independent) voted overwhelmingly to affiliate with UAW-CIO. This organization of 1200 members has had a contract covering the office workers of the Wright Aeronautical Corp. of Paterson, N. J. UAW-CIO was also successful in an NLRB election conducted among the employes of Pacific Airmotives Co., Linden, N. J. The result was UAW 69, no union 25.

Reg. Dir. William Mayo, South Bend, Ind., advises the Rubber Workers won an election among the production and maintenance Workers at the United States Rubber Co. Fort Wayne, Ind., as follows. URWA-CIO 564, AFL 24, no union 18. In the small unit, the result was URWA-CIO 34, Machinists 18.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone, New Haven, Conn., reports the Textile Workers won a union shop election at Ansonia O and C Co., Ansonia, Conn. Of 333 eligible, 304 voted yes, 11 no.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner, Newark, N. J., advises the Chemical Workers won an election at Wesco. Co., Trenton, N. J. The vote was Chemical Workers 31, no union 22. Sixty-six were eligible to vote. CIO Field Rep. Frank Gallagher was in charge.

The CIO United Auto Workers, ranked as one of the world's largest unions, grew a little more as the result of organizational activities in connection with the CIO Southern Drive.

UAW ADDS FOUR PLANTS Four more plants were added to the growing UAW-CIO family. They were the General Motors assembly plant in Atlanta where the NLRB election score was 922 to 69; International Harvester plant in Memphis with a score of 861 to 4 (previously reported in this column); Diamond Match Company (clothes-pin division) in Norfolk, Va., 101 to 5 and the Altite Motor Products Corp., in Fredericksburg, Va., where union recognition was granted without the necessity of an election.

The Atlanta GM plant expects to have more than 3,000 employes on the payroll soon and International Harvester management has announced plans for expanding its Memphis plant by hiring more than 4,000 persons in the near future.

The UAW-CIO local at the Ford Motor Co. assembly in Atlanta is expected to be doubled soon with the hiring of more than a thousand additional employes as the new 1949 Ford passenger cars started rolling down the assembly line last week.

Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee, announces the CIO United Stone Workers Union became the bargaining agent for the employes of the Weston & Brooker Stone Co. at Cayce, S. C., as the result of an NLRB-conducted election.

At Burlington, N. C. a petition for an NLRB election at the Seaboard Stevens plant was filed in the name of the CIO Textile Workers by William Smith, North Carolina director for the organizing committee. The plant, a plastic and cotton weaving mill, is owned by the United States Rubber Co.

Michigan CIO Attacks Bowling Discrimination

The Michigan CIO Council last week again urged the American Bowling Congress to abolish its Jim Crow membership eligibility regulations.

Pres. August Scholle and Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins told the ABC executive board that the CIO "would like to see sportsmanship and democracy in action in American bowling. We believe that Americans want free and open competition in all sports. This is the American way."

Because of ABC's discriminatory policies the CIO Auto Workers is sponsoring a bowling tournament.

Labor's World

IMPORTANT executive meetings of the World Federation of Trade Unions open in Rome, Italy, on April 30 and will continue until about May 10.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey and his executive assistant, Harry Read, left by plane for Rome Apr. 25. They will return to Washington in mid-May. Michael Ross, CIO international affairs director, left earlier to attend meetings of the international labor conference on European aid problems at London, and will then join the CIO group in Rome.

The meeting is the first WFTU executive session since last November.

* * *

ANNUAL convention of the Latin-American Federation of Labor (CTAL), held last month at Mexico City, unanimously re-elected Lombardo Vicente Toledano as president.

The meeting adopted a three-point program calling for world peace; for achievement of democracy and political liberty in Latin America; and industrialization of the Latin American countries.

Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers Intl. Union addressed the meeting as a CIO fraternal delegate, and also attended meetings of representatives of oil unions throughout Latin America.

THE UNITED NATIONS Appeal for Children—designed to bring funds, food and medicine to needy kids throughout the world—is receiving top-flight support from labor unions in a dozen nations.

The idea was conceived by Aake Orde, UN delegate from Norway and a former union leader there. It seeks to help 250 million young war victims, regardless of race, creed or the political complexion of their governments.

In the United States, the UNAC has solid endorsement from CIO, AFL and the railroad brotherhoods. It is also being supported by the World Federation of Trade Unions, the Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unions, and two Latin-American federations.

In several countries — among them, Czechoslovakia, Norway, Sweden and Holland — workers have volunteered for special overtime work, with their extra pay earmarked for the children's fund. In Britain, the Trades Union Congress has set up 2,000 local committees to spur the drive.

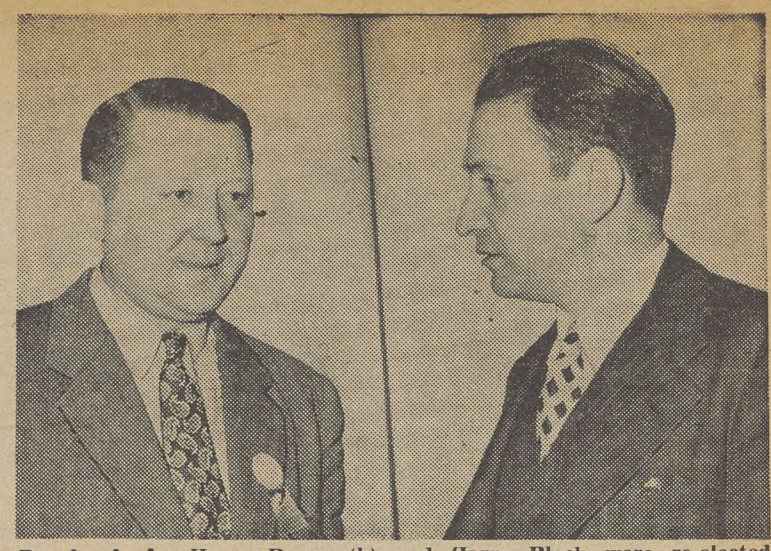
American goal is to collect $60 million. CIO's part in the drive is being handled by the CIO Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, New York.

Sugar Union Strikes To End Differentials

It's that old wage differential again—and 2,600 CIO sugar workers in three east coast cities are determined to wipe it out.

In Boston a strike of 500 workers at the American Sugar Co. is in its third week. In Baltimore a strike of 900 American Sugar employes is in its fourth week. And in Long Island, N. Y., 1,200 Natl. Sugar Refinery workers are in their fifth strike week.

All CIO Packinghouse Workers, they are seeking a 24c hourly increase to bring their wages on a par with those of other refineries on the East Coast. Also sought is a uniform expiration date of August 1 for all CIO sugar contracts.



Reelected: Harry Boyer (l.) and Harry Block were re-elected president and secretary-treasurer, respectively, of the Pennsylvania Industrial Union Council at the council's 11th convention in Philadelphia last week.

Left's Bid For Offices Flops in Penna. Council

By IRVING FAGAN

LEFT-wingers took a lacing at the eleventh annual convention of the Pennsylvania Industrial Union Council at Philadelphia last week. The 800 delegates, at the largest state CIO convention in history, represented more than 600,000 members, a growth of 100,000 in one year.

The left-wingers were denounced by the convention speakers, to loud applause. They were overwhelmed in the resolutions adopted. And their bid for office fizzled.

Harry Boyer, Steelworkers, and Harry Block, rightwing Electrical Workers leader, were re-elected president and secretary-treasurer respectively. Boyer defeated James Conti, Stonecutter, Marcus Hook, 2334 to 352, and Block won over George Bobich, UE, Sharon, by a vote of 2320 to 446.

The right wing also won two contests for vice presidents. George Berry of UE local 105, Philadelphia, was elected to one of these posts, defeating George Baker of UE Local 107, Philadelphia, by a vote of 2212 to 540. John Evans trounced J. L. Strobel, incumbent, Public Workers, Pittsburgh, 2148 to 594.

Other vice presidents elected without opposition are: Frank Kirsch, Clothing Workers, Allentown; Harry McDonald, Auto Workers Local 813; and Frank McCabe, Glass Workers, Ford City.

The following incumbent vice presidents were elected without opposition. James J. Thomas, Steelworkers, Pittsburgh; Joseph L. Hueter, Textile, Philadelphia; George Craig, Philadelphia, CIO regional director, and Anthony J. Federoff, Pittsburgh, CIO regional director.

A delegate who spoke against a resolution expressing gratification at the election results in Italy was booed. Opposition to a resolution on the European Recovery plan was booed.

Resolutions indorsing the Marshall Plan and repudiating the Third Party movement were passed overwhelmingly.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, in the main speech of the convention, tore into the Communists, praised ERP, and denounced the Taft-Hartley Act.

He assailed the Communists for importing into Italy ideologies instead of food and steel. Describing ERP as lend-lease in reverse, Carey said Italian labor leaders did not want aid funneled through the United Nations because then they would not have had a voice in its distribution, inasmuch as Italy is not a member of UN.

Carey also assailed the Communists in the United States. They used the Negroes and other minority groups for their own ends, Carey charged, and not to advance the CIO civil rights program.

Carey declared that in Russia only plant-wide bargaining is permitted, and industry-wide bargaining is forbidden. He pointed out that such a prohibition was in the original Taft-Hartley bill, and was defeated by the efforts of organized labor.

The convention passed a resolution condemning the fining of John L. Lewis and the United Mine Workers. Another called the shooting of Auto Workers' Pres. Walter Reuther "a dastardly attack" and declared Reuther was the victim of "somebody's distorted hatred."

Other speakers included John Brophy, director of CIO Councils; Irving Abramson, chairman of the CIO Community Services Committee, and Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization.

Sodium Fluoride Given Clean Bill

The use of sodium fluoride in steel pouring does not by itself create a health hazard, the U. S. Public Health Service concluded in a recent report.

The USPHS studied the effects of the chemical on workers on joint request of the CIO Steelworkers and the Republic Steel Corp. Last year several members of Ford Local 600 of the CIO Auto Workers quit work because of illness brought on by the use of the chemical during hardening operations.

The USPHS said it studied the effects of sodium fluoride in four Republic Steel plants at Youngstown, Canton, Cleveland and Warren, Ohio. It used 350 men in the study, making medical, oral and X-ray examinations.

It concluded that the illness caused by smoke, fumes and heat from steel pouring is not due to the use of sodium flouride. It recommended steps to control smoke from tar mold-coating, and called for better protection of workers from excessive heat.

Although the Ford plant in Dearborn, Mich., was not included in the study, the USPHS said the conditions there were the same as those studied in the Republic plants.

Find Social Security Is Inadequate

THE U. S. social security system is a fine thing, BUT—

- Some 20 million workers and their families are not now covered.
- Old-age benefits for retired workers average only $24.90 a month—mere chickenfeed under present price conditions.
- Unless the value of the dollar is preserved, future benefits will be almost meaningless.

Those facts highlighted a report made public in Washington last week by a group of 17 citizens and experts, who recommended unanimously 20 proposals for improving social security, together with two other recommendations on which there were some dissent.

The study was made by the Advisory Council on Social Security of the Senate Finance Committee. On the Council were representatives of all groups affected by social security.

CIO, hailing results of the published report, immediately called for Congressional action to bolster up the social security system, which has been little changed since it was set up under the leadership of Pres. Roosevelt.

PRINCIPAL recommendations of the Council urged that old age and survivors' insurance be extended to practically every American; that benefits be raised in a range from $20 to $78.75 a month, rather than kept within the present $10-$40; that age requirements be trimmed; and that increased social security taxes be buttressed by government contributions to the social security fund.

Van A. Bittner, CIO social security committee head and vice-president of the United Steelworkers, said the "American people have the right to expect immediate action on these proposals to improve social security.

"The responsibility rests squarely on Congress to act before adjournment. The Republican party, with a clear working majority in Congress, cannot evade the responsibility for action.

"Failure to act will reflect shocking indifference . . . to crying human needs—an indifference that will certainly be remembered at the polls in November."

How pressing the situation has become for millions of people who need social security benefits was revealed in a statement issued by Oscar Ewing, Federal Security Administrator.

Ewing pointed to the "widening gap" between rising prices and stationary social security benefits under the old age and survivors program.

Reports indicate, Ewing said, "that thousands of dependent American children are undernourished to an extent bordering on starvation. Many lack the shoes and clothing needed to enable them to attend school."

CIO Opens Battle To Improve Wage-Hour Law; Ball Bill Will Be Opposed

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE long—and so far unsuccessful—battle to win improvements in the U.S. Wage-Hour law has reopened before the Senate Labor Committee.

CIO witnesses—both union officials and rank-and-file members—will appear before the group this week with statistics, arguments and true-story reports about the need for lifting the minimum from 40c to 75c an hour.

Representatives of CIO maritime unions were on the stand late last week to stress the need of quick passage of the Thomas-McCormack Bill (S. 2062), which would expand wage-hour coverage and raise the minimum to 75c.

Also under committee scrutiny is the Ball Bill (S. 2386) which, while raising the minimum to 60c, would weaken the wage-hour law up and down the line.

SETH LEVINE, spokesman for the CIO Maritime Committee, said the Ball Bill "provides a Christmas tree for employers and lawyers and a wage cut for the workers."

He said the seamen and fish workers are particularly interested in the Thomas-McCormack bill, since it would extend wage-hour protection to both groups for the first time.

"The Ball Bill, on the other hand, not only fails to extend this coverage, but removes from coverage a large group of workers now protected by the Act," Levine told the Senators.

"A 75c minimum wage and a 40-hour week can be brought to fish-processing workers without any increase in the price of fish products."

The Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union—through William Glazier, its Washington representative—backed the Thomas-McCormack Bill because it would bring wage-hour coverage to several thousand employes of pineapple and sugar-processing plants in Hawaii. These workers, ILWU members, are not now covered by the law.

THE HEARINGS, at which Sen. Ball (R., Minn.) presides, are being attended by numerous corporation lobbyists and spokesmen for interests which have long sought to curtail the wage-hour law.

At the first session, Wage-Hour Administrator William R. McComb voiced support for the 75c minimum, and described the Ball Bill as inadequate.

Rising cost of living has made the 75c minimum represent only a nickel's worth of improvement over the old 40c minimum, after deductions for fall in purchasing power of the dollar, McComb said.

"This 5c increase in the real minimum wage is certainly modest in the light of the very substantial increase since 1938 in real national income," he told the Senators.

How bitterly the proposed increase in the minimum rates will be fought in Congress was clearly indicated last week by Rep. Wint Smith (R., Knas.) and Max Schwabe (R., Mo.) during the course of a radio discussion.

They appeared on CIO's America United program broadcast over the NBC network on April 19. Joining in the discussion were Sen. Elbert Thomas (D., Utah), a co-sponsor of the bill to improve the law, and Esther Peterson, legislative representative of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Smith, a member of the House Labor sub-committee which held wage-hour hearings last fall, declared:

"A minimum wage law is a device of an all-powerful socialistic state to raise wages by decree, regardless of the productive power of the individual, and a minimum wage law is the most effective device ever conceived for securing wage increases for all."

Sen. Thomas reminded the Congressman that wage-hour legislation was passed 10 years ago because "industry ran away with our constitutional ideas."

Mrs. Peterson charged that opponents of the law "don't take into account the facts of life."

Anti-Lynch Bill OKed By Senate Unit

ANTI - LYNCH legislation may be up for action in both branches of Congress within the next few weeks.

Last week a Senate Judiciary sub-committee gave 2-1 approval to a new bill introduced by Sen. Ferguson (R., Mich.) With the Republican leadership committed to backing the bill as its one civil rights goal at this session, an early o.k. is expected from the full Judiciary Committee.

The House Judiciary group has already approved an anti-lynch proposal, and the legislation has been in the hands of the House Rules Committee awaiting a place on the House calendar.

Labor and liberal groups, meanwhile, are continuing to press for a three-pronged civil rights program which would include action on lynching, on the poll tax and on proposals for a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee.

BUT THE decision of the GOP top strategists to give priority treatment to the anti-lynch measure provided a bad set-back to supporters of the FEPC and anti-poll tax bills. The latter has passed the House and been approved by a Senate sub-committee but no final report has been issued, and it is believed majority leaders in the Senate hope to keep it bottled up for the remainder of the session.

While important in itself as a measure to curb one of the nation's most disgraceful crimes, the anti-lynch bill would have far less sweeping effects than the anti-poll tax or anti-bias proposals.

Nevertheless, southern conservatives in the Democratic ranks in both branches of Congress are mobilizing filibuster plans. In the Senate, a two-thirds "cloture" vote is necessary to clamp the lid on the talky-marathon which the southern polltaxers have used in the past to kill other reform bills.

The GOP vote on cloture will be carefully watched to see if the Republicans really wish to pass the bill, or whether the affair is simply a headline-hunting expedition designed to win them northern votes in the fall elections.

THE FERGUSON bill in the Senate, like the Case (R., N. J.) bill in the House, provides fines up to $10,000 and jail sentences of up to five years for lynchers or for local or state or federal law enforcement officers who fail to carry out their duty in lynch situations.

Its definition of the lynching crime, however, is somewhat weaker than that of the House bill. The House proposal would include—as the Senate bill does not—as lynchings those incidents where "two or more" persons assault another for reasons motivated by race hatred.

It's No Secret

Purcell Smith, world's highest paid lobbyist, has come out openly in his attacks on the Tennessee Valley Authority. Smith gets $65,000 a year from the Natl. Association of Electric Companies, which collects two cents on every electric meter in the country.

Until last week, the well-heeled representative of the private utilities had been content to work through friendly congressmen.

POLICE VIOLENCE: Without any provocation, 70 Kansas City, Kans., police on April 23 began clubbing striking CIO Packinghouse Workers in the vicinity of their union hall. The police chased them into the hall and continued their assault, injuring an estimated 100. Here the police attack was well under way. Note the two detectives "working over" the striker with his back to the wall. CIO Pres. Philip Murray called the assault "one of the most outrageous examples of the misuse of police power which this country has witnessed in a long time." He demanded government action at once. There have been examples of violence in other areas, he reminded U. S. and Kansas officials. See pages 2 and 4.

CIO TO SUE POLICE IN KANSAS ATTACK

Ask Probe Of 'Rights' Violations

By GLORIA CARLAN

*"Whoever, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, wilfully subjects, or causes to be subjected, any inhabitant of any State, Territory or District to the deprivation of any rights, privileges or immunities, secured or protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States * * * shall be fined not more than $1000, or imprisoned not more than one year or both." Criminal Code, Section 20 (18 U.S.C.A., Sec. 52).*

CIO Packinghouse Workers are planning five types of action on both federal and state levels as a sequel to a bloody 10-minute police attack upon their members in Kansas City, Kans. Ten persons were clubbed severely enough to require hospital treatment and many others suffered lesser injuries.

In Washington, D. C., meanwhile, UPWA officials met all last week with the "Big Four" packers and U.S. conciliators in an effort to end the seven-week strike. No progress was reported.

Charging violations of their constitutionally-guaranteed right of assembly and free speech, unprovoked assaults by police upon their members and heavy damage to their property, the union and its members will:

1 File an injunction suit in federal court to restrain Kansas City police from staging a repeat performance;

2 File individual damage suits for injuries suffered at the hands of police;

'JIMMY HIGGINS' HURT: Frank Akins was so painfully injured in the police attack on the CIO Packinghouse Workers' hall at Kansas City, that he was unable to make a statement when this picture was taken. The local reports that he was "the man who sweeps up the union hall."

3 Seek damages for demolition by the police of union property. The bluecoats broke down the door of the union hall, destroyed the loudspeaking equipment, broke dishes in the soup kitchen, shattered windows and chairs, and carried away union records.

4 Seek warrants for the arrest of the policemen involved for criminal assault.

5 Demand an investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation of criminal violations of the Federal Civil Rights Act.

LOCAL UPWA attorney, David W. Carson, said "there was no provocation whatsoever for the attack—by the policemen's own admission. We don't understand what prompted it. My guess is that it was just a case of venting of spleen."

According to sworn statements of strikers on the scene, 10 pickets were peacefully walking on the line outside the Cudahy gate when the police swarms descended. There were 70 police officers.

With orders from Police Captain Eli Dahlin to "crack skulls," the police carried out their mission.

Some routed the picket line, others picked out passersby and onlookers to club. When the strikers ran across the street into the union hall for cover, the police chased them, beat them, demolished union equipment. In minutes the hall was a bloody shambles. Still other policemen entered restaurants, pulled persons who looked like workers out into the street.

Union spokesmen said the attack followed a meeting the previous day between Kansas City Mayor and Chamber of Commerce officials. The C. of C., they said, had been protesting that the police were too "easy" on the strikers. The Mayor, a Republican, was endorsed by the local CIO-PAC in the election last year.

AN account of the episode by Mary Howe, one of the injured strikers, follows:

(Five stitches were taken in her head after she was beaten, and she suffered bruises on her legs.)

"I was on the picket line with about 12 people. The police started away and one on a motorcycle stated, 'It is all over now'. When they came back, there were car load after car load of police.

"We stood on the picket line for about five minutes after this when two plain-clothes men came up acting angry and told us there could only be 10 pickets on the picket line. So Katherine Taylor and myself left and when we got to the Union Hall, we were only there a few minutes when the trouble started. They started breaking in doors and windows and the police came in swinging clubs and a plain-clothes man grabbed me by the shoulders and told me to go, but I kept backing up and he didn't like that very well, so he turned me around and hit me on the head when my back was turned.

"I fell down and I rolled to the side of the Hall towards the wall. I felt my head and it was bloody. I got up, trying to get strength. I held on to a uniformed policeman and when he looked at me he shoved me back against the wall. Then I saw the plain-clothes man coming back at me with his club so I ran out.

"I ran to the filling station and noticed I was going the wrong way, so turned around and headed for Swifts. Then I reached Adams Street and saw Frank Rose and asked him how to get to a hospital or doctor or something. He told me to go across the street and as I started over that way, Katherine Taylor hollered at me and she and a fellow went to the hospital with me."

CIO Urges Boycotting 6 Packers

CIO's top executive officers — Pres. Murray, Secy.-Treas. Carey and the vice-presidents—have called on all CIO members and the public "to refuse to purchase the products" of six struck meat packing corporations.

The plea refers to Swift, Armor, Wilson, Cudahy, Morrell and Rath, whose employes walked out seven weeks ago after the companies flatly rejected union arbitration offers.

"Call upon our friends, community organizations, women's groups and others to join us in a nationwide insistence that we will eat no scab meat," they urged.

"Hold public meetings and other forms of public mobilization to bring to all CIO members and to the public generally the story of the struggle of the Packinghouse Workers, to rally support for these valiant fighters and to secure funds for the relief of those among the strikers who are in need."

The Packinghouse Workers' struggle is the "fight of all labor for a living wage," the statement continued. "A victory in the packing strike will be a victory for the entire labor movement.

"It is important that the packing companies feel the whip-lash of public opinion and action to move them from their arrogant position of refusing to pay any attention to the living needs of their workers."

"This strike must be won," the VPs concluded. "It will be won. The full strength of the labor movement must be mobilized in its support."

Murray to Truman

"Outrageous Example Of Misuse of Police"

IT was "one of the most outrageous examples of misuse of police power which this country has witnessed in a long time."

It marked "a new low in police activities" and made a "mockery of the law which the officers are sworn to uphold."

In those and other equally strong terms CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week described the recent headsmashing orgy of Kansas City police at the CIO Packinghouse Workers hall.

The CIO president's irate protests were contained in letters to Pres. Truman, Atty. Gen. Tom C. Clark and Kansas Gov. Frank Carlson—and he demanded prompt action.

Murray called for immediate dismissal and punishment of police officials responsible for the attack. He urged Pres. Truman and Clark to investigate violations of the federal civil rights laws involved and to "take appropriate action" against those responsible for the "brutal raid."

To the attorney general, Murray said the "direct responsibility for the enforcement of civil rights falls within your jurisdiction."

The incident had caused such widespread indignation, Murray said, that he "felt it necessary to call the facts directly to the attention of the Chief Executive of the nation."

To Pres. Truman Murray related details of the bloody ten minutes:

"On Friday morning, according to reports in the local press, the police of the city were called into a meeting and directed by the responsible head of the force to proceed to the scene of the picket line and not to hesitate to engage in the cracking of skulls.

"Seventy policemen descended upon the picket line without warning and proceeded to swing their clubs with abandon. They clubbed all persons on the street into the union hall, including several passers-by who were not members of the union and in no way related to the labor dispute.

"After the streets had been cleared the police broke into the union hall, smashed windows, battered the union's loud-speaking equipment, destroyed union records, ripped pictures from the walls, broke dishes in the union's soup kitchen, ripped the telephone from the wall of the office and clubbed and beat the occupants of the hall. As of today your investigators may fine broken windows and blood-spattered walls as mute testimony of the reckless abandon with which these officers acted."

Ten persons, including a newspaper photographer, required hospital treatment after the attack. An estimated 100 pickets were injured in all.

BLOWS RAINED ON HIM: Cecil Mills, a striker, was on his way to the Packinghouse Workers' hall at Kansas City, Kans., when the police attack began. As he was about to enter the door, police began to rain blows on him.

DO RISING COSTS WORRY STEEL?

THE steel industry has gone in for the "new look" in taking its case to the public.

U. S. Steel, which has told the CIO Steelworkers that it can't give them any pay increases because it is cutting the price of steel, last week published full page ads in the nation's newspapers headed: "Let's try to stop rising costs."

And well U. S. Steel might go in for the "new look" because the good will it had built up through its expensive radio shows and the like was seriously damaged last month when it announced a $5-a-ton boost in the price of semi-finished steel products.

The rest of the industry was quick to follow U. S. Steel's lead.

A number of big steel producers including Bethlehem, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, Jones & Laughlin, said that they would not give wage increases.

The steel companies were somewhat hazy on the specific price reductions. The New York Times reported:

"The Bethlehem, in a statement here by E. G. Grace, chairman, said that its price reductions would amount to $10,000,000 on an annual basis, but, like U. S. Steel, it did not report the specific reductions. Jones & Laughlin, and Youngstown Sheet & Tube did not place a value on the reductions contemplated."

Doubt was cast on the seriousness of U. S. Steel's concern for rising costs' by the anguished wail with which the corporation's chairman Irving S. Olds greeted the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing the basing point system of pricing in the cement industry.

Following the quarterly meeting of U. S. Steel's board of directors, Olds said the management was "very much concerned" over the decision and hoped it would not be applied to all industries.

WHICH means that U. S. Steel does not want to cut prices further.

(Under the basing point system, the country is divided into a number of arbitrary geographical districts. One city in the district is the basing point. Even though steel is produced in another city, its price there is equal to its price plus the freight from the basing point.)

All the fanfare with which the steel price cut and the refusal to consider wage proposals were announced failed to discourage the CIO Steelworkers.

The union's policy committee voted to seek extensions of from 60 to 90 days where necessary to conclude wage talks.

The extension was needed because under most of the contracts, wage negotiation periods expire May 1.

U. S. Steel's action was followed the next day by Westinghouse and General Electric. Both firms told negotiators for the CIO Electrical Workers that they would not increase wages but would cut prices.

UE announced it was ready to call a strike at any moment of 200,000 UE workers at GE, Westinghouse and the Electrical Division of General Motors unless they received a wage increase.

THE CIO Auto Workers' top officers have bluntly warned the auto industry that their members "are free to use their economic strength if management's short-sightedness and stubbornness force them to do so."

The Top Policy Committee of the UAW late last week set May 12 as the date for a strike by 75,000 Chrysler employes if no wage settlement is reached by that time.

Murray To Talk On Steel Wages

CIO Pres. Philip Murray will address the nation this Monday, May 3, over the nationwide American Broadcasting Co. network.

He will discuss the issues in the steel wage dispute.

The speech will be broadcast over all ABC stations at 9:30 p. m., eastern daylight time; 8:30 central daylight time; 7:30 mountain daylight time; and, on the west coast, at 9:30 p. m. Pacific time.

Be sure to tune in your local ABC station Monday night for this important speech.

Steel Tycoon Fairless
Says "No"

She Proves Her Point

Prices on some industrial steel products may be down a trifle—but prices on the foods you buy are up plenty.

Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Calif.) marched on to the House floor last week with a basket of groceries. They cost her $16.23. A year ago the same basket cost her $15.02. When that nasty ole OPA was operating, they cost her only $10.06.

Mrs. Douglas made some wry remarks about the Natl. Association of Manufacturers' promise of a "better tomorrow" when OPA was lifted. That "better tomorrow" is getting more expensive all the time, she told fellow-Congressmen.

The food items cost her $16.23 in a low-priced store, $17.17 in a medium-priced outlet, and $17.80 in a de luxe grocery.

Introducing a House bill (HR 6382) to provide a large-scale drive against inflation, similar to the Thomas-Wagner bill that has long been pigeon-holed in the Senate, Mrs. Douglas said:

"We are willing to appropriate billions of dollars to stop communism elsewhere, but we do nothing to stop the conditions which breed it here."

How prices have soared were indicated by Mrs. Douglas' shopping list, inserted in the Congressional Record:

MURRAY ASSAILS U. S. STEEL AND CP

PULLING no punches, CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week roundly denounced the U. S. Steel Corp. and the Communist Party.

The U. S. Steel, which refused a wage increase to Murray's Steelworkers, he said:

"The American people have been lulled into a state of false security by virtue of this hypocritical, misleading propaganda emating from the offices of U. S. Steel."

Of the Communists, he declared:

"I charge that the Communist Party is directly responsible for the organization of the third party."

Murray was addressing a cheering throng at the convention of the CIO Textile Union at Atlantic City.

HERE are some highlights from his speech:

U. S. STEEL:

"I have just emerged from some wage negotiations in the city of Pittsburgh. There the outstanding leader in the field of American enterprise and business, U. S. Steel, took occasion to say to the Steelworkers, 'We cannot give you a wage increase. We don't think a wage increase would be a good thing for you, and as the master of our employes' destinies, and ever mindful of the interest of the people, we have concluded in our infinite wisdom that now is not the time to give you a wage increase—for your own good.'

"We naturally had contended that any wage allowances made permissible in the course of those negotiations would have to be conceded without price increases.

"The steel industry during 1947 netted after taxes about $482,000,000 in profits, the most profitable year for the industry since the First World War. This great industry could have very well afforded to pay a substantial increase in wages to its workers without necessarily increasing prices.

"THEY decided, however, to adopt a new policy. They said, 'If we concede more wages we will have to increase prices and the wage increases of course will be lost in the gyrations of these inflationary spirals.'

"Hence," they said, "we have decided to adopt a new policy. We are going to cut prices.' So they announced a cut in prices approximately $25,000,000 a year.

"Benjamin Fairless, U. S. Steel President, was summoned to testify before a Senate Committee some seven or eight weeks ago. Why? To show cause why U. S. Steel had increased its prices on semi-finished steel to a figure amounting to $5 per ton.

"In the course of Fairless's testimony, he said that this increase was a mere triviality, that it would not agitate any inflationary spiral, that increases bore no relationship to living costs, because steel could not be likened to bread and butter and meat. Hence, the consumers would absorb that price increase without complaint, because the price increase would have no effect upon living costs.

"The combination of increases, semi-finished steel and other products, resulted in increased prices, amounting to $28 ½ million—$28 ½ million to U. S. Steel! So, they promise now to return to the consumers' pockets approximately $25 million of the $28 ½ million that they gyped the public out of last February and March.

"THE U. S. Steelworkers protested vigorously not the new plan of reducing prices, but the amount. We contended that U. S. Steel could afford to contribute to our economy in price reductions in excess of $70 million each year, and still maintain a reasonable profit in its business. But the Corporation decided otherwise.

"Last year, U. S. Steel had a gross profit of $244 million. It had a net, after taxes, of $153 million. Its profit position for the year 1947 was over 70% better than" in 1946, a very profitable year.

COMMUNIST PARTY: "The CIO Executive Board three months ago adopted a political policy.

"That policy related itself to two distinct issues: one which directed itself and its attention toward the attainment of our objectives in providing relief for the Kansas City Skull-Crushing Fiasco!

By ALLAN L. SWIM

Seventy club-swinging policemen crashed their way into a CIO union hall at Kansas City, Kan., and began carrying out their leader's instruction to "crack skulls."

They performed effectively!

In 10 minutes the place was a bloody shambles. More than 100 striking Packinghouse Workers were injured, 10 so badly they required hospitalization.

There was no provocation for the attack—one of the most outrageous examples of misuse of police power the nation has witnessed in many years.

The Kansas City skull-cracking raid was part of a spreading pattern of anti-union violence—part of a campaign to weaken and then destroy the labor movement.

Employers, of course, and politicians, too, are still making pretty speeches about "unions being a necessary part of the American scene" and some of them mean what they say.

Too many of them do not. They're merely engaging in double talk, because their acts provide proof that they either want no unions at all or want unions that are virtually ineffective.

The facts tell a powerful and important story—a story which has not been adequately told by the daily newspapers and the radio.

It is a story all unionists should know.

It became obvious soon after the close of the war that industrial leaders were getting set for an attack on the trade union movement.

They, of course, weren't so bold as to announce that they were out to destroy unions. No! They merely wanted them regulated. They wanted the unions' "abuse of power" eliminated.

They started moving in first on the legislative front—and here they did an effective job.

Thirty-six states now have rather stringent anti-union laws on their statute books.

And the nation as a whole has the damnable Taft-Hartley Act with which to contend.

The CIO's Southern organizing campaign, which hasn't resembled a Sunday School picnic, has provided part of the evidence of industry's drive against labor.

Twenty-two organizers and local union leaders have been physically assaulted since the drive began. Two of these were brutally beaten.

Two organizers were shot at and two meeting places were dynamited.

Some of the Southern employers have been more honest—if more brutal—than their Northern colleagues. They have stated flatly time and again that they're out to smash the unions.

Industry, which designed the death of OPA, is well heeled for its campaign against labor—thanks to the enormous profits it has been making.

It has the Taft-Hartley Act and state legislation on its side. Its brand of thinking dominates Congress.

Industry, however, has a habit of getting cocky when things go its way. It applies the spurs too hard when it's riding high in the saddle.

It underestimates the strength of 15 million unionists, their families and friends.

So it may have to learn again the hard way—as it did during the 30's—that the public rebels when economic and political powers are badly abused.

Industry — and the police — play with dynamite when they incite or encourage violence.

That's why those responsible for the Kansas City skull-cracking raid should be dismissed from the police department and properly punished.

And that's why industry should take another look at the hand it's playing—just to see if that imaginary ace in the hole isn't in reality merely a little three-spot.

SOUNDS GOOD, BUT--

Junior and his Mama were sitting in their living room the other night listening to the man on the radio tell about the wonderful, wonderful action taken by U. S. Steel.

The giant corporation, the man said, had told the Steelworkers to go jump into a lake, insofar as a wage increase was concerned. Instead of raising pay, he added, U. S. Steel was going to cut prices.

"Now, we're getting somewhere," said Junior, who believed what he read in the NAM ads. "This will send inflation into a tailspin."

"Don't be a complete dope, Junior," his Mama said. "I don't want to be guilty of belittling, but this is a case of too little and too late."

"How do you figure that, Mom?" Junior asked. She replied:

"Well, it's like this. The unions put up an awful squawk against killing OPA, but it was killed and prices started climbing.

"The situation got pretty bad last year and the unions made another try for price control. They said they'd rather have price reductions than wage increases—and they meant it.

"The big industries, including steel, upped prices some more. That really put the squeeze on the consumers.

"Early this year the steel industry piled on some new increases. Then the Steelworkers asked for a wage increase so they could catch up with the increase in the cost of living.

"U. S. Steel said 'nothing doing. We're not going to give you a cent. We're going to cut prices instead. We're going to help cure inflation.'

"U. S. Steel increased its prices about $230 millions during the past year. Then they announced they'd cut prices $25 millions.

"Why, Junior, it's just like putting 230 bucks in the bank, drawing out 25 bucks and telling the bill collector you're flat broke!"

Uncover Attempt to Pin Scabs' Fight on Union

By TOM NOWELL

WHAM: At last, it has happened.

Strikebreaker (polite for scab) W. A. Brock, found his home under gunfire in the Anchor Duck Mill Village, Rome, Georgia.

After the mellee, strikebreaker Brock surveyed the damage with his left eye. The right one had been shot out in the gunfire.

Immediately following the fracus, the Anchor Duck Mills posted a reward of $2,500 for the arrest and conviction of the assailants.

Today, it looks mighty like the striking Textile Workers Union of America-CIO, is going to collect that reward.

Here's what happened, according to William Shifflett, President of the striking Local of the United Textile Workers Union:

In the hours just before dawn on April 24, an automobile drove up to Brock's house. The occupants of the automobile blazed away with revolver fire.

AT THE same time, guards at the mill gate began pumping lead into the car.

Brock got an eye shot out. The guards boasted they had riddled the vehicle with shot.

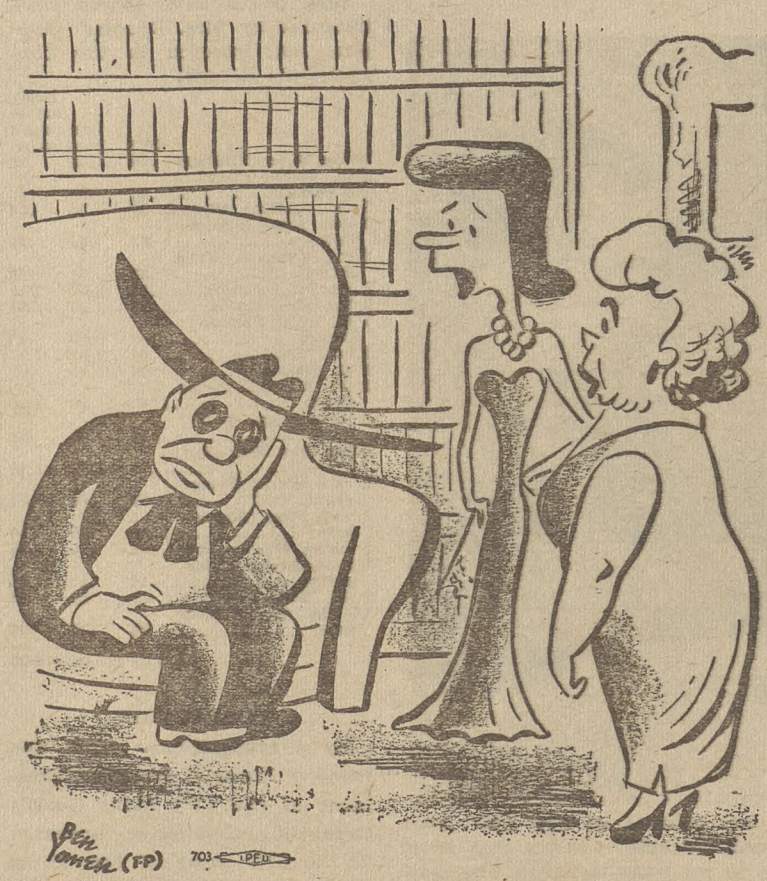
Union men followed the car, and finally forced the driver to seek refuge in the mill. Then the union men called the sheriff of Floyd County and told him where to find the men. The sheriff refused to make the arrest, so the Union called Rome's police chief, Smith Horton. He went into the mill and arrested Elzie Shedd, Elzie Battles, and Quentin, Alias Jack, Dempsey, all scabs.

It would seem that the management at Anchor Duck Mill tried once too often the old racket of causing violence and blaming the union. Dempsey, according to witnesses, had blood on his clothing. This brings the belief that there was a fourth member of the shooting party, who was hit by a guard, and who was hidden by the rest of the men.

Anyway, three company men are under $500 bond apiece, while authorities are seeking the fourth.

Meanwhile, Hubert Wilkey, 19-year-old striker and father of a young child, still in a Rome hospital here physicians are seeking to save his life. Wilkey was shot by a scab, Elmer Adams, last week.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP BY BEN YOMEN



"Poor dear, he kissed the wrong babies. Their fathers were union members."

Federal Staffs Face T-H Bias

A NEW and dangerous wrinkle in anti-labor legislation has popped out of the House Appropriations Committee.

Attached to a bill providing funds for the Federal Security Administration was a "rider" barring payment of wages to any FSA employe who belongs to a union whose officers have not filed anti-Communist affidavits under the Taft-Hartley Act.

Washington reporters immediately interpreted the "rider" as an effort to wreck the CIO United Public Workers of America.

The House approved the bill with only 35 dissenting votes.

Appropriations Committee members said if they get away with the proposition on the FSA bill, it will be attached to every other measure providing funds for other government agencies. It would also affect several AFL unions, including the printers, whose members work for Uncle Sam.

Union attorneys regard the "rider" as unconstitutional. They charge that by forcing a U. S. employe to choose between his job and his union, the bill would destroy his guaranteed right to join a union.

The FSA bill also carried a series of shuffles of government agencies that have been opposed by CIO in the past.

It would make the U. S. Employment Service a permanent part of FSA, taking it from the Dept. of Labor. It would remove the Bureau of Employment Security from the Social Security Administration.

A Couple of Guys From Across The Ocean

THOSE were tense days. The Nazis and their satellites were fighting for world domination. The U. S. had just gotten actively into the war.

This nation was taking stock of its resources, putting men and women into uniform, making plans for stepping up badly-needed production.

A group of men, mostly scientists, met at Columbus, Ohio, to discuss methods of conserving our resources and using them to the best advantage.

During a break in the proceedings four men got together and began discussing two important appointments which President Roosevelt had just made.

THERE was more skepticism than bitterness in their discussion of one of the men—a labor leader who had been asked to serve with an industrialist in the important drive to step up production.

One of the men said he doubted the advisability of appointing a native of Lithuania to such an important post.

"It's a funny thing about those foreigners, he said. "They never do get to be really good Americans."

A CIO representative who had been listening in on the discussion from a few feet away broke in on their conversation.

"I notice that you gentlemen have been discussing only one member of the team FDR appointed. The other member—the industrialist—was born across the ocean, too. He came from Denmark."

The four men decided suddenly to drop the subject.

CHANGES occurred suddenly in those days. The agency which the industrialist and labor official headed was abolished and replaced by another.

The labor leader returned to his union and later became director of the first widespread political endeavor ever undertaken by organized labor in this country.

He was subjected to great personal abuse because he dared advocate the idea that unionists had as much right to engage in political action as any other group.

He was called a "damn foreigner," a "dirty Communist," a "Jewish radical."

The industrialist put on a general's uniform and became the No. 1 production trouble-shooter for the armed services.

He followed a fantastic schedule for a man of his age and his superiors gave him much credit for stepping up the supply of arms and munitions.

The war ended and the industrialist became a civilian again. Within a short time he was a director of a giant automobile corporation and the president of a smaller firm that made auto parts.

He was back in his element—civilian production—but not for long.

THE man from Lithuania—the labor leader who became a political leader—died in the summer of 1946.

History, if it is recorded fairly, will list him among the "greats" of the American labor movement—and it will list him as a "really good American."

The man from Denmark—the immigrant who became a production genius—died last week. History will record him as a "really good American."

Sidney Hillman and William S. Knudsen, who worked together in the Office of Production management, disagreed on many things. They were not at all alike because Knudsen was not considered a friend of labor.

But there's a valuable lesson in their lives for those who say, "It's funny about those foreigners. They never do get to be really good Americans." A. L. S.

COPS ARE STRIKING, TOO

Remind Doctor Bogey Words Never Cured Illness

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

FAMILY doctors stuck with bills their low income patients cannot pay must have been somewhat bewildered by the arguments advanced in their defense by Republican Rep. A. L. Miller if they happened to be listening to the CIO's America United Program on the NBC network Sunday.

Topic discussed was "What Do We Need for a National Health Program?"

Harry Becker, director of the CIO United Auto Workers' Social Security Dept., and Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing, teamed up in defense of the Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill which would set up a national health insurance program.

Rep. Miller, who is a doctor himself, opposed a national health program as "a desperate, stubborn and relentless attempt to fasten socialized medicine on the country."

He kept spitting out the words "socialized medicine" repeatedly, with such distaste that it sounded as though he were holding his nose.

"Now socialized medicine would require so much expense and detail and paper work that there would be more ink on the physician's fingers than iodine, and it would make the American people do a ritualistic goose step."

BECKER of the UAW came back with an account, drawn from first-hand contacts through the union, of some of the problems workers face in getting and paying for medical care.

"The average worker's family cannot pay for the medical care that he needs when illness strikes. We know that he has trouble getting the medical care he needs.

"We feel that a government program developing prepayment plans, programs of training of doctors and nurses, a program for the provision of hospital beds and clinics and other related medical facilities is the answer."

Ewing reminded Dr. Miller that the question concerned the best way "to get more medical care to more people," and that name-calling such as "socialized medicine," merely clouded the issue. Rep. Miller met this remark by a double-barreled burst of name-calling about "regimented economy" and "regimented government."

"Just why the CIO and the Federal Security Agency should join in with the other communist groups in Europe, the fascist countries, the European countries that have socialized medicine, in a desperate, stubborn, and relentless attempt to fasten socialized medicine on the country is hard to understand," rumbled Rep. Miller.

BECKER observed mildly that the Doctor was using words charged with emotionalism instead of facing the people's problem squarely. Ewing called Miller's attention to the fact that Scandinavia and Britain had government health programs and could not be called Nazi countries.

"They're socialized," Miller chanted again.

Moderator David Brinkley tactfully switched the debate to the problem of medical care for the individual worker and his family. Becker said that since the average worker's wage was $200 below the $3100 minimum decent standing of living for a family of four set by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, he could not pay medical bills.

STATISTICS also show that the average family pays more for lipstick, candy and amusement than they spend on medical care, retorted Rep. Miller, who fancies himself a friend of labor.

Families that have medical costs weren't able to choose whether they were going to be sick, whereas there is an element of choice in lipstick, Becker explained patiently.

Miller shifted ground and asked if there wasn't an insurance plan in Detroit auto plants to take care of a worker when he was sick.

"You believe industry should pay the costs of medical care in his family?" asked Becker quickly.

"It should be taken out of the pay check and let him choose the physician that he wants, voluntarily," said Miller so hastily that he forgot to chant "socialized medicine."

He got it in though, in his concluding spiel: "In every country where they have socialized medicine the freedom of the people has gone, and when that goes the freedom of those you represent, and those in the CIO, will go too. You will lose all your freedom you now have, and you don't want that in any form of government."

"Has Sweden, Norway or Britain lost their freedom?" demanded Ewing.

"I think it has pretty much vanished," said Miller darkly.

"That's absolute nonsense," protested Becker.

"The people ought to have rights—" Dr. Miller started off.

But the time was up at that moment.

'THERE ONCE WAS A UNION MAID'

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE doffers and the slashers and the weavers and the loom fixers and the dyers and the bleachers and the winders gathered last week at Atlantic City.

And there were a lot of others, too, at the fifth biennial (that means every two years) convention of the CIO Textile Workers.

The nearly 2000 delegates jammed a lot of hard work—and a little entertainment, too—into five crowded days. Like Sarah Farthing, pictured on this page, they went back to New England and the Middle Atlantic States and Canada and the South and many other areas convinced that theirs is a good union and that the CIO is a good place for that good union to be.

Convention highlights:

Philip Murray: The CIO president made a major policy address, lashing the role of the Communists in the American political scene and sharply criticizing U. S. Steel for its refusal to grant a wage increase and for its "anti-inflationary" price cut.

Administrative officers: TWUA Gen. Pres. Emil Rieve, Secy-treas. William Pollock and Exec. Vice Pres. George Baldanzi were returned to office.

They have held the posts since TWUA'S inception.

Rieve: He urged Pres. Truman to withdraw from the Presidential race. He would like to have someone on the order of Ike Eisenhower, or Justice Douglas. As for the Republicans, he did not see much there. Stassen, for instance, he quoted as saying that the British type of Socialism and Communism "are two peas from the same confining pod." Snapped Rieve: "God help us if that man gets in the White House!"

William Pollack

(Next day Truman sent greetings to the convention.)

PAC Dir. Jack Kroll: "Pres. Rieve stated the facts boldly—Pres. Truman had the misfortune to have succeeded Pres. Roosevelt and suffers by comparison. I urge that it would be a good idea—through letters, telegrams, resolutions, petitions and all other kinds of communications—to let the delegates at Philadelphia (where the national conventions of the two major parties will be held) know just how you feel about candidates."

Delegate

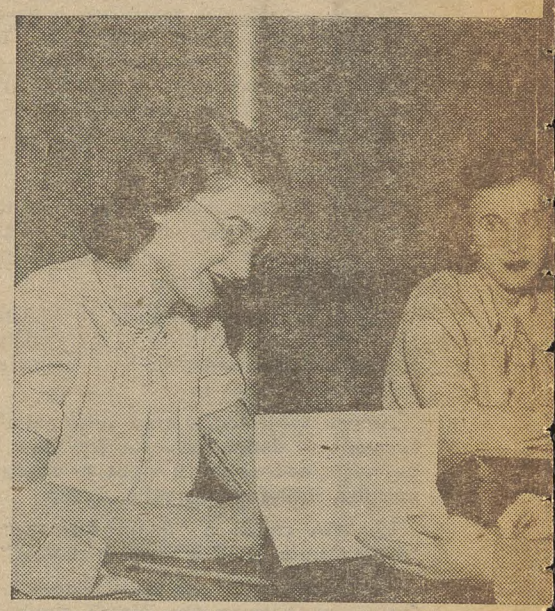
Ever think what those delegates you sent to conventions do after they get there?

The CIO News decided last week to follow a typical delegate through a typical CIO convention. The union: The Textile Workers Union of America, which has perhaps the heaviest organizing schedule and which has pledged itself to become the world's largest union. The delegate: Sarah Farthing.

So, the CIO News sent staff member Arthur Riordan to Atlantic City and let him and a photographer folow this typical delegate, performing typical duties, through a typical hard-working convention.

1. SARAH FARTHING is a winder for the Dan River Mill—which advertises itself as the world's largest cotton mill. Like many other members of the CIO Textile Workers, she comes from a textile workers' family, all with Dan River. After all, weaving is one of the oldest crafts in the world. Her father, Jim Farthing, is a slasher. Her mother, who works in the sewing room, folds sheets. Her sister, Mrs. Elsie Wales, hems sheets. All are TWUA members. Sarah started with the mill after finishing only five grades of grammar school. Her starting pay was $12.60 for a six-day, 48-hour week. Now, her basic pay is $53 for a five-day 40-hour week. and overtime and incentives often make that figure higher. Sarah gives full credit to her union, which last week sent her to its fifth biennial convention as a Dan River delegate. Follow her in these pictures.

2. BON VOYAGE: Sarah boards a chartered bus at Danville, Va., for the trip to Atlantic City. The joint board sent 32 delegates to represent its nearly 9000 members.



3. REGISTRATION: Sarah hands her credentials Bernice Epstein, of the TWUA staff.

Glen Gardiner, president, N. J. C. of C., and vice-president, Forstmann Woolen: "Leaders of both labor and management have a responsibility for setting the kind of example that will eventually permeate all levels in management and labor."

Rev. R. A. McGowan, Director, Dept. of Social Action, Natl. Catholic Welfare Conference: "I think it is essentially and everlastingly unsatisfactory for the working people to continue as hired hands, even if organized hired hands, of the rich and absentees. To me, the situation will be unsatisfactory until the majority of the working people share in the profits, the management and ownership of the things with which they work."

Operations Dixie: Baldanzi and CIO Organization Committee Dir. Van A. Bittner led a dramatic portrayal of the results of this CIO crusade and warned their listeners that there was plenty of work to do.

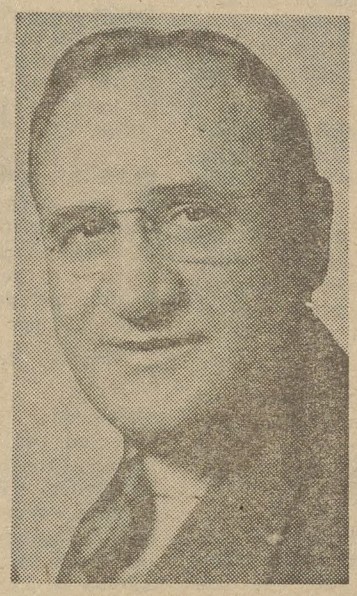
Baldanzi outlined the dirty smear tactics that were used by employers—many of them Northerners—in the South. "This won't stop us," he swore.

A number of recordings, made in the South, brought the voices of Southern workers to the audience. The voices were from Thomasville and Rome, Ga., from the Carolinas, from Tennessee.

WFTU: Rieve urged that the World Federation of Trades Unions be dissolved (later, he told reporters he was speaking as TWUA head and not as a CIO vice-president). The convention, in a sharply worded resolution, deplored the differences which have cropped up in WFTU.

Hosiery Workers: This federation was expelled in a dispute over per capitas.

Dyers: This federation, which lost a court suit against the parent TWUA, was dissolved



EMIL RIEVE

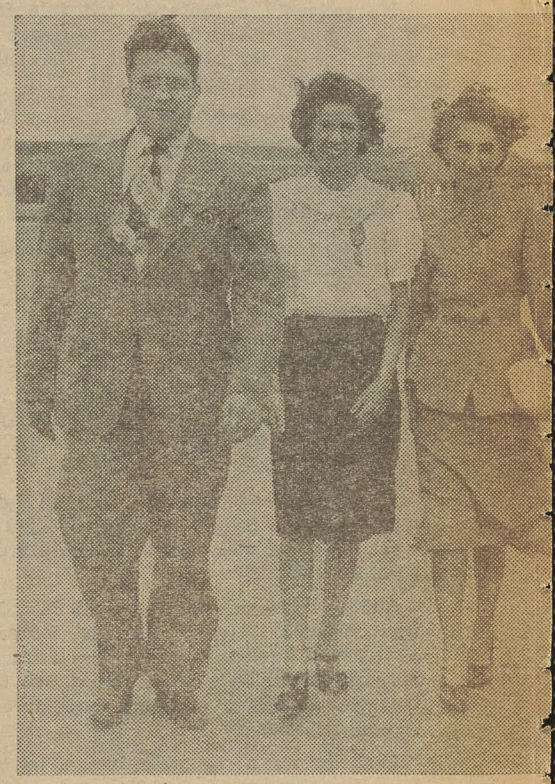
Memories: For this reporter, it was good to see some old acquaintances again.

There was the never-tiring thrill of listening to George Baldanzi deliver an address . . ., there was the super-efficient service of the staff of Textile Labor—Larry Rogin, Ken Fiester, Agnes Cohen, John McCarthy (I used to work with him), Rae Spielman. There were discussions of other events with Franz Daniel, John Edelman, Joe Huetter, Dorothy Quinn (who used to work for my union), Wayne Barr, an Atlantic City correspondent with whom I used to work. There was slight confusion in names between Alex Barkan and Sol Barkin . . . the full understanding the convention Press Committee had with the problems of putting out the union paper.

(The headline on the top of this page is, of course, from "Union Maid," which, to the tune of "Red Wing," is perhaps the most beloved of all labor songs. The words are by Woodie Guthrie and the verse starts:

("There once was a union maid,
("She never was afraid
("Of goons and ginks and company finks
("And the deputy sheriffs that made the raid . . ."
(And the chorus starts:
("Oh, you can't scare me,
("I'm sticking to the union . . ."

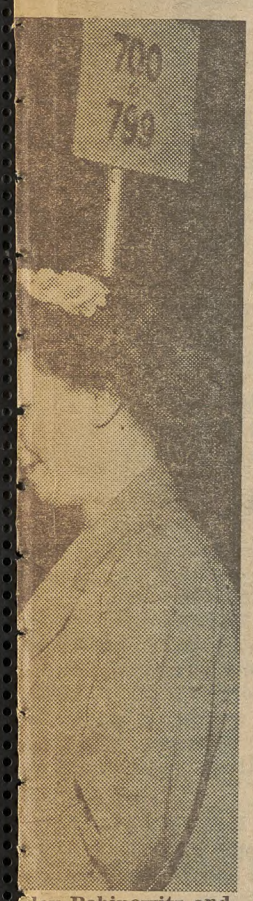
And so is Sarah Farthing.



7. Sarah strolls the beach with Maine delegates Alexander Anastasoff, Jeannette Bolduc, Anna Forcier and Thomas Leblanc. Anastasoff works

AUCUS: Sarah and delegation listen attentively their local president, Victor Harden, as he holds the many delegation meetings for Danville mem- The delegation broke itself into a number of sub-committees and complete reports will be made to Danville TWUAers. All the Dan River people had a full schedule. All hailed the efficiency with which their favorite union—TWUA, of course—operated.

5. CONFERENCE: Miss Farthing, whose family, of English extraction, has been in this country for years, confers with TWUA Exec. Vice pres. George Baldanzi. The latter, who is active in Southern organizing, is the idol of Southern TWUA members.



rley Rabinowitz and

6. INFORMATION: Sarah, who has been a shop steward for a year and who has been active in PAC and union shop work, sought out all the information possible about her union. Here, she gets first-hand data from Agnes Cohen, of the staff of Textile Labor, TWUA's newspaper; Dorothy Quinn, who is educational director for the Allentown, Pa., joint board, and Alexander Barkan, TWUA's PAC director.

Pepperell, one of Dan River's competitors. But h had the last word—Atlantic City's below Mason-Dixon Line!

8. CIO PRES. Murray (below) talks union affairs over with Sarah. He made a major address to the delegates, concerning political action and wages.

9. LOCAL COLOR: A trip to Atlantic City is not complete without a ride in the resort's famous boardwalk wheelchairs. Here's Sarah, weary from a busy five days. being wheeled back to her hotel before being carried back to Old Virginny. She thinks the Danville Joint Board—which won the Dan River NLRB election in 1941—and TWUA are mighty fine organizations. And she's going to tell everybody at home that, too.

Trade '38 Wage-Hour Law For New Model, Says CIO; Industry Group Favors No Law At All

FACTS OF LIVING: Senators and staff huddled over papers from a small Oklahoma town to see for themselves that you can't live for nothin'—even down on the farm. Grocery ads in the paper comparing New York and Oklahoma prices, show the latter are higher. Getting the facts—which hurt their own arguments—are, l. to r., a Senate Labor committee aide, Sen. Ellender (D.La.) and Sen. Ball (R.Minn.). The scene took place in U. S. Capitol during wage-hour hearings last week. At right are three of CIO's witnesses, who called for passage of Thomas-McCormack bill, with its 75c minimum wage: l. to r., Sol Barkin, research director for Textile; Vice Pres. Gladys Dickason, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Irving Levy, UAW counsel.

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE Southern States Industrial Council has an office down the street a couple of doors from CIO, on Jackson Place in the nation's capital.

The geography of the two office locations is about all the two organizations have in common.

That fact was amply illustrated last week before Senator Joe Ball's Senate Labor sub-committee, which has been holding hearings on the Wage-Hour law.

The Council, representing about 3,000 industrial firms in 16 Southern states, feels strongly that 40c an hour is all that the legal minimum wage should be. The CIO, speaking for six million workers, has called for a 75c wage.

The Industrial Council wants the effect of the Wage-Hour law cut down. The CIO wants it enlarged to cover more workers in the low-income brackets.

The 80th Congress being what it is, any guess that workers' needs will be given the Senatorial nod is apt to be optimistic.

What does a corporation lobbyist have to say about a minimum wage of 40c an hour? Tyre Taylor, spokesman for the Industrial Council, talked about "wishful thinking" that the "existing boom conditions will continue."

The other possibility, he told the Committee, is that the "present inflation in wages and prices may not prove to be permanent, and that, for this and other reasons, it would be the part of wisdom to keep the wage structure flexible—flexible enough to ride on and not under the economic tides of supply and demand."

Which, translated into English, means wage-cutting.

AGAINST that, a variety of CIO witnesses last week came before Sen. Ball to argue that a 75c minimum, fixed by law, will help protect the idea of jobs for all—that it will fix a red traffic light against sweatshoppers and runaway employers who seize the first break in business conditions to engage in wage-cutting, cut-throat competition.

They urged passage of the Thomas-McCormack Bill (S. 2062) and rejection of Ball's own bill (S. 2386). The Ball bill, filled with a lawyer's paradise of complicated legal wordage, would weaken enforcement of the Wage-Hour law. And it would lift the minimum only to 60c an hour—with provisions making it easy for some industries to enjoy a half-dollar minimum, and difficult to lift base pay to 70c.

Neither Ball—nor Sen. Ellender (D., La.)—showed much sympathy with the CIO arguments.

Lead-off man for the CIO was Sol Barkin, husky research director for the Textile Workers.

The 75c minimum, he said, won't end "all forms of substandard wages"—but it will be a "step forward to the eradication of the worst forms of underpayment, discrimination and exploitation of the bargaining weaknesses of American workers.

"That sector of employers who exploit the helplessness of workers by paying them intolerable wages should not be allowed to create unfair competition by paying less than 75c."

Barkin said that when the present minimum is discussed, there's agreement on one fact: "The present minimum is obsolete."

" . . . Congress is obliged to modernize its legislation. Changes have occurred in the level of wages; in the costs of living; in the standards of productivity; and in our national income. Our national and international obligations have been broadened."

GLADYS Dickason, vice-president of the Clothing Workers, who followed Barkin on the stand, had a sharp conversation with Sen. Ellender. It involved the cost of living in Oklahoma.

Ellender (who complains that six families on his Louisiana farm have left to take better jobs) thinks minimum wages should be lower in the South. Miss Dickason (who was born and raised in a little town in Oklahoma) knew differently—and had the facts to prove it.

She tossed on to the table a hometown paper. It complained—with ample use of figures—that food prices are lower in New York City than in Oklahoma, where much of New York's food is raised.

Falseness of the old claim about lower living costs down South, she said, "has been demonstrated over and over again, but the argument persists. For the same level of living, there are no significant differentials as between North and South.

(The Ball Bill would permit regional pay differentials, long sought by employers in low-wage areas of the nation.)

IRVING Levy, the graying, stocky counsel of the United Auto Workers, argued that the Ball bill offered rich premiums to wage-cutters, at the expense of those employers who want to pay decent money to their workers.

"Evasion devices" scattered through the Ball Bill will deprive millions of workers of wage-hour protection, he warned the committee. They would wreck the overtime pay provisions and threaten the 40-hour week.

"There's no lack of ingenuity which a small percentage of employers and their advisors can muster in efforts to escape paying the minimum wage and overtime pay," he said.

NOT many workers — in comparison to the nation's total —will get a direct wage boost from a lift in the minimum from 40c to 75c. But Dolly Lowther, a New York spokesman for the Laundry Division of the Amalgamated, talked to the committee about some who would.

"Women worked as many as 13 hours a day—72 and 80 hours per week—and their wages averaged only $6, $8, $10 a week. They had to take the wages and working conditions the employer offered."

The New York state wage law, passed in 1937, guaranteed a $14-a-week minimum. That meant a 100% increase for some of the women, and $5-a-week jumps for many others.

Today, with rising costs, laundry workers need a 75c-an-hour minimum as badly as they needed $14-a-week ten years ago.

"In 25 of 33 cities surveyed by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, no flat-work ironer averaged as much as 75c an hour. . . . In 26 cities, no bundle worker averaged as much as 75c an hour.

"Surely, that's starvation wages."

BUT the Ball Bill will hurt wage-hour enforcement not only for the lowest paid but for higher income workers. Sam Eubanks, secretary of the Newspaper Guild, said some 9,000 salaried newspaper men earning more than $100 a week, would be cut out of overtime benefits by the bill.

It would "reverse the trend" established by the Guild, he said, and lead to pressures from contract employers to meet the wage-cutting of open shop papers.

Martin Kyne of the Retail Union testified about the effect on store employes. Earlier, spokesmen for maritime and longshore workers had talked of the need for protection under the wage law.

So, during the week, the Senate committee heard from landlubbers and merchant seamen, from industrial workers and service employes, from well-paid and low-paid.

Against their array of facts, the Southern States Industrial Council had this to say:

"The Council has gone on record many times for the outright repeal of the entire law, with the exception only of its child labor provisions."

Whose advice will the Senate sub-committee follow? You might write to Sen. Ball—he'll soon be writing a report.

INTERESTED: Senate Labor Committee room was jam-packed during CIO's arguments for a 75c minimum wage by union members, officials and lobbyists.

IT'S CONTRACT TIME ALL OVER THE PLACE

HERE'S the status of CIO contracts in 15 mass industries, now in or preparing to enter negotiations:

STEEL: Talks with U. S. Steel ended abruptly as corporation put on "public interest" act for the galleries, refusing wage increases and announcing what Pres. Murray termed "picayune" price cuts. Bethlehem and Jones & Laughlin followed suit on both counts; Pittsburgh, Crucible and Republic followed on wage boosts.

AUTO: May 12 has been set as the strike deadline for 75,000 Chrysler employes by the UAW top policy committee. The walkout was previously authorized by the membership and by the international executive board. General Motors employes are now taking a strike vote.

ELECTRICAL: UE will call a strike at any moment of 200,000 workers at General Electric, Westinghouse and the electrical divisio of GM unless a wage increase is forthcoming. GE and Westinghouse both followed U. S. Steel's lead on price cuts without wage boosts.

PACKINGHOUSE: Employes of six major packers—Swift, Armour, Wilson, Cudahy, Morrell and Rath—on strike since March 16. Companies turned down union proposals for 29c hourly hike, later scaled down to 19c. Also rejected union arbitration offers.

RUBBER: Now negotiating with Firestone, whose contracts covering 200,000 workers, expired May 30.

OIL: Negotiations with Sinclair on union's demands for 30c wage increase begin May 3 in Tulsa, Okla. Strike authorization already given by membership. Said OWIU Pres. Knight: "No false price-cutting gestures will stop us."

TELEPHONE: American Union of Telephone Workers (long lines employes), affiliated with CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, in wage talks with American Telephone & Telegraph for past week. Contract expired May 3. Union asking 30c hourly increase. Communications Equipment Workers, also TWOC, begin talks soon. They represent 22,000 AT&T employes.

TEXTILE: TWUA will begin talks covering 38,000 rayon workers soon.

MARITIME: NMU meetings with 40 steamship companies under way. Agreement expires June 15. Union asking 13 contract improvements, including substantial wage gains and strengthening of hiring hall. Companies proposing no wage hike, elimination of hiring hall.

LONGSHORE: ILWU, after four meetings with representatives of Pacific Coast Waterfront Employers' Association, has withdrawn until employers appoint committee with authority to negotiate. Union charged WEA representatives were not authorized to make agreement. Contract expires June 15.

SHIPBUILDING: Union will ask "substantial" increases when talks begin. Contracts expire or reopen in June.

GLASS: Talks with Pittsburgh Plate Glass and Libbey-Owens-Ford, covering 30,000 employes, now on. Contracts expire July 1.

FARM EQUIPMENT: Intl. Harvester proposals for new contract would lower wages by over 15c an hour, FE charges. Contracts covering 40,000 employes expires end of May.

FUR: New York fur employes, locked out since April 2, have declared a strike. Contracts expired Feb. 15, with employers insisting on pre-war pay system.

MINE-MILL: Five Utah companies refusing to negotiate nationally with excuse that international union officers have not signed non-communist affidavits. Contracts covering 30,000 workers expire June 30.

Recount Shows UAW Wins At Martin Plant

THE CIO Auto Workers' eight-months battle for recognition at the giant Glenn L. Martin airplane plant in Baltimore, Md., has finally ended in victory.

Following a hectic series of ballot counting and recounting, the UAW was certified by the NLRB last week. A final recount of 88 ballots gave the union a majority over the independent Intl. Association of Machinists and "no union."

The UAW held a contract at the plant for four years prior to the NLRB election last August 21. It was one of the last elections held in the country before the Taft-Hartley Act went into effect.

At that time 617 ballots were contested, and the company challenged the entire election on grounds that laid-off employes were permitted to vote. The Board overruled the company's objection.

Taft-Hartley then furnished cause for further delays, the Board ruling that it could not act until both unions filed non-communist affidavits and financial data.

Now that the NLRB has established the UAW's majority, the union will begin negotiating a new contract for the 10,000 Martin employes.

In another encounter with the IAM, the UAW has disclosed that it has affidavits from three men admitting they were paid by the IAM to vote fraudulently in a plant election.

The case involves a March 5 NLRB vote at the Consolidated Vultee plant in San Diego, Calif. The ballot count gave the IAM a majority, but after receipt of the UAW's evidence of fraud, the Board refused to certify the independent union.

John W. Livingston, director of the UAW aircraft department, predicted that the NLRB would order a new election.

In the affidavits, the three signers, not employed at the plant, charged IAM agents faked identification cards for them so they could enter the gates.

They voted individually as many as eight times for the IAM, they said. At this rate, the votes cast by just these three were enough to give the IAM the narrow 23-vote margin by which it won.

destitute in Europe, particularly, and in other countries.

"In addition to that, providing other types of relief designed to restore the economic rehabilitation of war-devastated European countries.

"Thirdly, and very importantly, of course, to see to it that these moneys were not used by our Government to impose our way of life upon peoples living in other countries. Fourth—and not less important—to use this relief to help the needy, the suffering and the destitute, and by such means—democratic means—to ward off the growth of all forms of totalitarianism throughout the world.

"Our board voted 33 in support of the European Recovery Program, and 11 against.

"In the course of that general discussion also there was discussed the matter of what the CIO intended to do with regard to the Third Party. By the same vote the board decided to oppose the Third Party in 1948.

"The Third Party is a divisionist party created for the purpose of causing confusion and dissension and undermining the labor movement.

"You know, I was a fair-haired boy with the leaders of the Communist Party for a period a few years ago. Of course, in 1938, '39 and '40, before I became CIO president, I was not a fair-haired boy. Those were the good old days when Pres. Roosevelt was fighting for Lend-Lease to help the Allies defeat the onrush of Hitlerism.

"In those days, the Communist Party was opposed to Lend-Lease, and they pictured the White House and called Roosevelt a warmonger and a Wallstreeter and a political hypocrite. The Daily Worker editorialized him, condemning him at length..

"I supported President Roosevelt in those days because I thought he was right.

"BUT in June of 1941, Russia became involved by reason of Hitler's attack upon her, and suddenly Roosevelt became a great hero. I in the meantime had been elected to the presidency of the CIO, and I was elevated to virtual sainthood by the Communists.

"For a period of approximately four years, the Daily Worker and the leaders and representatives of the Communist Party hailed with particular delight my name. But along came August of 1945, came the ending of the Japanese phase of hostilities, and then there was a new line laid down; a period of totalitarian aggression had taken place all over the world, the same systems, the same methods of dictation practiced by Hitlerites back in 1939 and 1940.

"True to my own conviction and to what I believe is the CIO conviction, I expressed opposition. I am forsworn in my allegiance to that flag (pointing to stars and stripes) and this great country of ours.

"The minute I gave expression to my convictions the Daily Worker and the leaders of the Communist Party referred to me as a fascist beast, a Wallstreeter and a war monger. Of course, I am duly appreciative, and I have no fault to find with the Communists attacking me as president of the CIO—none whatever. That is all right with me personally.

"But I do say that they can become menaces. That was evidenced in Czechoslovakia a few weeks ago. It was evidenced in Hungary just a little over a year ago.

"If they control the trade union movement in the United States (which, thank God, they do not!) they would use it as a vehicle and an instrumentality to do just about the same sort of job that they did in other countries throughout Europe.

"THE National CIO and all of its leaders are just as much opposed to war as anyone in the U. S. dare be. We believe our support of the ERP has done much to avert the possibility of war in any part of the world.

"We are opposed to the brass hats in the Kremlin or in the City of Washington who would deliberately and maliciously lead our nation into war.

"DIVISIONS have taken place within our family of unions, and I regret it. Over in New York, the former president of the Greater New York CIO Council, Michael Quill, tendered his resignation just a couple of weeks ago, and he stated that it was his firm conviction that the New York City Council should follow the traditional policy of CIO. The Council refused, and Quill quit.

"When he quit, he referred to these people that I am talking about as 'strange people.' The following morning, the Daily Worker had an editorial calling Michael Quill a Fascist beast and a war monger and a Wallstreeter.

"WHEN Joe Curran, the president of the National Maritime Union, severed his connections with them, they publicly castigated him. They referred to him as a war monger and a Fascist and a Wall Streeter.

"That is how they operate.

"Oh, yes, that is the history, that is the record— and that is the record of the 1948 third party. That is the record they have maintained from day to day, since the very inception of the drive, which was inaugurated at a Communist Party meeting in the City of New York in October of 1947.

"I speak feelingly about this matter, because I know that the average American worker has no inclinations that lean in that direction.

"The CIO-PAC is the greatest political instrumentality that was ever brought into being for the people at any time in my lifetime.

"We must not permit a third party, the Republican Party, the Democratic Party or any other party to bring about the ruin by means of sabotage of the CIO-PAC.

"The PAC needs your support today, because when the November elections pass into history and 1949 rolls around, PAC will continue to live; it will continue to serve."

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Harry Sayre, President, CIO Paperworkers, reports District 50, UMW, Local at the U. S. Gypsum Co. plant, South Bend, Ind., voted to affiliate as a body with the United Paperworkers. CIO Reg. Dir. William Mayo and CIO Rep. John Suttle handled the transfer.

President Sayre also reports the following union shop elections won at the following plants: Angier Corp., Framingham, Mass., by a vote of 62 to none opposed; San-Nap-Pak Mfg. Co., Northampton, Mass., by a vote of 112 to 1; Bird & Son, Inc., Norwood, Mass., by a vote of 344 to 11; Hollingsworth & Vose Co., E. Walpole, Mass., by a vote of 157 to 6; New Haven Pulp & Board Co., New Haven, Conn., by a vote of 348 to 8; Robert Gair Co., Tonawanda, N. Y., by a vote of 206 to 13; R. Shellmar Products Corp., Zanesville, Ohio, by a vote of 69 to 5.

Dir. of Org. Thomas J. Gallagher, Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers of America, reports that in a union shop election held at Todd-Johnson Drydocks, Inc., 1465 votes were cast for IUMSWA out of a total number of 1730 eligible votes. Also a union shop election was won by the union at Todds Combustion Co., New York City. All but one of 78 eligible voters cast their ballots for IUMSWA.

Thomas Andert, Chairman, Optical & Instrument Workers Organizing Committee, St. Louis, Mo., advises Gregory Optical Co., Jackson, Mich., voted CIO 12, No union 3.

Leonard Woodcock, Dir. of Region 1-D, UAW-CIO, advises the Mt. Pleasant plant of the Ferro Stamping and Manufacturing Co., which has been under contract for the last two years to District 50, UMW, voted by 268 to 120 to authorize UAW-CIO as the sole bargaining agent. Int. Rep. David R. Sherwood was in charge of the campaign. Ferro operates a plant in Detroit, which is a unit of Local 155, UAW.

The Packinghouse strike continues on. These gallant men and women have been in the picket line for seven weeks. The Vice Presidents of CIO, in a meeting with President Murray, adopted a resolution giving all-out support to the strike and urging our unions to give to the utmost. We are urging all our people to support this strike and raise all the money they can and send it to Lewis J. Clark, Secretary, United Packinghouse Workers of America, 205 W. Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill.

The police of Kansas City, Kans., ruthlessly charged the picket line and the local headquarters of the Packinghouse Workers beating up the strikers. The union is entering suit for damages in both the State and Federal courts to protect the rights of workers.

Since the passage of the Taft-Hartley law injunctions and sluggings of strikers have increased. An injunction has been issued against the Utility Workers forbidding all picketing, and this while profits are at the highest peak ever.

The workers of the nation need their unions today more than ever, and the union needs them.

It has just been announced that the Transport Workers will receive a 24c-an-hour increase. Congratulations to President Michael Quill and the membership on this achievement.

Sen. Murray Flays Health Meet Foes

ENEMIES of a government health program were accused last week by Sen. James E. Murray of spreading "a despicable set of lies" to the press of the country through the National Physicians Committee, in an attempt to smear the National Health Assembly meeting May 1-4 in Washington.

The Assembly was called by Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing to "develop feasible national health goals for the next ten years." Some 800 representatives of various public and private agencies, including the CIO, are expected to attend.

Murray, co-sponsor of a bill to provide national health insurance, also attacked the Physicians Committee for what he called a "flagrant and vicious attempt to undermine the free press of America."

Speaking on the floor of the Senate, Murray displayed a full page ad from "Editor and Publisher," publishing trade weekly, in which the Physicians Committee offered $3,000 in prizes for the best cartoons showing "the meaning and implications of political distribution of health care services in the United States."

Murray said the "real catch in this contest is the requirement that the cartoon, to be entered must first have been published in some newspaper of syndicate feature."

One bright feature in the story, Murray said, was that "Editor and Publisher" accepted the ad for the fake prize contest and then ran an editorial denouncing the ad as "an attempt at bribery."

John M. Pratt, administrator for the Natl. Physicians Committee in Chicago, said Murray's accusation that the committee attempted to bribe newspapers by its cartoon contest was "absurd." He said the committee's purpose in offering the prizes was to "stimulate" those who oppose national health insurance.

Reviewing the record of the National Physicians Committee, Sen. Murray said that it is the political lobbying and propaganda bureau of the American Medical Assn., and that its chief purpose today is to block any legislation aimed at the extension of medical service under a system of national health insurance.

In denouncing attempts of opponents of a national health bill to smear the Health Assembly called by the government, Murray enumerated some of the important problems to be taken up at this conference, such as the need for more hospitals and medical centers; lack of sufficient doctors, dentists, nurses and other medical personnel; maternal and child health services.

"Certainly, the health and well-being of 145,000,000 American men, women and children are matters of the greatest importance," he declared, "and any honest attempt, by a responsible group of citizens, to meet the challenge of these problems should be given every encouragement and support."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray is one of a group of national leaders in various fields invited to serve on the National Health Assembly's executive committee. A number of CIO union representatives have been designated as delegates to various sections of the conference.

Representing the CIO on the Medical Care section are: Otis Brubacker, Steel; Harry Becker, Auto; John R. Kumpel, Rubber; Esther Peterson, Clothing; George L. P. Weaver, National CIO; Rosaline Schulman, Ship; Myrna Bordelon, Chicago CIO; Hospital Facilities section: Paul Sifton, Auto; Anthony England, Textile.

Local Health Units: Tom Owens, Rubber; William Hanscomb, Oil; and L. L. Duncan, Community Services Committee.

Maternal and Child Health: Margaret Knight, Textile; Al Wagner, CSC.

State and Community Planning for Health: Andy Brown, Council of Social Agencies, Detroit; Robert Kinney, CSC-CIO.

Firing of Chairman Causes Strike

A CIO Electrical Workers strike at two Remington-Rand plants in Tonawanda and North Tonawanda, N. Y., was touched off last week by the company's dismissal of the local's shop chairman, Walter E. Gaul. About 1500 employes are involved.

Following a prolonged walkout in all seven of the Rem-Rand plants, the company last November cancelled its strike settlement agreement and individual UE contracts and refused to bargain. The agreement was to have run until April 1, 1949.

A UE strike of 4000 workers at the Westinghouse Electric plant in Buffalo, N. Y., ended last week with the company's agreeing to four union demands: elimination of downgrading because of outside contract work, scrapping of the employe incentive system, reclassification of about 350 men and a guaranteed 8-hour day.

Raise Promised, Strike Called Off

For about 40,000 workers on New York City's city-operated transit lines, the recent fare rise will mean a 24c hourly wage rise.

Promise of the increase for city employes staved off a threatened CIO Transport Workers strike on six private bus lines. The private companies have not agreed to the amount yet, but the city's action was expected to set a pattern.

Another CIO victory reported to have grown out of a conference between Mayor William O'Dwyer and TWU Pres. Michael Quill was a promise of union dues check-off for city transit employes. This has long been a bone of contention between the union and the Board of Transportation.

About 150,000 other city employes will receive raises also. The city's Board of Estimate is expected to approve a $250 annual increase for them. Ewart Guinier, CIO Public Workers, branded the proposal "totally inadequate," however. The CIO union is seeking a $600 increase, and warned that "a miserable handout of 7c an hour ($250 a year) cannot buy adequate city services."

Alabama CIO Bars 3d Party

By BOB CHRISTOFFERSON

NO Third Party in 1948—Aid to Europe—A ban on persons who subscribe to Communist principles holding office in the state CIO—Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act—Continuance of the CIO's Southern Organizing Drive—An end to wage differentials between the North and the South.

This was the gist of resolution adopted by the ninth constitutional convention of the Alabama CIO Council held April 23-25 in Montgomery. The convention also called for:

A new Federal minimum wage law of 75 cents an hour—Federal aid to education—Funds and facilities for labor education—Low-cost housing—An adequate armed force without Universal Military Training—Support of veterans' legislation—Support of the United Nations Appeal for Children.

The resolution opposing UMT but favoring an "adequate regular army, navy and air force" was adopted by a standing vote of 98 to 60, but only after lengthy debate.

There was no division, however, when it came to slamming the door in the Communists' faces, nor in making known the convention's stand on the Third Party.

Adopted unanimously was a constitutional amendment which read: "Persons who subscribe to Nazi, Fascist or Communist principles shall be ineligible to hold office in the Alabama CIO Council."

ALSO adopted unanimously was the anti-Third Party resolutions, which proclaimed "opposition to the Third Party movement of 1948 . . . is the official stand of the CIO in Alabama."

The resolution declared that "unity of all progressive forces . . . in 1948 is one of vital importance to the welfare and security of America." It termed the Third Party a "threat to this much-needed unity of progressive forces in the coming elections."

"An element in America foreign to our way of life" is using the Third Party in order to benefit "from the discord and chaos it can achieve among America's progressive forces by the injection of the Third Party issue into the nation's politics in the 1948 elections," the resolution said.

The sweep against left-wing elements was complete. Right-wingers took every position on the state executive board.

Carey E. Haigler and Eugene M. Wells, both former Birmingham steelworkers, were re-elected president and secretary-treasurer respectively. Haigler to his fourth consecutive term and Wells to his third. Haigler is also state CIO director in Alabama.

Elected vice presidents at large were Tom Green, Birmingham, Steelworkers, and Willie Harris, Bessemer, Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

U. S. Senators Lister Hill and John Sparkman, both friends of labor; Gov. James E. Folsom, the Director of CIO Councils, John Brophy and Secy.-Treas. Sherman H. Dalrymple, of the CIO Organizing Committee, were among the speakers.

Brophy told the delegates that the great lesson of the past insofar as labor is concerned "is that we succeeded in the past when we pulled together." He gave a picture of the domestic and world conditions that shaped CIO policy on the Third Party and ERP and said that all but a "minority" in CIO will follow that policy.

3,000 Will Attend Steel Union Conclave

By VINCENT SWEENEY

THE fourth constitutional convention of the United Steelworkers of America, largest union in the CIO, will open in Boston, Mass., May 11 with at least 3,000 delegates from basic steel, fabricating and processing plants and aluminum companies in the United States and Canada.

Next Thursday the union's executive board of 41 members will meet in a pre-convention session in the Statler Hotel, Boston, Pres. Philip Murray announced.

Some pre-convention estimates place the number of expected delegates as high as 3,500—based on enrollment to date and the fact that 2,700 delegates participated in the convention two years ago in Atlantic City. The union meets every two years.

As of today, close to 2,000 resolutions covering domestic and international issues had been received. Convention committees will start to work Friday to be ready for the sessions which begin on the morning of May 11 and run until May 15.

Murray announced that invitations to speak have been extended—and accepted—by Most Reverend Richard J. Cushing, Archbishop of Boston, and Bishop Lewis O. Hartman of the Methodist Church, Boston. Both will attend the opening sessions Tuesday morning. Rabbi Joshua Loth Liebman, of Boston, had been invited to give the invocation Tuesday afternon but will be out of the city.

MAYOR Hubert Humphrey, of Minneapolis, will address the Thursday morning session, and Labor Sec. Lewis Schwellenbach, the Friday morning session. Pres. Walter Reuther, CIO Auto Workers, had been invited to address the convention May 12.

Martin J. Walsh, director of District 1, Steelworkers, will introduce Murray at the opening session.

The convention does not elect officers as this is done by referendum of the entire membership which numbers 920,000. The biennial elections of the four international officers, a national director for Canada, and 36 district directors is scheduled for next December.

Present international officers are Murray, Vice Presidents Van A. Bittner and James G. Thimmes, and Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald, who has just returned to his office after a prolonged illness.

While this is the fourth constitutional convention, actually it is the sixth convention of union steelworkers. Wage and Policy conventions were held in 1937 in Pittsburgh and again in Chicago in 1940 while the union was still the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. It became the United Steelworkers of America at the 1942 Cleveland convention. Eight-hundred delegates attended the 1937 convention.

The growth of the steel union since its first meeting in Pittsburgh in June 1936 is shown not along by the membership but also by the fact that as of April 1 the union had 1,957 contracts in effect—an increase of 345 since April 1, 1946. These contracts are with 1,583 companies.

CIO Says Wood 'Expedites' Self

CIO Housing Committee Director Lee Goodman has charged U.S. Housing Expediter Tighe Woods with "malfeasance in office" and deliberately weakening rent controls in order to win confirmation.

The charges were made before the Senate Banking & Currency Committee and in a supplementary letter to Sen. Charles Tobey. The committee approved Woods' appointment, but a stiff battle is expected on the Senate floor when the issue comes up.

In his letter to Sen. Tobey, chairman of the committee, Goodman urged rejection of Woods and charged:

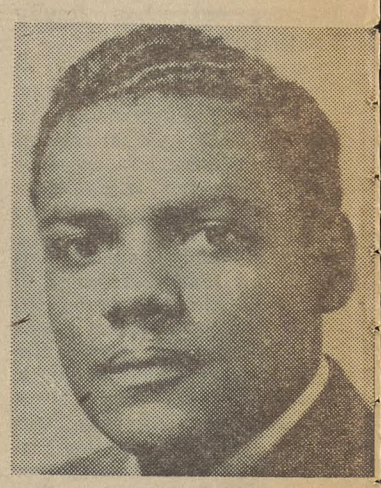
Woods' interpretation of the 1948 Housing and Rent Act regarding local advisory boards constitutes "malfeasance in office." Contrary to the law's provisions, he said, Woods has advised local rent boards that they could "ignore the requirements as to public hearings after due notice."

Woods decontrolled maximum rents in Bremerton, Wash., although "evidence available to him indicated that the need for rental housing had not been reasonably met, as required by the Act."

To gain support for confirmation, he "initiated a policy on the continuance of rent control which is not supported by the Act and which will result in weakening the rent control program."

Also to obtain confirmation he discharged "able and effective key personnel," Henry Zetzer, Cleveland rent director, and Robert Yost, New York City.

Woods made "drastic changes in the rent regulations which were not required by the new law and which will result in widespread confusion and hardship on both landlords and tenants." One such change, Goodman pointed out, made rent increases retroactive to the date on which landlord petitioned for it.



William T. Coleman jr., of Philadelphia, is the first Negro to be appointed to serve as a law clerk to a Supreme Court justice. Graduated first in his class at Harvard Law School in 1946, Coleman was appointed a clerk by Justice Frankfurter.

Labor Dept. Fund Upped By Senate

WHAT the House hath taken away, the Senate hath restored to the Labor Dept.—in part.

The Senate, acting on the Department's appropriation for the fiscal year starting July 1, voted $14,909,000. The figure was $2,411,000 over the amount allowed by the House—but it's 10% below the amount asked by Pres. Truman and 3% below current operating funds of the Department.

The bill has now gone to a joint Senate-House conference committee which must reach agreement on the $2,411,000 difference between the two figures voted by the Senate and House.

Biggest break in the Senate bill was given to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, whose budget had been cut by the House far below the efficiency minimum. The Senate approved $4,250,000 for BLS—a jump of $1,750,000 over the House figure but more than a million under the President's request.

The Veterans Re-Employment Service, killed in the House bill, was granted $415,000 in the Senate version. The Division of Labor Standards—which supervises industrial health and accident problems—was given $450,000, almost double the House figure.

Take New Steps To Push ERP

Spokesmen for European and U. S. unions have taken a good look-see at the European recovery program and planned new steps to make it fully effective.

They met in London April 23 as the Trade Union Advisory Committee on ERP, set up at a conference in the British capital in March.

Endorsement of the March statement, pledging full cooperation by the unions with their governments in making the recovery plan work, has been given by most of the national union groups and action is expected soon by the others, the committee said.

The chairman—E. Kupers of the Dutch unions—and the secretary—Vincent Tewson of the British Trades Union Congress—were given powers to consult with officials of the Economic Cooperation Administration and of the governments concerned.

They will draw up definite recommendations, to be presented to another meeting of the committee on June 1, and to a meeting of the full International Trade Union Conference at London July 29-30.

Michael Ross, CIO international affairs director, attended the meeting.

CIO To Supreme Court: T-H Discriminates Against Unions in the Political Arena

THE Taft-Hartley ban on union political spending is in the laps of the nine justices of the U. S. Supreme Court.

From arguments pro and con contained in bulky briefs filed by the government, the CIO and numerous liberal groups, the Court will decide whether the T-H law's Section 304 is valid or unconstitutional.

During three hours of argument, government lawyers claimed Congress was operating within constitutional powers to regulate elections. CIO attorneys replied the law went far beyond that, and in fact endangered basic constitutional rights of its citizens.

At the end, a majority of the large audience of lawyers and reporters in the court seemed to feel the CIO had won its case. But no guess on a Supreme Court decision is a sure thing until the Court hands down its ruling—probably before adjournment late next month.

Jesse Climenko, special attorney for the Department of Justice, argued that Congress has full power to assure the "purity" of elections—and that the Taft-Hartley provision was completely in line with that power.

LEE Pressman and Charles Margiotti, representing CIO, argued that the law is vague; that it discriminates against labor unions while permitting employer associations to function freely in the political arena; that instead of "purifying" the election process, it debases political activity by curbing freedom of press, speech and assembly.

The case heard before the nine Supreme Court justices originated last July 14, when CIO Pres. Philip Murray used the front page of The CIO News to endorse a Democratic candidate in a Congressional election in Baltimore.

(Sec. 304 of the T-H law bars unions or corporations from making expenditures "in connection with" U. S. elections, primaries or party caucuses or conventions.)

The CIO and Murray were indicted in February for spending money to publish that issue of the CIO paper. In March Judge Ben Moore of U. S. District Court upheld a CIO motion to quash the indictment on grounds of unconstitutionality. The Justice Dept. then appealed the case to the Supreme Court.

Climenko, the government attorney, was questioned with unusual vigor by the justices as he argued that the law applies to union-subsidized papers like the CIO News but not to corporation publications like the New York Times.

MARGIOTTI, former Pennsylvania attorney-general who had been retained by CIO for the case, recalled that no Congressional hearings were held on Sec. 304 and that it was "definitely discriminatory" against unions. He cited Pres. Truman's veto message to indicate the crippling nature of the attack on labor political action.

Pressman argued for more than an hour that far from purifying elections, the ban on union political spending would prevent free press, speech or assembly. It would do "the very contrary" to what the government says Congress intended, Pressman told the court.

He cited Sen. Ball vs. Sen. Taft, and Taft vs. Ball, to prove the vagueness of Congress's intended meaning of the section, and argued that no law as broad and undefined in meaning as the T-H Sec. 304 has ever been upheld by the U. S. Supreme Court in a civil rights case.

The very employers' associations which sponsored the T-H law are free to do political spending, he said, while unions—the object of the law's regulations—would be muzzled from criticizing the Congressmen who passed that law.

In reply to a number of questions by Justice Frankfurter, Pressman vehemently denied there had been collusion between CIO and the Justice Dept. to set up the case as a test of the statute.

He pointed out that "we were indicted" for violation of the law and that CIO had acted in good faith in seeking to quash the indictment. Pressman acknowledged that CIO attorneys felt certain that as the law was written, Murray's article in The CIO News was a law violation—a point on which CIO and the government were in agreement, he said.

Polltax Bill Moves Up A Notch

MOVING with the speed of a snail caught in a puddle of molasses, Congress has advanced another notch toward passage of the anti-polltax bill.

The Senate Rules Committee approved the bill by a 7-2 vote. Hearings had been held several weeks earlier. The House has already passed the measure by voice vote.

Whether the action of the Senate group has real meaning depends on the will of GOP leaders. So far, they have given priority only to the anti-lynch bill.

The anti-lynch bill has been approved, in slightly different versions, by Judiciary Committees of both House and Senate, but has not yet come up for debate and vote in either section of Congress.

Supporters of a strong civil rights program have voiced fear that the GOP—unless prodded by the folks back home—may build their voting record on the anti-lynching bill, and leave the more important polltax and FEPC measures at the bottom of the legislative barrel.

The Rules Committee's seven-man majority was composed of both liberals and conservatives. It consisted of five Republicans—Senators Brooks (Ill.), Ives (N.Y.), Bricker (O.), Wherry (Nebr.) and Hickenlooper (Ia.)—as well as two Democrats, Green (R.I.) and McMahon (Conn.).

Opposed were Senators Hayden (D., Ariz.), who claims he prefers a constitutional amendment rather than a law to abolish the polltax, and Sen. Stennis (D., Miss.), who succeeded the late Sen. Bilbo.

Kroll Snaps Back At Cox

AN oft-repeated—and oft-refuted—smear attack on Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC director, was tried out again last week on the floor of the House of Representatives.

Rep. Eugene Cox (D. Ga.), a loud and frequent critic of CIO and labor, claimed that Kroll was an alien who has illegally voted and in 1946 registered with the federal authorities.

Kroll snapped back with a denial, the facts to prove that Cox was wrong, and a charge that "Representative Cox was lying."

The PAC chief pointed out that as a nine-month-old infant he had been brought to the U. S. by his father, who came here in 1886 from London, England.

"Five years later, on March 27, 1891, my father was naturalized in Rochester, N. Y.," Kroll said. "The court of record is the Monroe County Court, the clerk of court at the time being William Oliver . . . Under the provisions of Title 8, Section 714, the U. S. Code, I acquired citizenship through the naturalization of my father.

"At no time have I been under the necessity of registering with the Dept. of Justice or any other agency as an alien, and therefore I have never done so."

Cox filled more than two pages of the Congressional Record with his diatribe against the CIO, the CIO-PAC, the late Sidney Hillman, and Kroll.

Order FBI Probe of Kans. Raid

AN investigation by the FBI of the April 23 police assault upon the striking CIO Packinghouse Workers and their union hall in Kansas City, Kans., has been ordered by the Justice Dept.

The FBI probe was urged by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who termed the 10-minute attack "one of the most outrageous examples of misuse of police power which this country has witnessed in a long time." About 100 unionists were injured and the inside of the union hall was demolished in the melee.

Kansas City now has damage suits on its hands totaling $446,000 as an aftermath of the raid. Filed against the city are:

- A $200,000 damage suit by the union local.
- Damage suits totaling $226,000 by 40 injured individuals. (One of these is not a union member, but says he was waiting for a street car nearby when police attacked and clubbed him.)

In addition, a petition for an injunctions against further police interference has been filed by the union in Kansas federal court. Charges against police who participated in the attack will be filed with the civil service commission by the union.

AN investigation of the assault by Mayor Clark E. Tucker's fact-finding commission came to an abrupt end after two witnesses were heard. The commission was dismissed after opposing attorneys failed to agree on whether hearing should go into events prior to the assault or should, as the union contended, confine itself to the raid.

Sen. Edwin C. Johnson (D., Colo.) has called for a Senate Labor Committee investigation of the eight weeks strike by CIO Packinghouse Workers, who, he told the Senate, "had and have much justification" for walking out.

Johnson's resolution, which apparently reflects a growing sympathy for the strikers among the livestock growers of his state, accused the packers of rejecting an arbitration proposal by the U. S. Mediation & Conciliation Service. The suggestion was accepted by the union.

Still another investigation of the police violence will be conducted by a House Labor subcommittee headed by Rep. Clare E. Hoffman (R., Mich.).

IN Washington, D. C., a week of meetings between the "Big Four" companies and the union, arranged by the U. S. Mediation & Conciliation Service, failed to produce any progress.

Giving substantiation to UPWA charges that the packers were intent on breaking the strike, rather than settling the issue through collective bargaining, the companies launched a "back-to-work" movement while the talks were in progress.

The companies' pleas, accompanied by threats to fire those who failed to return, found few takers, however. A Wilson spokesman found it necessary to blame the union's solid picket lines for the fizzle. And in Omaha, Acting Police Chief Henry Boesen said he hadn't seen anyone trying to enter the plants the first morning of the back-to-work drive.

DEAR WILSON CO.: CIO Packinghouse strikers reply to Wilson Company's letters threatening to fire them if they didn't return by buring the communications in the ash cans. Shown above are, l. to r., Sam Parks, president of the Chicago union local, and Joe Zabritski, a Wilson employe. The "Back-to-work" movement was such a fizzle that a Wilson spokesman tried to explain it away by saying the union's picket lines were too rigid.

TWO PROMINENT REPUBLICANS

Introduce Bill To Repeal Union Shop Vote in T-H

ONCE upon a time, way back in the early days of 1947, Congress passed a law to settle all the problems of labor-management relations.

They called it the Taft-Hartley Act.

Labor unions protested and fought the bill while it was in Congress. They said it was a phoney, sold under false pretenses, that would make labor relations not better but worse.

Its sponsors—the Natl. Association of Manufacturers and big business—said, in effect: "Pooh, pooh. Those labor fellows don't know what they're talking about. This is a bill to bring industrial peace."

Almost a year has passed since T-H was passed. And many of the predictions of labor are being borne out.

For instance:

1. The Supreme Court is now studying the constitutionality of the T-H ban on political expenditures. A district court judge said the section was illegal.

2. Two prominent Republicans—Sen. Ives (R., N. Y.) and Rep. Landis (R., Ind.)—have admitted the entire section on union security elections is cumbersome, time-consuming and expensive. They have filed a bill for repeal of that section.

3. Robert Denham, the NLRB's general counsel, has admitted what NLRB figures have already shown: union shop elections (petitions to hold 4,900 of 'em in March alone) are clogging up the NLRB machinery.

4. Despite the T-H act, whose announced purpose was to bring industrial peace, the country is faced with more industrial unrest than at any time in years—principally because employers feel they can say "no" to unions in bargaining sessions and keep the law on their side.

5. Sen. Joe Ball (R., Minn.), a prime mover in the fight for T-H, has ordered Senate Labor subcommittee hearings to start May 24 to look for ways of strengthening the "perfect law"—presumably to make all strikes impossible.

BALL'S statement made clear that he would prefer not to get any "broad, general statements either for or against the Taft-Hartley Act" during the forthcoming hearings.

He's interested, he claimed, in "specific suggestions, preferably related to factual experience, for . . . improvement" of T-H.

Ball tipped his hand on the proposals which capture his interest: compulsory arbitration in disputes affecting so-called strategic industries; seizure of plants during strikes affecting the public welfare (so that any strike might become a strike "against the government"); anti-trust action against unions as well as giant corporations.

Ball also wants to know whether union security elections should be dropped—or whether it might not be well to outlaw not only the closed shop (as in T-H), but the union shop and maintenance-of-membership as well.

He's interested in speeding the handling of NLRB cases, perhaps through formation of union-opposed special U. S. labor courts.

He'd like to see something proposed about handling industry-wide walkouts. And he'd want to hear discussion about a "sound, permanent solution" of the question of health and welfare funds—concerning which T-H set up elaborate administrative provisions.

THE Ives-Landis bills (S. 2614; HR 6455) have little chance of passage this session, it is believed, but they mark the first effort by the GOP majority which sponsored the T-H law to back down from its provisions.

They would repeal the need for unions to get signatures of 30% of workers before asking for a union shop election, and would end the election apparatus itself. Thus, unions would be free to ask for union security clauses in their contracts without going to the NLRB. The closed shop—in which the employer can hire union members only—would remain illegal.

Ives—a Dewey supporter who gave a "liberal front" to the campaign for T-H last year—admitted the union shop provision was "at least one provision" of that law which "has not worked as predicted."

ROBERT DENHAM, the husky, stuffy general counsel of NLRB, conceded at almost the same time that "the record of the past indicates that probably the (union shop) elections can profitably be eliminated."

Ninety-eight per cent of more than 6,000 union shop polls have proved overwhelming victories for the workers, the figures show. In March, this type of election—essentially to prove a well-known fact that workers like their unions protected—cost the government a lot of money.

Denham's speech was made before the AFL Upholsterer's Union—probably his first appearance before a labor group. Union Pres. Sal Hoffman, in an unscheduled debate with the NLRB official, said the trend against security elections was "no concession" but was based on a "growing demand from workers that when they vote for the union shop, they should get it."

So now, Hoffman said, there's a push on "to drop the elections."

150,000 Hear Carey In Rome

(The following story is based on special cabled reports to The CIO News.)

CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey addressed a throng of 150,000 Italians who jammed Rome's "People's Square" for a big celebration of May Day—European labor's traditional holiday.

Carey and other members of the CIO delegation to the World Federation of Trade Unions executive meetings in Rome attended the mass meeting after insisting on assurance that it would not be turned into a demonstration against the European Recovery Program.

Sponsor of the big meeting was the Italian Confederation of Labor (CGIL), headed by Communist Giuseppi Di Vittoria, a member of the WFTU Executive Bureau.

Carey's demand for such assurances followed publication of a May 1 proclamation by Louis Saillant, WFTU secretary general, which contained strongly-implied criticism of ERP. Carey and leaders of the British Trades Union Congress told WFTU and Italian union leaders that repudiation of the manifesto—on which CIO had not been consulted—was necessary before they would join a rally based on statements contained in the WFTU manifesto.

The WFTU bureau voted that any national affiliate could repudiate the May 1 document, and Di Vittorio gave assurance the Rome rally would deal only with trade union matters.

The meeting—held in one of Rome's great squares—found union leaders from half a dozen nations together on the flag-draped speakers' stand.

They included Carey; Arthur Deakin of the British TUC, who heads the world labor group; Vassili Kuznetsov of the Soviet trade unions; and Saillant, WFTU's secretary general. None of the speakers mentioned the Marshall Plan during their speeches.

"Italy has been good to the United States," Carey told the Italian throng.

"You have sent us your people and they have given us the kind of interference in our affairs that we like. They have built our railroads and our bridges; they have become school teachers and physicians; they even serve as our judges.

"The American people know that they owe a great deal to the Italian people.

"The American people and the Italian people will join together to make a better world. They serve notice that they will permit no one to stand between the worker and his food, or between the farmer and the seed he wants to plant."

The American delegation—Carey; his executive assistant, Harry Read; and Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross—were greeted with hearty applause by the crowd along the route to the Piazza del Populo—the "People's Square."

Later in the day, when the WFTU delegation arrived in the village of Genzano de Roma, about 20 miles from Rome, to attend a dinner given by the Italian labor federation, practically the whole population turned out to welcome the visitors. And again the CIO delegation received an ovation.

MURRAY TELLS AMERICA:

Steel Pay '23½c an Hour Short of Amount Needed To Keep A Family in Minimum Decency'

DESCRIBING the steel price cuts as "so petty that they can have no effect whatsoever on the cost of living," Philip Murray, CIO and Steelworkers' president, accused the steel industry in a radio speech last week of "merely shadow-boxing for public exhibition."

He contrasted the exorbitant profits of the industry with the lowered living standards of its workers, resulting from the high cost of living. Murray quoted Labor Dept. statistics to show that the average hourly earnings in the steel industry last year were "23½c an hour short of the amount needed to maintain a family (of four) in minimum decency."

Partial text of the speech follows:

In April, 1947, the Steelworkers, which I am privileged to represent, and the steel-producing companies negotiated and signed a contract for a moderate wage increase. Our union accepted this agreement in the hope that such action would help to stabilize costs and prices and to halt inflation.

Unfortunately the steel industry used this moderate wage increase as the pretext for price increases three times as great as the direct cost of the moderate wage increase. This short-sighted action on the part of the steel industry contributed to a new inflationary spiral and a substantial increase in the cost of living.

As a result of repeated and unnecessary price increases, the steel industry, during 1947, reaped a veritable harvest of profits. In 1947 profits in the steel industry exceeding 500 million dollars, after federal taxes—a record high, and an increase in excess of 55% over 1946, in itself a profitable year.

The United States Steel Corp., the so-called "bellwether" of the industry, enjoyed staggering profits last year of approximately 244 million dollars, before federal income taxes, and 153 million dollars after such taxes. This corporation's profits in the year 1947 increased 73% over 1946.

While the steel industry was bulging with profits, what was the situation of its workers? Ask the wife of any steelworker and she can tell you the answer.

Families Hard Hit

The Department of Labor has issued statistics on a minimum budget required to maintain an average family of four. Of course many workers' families number more than four. This budget, adjusted for recent price rises, shows that to provide a standard of minimum decency for a family an annual wage of $3,520 is required. This sum amounts to $1.76 per hour provided the wage earner works a steady 40 hours a week throughout the year.

The average hourly earnings in the steel industry last year were only $1.52 per hour. This means a deficit of 23½c an hour short of the amount needed to maintain a family in minimum decency. It is simple arithmetic that a worker cannot manage under these circumstances. It is no wonder that many of their children lack clothes, lack food, lack decent medical care. It was these children, these hard-pressed families who were in our minds when we asked the steel industry for a wage increase.

"Sure, I know about the steel price cut, but the price of groceries is still going up."

Let me put this problem to you another way. Since June of 1946, the effective end of OPA, to the beginning of 1948, the cost of living has gone up by more than one-fourth according to government figures. In cents per hour, living costs of steelworkers have risen nearly 35c per hour. During this same period wages in the steel industry rose only 22c per hour. It is obvious from this that the buying power of the steelworker's wife as she goes to market is lagging far behind this increase of prices.

Our 2-year contracts signed last year provide for negotiations as to wages at the request of either party at the end of the first year. We made provision then to talk about wages now because no one in April 1947 knew what would happen to prices and inflation over a two-year period. We know now what has happened. Prices are up. Buying is down.

I charge that the steel industry has not negotiated with us in good faith on the wage issue in light of these facts. I charge that the steel industry has failed to give adequate consideration to the immediate and pressing needs of its steelworker employees.

The steel industry cannot plead poverty. Its profits stand at all-time highs. Its published statements on profits clearly prove that it is well able to pay a needed increase.

On our part, the Steelworkers and the CIO have done their best to halt inflation. In addition to signing a two-year contract with the steel industry, we pressed before Congress in 1946 for the retention of controls over prices in order to stabilize living costs. We have consistently advocated that Congress institute price controls and excess profits taxes which could impose some effective restraint over present inflationary trends.

We have been seeking by all the means within our power to halt the increase in living costs. What has the steel industry done to prevent inflation? Nothing, nothing at all. In fact, they have made it worse. They helped torpedo the OPA. They did so with their eyes solely on even higher profits. They have shown total disregard for the public welfare and the plight of American wage earners.

Now, belatedly, to escape public wrath and as a sop to public opinion, the U. S. Steel Corp. and a few, very few, steel companies propose to decrease the prices of a few of their products. I say to you that the cuts announced are insignificant. They are picayune cuts; they are so paltry, they can have no effect whatsoever on the cost of living. I say that this is no onslaught on prices. The steel industry is merely shadow-boxing for public exhibition.

The U. S. Steel Corporation proposes to decrease the price of certain of its products by an amount which it estimates at 25 million dollars annually. This represents a decrease of about 1% of the company's sales revenue in 1947. This so-called price decrease does not even equal the 28 million dollar price increase which Mr. Ben Fairless, president of the Corporation, admitted publicly would result from the increases made in February 1948 alone.

Remember, the February rise was only the latest in a whole series which took place since April 1947. From then until now the steel industry has raised prices of finished steel by an average of $11.32 per ton.

Price Cut Paltry

The proposals now made with such fanfare by U. S. Steel will cut the price of steel less than $1.25 per ton. Let me put it to you in terms of pounds. In pounds this means a decrease of less than one-half a cent; in fact, nearer to 1/20th of a cent a pound. We label this decrease for what it is—paltry and insignficant, intended for propaganda purposes alone.

The steel industry professes to hope that this price decrease will set off a series of price reductions throughout the economy. We doubt that this one-half cent cut can have any such beneficial effect. However, we offered in our negotiations with the steel companies to delay final action on wages until the effect of this price decrease could be measured.

But the industry, acting in concert, refused. It arbitrarily refused to execute agreements with the union which would extend the time for wage negotiations to test the effect of this price decrease.

We have a 2-year, no-strike contract. We will live up to that contract. The industry professes to believe in fairness to its workers and in a long-range spirit of cooperation with our union. I leave it to you, the American people, whether these professions are borne out by the adamant, the unjustified refusal of the steel industry to grant its workers an equitable wage increase.

Standing In Need Of Prayer

THEY felt the need of prayer at the U. S. Steel Corp.'s 47th annual stockholders' meeting in Hoboken, N. J., last week.

The prayer, in which U. S. Steel Pres. Benjamin Fairless joined, was conducted at the opening of the meeting by 80-year-old Joseph E. J. McGhee, who has 20 shares of U. S. Steel.

"Last year it came to me that the stockholders should pray," McGhee told reporters later. "So I got up and offered to lead.

" 'Just a moment,' the chairman said to me. 'Are you a a stockholder?'

" 'Yes, indeed,' I said.

" 'Then go ahead and pray,' the chairman said."

McGhee said he didn't know if the prayers have any effect on the market, "but they sure get the place quiet for a few minutes."

IN between the free prayers and the free sandwiches, apple pie and coffee which the company traditionally hands out, this happened:

Enders M. Voorhees, finance committee chairman, reported that U. S. Steel will not have to borrow to complete its $800 million expansion and improvement program. The company has enough set aside in its bank accounts to see the program through.

Board Chairman Irving S. Olds, who was unable to attend in person, complained that "undue importance" had been attached to the price increases U. S. Steel imposed in January. (The price boosts netted U. S. Steel $28 million compared to the $25 million price rollback it announced in April.)

J. NEWCOMB Blackman, wealthy New Jersey stockholder in U. S. Steel, AT&T and other corporations, jumped to his feet and demanded: "Is Phil Murray or a representative of his in the room?"

Blackman, it seemed, had invited the steel union leader to attend the meeting so he could challenge Murray's charges of corporation profiteering. Murray was not there.

Vol. 11 May 10, 1948 No. 19

A DANGEROUS MEASURE

The Subversive Activities Control Act of 1948, a product of the blundering House Un-American Activities Committee, is a legislative monstrosity.

Its sponsors say its purpose is to really put the squeeze on the Communist Party, which, from our viewpoint, would be a laudable undertaking.

But we're not so sure that the "cure" wouldn't be as bad as the "disease."

We think the bill couldn't be enforced and that it would be held unconstitutional. We believe it would turn the Communist Party into an underground movement.

Our chief concern, frankly, is over the effects the measure would have on civil rights and the manner in which it could be used unfairly against labor unions and other liberal groups.

The measure—usually referred to as the Mundt Bill—would do much to give legal standing to that damnable farce known as "guilt by association."

It would penalize citizens because of their beliefs and not necessarily because of their acts.

These two things alone are enough to make us condemn the bill. The discretionary powers given the attorney general are equally as bad.

NO REAL REDRESS The attorney general—be he Tom Clark or someone who succeeds him in the future—could, through design or error, destroy or seriously harm liberal organizations which have no connection with the Communist Party.

The measure could do much damage to the reputations of liberal non-Communists who—to work for what they considered just causes—became active in organizations which were revealed later to be Communist "fronts" or were at least listed as such by the attorney general.

Let's not delude ourselves on one point. A group listed as subversive by the head of the Justice Department may prove "legally" that the listing is wrong but it will stand accused for years if not forever in the court of public opinion.

A vindictive attorney general could use Mundt Bill powers to engage in a smear campaign that would make the Communists' favorite tactic resemble child's play.

Regardless of any safeguards now in the bill or that may be put in later, it can provide no effective redress for those falsely accused.

APPROACH IS WRONG The Mundt Bill is based on the completely false idea that Communism is a "disease" that can be cured by potent legislative medicine—requiring Communist and "front" groups to register, removing contributions to "front" groups from the tax exempt category and imposing stiff penalties for violations of the act itself.

Members of the Un-American Activities Committee could have spent their time better by designing legislation designed to remove the conditions under which the seeds of Communism take root and grow.

They could have made a real contribution by sponsoring bills to improve the workings of democracy, strengthening our civil rights and improving the living and working conditions of those most susceptible to Red doctrine.

Instead, they concocted a dangerous monstrosity which fails to recognize that Communism gains no foothold where there is real democracy and real prosperity.

It Was The Natural Thing To Do

Murray Woudn't Go Along With The Commmies, So They're Trying To Undermine Him

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT'S almost as simple as adding two and two together and getting four—and there's no mystery about it.

Philip Murray wouldn't play footsie with the Communists on their post-war plans, so they're out to "get" him if they can.

Being opposed by the Reds is nothing new for Murray. He got a good taste of their tactics back in the days when Adolf Hitler and Joe Stalin were playing patty-cake.

He became their hero only when Adolf and Joe called off their alliance and the U. S. and Russia started fighting on the same side.

They again started plotting and scheming against him and his rightwing colleagues when Russia adopted a post-war policy which the U. S. opposed.

QUIET sniping began some time ago, but the Reds didn't roll out their big guns until Murray took a firm stand in support of the European Recovery Program, which the Communists opposed, and in opposition to a third party in 1948, which the Communists favored.

Since then the Communists have attempted to picture Murray as a "fascist" who is trying to sell labor down the river.

Don't get the idea that this is a private fight between Phil Murray and the Commies and that they're blasting at him just because they dislike him personally.

They dislike what he stands for—and they dislike those who share his views.

It is a battle of ideologies—not a battle of personalities.

NOBODY should have been surprised by the Communists' decision to fight Murray and his right-wing colleagues and to attempt to sow discord within the CIO.

Soviet policy was in opposition to ERP because ERP provided a threat to Russia expansionist aims in Europe.

The American Communists follow the Russian policy line. So they did the expected—the natural thing. They turned their big guns on the CIO right wing.

They threw their support behind Henry Wallace, who became their hero largely because of his opposition to ERP.

Now there are strong indications that they may sell Henry down the river.

THE left-wingers have made little progress in their efforts to swing CIO groups away from national CIO policy.

Ninety per cent of the city and state CIO councils have already indorsed CIO policy on ERP and the third party.

"Official" CIO-PAC groups have been set up in California and New York outside the jurisdiction of councils which failed to indorse CIO policy.

Phil Murray discharged Harry Bridges as Northern California CIO director because he opposed official policy.

Mike Quill resigned as head of the New York City council and was immediately subjected to bitter attacks by the Communists.

Right-wingers assumed control of a number of city and state CIO groups by the simple process of voting the lefties out on their ears.

IF this be Red-baiting, the Commies are invited to make the most of it. Honest criticism of the Communists, you know, automatically becomes Red-baiting.

This criticism stems from the belief of the writer that—

1. The Communists are pursuing a course that is detrimental to the United States as a whole.

2. They are trying to sow discord within the ranks of labor, hoping to capitalize on the confusion thus created.

They're trying hard. They're making a lot of noise. And they're getting their ears pinned back nearly every place they turn!

PAC Wins Many Ohio Contests — Loses Governor Race

PAC-indorsed candidates in Ohio won nomination for four state and a number of city offices, and for 10 seats in the U. S. House and a number in the state legislature.

However, the results for PAC were mixed. PAC-indorsed candidate Ray T. Miller trailed in the Democratic gubernatorial race behind his nearest opponent, ex-Gov. Frank Lausche.

Veteran political observers conceded the complete collapse of the Democratic machine caused the defeat of Miller, who had the indorsement of nearly every Democratic county committee. Those observers hold that Miller's vote was almost completely a PAC vote.

In 14 of the 22 Congressional District races in which PAC endorsed candidates the results showed 10 victories, three defeats and one contest result still unknown. In the race for the nomination of Congressman-at-large on the Democratic ticket, Stephen Young, PAC-indorsed candidate, was victorious.

On the local level the results in Akron were typical of results throughout the state. In that city PAC indorsed a strong slate of candidates for every office and ran many CIO candidates for ward committee. Paul Fessenden, Executive Secretary of the Summit County PAC, reports the highest vote in Akron's history, with all CIO candidates running well ahead.

In Youngstown, Paul Langley, Steelworker and Local President, roundly defeated Sheriff Elser for the Democratic nomination for that office. Elser, widely known in Ohio politics and long-time sheriff, had incurred the bitter hatred of CIO as a result of his strike-busting tactics in the 1937 "Little Steel" strike.

In Toledo, Thomas A. Burke, vice-mayor and a member of Auto Workers Local 12, won a resounding victory in the Democratic Congressional race, trouncing his nearest opponent by vote of 15,000 to 9,000. Also, Toledo nominated PAC-indorsed candidates for State Representative and County Commissioner.

In Cincinnati, PAC-indorsed candidates for United States Congress in the First and Second District were victorious and seven of the eight candidates endorsed for State Representative also won.

In Cleveland, PAC-indorsed candidates for State Senator copped the first three places in a field of six, while eight PAC candidates endorsed for State Representative also won.

In other state-wide elections, however, PAC-endorsed candidates were victorious. Joseph T. Ferguson was nominated for state auditor; Harry V. Armstrong for state treasurer and Herbert S. Duffy for attorney general, all in the Democratic primary. Judge Robert M. Sohngen, PAC-endorsed candidate for the Democratic nomination for judge of the supreme court, also won.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP BY BEN YOMEN

"Lift prices a lot, cut 'em a little, then refuse to raise wages—wonderful plan."

He Could 'See' Well Though Totally Blind

HE was a vague figure in the passing parade—a man who achieved momentary notice in his own small world and was then forgotten by most of those who knew his story.

Few of those (including the writer) who bothered to note the event when it occurred can remember the man's name.

They have forgotten the town in which he lived and the name of the plant in which he worked.

But two things they remember well:

The man was totally blind.

He spoke with feeling—and with good sense—when he marked his "X" on a piece of paper.

THE story began a number of years ago in a small Southern town, when a Negro man went to work in a fertilizer plant.

Some time later he suffered a serious accident. Acid—or maybe it was alkali—got into his eyes. Soon his world of light had turned to one of complete darkness.

Our man—and we shall call him John from now on—might have become a burden on society—a public charge—had he not possessed real determination.

Real determination and real friends.

This combination made him something of a hero to other workers in the plant and John became a well-known figure in his town.

JOHN went back to work at the fertilizer plant as soon as the pain left his eyes and he had recovered from the shock of being blind.

His friends helped him get from his home to his job each day—and they did part of his work for him until he became accustomed to the constant darkness.

Finally he got the hang of it.

The little truck containing fertilizer would be hauled into place. John would grab his shovel and dig in.

It went on hour after hour, shovelful after shovelful. John asked no favors and received none.

A YEAR or so ago a CIO organizer went to John's town and started talking unionism to the men at the fertilizer plant.

John listened and was convinced. He became a volunteer organizer—then an evangelist of trade unionism.

His face would light up behind his sightless eyes when he would talk about the need for his fellow workers to organize.

His one goal in life seemed to be to have the CIO represent him and his friends in collective bargaining.

The workers began signing up. John talked longer and more convincingly. Finally a majority had put their names on application cards.

Then the date for an election was set.

THE agent in charge of the NLRB balloting said he'd never faced such a situation.

How could a blind man vote secretly and still use the regular ballot?

Some say the agent finally figured out a method. Others say John himself came up with the solution.

The board agent placed one of John's thumbs over the "yes" square on the ballot and the other over the "no" square. John removed his thumb from the "no" square, picked up a pencil and carefully marked an "X" beneath the thumb that had been on the "yes" square.

And after casting his ballot he said:

"Though blind, I could see the need for a union better than some guys who have two good eyes."

The union won the election. A.L.S.

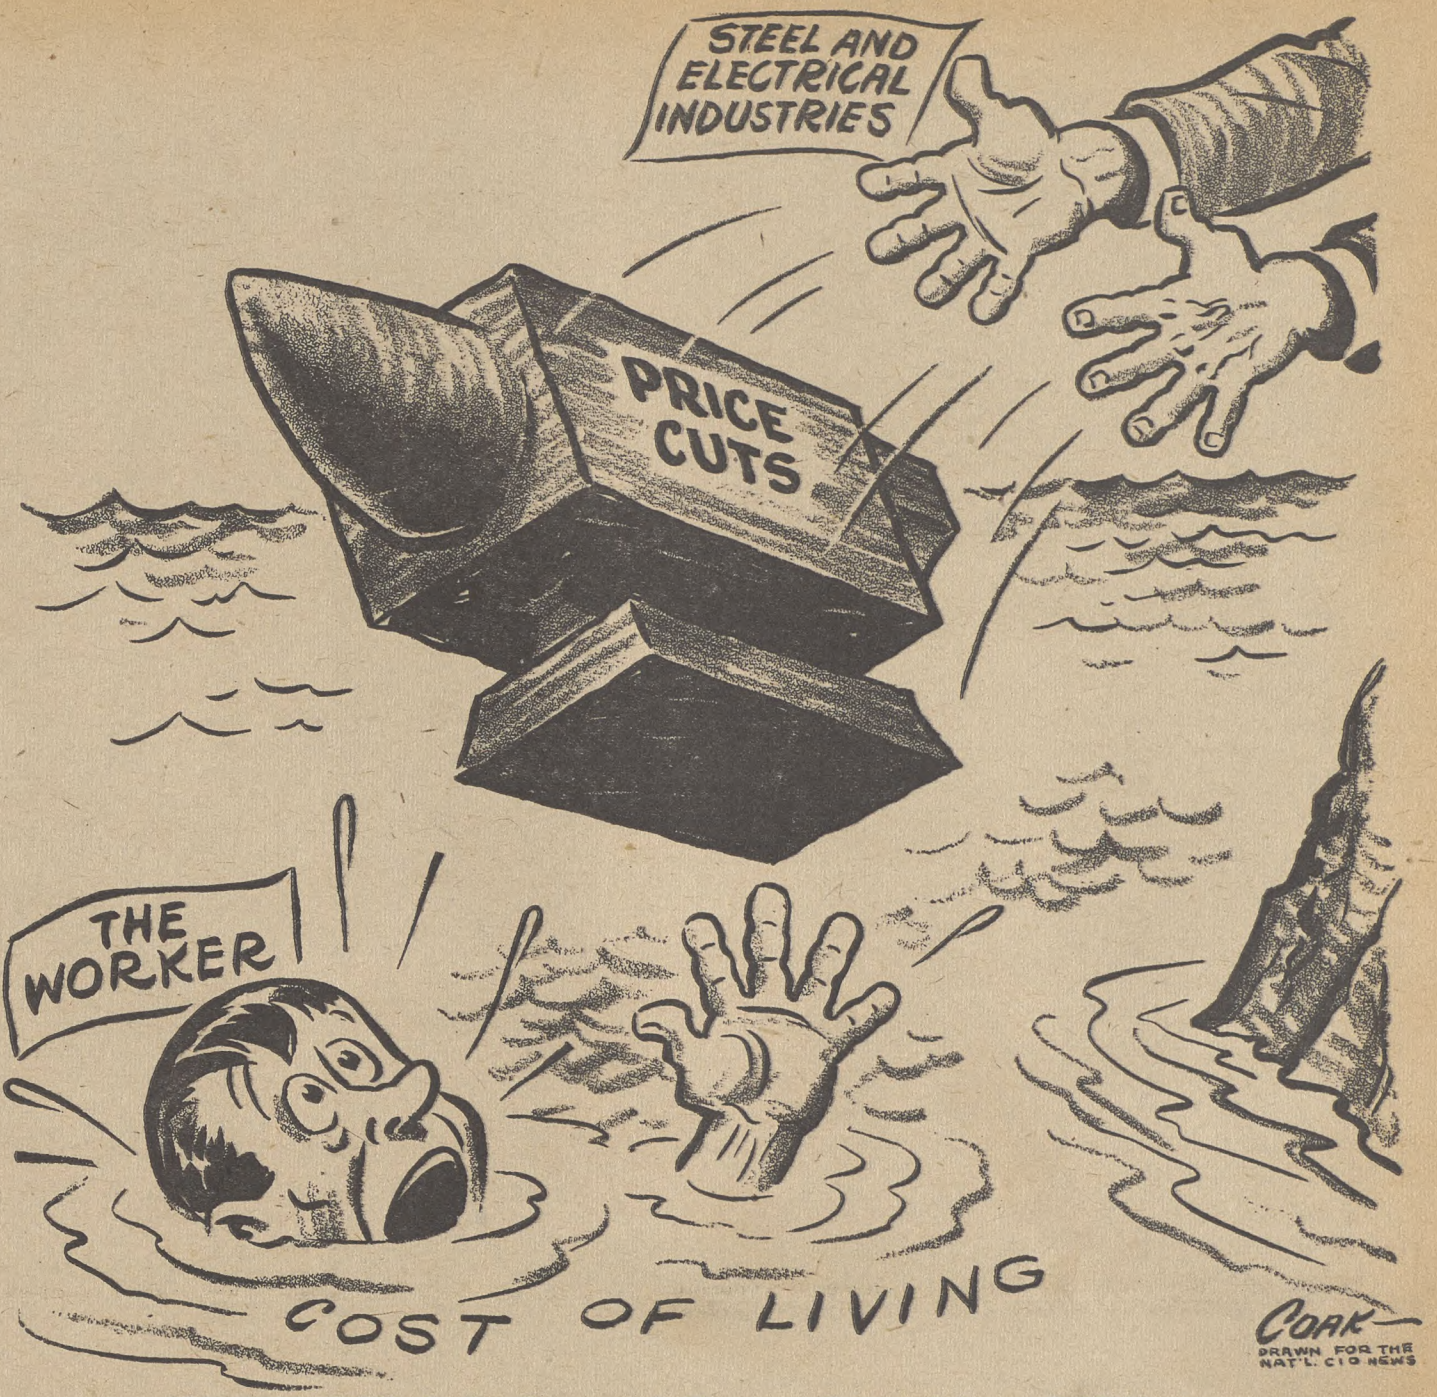
TO THE RESCUE!



WFTU Officials Barred From Attacking Affiliates

(The following story is based on special cabled reports to The CIO News from the CIO delegation attending World Federation of Trade Union meetings in Rome, Italy)

AFTER a hectic six-day debate, CIO won adoption of a series of sweeping reforms in the handling of the affairs of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

A declaration of policy—drafted and presented to the WFTU by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Arthur Deakin of the British Trade Union Congress, who heads the WFTU—was adopted by unanimous vote of the organization's 26-man executive committee, meeting in Rome.

Carey was accompanied to Rome by Harry Read, his executive assistant, and by Michael Ross, director of international affairs.

Principal effect of the new policy statement is to end attacks and criticism of affiliated national labor groups by WFTU officials and bulletins. Carey, Deakin and other union leaders who have supported the Marshall Plan have been subject to such criticism, but CIO made clear it would no longer submit to such attacks by Louis Saillant, the WFTU's general secretary.

Last November, CIO's proposal to place the European Recovery Program on the WFTU agenda was opposed by Saillant, Giuseppi Di Vittorio of the Italian unions, and Sidorenko of the Russian unions. The WFTU executive then voted 5-3 to let Carey present CIO's views, which called for referral by the WFTU of ERP questions to the national labor affiliates.

A February meeting, at which the ERP matter could be more thoroughly discussed, was postponed. Between November and February, the WFTU bulletin, the Soviet press, the Daily Worker in New York, and other publications launched a series of bitter attacks on CIO Pres. Murray, Carey, and Vice-Presidents Reuther (UAW) and Rieve (TWUA) for their support of the Marshall Plan.

WITH this background of events in mind, Carey told the current WFTU executive bureau meeting: "This type of activity cannot and must not continue. CIO will not tolerate such treatment. If that is to be the procedure, the WFTU is dead and there is no longer a world labor movement.

"We will accept no commitments from Saillant as to his future conduct. The Bureau must act in this matter."

CIO won support from British and Dutch members of the bureau, but Vassili Kuznetsov of the Soviet unions and Saillant argued that nothing seriously wrong had occurred. After days of debate, the matter was turned over to a subcommittee of Carey, Kuznetsov, Saillant, DiVittorio (Italy), Tewson (England) Pres. Deakin (England).

This group's recommendations eventually won unanimous support from the WFTU's full executive committee. The statement said in part:

"The Executive Committee reaffirms declarations of London and Paris trade union conferences of 1945 and the all-inclusive nature of the WFTU; and reaffirms the principle that no one national center shall seek to dominate affairs of the WFTU so as to exclude the point of view of any other national center.

"ACCORDINGLY . . . the WFTU Executive Committee decides:

1. "Any national center has the right to submit any question it so desires for inclusion on the agenda . . .

2. 'There shall be regular quarterly meetings of the Executive Bureau." Dates will be fixed by the President and Secretary-General, subject to convenience of Bureau members.

3. "Top permanent officials of WFTU will not engage in any other work except with the Bureau's approval.

4. Further talks with the advisory committee of the various international trade secretariats will be held soon to examine possibility of affiliation with the WFTU.

5. "Organs of the WFTU shall not be used to publish or circulate attacks on policies or administration of national centers affiliated to the WFTU. This does not prevent publication of objective statements of policy of any national center."

6. A WFTU editorial board consisting of Gen. Sec. Saillant and three assistant secretaries (British, American and Russian) shall "discuss questions of publication deemed likely to conflict with interests of any national center."

7. If questions arise that vitality affect the interests of national centers on which "there is no accepted, directly-applicable decision," the matter will be discussed by the secretary general and his three assistants. If no agreement is possible, it will be passed on to the next Bureau meeting.

Effect of the agreement is to place in the hands of the three assistant secretaries a veto power over proposed written or oral attacks, in the facilities of the WFTU, on the policies of any national labor group.

In addition, the CIO delegation is seeking to get better administration of WFTU affairs, and to avoid abuses of the rule that all correspondence between the WFTU and CIO unions should be sent through national CIO headquarters. CIO will also seek establishment and maintenance of a "reasonable ideological balance."

Other matters being discussed are the trade union situation in Germany, applications for membership from other labor groups, and a proposal to postpone the WFTU World Labor Congress, scheduled for Brussels, Belgium, next September.

PAC—IT'S CLI

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

IT HAPPENED in Indiana, the Hoosier state—the home of poets.

A PAC blockworker approached a house to urge the residents to vote. When the blockworker—a girl—got to the house, a moving van of furniture was drawn up at the door. The housewife, clad in a faded Mother Hubbard and dusty from helping get the furniture out, was about to board an auto and drive to her new house.

"Hey, wait a minute," cried the PAC gal, "today's election day. Aren't you going to vote? After all, your husband's a CIO member."

"Gee," answered the housewife, "I can't go to the polls dressed like this—and all my other clothes are packed in suitcases in that trunk."

That didn't faze the PAC worker a single moment. She looked the lady up and down, made some mental measurements and suggested:

"Why, you and I are about the same size, how about us going back into the house and exchanging clothes? Then, you can vote and later we can switch clothes again."

The housewife agreed and PAC had won another vote.

* * *

Yes, that happened in Indiana — in Muncie, Indiana. The blockworker was Marie Cooper, a member of the CIO Steelworkers' Union, secretary of the Delaware County Industrial Union Council and chairman of the county PAC.

The incident illustrates what I found out last week in a three-day auto tour of Indiana—driven by State PAC Dir. Bartley Brown. It illustrates the enthusiasm, initiative, perseverence and determination of CIO in Indiana.

Starting two days before primary election day, Brown and I drove 1125 miles, saw PAC in action in 7 of the 11 Congressional districts, talked to a Con-

Brother Brown

Auburn-haired Bartley Brown has been Indiana PAC director since January.

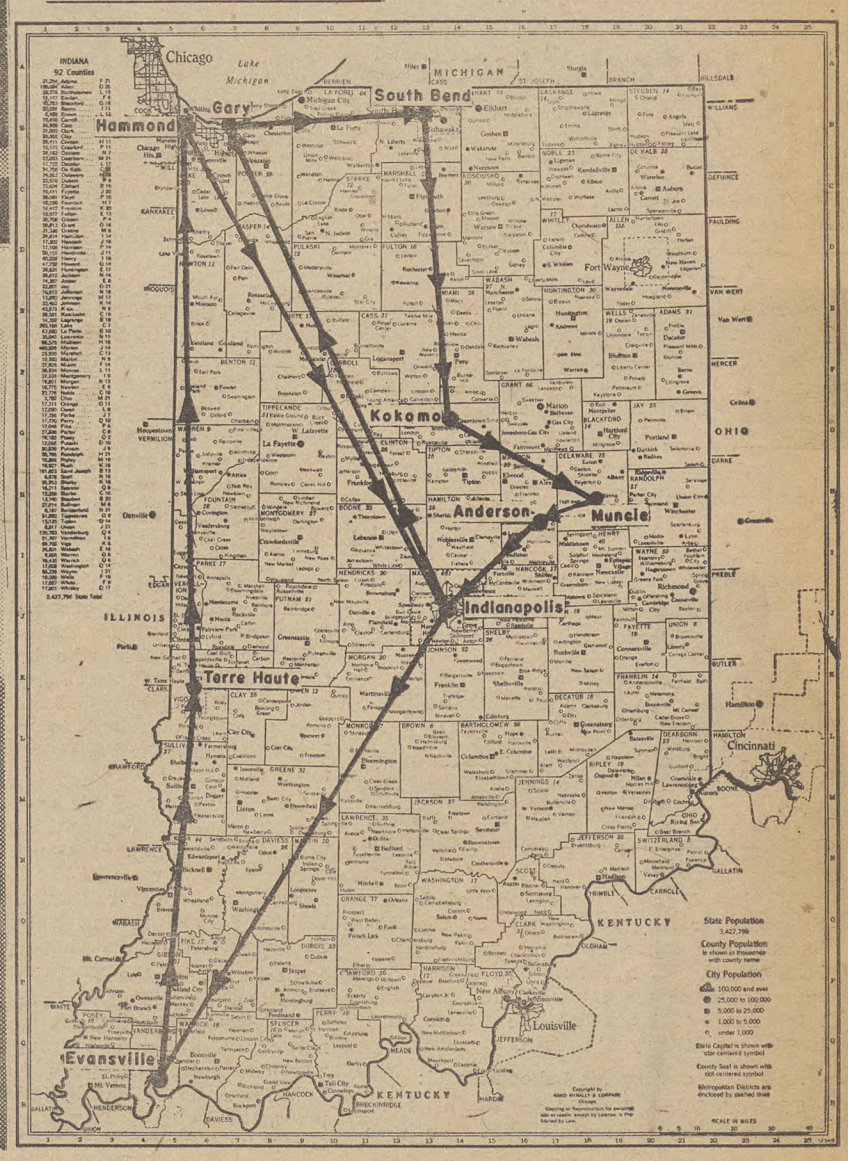
He's been a member of the Oil Workers' Union since 1935, having worked in the wax department at Sinclair. His local—210—is an amalgamated local, covering Shell, Cities Service, etc., as well as Sinclair. Brown was elected to his first union job in 1937; has been active in political action work. He has prepared a number of pamphlets for his local.

For 42 months, he served in the Army, including the ETO. He travels to all PAC regions in the state regularly.

INDIANAPOLIS: PAC leaders are interviewed by CIO News staff member Arthur Riordan (back to camera). L. to R. are Reg. Dir. Loren Houser, State CIO Pres. Neal Edwards, Indianapolis Sec. Juanita Boggs, Indianapolis PAC Chm. Sam Macer, State PAC Chm. Bartley Brown, State CIO Sec. Claude Becktell and Sarah Vinson, Houser's secretary.

MEET THE MAYOR: Brown tells South Bend Mayor George Schock (right) and Democratic Congressional candidate Thurman Crook what PAC is doing. The scene is in Schock's office.

SOUTH BEND: Brown gets reports from CIO Rep. Rudy Olson, St. Joseph County CIO Pres. O. A. Richardson, St. Joseph Sec. Otie Jenney and Northern Indiana CIO Reg. Dir. William Mayo. Area was one of the most active in entire state.



ODYSSEY: Arrows indicate the route by which Riordan and Brown toured Indiana. They covered 1125 miles in three days, visited 7 of 11 congressional districts, saw many PAC leaders.

day after the primary, I came to these specific conclusions:

1. PAC, if it continues to show the organizational drive that it launched in the primary, can do a lot toward bringing good government back in Indiana.

2. The only thing that might defeat Rep. Raymond Madden (D., 1st), one of Congress' outstanding liberals, would be a third-party candidate. (From what I heard in Lake County, Madden's home district, injection of a third party into Lake would be resented deeply by the vast majority of labor.)

3. The inability, because of ill health, of Rep. Louis Ludlow (D., 11th) to run for reelection is a sharp blow to the liberal remnant in Congress. However, the Democratic candidate to succeed him is considered a good choice.

4. An amazingly large number of CIO members were chosen as delegates to the State major party conventions (in Delaware County PAC elected 16 CIO members in the race for 18 Democratic convention delegates). This means that labor will have a strong voice in molding at least the Democratic platform and candidates who will serve the people. It also means that some CIO members are pretty certain of being made delegates to the Natl. Democratic Convention.

5. If the Democrats pick a good state ticket, they face a fair chance, with PAC and other liberals lining up on their side, of returning to the State Capital. Best break for the Republicans would be a third-party ticket and/or a weak Democratic national campaign.

6. Estimates of third-party sentiment vary, but it is not considered to be as strong as it is said to be in neighboring Illinois. But you can bet on one thing, Indiana's CIO-PAC will combat a third party in 1948 with every legitimate weapon at hand.

Brown, whose headquarters is in Indianapolis, largest city of the state and its Capital, met me when I arrived Sunday morning. We started almost at once on our tour. Here is the log:

SUNDAY

235 Miles

Our first destination was Gary, where the Lake County PAC was holding a final rally in preparation for the primary. We drove north on Route 52 and soon ran into torrential rain, which was to drench us both Sunday and Tuesday. Ironically, Monday and Wednesday were beautiful, sunshiny days, compared to the downpour on election day.

1st CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT: Lake County makes up the entire territory of this district. The county is famed for its steel and oil industries in the Gary-Hammond-East Chicago (Ind.)-Whiting region. Incumbent Congressman is Raymond Madden (D.).

The rally was attended by several hundred, despite the rain. Significantly, the meeting was in the Philip Murray Bldg., headquarters of the CIO Steelworkers.

The audience heard several speakers, including your tourist-reporter, but all agreed that the highlight was the address of Congressman Madden, who made a special trip from Washington.

Said Madden: "We who are fighting for labor in Congress assure you that your leaders—men like Phil Murray—are men of extraordinary ability and of grim determination that your cause must be won.

"Labor must fight as hard to regain and hold its rights as it did when it originally won them.

3d Party: Don't Get Out Vote!

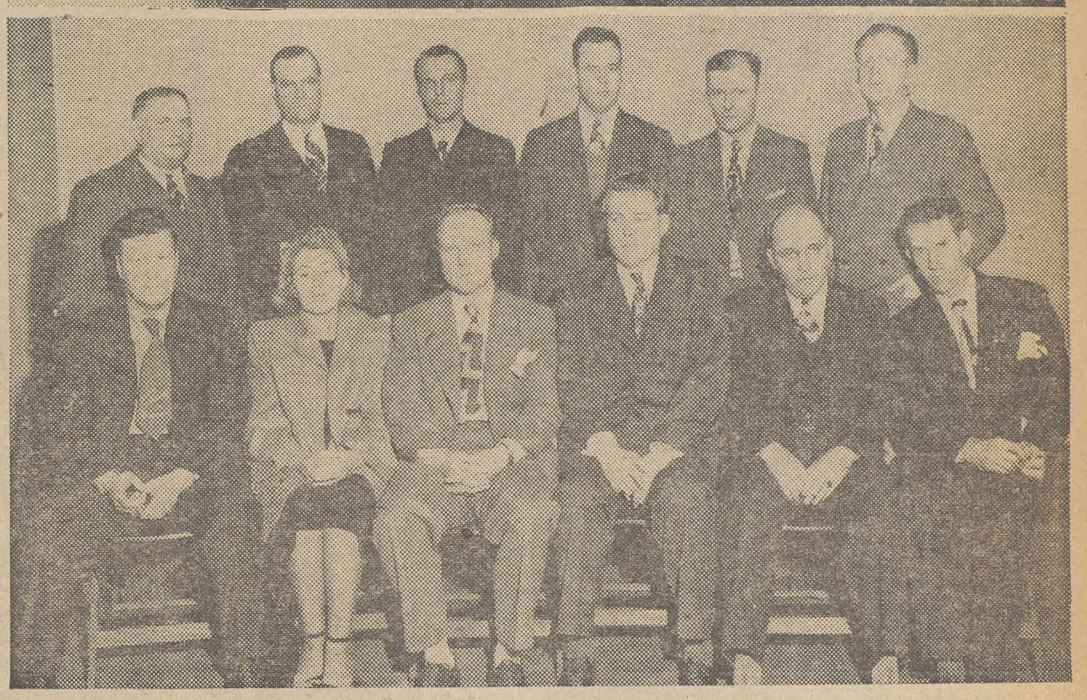
For years, PAC's cry has been: "Get Out e Vote!".

But, not so the Wallace third party. In diana last week, Jessica Rhine, suspend- member of the State CIO Board, urged allace backers to refrain from voting in the Democratic and Republican primaries.

Stated reason: by voting one might lose one's chance to sign a petition for Wallace.

Probable reason: The third party group was trying to take "credit" for a small primary vote.

ANDERSON: A union leader and his wife vote. Here, Carroll Hutton, president of CIO Auto Workers' Local 662, and his wife, Mary Frances, ask for their primary ballots at their polling place. In Anderson two UAW members will be rival candidates for sheriff next fall. Others will seek several posts.



GARY: The Lake County PAC held a rally before the election. Here are some of the PAC leaders, shown with Rep. Raymond Madden (D.), the feature speaker. Left to right (front row) are Harold Wagner, Brotherhood of Trainmen legislative representative; State CIO Vice Pres. Nelle Riddle, Brown, Madden, Lake County PAC Chm. George Colwell, State Sen. Charles Fleming (a CIO member). Second row: Joe Elias, trustee; John C. Linko, trustee; Stanley Lewandowski, Hammond PAC chairman; Dave Herrin, Hammond treasurer; Gary PAC Chm. George Romanyak, Joseph Goin, sub-district director, Steelworkers. Lake is the 1st Congressional District.

MUNCIE: Marie Cooper, sparkplug of the Muncie CIO-PAC, turns out a mimeographed slate of candidates for the primary election. Muncie CIO folk won in almost every test, making a fine showing for convention delegates.

PAC — Is Surely Clicking in State of Indiana

You were defeated in 1946; you cannot stand idle this year. This is a rubber stamp Congress of extreme reaction — rubber stamped to big business. Scabology has been advanced to the heights under the Taft-Hartley Law.

"Taft, incidentally, claimed that the T-H Law was designed to save the rank and file of labor from labor 'bosses.' Recently, Taft stated that Harold Stassen's primary victories didn't mean anything, that delegates from Pennsylvania and other places wouldn't vote for him anyway. It looks as if Taft, in the Republican Party, is trying to save the bosses from the rank and file!"

Lake PAC had printed slates for both parties, to assist voters in marking the primary ballots. PAC-backed candidates included AFL and Rail Brotherhood members, in addition to CIOers, and a number of liberal non-union members, such as Madden.

(CIO members—hundreds of them—filed for office in every Congressional district in both major parties. CIO also hopes to have State Sen. Charles Fleming, a member of the CIO Oil Workers, nominated for State Secretary of State at the June Democratic convention.)

In addition to Madden and this reporter, speakers at the Lake rally included Brown, George Colwell, Lake PAC chairman; Fleming, Harold Wagner, legislative representative for the Brotherhood of Trainmen and also deputy county prosecutor, and Joseph Goin, Steelworkers' Director, Sub-district 31.

MONDAY
434 Miles

3d CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT: Elkhart, La Porte, Marshall and St. Joseph counties. Incumbent congressman: Robert A. Grant (R.)

South Bend, chief city of St. Joseph County and largest town in the 3d, is so famous for Notre Dame University that most people forget it is a major industrial center. Or that it has 37 CIO locals.

Spearheads of PAC and CIO work in South Bend are O. A. Richardson and Otie Jenney, both from Auto. There are a lot of big locals—such as UAW 5, Studebaker, with more than 14,000 members; the big 10,000-member Electrical local at Bendix

Richardson was proud of the part labor had played last fall in nominating and electing Mayor George Schock, Democrat, who had not had the support of all of the Democratic leaders in the primary. Richardson recalled that Schock had warmly thanked PAC, saying, "It was not the big shots that elected me, but the laboring people who carry dinner pails."

Down the street from the St. Joseph CIO office we picked up CIO Northern Regional Dir. Bill Mayo and CIO Rep. Rudy Olsen (who is also from Oil Local 210).

All of us went over to Mayor Schock's office. Our delegation included Sister Jenney.

(Husky George Schock used to work in Oliver's Plow factory for $9.50 a week. He worked from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. six days a week. He later became a newspaperman and worked his way through college, graduating from Notre Dame.)

Schock reminisced about Albert Russell Erskine, former head of Studebaker, who thought so little of working men that he forced his chauffeur to work in the plant whenever the boss was out of town in Florida or elsewhere.

"Well," recalled Schock, "Erskine didn't have any courage, for when he lost his $30,000,000 in the crash he committed suicide."

"Yes," Schock went on, "those dark days of labor are gone. They must stay gone."

At the moment, his secretary came in and informed him two Democratic leaders wanted to confer with him. "Tell them I can't see them. Tell them I'm conferring with the CIO," he said.

At the mayor's office we also met Thurman C. Crook, Democratic candidate for Congress against Rep. Grant. Crook, who has a lot of CIO support, is an instructor in South Bend's Central High.

In the 3d, PAC has had good relations with farmers.

George Cummins is the 3d's PAC chairman.

St. Joseph PAC definitely does not like Rep. Grant.

5th CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT: Blackford, Clinton, Grant, Howard, Cummins, Huntington, Jay Madison, Miami, Tipton and Wabash counties. Incumbent Congressman: Forest A. Harness (R.).

I challenge anyone to resist humming "Kokomo, Ind.," as he arrives in this pretty city. Kokomo has more than 100 active PAC blockworkers who tirelessly keep their people registered, informed and voting.

We found 5th Congressional PAC Chm. Marley Purvis—he's Steel representative—and Howard County PAC Chm. Louis Axente passing out election slates as the shift left the Continental Steel plant at 3 p.m. Both are members of Steel Local 1054.

Other big city of the 5th District is Anderson, scene of several tough UAW strikes over the years. We visited UAW Local 662 Pres. Carroll Hutton and his pretty wife, Mary Frances, at their apartment.

Hutton gave us the picture in this town where sheriff Roy Gaston is a charter member of UAW Local 663.

In the last election, a CIO-backed mayor won and swept into the council of nine were eight labor men, including six from CIO. State Sen. Walter Vermillion, who has served the area for 18 years, is also counsel for the UAW local.

A joint labor committee is being formed in Madison County as a result of a meeting in Anderson of AFL, Brotherhoods and CIO.

Kokomo and Anderson do not like Rep. Harness.

KOKOMO: This city, famed in popular song, is due to become just as famous for the political action work of its CIO unions. Here, PAC workers are shown bright and early on primary morn handing out slates outside the Continental Steel plant, where CIO Steelworkers have a local. Kokomo's PAC has enlisted more than 100 active blockworkers, who helped turn out the primary vote. Leaders say interest this year is at its highest peak and that many gains are expected this fall. A complete registration list has been broken down and PAC hopes to have as near to 100% eligibility to vote as possible by November's elections. It looks as if they'll accomplish their aim, too, a survey shows.

10th CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT: Decatur, Delaware, Fayette, Hancock, Henry, Randolph, Rush, Shelby, Union and Wayne counties. Incumbent Congressman: Ralph Harvey (R.).

Muncie is, of course, the home of Marie Cooper—the gal who changed clothes with the voter. It also has an up-on-its-toes CIO movement, which last fall turned out one of the largest Democratic votes in history.

In the UAW hall, we talked things over with Marie, Council Pres. Leland Stiff and other officers. Of Delaware County's 49 Democratic precinct committeemen, 43 are CIO members. (All were returned to office last Tuesday and at least two of the other places were won by CIO people.)

More than 78% of the eligible CIO voters are registered. Last fall, PAC helped elect Mayor Lester Holloway. And labor united to put into office Edward L. Crago, Jr., as city clerk. Crago, a CIO member, had been seriously injured in an industrial accident.

As we arrived, Marie and the others were busy getting polls book holders, with which a check can be made on those who vote.

From Muncie, we drove through Indianapolis all the way to Evansville, in the southwestern corner of the state—you can see the blue grass of Kentucky across the Ohio — arriving at 11:45 p.m. We had been on the move since 8:20 a.m.

TUESDAY
452 miles

EIGHTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT: Clark, Crawford, Dubois, Floyd, Harrison, Perry, Pike, Posey, Spencer, Vanderburgh and Warrick counties: Incumbent Congressman: Edward A. Mitchell (R.).

At 9 a.m., we were at the offices of the Evansville CIO Council, which is in the UAW Hall. This is Vanderburgh County. John Sterneman, PAC chairman, was in Detroit on UAW negotiations, but we met with Walter Hayden, council secretary and editor of "Labor's Voice," the Evansville CIO paper; with Council Pres. Dale Craig; with W. F. Farmer, business representative for Construction Workers Local 1280 (which last year got a big writeup in Life), and with John Flanigan, striking Packinghouse Worker, who is PAC secretary-treasurer.

One Democratic candidate for joint representative, queried by PAC as to his attitude on local option and prohibition, was quoted as feeling that "people drive from dry to wet communities, get drunk and run over people coming back."

Evansville PAC does not like Rep. Mitchell.

From Evansville, we headed north up Route 41, passing within a mile of the "geographic center of population of the U. S.," which is just about a mile east of 41 near Carlisle. It was raining like mad.

SIXTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT: Boone, Fountain, Mamilton, Hendricks, Montgomery, Parke, Putnam, Vermillion, Vigo and Warren counties. Incumbent Congressman: Noble J. Johnson (R.).

At Terre Haute, we were in the home town of Gene Debs.

Here, the dominant union is the CIO Brewery Workers, whose Local 85 members produce and distribute Champagne Velvet (CV), which modestly says it is "the beer with the million dollar flavor." Local 85 has a 45-man PAC committee.

Also in Terre Haute is the headquarters of the Vigo County Civic Labor League, composed of CIO, AFL, Brotherhoods, and United Mine Workers. This organization performs a herculean task in civic betterment.

More than 90% of organized labor is registered in the county.

(The Brewery Workers Union has a constitutional rule that any member failing to vote may be tried for expulsion.)

At the Vigo County PAC's beautiful union hall we heard a lot of comment on Congressman Johnson—none of it favorable, Mr. Johnson, as you well know.

The Vigoans had 40 cars getting out the vote—some cars carrying invalids or the disabled like Mike Platzer. We talked over things with PAC Co-chairmen George Hage (prexy of Local 85) and Harry Burns (Steel Rep. and council head).

From Terre Haute, we headed up north to Hammond, Whiting and East Chicago, for Bartley had to vote at Whiting.

We had a swell visit at the Oil Local 210 Hall in Hammond with Pres. H. W. Stevens, Sec. Dave Herring and a number of other officers and rank-and-filers.

From Hammond, we drove back at night to Indianapolis, through a heavy fog, which slowed down good old license number Indiana 879765 plenty.

We made the capital at 11:15 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

This day, I didn't have to drive, since the Marion County PAC office is only two blocks from the hotel where I stayed. At that office, I met with PAC Chm. Sam Macer (Steel), State Pres. Neal Edwards, State Sec. Claude Becktell; CIO Reg. Dir. Loren Houser, Paper Workers' Rep. Nick Vrataric and a number of rank and filers.

11TH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT: All of Marion County (Indianapolis). Incumbent Congressman: Louis L. Ludlow (D.).

All Indianapolis CIO people deeply regret the inability, because of ill health, of Congressman Ludlow to run for reelection. However, they feel that last fall's mayoralty election is an indication of how the job can be done this year. Last fall, Al Feeney—he played center on the Notre Dame football team of which Knute Rockne was the star end—was elected mayor by 8000 votes. He had full PAC backing.

Other Congressional districts which we did not visit—even good old license number 879765 couldn't cover the whole state—were:

4TH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT: Adams, Allen, De Kalb, Lagrange, Noble, Steuben, Wells and Whitby counties. Incumbent Congressman: George W. Gillie (R.).

We talked to Fort Wayne CIO leaders by phone.

We found that Chester Watson, who had been indorsed by PAC, was defeated in the Democratic primary by Edward H. Kruse, Jr. However, Kruse has pledged himself to much of PAC's program.

PAC here expects a good showing in the fall. Local 901, UE, has pledged itself to support PAC and national CIO policy.

2D CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT: Benton, Carroll, Cass, Fulton, Jasper, Kosciusko, Newton, Porter, Pulaski, Starke, Tippecanoe and White. Incumbent Congressman: Charles A. Halleck (R.).

Halleck seems deeply intrenched.

7TH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT: Clay, Daviess, Gibson, Greene, Johnson, Knox, Martin, Monroe, Morgan, Owen and Sullivan counties. Incumbent Congressman: Gerald Landis (R.).

Though there is comparatively little labor—organized labor—in this district, of which Vincennes is the chief city, Rep. Landis serves on the House Labor Committee and throws his weight around against labor. (Funny, big city Congressmen never get themselves on the Agriculture Committee.)

The Democratic Party seems somewhat hopeful over the chances of James Noland, Landis' Democratic opponent.

PAC is keeping a close eye on this area.

9TH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT: Bartholomew, Brown, Dearborn, Franklin, Jackson, Jefferson, Jennings, Lawrence, Ohio, Orange, Ripley, Scott, Switzerland and Washington counties. Incumbent Congressman: Earl Wilson.

Since there is little labor here, a defeat for Wilson would be an upset.

Well, brothers and sisters, after my tour of Indiana, I'm tahred.

* * *

But, when in the future I dream about the moonlight on the Wabash, I'll rest with the knowledge that PAC in Indiana has a grand bunch of folks in there planning and fighting and collecting for political action. It should be pretty hard to beat those guys and gals—you'd agree if you had met them, too.

(Oh, by the way, thanks for the use of your car, Brother Brown.)

Ignore Plea For Security Benefits

PRES. Truman thinks that health and social security improvements are "absolutely necessary"—but Congress isn't paying much attention to his plea.

A supplementary funds bill for the Federal Security Agency trimmed several million dollars out of the budgets of government bureaus doing essential research and statistical work on social security.

The bill also transfers the U. S. Employment Service out of the Dept. of Labor—where it has been for several years—and cuts Federal Security funds even deeper than the fund-trimming voted last year.

Rep. Chet Hollifield (D., Calif.) described the GOP majority's action as legislation by "egg beater." He described the transfer of USES out of the Labor Dept. as "another attack . . . directly upon the welfare of the wage earners."

The final vote, 271-35, sent the trimmed appropriation bill to the Senate, where liberals may try to increase the social security funds and knock out the transfer of the employment service from the Labor Dept.

Mundt Bill Could Smear Unions Through Guilt-By-Association

REP. J. Parnell Thomas' House Unamerican Activities Committee has finally spawned its long-expected brain-child.

It's a spitten image of its pa—and, you'll recall, the Unamerican Committee has been under attack by labor and liberal groups for years. (Last year's CIO convention called on Congress to dissolve the Committee.)

The brain child is the Mundt-Nixon Bill (H.R. 5852), sponsored on behalf of the Unamerican Committee by Rep. Mundt (R. S.D.) and Rep. Nixon (R. Calif.). It's called the Subversive Activities Control Act, 1948.

The bill (it was proudly entered into the Congressional Record by Mississippi's Rep. Rankin) at once was branded by the American Civil Liberties Union as a "legislative monstrosity." CIO Pres. Murray has ordered a close analysis of its provisions by CIO attorneys. Americans for Democratic Action leaders attacked the proposal as "dangerous and futile."

In New York, the Committee for Democratic Rights filed a brief with the House Rules Committee calling the bill "unconstitutional." Lee Pressman, former CIO counsel, said in an analysis for the Committee that it is designed "to firmly establish fascist controls in the U. S."

THE National Lawyers Guild said enactment of the Mundt-Nixon measure would have a "far greater impact" on civil rights than the notorious Alien & Sedition laws of the Revolutionary era, or than the Palmer Raids after the first world war.

Nevertheless, the House Rules Committee gave the bill quick processing, ordered six hours of debate and paved the way for a vote perhaps by the end of this week.

Although Rep. Mundt said this bill was intended to provide "legal and constitutional" means for moving in on the Communist party and affiliated groups, critics of the law had other views on it.

They charged it would permit the Attorney-General, whoever he may be, to list organizations which must register as "Communist Fronts," and would permit widespread use of the guilt-by-association theory—that guilt comes not from actions but from whom you associate with.

The bill allows the Attorney-General to designate organizations as either "communist political" groups or "communist front" groups, and provides strong restrictions on their future freedom to operate. The bill sets up methods far broader than now in practice for the Attorney-General to make his decision.

He would be permitted, for example, on the basis of a "reasonable conclusion" to brand a union as a communist front organization on the basis of its leading people, the sources of its support, the use of its funds and its statements of policy.

ONE basis for such a decision is that "reasonable conclusion" leads the Attorney-General to believe that the union's policies "are in general adopted and advanced" because they are those of a communist political organization, a communist foreign government or a communist world movement.

Under such methods, opposition to the Natl. Association of Manufacturers, to the Taft-Hartley act, or support of price control and anti-polltax bills could be construed as qualifying an organization for the communist tag, critics of the bill say. They point to widespread use of the "communist" label by some conservative organizations to smear liberal opposition.

Other civil rights issues:

★ The U.S. Supreme Court banned enforcement, by either state or federal governments, of "restrictive covenants" attached to deeds of property. The covenants—attacked by minority and labor groups—have been used to bar persons belonging to allegedly "undesirable" racial, religious or national minorities from purchasing homes in certain areas of cities throughout the country.

★ Rep. Clare Hoffman (R. Mich.), one of labor's most outspoken foes in Congress, won committee support for a resolution permitting Congress to obtain any papers, confidential or otherwise, from any government agency.

(The House unAmerican Committee has been trying to get the loyalty file of Dr. Edward Condon, a leading scientist, whom it accused without hearings of knowing foreign agents—though all his associates and scientists throughout the nation have rallied to Condon's defense.)

Hoffman promised to change another section of his bill, which would put the threat of jail sentence over any unauthorized person publishing government "secrets." Newspapers were quick to point out this would seriously endanger the free press.

★ CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan asked Senators to turn thumbs down on U.S. approval of a 15-southern-state regional agreement to set up centralized, segregated schools. He said the agreement is "contrary to recent decisions" of the Supreme Court and is a dodge to establish "centralized second class education" for the Negro people of the 15 states.

Draft Plans Are Labelled Permanent

PLANS to draft men in the younger-age groups into the military forces are not "temporary."

The charge was made in a minority report of the House Armed Services Committee. "Let no one be deceived that this proposal for peacetime conscription is intended to be a temporary measure," the minority said.

"On the contrary, the record of the hearing . . . is replete with broad statements from authorized spokesmen of the national military establishment that this program is designed to remain in effect indefinitely until Universal Military Training is adopted as the permanent law of the land."

The draft bill (HR 6401) was passed by 28-5 vote of the House Armed Services Committee. It would draft men in the 19-through-25 age groups for two years of military service.

Action in the House is slated May 17 or 18. In the Senate, however, the Committee has been wrestling with a series of proposals and had not come to agreement.

CIO, through Legislative Director Nathan Cowan, opposed both UMT and the draft in testimony before committees of both branches of Congress. Cowan said there was no indication of immediate need for the measure, and that the armed services had taken few reforms needed to attract volunteer recruits.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Dir. of Org. Ed Welsh, Transport Workers Union, N. Y., reports that his union won a National Mediation Board election among the B&O Dining Car Employes. The results were United Transport Employes Local 320, 502, Joint Council of Dining Car Employes Local 495, 33. Brother Welsh assisted in the election.

Reg. Dir. William Mayo, South Bend, Ind., reports that the employes of A. Baker Mfg. Co. of South Bend have been organized by the Rubber Workers. The local, No. 361, was organized by Field Rep. John H. Suttle. Thirty-five men are involved. This is a new company and is expanding rapidly. The company agreed with the NLRB Examiner that all employes belong to the union. Field Rep. George Burdon, URW, and John H. Suttle, CIO rep., are now negotiating the contract.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda, Denver, Colo., advises wage negotiations took place in Wyoming for southern and northern Colorado sawmill and timber workers lasting practically six days and nights. With the assistance of Virgil Burtz, Int. Rep. of IWA, the union secured a 10c increase across the board on all hourly job classifications and from 12½ to 19% rise on all piece work rates.

Dir. of Org. George Brown, IWA-CIO, Portland, Ore., reports the following victories run-off elections: At Mt. June Forest Products in Springfield, Ore., the vote was 16 yes, 13 no, Organizer Russ Shea in charge. S&W Milling Co., Woodland, Wash., IWA 15, no union 0. Wyman Lumber Co., Woodland, Wash., IWA 12, no union 4. Bob Dugger and Ronald Roley were in charge of the last two named elections.

Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler, Los Angeles, Calif., reports the CIO Oil Workers won a union security election at the Wilmington and the Oleum Refineries of the Union Oil Co. The vote was Oil Workers 1929, no union 74. ONIU Rep. Jack Sayre was in charge.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bonacci, Salt Lake City, Utah, reports a CIO victory in an election conducted by the Utah Labor Relations Board at the plant of the American Linen & Supply Co., Salt Lake City. The vote was: CIO 85, no union 34.

Van A. Bittner, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, announced that the employes of the J&J Veneer Company in Cuthbert, Ga., voted 127 to 28 to affiliate with the CIO Woodworkers in an NLRB-conducted election. The overwhelming vote for the union was significant in that several hundred workers have been on strike for more than six months in the Cuthbert area at the Burgin Lumber Co. seeking recognition for their union.

In Yazoo City, Miss., workers at Gooch Lumber Co. voted 36 to 2 to affiliate with the CIO Woodworkers, it was announced by Robert W. Starnes, Miss. Dir. CIO Organizing Committee.

In Russellville, Ala., workers at the Russellville Mills cast an overwhelming vote of 350 to 4 to retain the union shop clause in their contract with the company, it was reported by State Dir. Edmund F. Ryan, Jr., of the CIO Textile Workers. In two other elections held recently in Alabama heavy votes were cast for union shops at the Mobile Cotton Mill, Mobile, 290 to 5, and the Lincoln Mills in Huntsville, 880 to 105.

AT&T Rejects Pay Proposal

NEGOTIATIONS between the CIO long lines employes and the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. bogged down last week as the company proposed a two-year extension of the present contract without a wage increase.

AT&T also rejected union requests for a union shop, reduction of the work week to 35 hours in order to stem the tide of unemployment to be caused by the conversion to dial telephones on long distance lines, and a $100 minimum monthly pension.

The American Union of Telephone Workers, affiliated with the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, is seeking a 30c hourly increase.

Wages of telephone workers have dropped from seventh place in 1939 to 22nd place today in the scale of major industrial groups in the nation, the union pointed out.

AUTW Pres. J. J. Moran said the company has not denied its ability to pay wage increases.

"Last year," he said, "despite the strike, Long Lines earned over $45 million even after it sought to hide lush earnings through renegotiation of its division-of-revenue contracts with other Bell Companies.

126 Elections Requested

PETITIONS for NLRB collective bargaining elections are on file for 126 plants and factories in connection with the CIO Southern Drive, it was announced by Van A. Bittner, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee.

In one week the committee won nine elections, lost one and "held its own" in a decertification vote.

The decertification election was at the Henry I. Siegal Co. in Dickson, Tenn. The vote was 216 to 167 for retention of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers as the bargaining agent. On the same day, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers won 181 to 13 over the AFL Garment Workers at another Siegal plant in South Fulton, Tenn.

Other victories were: Blanchard Handle Corp., Chattanooga, Arkansas Oak Flooring Co., Pine Bluff, and Dawkins Lumber Co., Fayetteville, N. C., all for the CIO Woodworkers; Lone Star Steel plant, Dallas, Tex. (two elections); Virginia Shoe Corp., Fredericksburg, for CIO Shoeworkers; Buckeye Cotton Oil Co., Atlanta, for CIO Chemical Workers; Nu-Car Carrier, Inc., Norfolk, Va., for CIO Auto Workers; and Mead Paper Products, Inc., Lynchburg, Va., for CIO United Paperworkers.

Sparkman Wins In Alabama

TWO Alabama Congressmen with consistent anti-labor records won't return to Congress in 1949 as a result of last week's Democratic primaries.

Both opposed by CIO unions in their districts, Reps. Carter Manasco and Peter Jarman lost their seats to Carl Elliot and Edward deGraffenried respectively. Nomination in the Alabama Democratic primary is equivalent to election.

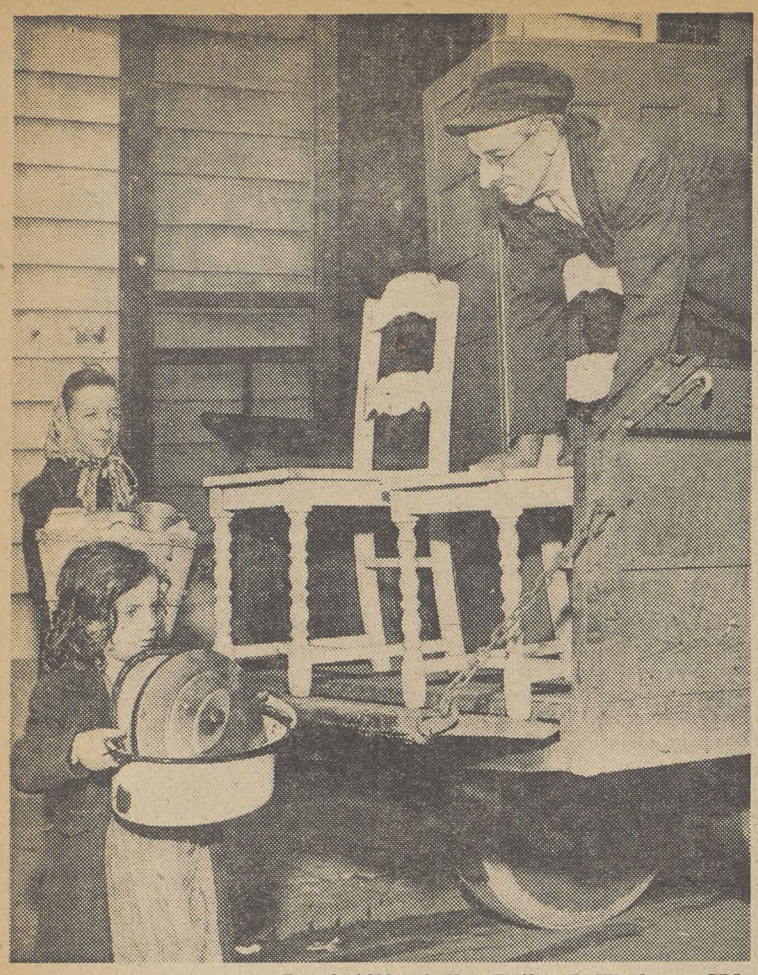
Manasco, one of the leading opponents of a higher minimum wage in 1946, had been in the House for seven years. Jarman has held his office for the past 10 years.

CIO enjoyed another Alabama victory in the election of PAC-endorsed Sen. John Sparkman as Democratic senatorial nominee. Sparkman was first named to the Senate in a special election in 1946 to fill the vacancy created by the death of Sen. John Bankhead.

His popularity with the voters was underscored this year by the fact that he swamped Philip J. Hamm, Gov. James Folsom's candidate. Folsom, in previous tests, had proved himself a top-notch vote-getter.

Whether or not the state's delegates to the Democratic convention would walk out if the Presidents' civil rights plank is adopted was the issue around which the battle for delegates' seat raged. Opposition to Pres. Truman on the basis of his civil rights program was unanimous among the candidates. (In 1860 Alabama led a walkout by southern states at the Democratic convention, which then nominated Abraham Lincoln.)

At this writing the would-be bolters appeared to have won a majority of the 23 seats.



AIDED BY UNION: Local 1629 of the Railroad Workers, CIO-IUMSWA, proved a friend indeed for Lewis Killinger, who is shown above moving, with the help of his daughters, into the home the Reading, Pa., local bought for him after he was evicted. He is grateful to the union which now collects his rent, for he has a wife and six children.

Oh, Shucks! T-H No Bar To Doing Favor

THIS is a story about corn, coercion and conspiracy.

It involves a salted corn product called "Fritos" (good, too, with a glass of beer); the Great Atlantic & Pacific Grocery Chain; the AFL teamsters union; and Rep. Thomas Owens (R., Ill.), a nervous little man who hails from the "tall corn country" of Chicago's north side.

Owens, a member of a House Labor sub-committee, hauled up for questioning the vice-president in charge of A&P's Atlantic Coast division. Why, Owens wanted to know, had the A&P stopped carrying Fritos in its stores throughout the Baltimore-Washington area?

Because, answered A&P v. p. W. B. Crimger, the AFL teamster union had asked him not to, because the teamsters are engaged in a recognition dispute with the local Fritos people.

"We wanted to cooperate," said Crimger. "It wasn't a big matter to us. I didn't give it much thought. We just went along."

Rep. Owens, a lawyer who claims to be a labor affairs expert, thumbed through the Taft-Hartley law. He came up with the notion that T-H had been violated, since unions aren't allowed to "coerce" employers in a secondary boycott.

No law-breaking in this case, A&P's Crimger opined. We weren't coerced by the teamsters, he said in effect; they asked us to do them a favor and we did it.

"If Andre (a teamster union official) withdrew his request, would the A&P go back to handling the product?" Crimger was asked.

"Yes," he replied.

Owens could stand it no longer. "Frankly, I think this is plain conspiracy," he snapped.

Maybe, observed a bystander, they'll change the Taft-Hartley act to cover the big corn chip conspiracy. Or maybe—if somebody thinks twice about it — maybe they won't.

Health Assembly Unit Backs Prepaid Medical Insurance

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

CIO delegates to the National Health Assembly in Washington joined representatives of 15 other national organizations in drawing up a long-range program designed to bring more and better medical care to the American people.

Some 800 representatives of labor, consumer, cooperative, veteran and farm groups together with government and private health authorities and doctors, last week attended the 4-day Assembly, called by Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing, at the request of President Truman, to outline a 10-year health plan for the U. S.

Hottest issue involved a national health insurance plan, strongly opposed by the American Medical Association and supported ardently by labor.

To prevent clashes on this highly controversial question, an agreement was adopted before the Assembly to limit debate on it to the section meetings.

Dr. Morris Fishbein, reactionary editor of the AMA journal, broke this agreement by departing from the subject of his speech on the UN World Health Organization to charge that since 1938 "only a few minor groups had joined the clamor for national health insurance," and that "the workers of America do not want peasant medicine."

A STINGING rebuke was administered to Dr. Fishbein at a crowded general session on the closing day when Nelson Cruikshank of the AFL speaking for labor, farm and cooperative groups, told him that he had "no right to speak for American workers."
